Mr. Austin: I think a great many questions on direct examination went to just that same sort of thing, and the only objection that I could see that there would be to that question would be the question as to what the statute means by "cost". I am perfectly willing to let the witness answer it on his own idea of wholesale and retail cost.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

The Witness: Would you read the question again?

(The question was read as follows: "Now, having reached that conclusion, I ask you whether you think the statutory limitation is a proper one based upon your opinion as an economist?")

Mr. Hanley: Just a moment, Professor Clark, I would like to ask a question as a foundation for the objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Hanley: Professor Clark, do you know what the statutory limitation as to cost is?

The Witness: Well, if I understand the question he asked, it has to deal with the section that says that 1672 lower prices must be justified by savings in selling costs, service costs or delivery costs; is that right?

Mr. Austin: That's right; which results from the differing methods or quantities in which the goods are sold or delivered.

Mr. Hanley: Do you understand, Professor Clark, what is contemplated by the statute as being included within its terms; namely, the differing costs in marketing or delivery of goods?

The Witness: Well, my reply was going to be that you can't answer that question until you know how the Act is interpreted.

Mr. Hanley: Exactly.

The Witness: In other words, the Courts or Federal Trade Commission might allow only certain costs which I thought are not adequate, so I don't believe that question could be answered until you know how the Commission and courts interpret the statute.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. That is a fair answer, Professor Clark. I wanted to know whether you had an opinion in that in your own mind, if you had made it up, as to what costs were covered there, you might be able to answer it.

1673 Q. Counsel for the Respondent asked you a few moments ago whether certain items, such as advertising, discounts, salaries, and depreciation, and so forth, were proper in whole, or in part, to be allocated to wholesale operations, and I believe you said they were?

A. Right.

Q. Was that in any way intended to be a complete statement?

A. How is that?

Q. Was that in any way intended by you to be a complete statement of the items which go into wholesale costs?

Mr. Hanley: Just a minute. May I have that question please?

(The record was read by the Reporter.)

Mr. Hanley: That is objected to as entirely adverse to the testimony which the witness has given. He has listed a great number of items which go into the cost.

Mr. Austin: Of course, that is what I am referring to. Whether the items which were enumerated were a complete list.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the witness enumerated many other items.

Mr. Austin: Yes. I am referring to the entire list.

A. Well, I wouldn't say whether that would be an entire list or not. It is a very long list. I am not a cost accountant, and my reason for saying yes to those is because they obviously involve operations which are 1674 undertaken in this wholesaling or jobbing function, and with the legitimate charges against that function, so long as they were undertaken in the performance of that function.

Q. Well, you have just stated that you are not a cost accountant, Professor Clark.

A. Right.

Q. Would you be able to state then how to separate or allocate those various items that you mentioned as between wholesale and retail business of a concern engaged in both functions?

A. Would I be willing to say how to do it?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, that is the job of a cost accountant.

Q. There ~~has~~ to be some allocation, has there not?

A. There should be.

Q. With many of those items?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understood you to say that would be the job of a cost accountant?

The Witness: Yes. For somebody who knew cost accounting.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Would it be possible for you to answer the question I asked you a moment ago about the cost proviso in the Robinson-Patman Act, if you accepted as a guide 1675 the statement that you made as to these various costs which in your opinion should be considered in determining the cost of operating the wholesale function?

Mr. Hanley: Just a moment, Professor.

When you stated that this list of items might be properly considered as jobber costs, did you mean by your testimony that there might not in many instances be other items that would constitute cost of the jobber function?

The Witness: No; I was asked to go over this specific list.

Mr. Hanley: Did you mean by your answer that these items as outlined were proper costs?

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Hanley: Is it not true that there might be others in addition to these items?

The Witness: There might be, yes.

Mr. Hanley: The question is objected to on the ground that it now appears there is no adequate definition of what the costs are to which the question pertains.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let me have the question.

Mr. Austin: I withdraw the question, your Honor. I think to save time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The question is withdrawn.

Mr. Austin: I agree that it would be of little 1676 benefit to either side for the reason Judge Hanley stated, because we haven't got a complete definition of costs.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Professor Clark, I believe that you were questioned somewhat as to the benefits of the jobber function to the economic structure, and you stated that the jobber's function and the exercise of it by jobbers, is of benefit both to retailers and to manufacturers?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, I believe that we have already reached the conclusion that a jobber, while he may be both a retailer and a jobber, becomes a retailer after the goods reach the place where they are sold at retail.

Mr. Hanley: That is objected to as a mis-statement of the witness' testimony, the witness having testified that the function may be different, but that a jobber was a jobber, irrespective of whether he operated at both retail or at wholesale or both.

Mr. Austin: I will reframe the question. I understand the witness to say, however, that he ceased to be a jobber as to those goods after they reached the retail store.

Mr. Hanley: That is what I am objecting to. I don't think he said anything of the kind.

Mr. Austin: I think he did say that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Counsel may ask the 1677 witness.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I will ask you, if there is any question about it, will you please state again, Professor Clark, whether as to particular goods, state when the jobbing function begins as to those goods and when it ends, when those goods go down the stream of distribution?

A. Well, the jobbing function begins, so far as goods are concerned, when he gets the goods from the manufacturer's place of business, or his own place of business, depending on how it is delivered.
1678 So far as buying and selling is concerned, it begins whenever he begins to buy, on the one hand, and goes through his selling and delivery, on the other. Now, when it comes to the retailing operation, he may perform the retailing operation, which we distinguish from the jobbing operation, but he would still be a jobber, as a business man.

Q. Yes. But as to those goods, when does he cease to be a jobber and become a retailer, when he sells those goods at his own retail store?

A. Well, at the point where, so far as the physical distribution is concerned, at the point where he delivers them to the store and charges them to his store.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You mean his retail store?
The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. In other words, as soon as you say the man performs a dual function, you say he performs two different functions?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, he may be called a jobber at all times, but I want to know when physically in the handling of those goods he ceases to be a jobber and becomes a retailer as to any particular goods, and necessarily if he is performing a dual function, one function must end at a certain 1679 point, and the other one must commence?

A. That's right.

Q. And I understand that that is when the goods reach the retail store or are delivered at the place of where they commence to be dealt in at retail?

A. That's right.

Q. I started to ask you about the benefit of the jobber's function to retailers and to manufacturers. And in referring to those benefits, I think one of them was handling of credits, and another one was more economical distribution?

A. Yes.

Q. Where the jobber's function is utilized?

A. Yes.

Q. In referring to those benefits of the jobber's function, were you referring to the exercise of the retail function by the jobber, or were you only referring to the jobbing function up to the time the goods reached the retail store?

A. Well, in the testimony I was being asked about the jobbing function.

Q. Yes.

A. On the other hand, it is very clear, from experience of business, that there may be economies in direct distribution.

Q. What economies would those be?

1680 A. For example, a man who is capable of building up a jobbing business is probably a pretty good business man, and if he should decide to go into the retail business, he probably would do a pretty good job at that. That is what I have in mind. He is a superior type of business man.

Q. Well, then, that would be simply a benefit to the public of having another efficient man entered in the retail business; is that right?

A. Yes, that would be a benefit to the public, yes.

Q. Now, that is hardly a benefit which could be attributed to the function, is it? Isn't that a benefit which applies anywhere when someone enters into a business and makes a success of it? What I am trying to get at is: as to whether the fact that a man is both a jobber and retailer in itself makes him any more desirable as a retailer?

Mr. Hanley: I don't understand that question. Do you, Professor?

The Witness: I am not sure I do.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well, you said that the jobber's function is of benefit. And to the public it is particularly a benefit to the retailer and manufacturer. And now in a way he serves both the retailer and manufacturer?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, he also engages in the retail function, in 1681 which case he comes in competition with other retailers, and I want to know whether such public benefit, as he may achieve by engaging in the retail business, results in any way from the fact he is also a jobber?

A. Well, I doubt it, except in the way I have mentioned, that is, after all, when he does that he is performing two different groups of marketing functions, and they both cost him money. Consequently, he is performing a jobbing function and retailing function, and the public benefit would result simply if he performed either function or both functions better than somebody else does.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When you say "benefit" you mean either in service or in price?

The Witness: In the case of a middleman, service or price, yes, sir.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Again referring to jobbers who also sell at retail, that is, who perform both functions, am I or am I not correct then in understanding that all of your testimony this morning regarding the jobbing function applies to the operations of the jobbers only up to the time the goods reach the retail store?

A. Well, the bulk of my testimony certainly did, yes. There may have been other questions, but the bulk of the questions apply to that, yes.

1682 Q. Was there any of your testimony in which you referred to the operation of jobbing function or the benefits of the jobbing function in which you were referring to the jobbing function referring at the same time to the exercise of the retail function by the jobber?

If you can't answer that, say so, Doctor.

A. No, I can't answer that. I would say no, but I am not sure.

Q. I mean, I don't want to tie you down to any technicality where you might have overlooked something. But if you can answer it clearly.

Is it correct to say, in general, in referring to the jobbing function, you do not refer to the sale of goods at retail?

A. That's right, in general.

Q. Now, with reference to the economies which may be affected or effected by the exercise of the jobber's function and its place in the channels of marketing, assume a case where in a certain territory a manufacturer has a system of distribution which reaches throughout the particular marketing area, and reaches both large and small retailers.

In other words, where the manufacturer sells direct to retailers, and as in the oil business, frequently, and as is true here in Detroit of the Standard Oil Company, 1683 the company operates a fleet of trucks and makes both large and small deliveries to large and small retail gasoline stations.

Now, I am simply giving you that as an example of the type of case that I am talking about, where the manufacturer has a system of retail distribution, and where he sells to small retailers as well as to large retailers. And assume further that the jobber's distribution of that manufacturer's product in the same territory is relatively small, but that there are some jobbers in the territory who buy from the manufacturer and resell to retailers, or perhaps operate their own retail stores. Are any appreciable economies effected in such a situation by the exercise of the jobber function as to a portion of those goods?

A. You mean by the use of independent jobbers as to a portion of those goods?

Q. Yes, I have reference specifically to your testimony that in some cases the result of the jobber's function was to result in—that the result of the jobber's function, or the effect of it was that prices might be lowered. I believe you testified to that this morning, and I think you said that the reason for that is that it was more economical a means of distribution, otherwise it wouldn't be utilized.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I am asking you about a case where the manufacturer distributes direct to retailers and to 1684 jobbers in the same territory, and I ask you there whether the use of the jobber method in part for the distribution of manufacturer's goods can have any appreciable effect upon prices?

Mr. Hanley: Just a moment, please.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. And I am referring to retail prices, of course.

Mr. Hanley: That is objected to, if it is a hypothetical question intended to be based on the situation involved in this lawsuit, for the reason that it fails to take into consideration the essential elements of proof, it refers to the volume of business done by jobbers to total volume as being relative. The witness is unadvised as to the total business and as to the amount of business done by the jobbers, and has no means of knowing what the term "relative" means.

Further, the question implies a necessary knowledge on the part of the witness relative to the cost and efficience of operation of the four jobbers in order to enable the witness to answer as to the economic effect of the type of distribution or contrast of types of distribution implied in the question.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I stated clearly, I think, that I was only referring to Standard Oil Company as an illustration of the general thing that I am talking about. I am referring specifically to testimony of 1685 the witness given on direct examination that the exercise of the jobber's functions in many cases results in a lowering of the retail price to the public, because it is a more economic means. And I think that the witness was referring to a case where there is no other well-established means of distribution, and the jobber's method of distribution—and the jobber's function filled the gap.

Now, I want to know whether his answer would be the same in the case I put where the manufacturer has a well-established means of distribution, and is willing to sell to small, as well as large retailers, and where there is also a much smaller distribution of the same goods through jobbers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection is overruled.

A. Well, of course, as to a specific case one wouldn't know, but, as a matter of principle, there could very well be economies there. For example, it costs money to sell gasoline. If you have a jobber here who has a clientele that are buying of him, your selling problem is taken care of. Moreover, he also carries out the other wholesale function which you otherwise would have to carry out. In other cases—

1686 Q. Pardon me, Professor. My question was whether the fact that there was a partial distribution through jobbers would be likely to have any appreciable price—that is, result in any appreciable price reduction to the public and, if so, why?

A. Of course, what you mean by "appreciable," is difficult to say. Over a period of time, however, you have, even within the distribution of this very company's products, two different types of control of the jobbing operation and, in the first place, one may prove to be more economical than the other, in which case it would tend to prevail.

In the second place, a jobbing operation may be operating in a part of the market more economically than the manager could sell directly. Whether that would be appreciable at any one time, or not, of course no one could say.

Over a period of time, however, I think that the fluidity of that marketing organization tends to lead to a higher degree of competition and makes both groups stick on their toes to get the business, as well as their competitors. Many marketers have their own distribution and also sell through jobbers for various reasons; sometimes, in the same territory.

Q. Now, Professor Clark, I am going to ask you to assume another case. Suppose that there is a retailer of gasoline and suppose that he operates in a metropolitan area a chain of service stations where he sells gaso-1687 line at retail and he buys from an oil company who makes deliveries in tank wagons at his gasoline stations.

Now assume that a new arrangement is made between the supplier and the retailer. The retailer continues to operate this same chain of stations at the same localities but instead of taking deliveries by tank wagon he acquires a bulk plant and buys a few trucks sufficient to make his own deliveries and thereupon begins to purchase his gasoline by tank car at tank car prices, or of a lower price, making the assumption, as it is in this case, on house brand gasoline, a cent and a half a gallon below the price which he was paying before. He doesn't take on any sales to other retailers. He continues to operate the same stations as before but he now takes delivery in wholesale quantities and performs the jobbing function to the extent that he operates a bulk plant and makes his own deliveries. Who, if anybody, benefits by that change in method of doing business?

Mr. Hanley: Just a moment, Professor. That is objected to as an improper hypothetical question in that it obviously is directed to a situation which it will be contended by the Government to exist in this lawsuit but the question fails to take into consideration all of the elements and circumstances relating to the operation outlined in the question, which elements and circumstances are necessary for the witness to have in mind before the witness 1688 can make any conclusion or express any opinion.

That the question is unfair to the witness and if the witness undertook to answer it, if it were such an answer as were to condemn any such operation as is involved in this action, that it would be unfair to the Respondent in that the witness has not been advised of just what particular operation and what circumstances are involved in this lawsuit.

1689 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

Mr. Hanley: I think, if your Honor please, I am entitled to advise this witness now that if he doesn't understand a question, he is entitled to ask for a clarification of it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is a matter you are entitled to.

Mr. Austin: I think, your Honor, Professor Clark will do that on all questions. I hope so.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection runs to a matter that you could reach on further redirect.

The Witness: May I have the question read again?

(The question was read as follows: "Now, Professor Clark, I am going to ask you to assume another case.

Suppose there is a retailer of gasoline and suppose that he operates in a metropolitan area a chain of service stations where he sells gasoline at retail, and he buys from an oil company who makes deliveries in tank wagons at his gasoline stations. Now, assume that a new arrangement is made between the supplier and retailer. The retailer continues to operate this same chain of stations at the same localities, but instead of taking deliveries by tank wagon, he acquires a bulk plant and buys a few trucks, sufficient to make his own deliveries, and 1690 thereupon begins to purchase his gasoline by tank car at tank car prices, or of a lower price, making the assumption, as it is in this case, on house brand gasoline, a cent and a half a gallon below the price which he was paying before. He doesn't take on any sales to other retailers; he continues to operate the same stations as before, but he now takes delivery in wholesale quantities and performs the jobbing function to the extent that he operates a bulk plant and makes his own deliveries. Who, if anybody, benefits by that change in method of doing business?")

Mr. Hanley: I object to the question now on the ground it is unintelligible.

A. There is just no way of telling. It depends on matters of costs that you don't know anything about. You can't tell in a hypothetical question of that kind what the benefit will be.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Is there any marketing benefit which results in a change of arrangement where, in other words, the only change is that the retailer who continues to be a retailer, now also takes on part of the jobbing function and receives a lower price?

A. There may be benefits, yes. A jobbing function may be performed more cheaply. The jobber may give more effective distribution to his own retail stores 1691 than they received from the manufacturer. Things of that kind, but, of course, in a hypothetical case there is no way of telling, but there may definitely be benefits.

Q. Is there any benefit to the manufacturer? Might there not be?

A. There might be; a cheaper way of distribution.

Q. That's what I am interested in, Professor Clark.

The case put was where the tank car price was a cent and a half below the tank wagon price which the customer had previously been paying. If the cost to the purchaser of operating his bulk plant and delivering his gasoline, including all costs properly allocable to that transaction, amounted to less than a cent and a half, then he would gain, wouldn't he, by the change in the method of operation?

Mr. Hanley: That is objected to as too indefinite, uncertain, and the hypothetical fails to take into consideration the necessary facts.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection overruled. Read the question.

(The question was read.)

A. Well, he would have to take on another operation, of course. The jobbing operation, he would have to take on, and any gain would be the difference between the costs of his jobbing operations and the price at which he sold his commodity.

1692 By Mr. Austin:

Q. Don't you mean the cost of his jobbing operation and the reduction in price which he got by taking on that operation?

A. I was thinking of between his costs and the margin of operating the retail store. In other words, whether his additional costs, whether they are smaller, then the additional amount he gets, why, he would make a profit on that operation. It might very well work the other way, however; it would cost him more than the discount he gets.

Q. Carrying it one step farther, let us assume, now, that the additional operations which this customer took on through buying his bulk plant and making his own delivery, that these additional operations cost him ½¢ a gallon. He received, on the other hand, a lower price of a cent and a half a gallon when he became a jobber. Now, at the same time the gasoline company is selling to other retailers in the same neighborhood delivering by tank wagon and still selling at the tank wagon price, which is a cent and a half higher than the price being paid by this newly-become jobber. In your opinion, does that method of distribution have any elements of public benefit in it, or is it of benefit to the public?

Mr. Hanley: Just a minute, Professor Clark. That is objected to as an improper hypothetical in that it 1693 fails to take into consideration the necessary elements to provide the witness with a basis for answer and as developed in the record, of testimony and evidence, and is worse in that it assumes facts which are not proved.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

Mr. Hanley: May I inquire where there is any evidence in this record about a ½¢ cost?

Mr. Austin: There is none, I will concede that.

Mr. Hanley: Does your Honor regard that as a proper hypothetical?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: There is some testimony in this record given by the witness Harrison to the effect that the cost of delivery from the bulk plant to the service station is about ½¢.

Mr. Austin: Even so, your Honor, I don't think that the question depends upon that. I think that the ½¢, as far as I am concerned, is immaterial. I was simply making the case where the price is substantially lower, where there is a substantial difference to the so-called jobber, to the price to the so-called retailer, even deducting cost. Whatever the reduction is, I don't care, for the purpose of the question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may answer the question.

1694 (The last question was read.)

A. If he can distribute for a half a cent a gallon and he is given a margin of a cent and a half on the assumption that that is a normal expense of operating a jobbing business, he has a benefit, and he ought to have it, because he is evidently a very efficient operator and so far as the benefit to the general public is concerned, an efficient operator of that kind is just the kind we have in mind in competition. He would probably profit for a while. Ultimately he would begin to reduce prices and then somebody else would have to begin to imitate his operations so they could become as efficient.

1695 Q. And that would give him a competitive advantage over other retailers who were still buying at tank wagon, would it not?

A. I don't know you would say—it would give him a competitive advantage as a result of efficiency of operation.

Q. But that wouldn't be an efficiency of retail operation, would it? It would be an efficiency of wholesale operation?

A. Yes, but if another jobber would come in and operate as efficiently as he did, then those retailers would get that reduced price.

Q. Just a minute, now. This man, however, is only operating as a retail store, in the case in question.

A. But he is now taking on the job—

Q. Then you say, in order to compete with him somebody else would have to come in and also begin buying trucks and a bulk plant?

A. No, I said somebody else would have to operate the jobbing function as efficiently as he does in order to compete with him.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In other words, somebody else would have engage in the jobbing business?

The Witness: Somebody else might be the jobber—

By Mr. Austin:

Q. In the case he be the company, is distributing directly?

A. Yes.

1696 Q. So that the competitors of his man are buying direct from the company. Now those other retailers have no opportunity to put in any such economies, do they, in the jobbing function; because they are not engaged in it.

A. If they don't have, that is their tough luck. It is a competitive situation and I can't believe a hypothetical case of the kind you mention would ever arise in the world.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Does a man situated, as has been described in the question, have a competitive advantage over those who are buying from the company in tank wagon lots? That's all he asked you.

The Witness: Of course, he has competitive advantages, because he is a more efficient operator.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Professor Clark, when you say a more efficient operator you are talking about the efficiency by which he is efficient in his jobbing operations; that is, before the gasoline got to the station, isn't that correct? That's where those efficiencies are you are talking about in this particular case?

A. Yes.

Q. So that it doesn't necessarily follow he is a more efficient retail service station operator, does it, in the case I put?

A. Not necessarily.

Q. But he still has the competitive advantage, doesn't he?

A. Yes.

1697 Q. In response to a question asked by counsel for Respondent you stated your understanding of the meaning of the word competition.

A. Yes.

Q. I am not going to question your definition but I believe you further stated that whenever a new merchant—be he wholesaler or retailer, I assume—comes into the field and he is particularly efficient; that due to his efficiency of operation there is resulting injury to his competitors, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, there was some reference made to the Robinson-Patman Act and, as I said a moment ago, your definition was of competition?

A. Yes.

Q. Not of competitor.

A. Yes.

Q. I want to ask you whether there isn't a different meaning in your mind and in your use of the phrase "injury to competition," and "injury to a competitor?" Are those synonymous or do they have different meanings?

A. Well, injury to competition—that depends on what you do mean. If you mean competition in general—

Q. You were talking about this efficient operator and whether or not his efficiency doesn't result in injury to competitor.

1698 A. Yes.

Q. Does that sort of efficiency result in injury to competition?

A. Do you mean competition in that sense, or in the sense of other competitors?

Q. I mean competition in the broad sense in which you defined it as people, I believe, who were going after the same business.

A. Now the question is: Does that injure competition?

Q. I asked you whether, when you said that an efficient operator, by getting business, injures his competitors, whether you would also say that there was injury to competition?

A. No. No. I should say that helps competition.

Q. That's what I should think.

A. Yes.

Q. So that isn't it true that injury to competition, which is the phrase that Judge Hanley quoted from the Robinson-Patman Act, may mean something quite different than injury to a competitor?

A. That's what I don't know, what it does mean, in the Robinson-Patman Act. That hasn't been interpreted, yet, has it? It could mean either.

Q. But in the case you put it it means almost directly diametrically opposite, doesn't it?

1699 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The question was whether there was a difference between injury to competition and injury to a competitor.

A. My answer is that depends on how the Act is interpreted, because the word "competition" may mean there competition as a system or it may mean competition in the sense of plural of competitor; those who are competing with the company.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Getting back to the case you referred to on direct examination where you say that an efficient operator, by his efficiency and methods of doing business, may take business away from somebody and thereby injure his competitor—

A. That's right.

Q. But, thereby, does he or does he not injure competition?

A. No; that is the heart of competition.

Q. That's all I wanted to bring out, Professor Clark, on that point.

You were asked on direct examination whether certain items of cost were properly to be included in the costs of a jobber in performing the jobbing function in connection with gasoline. Do I understand correctly that in answering those questions you answered as a marketing expert rather than as a cost accountant?

A. That's right.

1700 Q. Now, what I have to ask you will be with the same understanding. In other words, I am not trying to be technical, but simply trying to find out what you had in mind. One thing you referred to was advertising, and I want to know what kind of advertising you had in mind.

A. Well, from the point of view of the jobber, I would have in mind any advertising which was directed primarily at obtaining the business of the retailers. That might be advertising directly to the retailers or, of course, it is conceivable, as in the case of some manufacturers, it might be even advertising to the consumers of those retailers, but it would be advertising which was used for the purpose of building up the jobber's business.

Q. And by that you mean sales to retailers?

A. His business would be sales to retailers, yes.

Q. If that jobber, so-called jobber engaged in no business except the—except reselling at retail, would—could he have any advertising expense which could be allocable to the jobbing function?

A. Of course, as a matter of practical operation, he would have to charge his advertising to his whole operation. That is, if I understand you correctly, any advertising he does would bring business to his retail stores.

Q. It would be, I should think, necessarily, for that job?

1701 A. Yes, but, on the other hand, he looks on his whole operation, both jobbing and retailing, as his business.

Q. But if you had to make an allocation for the purpose of determine what advertising is attributable to the retail part of his business and what was attributable to the wholesale part of his business, would you say that any of that advertising expense, in the case I put, would be allocable to the wholesale part?

A. It would be hard to allocate, but I think it should, because if he doesn't get business at his retail store, he doesn't sell the commodities he buys to sell at wholesale, but I would hate to have the job of allocating it.

1702 Q. For the purpose of such advertising, would it make any difference whether this man exercised the jobbing function or not; that is, he might—we will assume he might acquire his gasoline at his retail stations by tank wagon, in which case he wouldn't be a jobber, or he might, as we have supposed, be the jobber through his own bulk plant. Now, his retail station operation would be the same in either case. At least, I am so assuming. And would the character of his advertising differ in any respect, dependent upon whether he purchased in tank car quantities of a jobber or purchased at tank wagon?

A. I am not sure it would differ in any respect, but he would have more stake in it, because he now has a larger business operation he is carrying on, he has more investment, consequently he has a larger stake in his operation, and possibly might spend more money in advertising than he would if he had just the retail stores, because the net effect of that advertising is now to help not only his retail business, but also wholesale operations.

Q. I promise not to go too far into the cost accounting field, Professor, so I will pass that one along and ask you what you meant in reference to discounts? What kind of discounts?

A. Well, I refer to functional discounts, I referred to quantity discounts.

Q. These were costs you were referring to: advertising, discounts and insurance were the first three things.

1703 A. I assumed that meant discounts which were given to the customers. I don't remember. That was read in with something else.

Q. Well, do you know what you did mean when you said that you thought discounts were a proper wholesale cost?

A. I am just trying to think of the theory of it. I know they are accounted as wholesale costs by the accountants, I am not sure of the theory back of it.

Q. Do you know what kind of discounts or discounts to whom?

A. I assumed they were discounts to customers, when it was read.

Q. Isn't a discount to a customer part of the price, or something that is used in figuring a price?

A. No; they are frequently figured in as profit of the organization and charged against the product.

Q. What is that?

A. I understand they are frequently figured in as a part of the profit to the organization and charged to the product from an accounting sense.

Q. Did you refer to interest on investment as a proper cost?

A. Interest on investment?

Q. Yes.

A. Interest on investment in the jobbing business?

Q. Yes.

1704 A. I would refer to it as a proper cost, because, after all, a man must make—should make interest on his investment, if he is going to continue in the business.

Q. You, I think, referred to interest on invested personal property.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, referring to interest on equipment, buildings, machinery, did you also include the item of depreciation?

A. Yes, I would.

Q. On those items?

A. Surely.

Q. In your opinion, should both depreciation and interest on the same items of personal property be allowed as a discount?

A. Interest and depreciation?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I think so; the depreciation is done for building up the equipment again, but it is still a part of the original investment.

Q. Do you feel competent to express an opinion on distribution accounting principles on that question?

A. No; I would prefer not to. I am just looking at it from the point of view of the obvious commonsense of business operation, not as an accountant.

Q. Well, I won't pursue it, provided it is clear 1705 that you did not express an opinion on that subject as a cost accountant, and did not profess to.

A. I said that to start with.

Mr. Austin: I think I am all through. We might take a five minute recess, if your Honor please. I would like to look this over for a minute.

Mr. Hanley: You are not sure—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will recess for five minutes.

(A short recess was had.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will reconvene.

Mr. Austin: That is all.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Hanley.

Q. A long line of questions were put to you, apparently in an effort to distinguish an individual who was engaged in the jobber operation as being part time jobber and part time retailer. Isn't it true, Professor, that a jobber is a jobber in contemplation of the industry, but that he may engage in the two functional operations of wholesaling and retailing?

A. Will you repeat that?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The question was read.)

By Mr. Hanley:

1706 Q. I mean he is a jobber if he is a jobber?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Irrespective of whether he indulges in the two functional operations of just the wholesaling operation?

A. Yes, I would say he is a jobber.

Q. Some effort was made in your cross-examination to elicit an opinion from you relative to your views of injury to competition as distinguished from injury to a competitor. Now, referring to competition as you have defined it, as an economist, what is your opinion as to whether or not competition in the gasoline industry would be disadvantageously affected if some rule were made that required a fixed price be granted or made applicable to gasoline on the basis of the method which that gasoline was resold; that is to say, if a fixed price were required to be applied to all gasoline sold at retail, and the fixed price required to be applied to all gasoline sold at wholesale, just irrespective of the character of the business of the dealer in the gasoline, if that were done, what, in your judgment, would be the effect as to whether or not it would injure competition?

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I would like to request Judge Hanley to clarify that question before the witness is permitted to answer it by explaining what he means by a fixed price.

1707 Does he mean merely an idenfical price, or does he mean fixed? And if so, fixed by whom?

Mr. Hanley: All right.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Suppose that some rule were made, Professor, that the effect of which was to require the Standard Oil Company in the City of Detroit to sell every gallon of gasoline that it did sell, and which was resold at retail, at the same price, which price might be fixed by the Standard Oil Company, and that the same rule required that every gallon of gasoline that was sold to be resold at wholesale carried a different price, which price might be fixed by the Standard Oil Company; if that happened, what, in your judgment, would be the result as to any injurious effect upon competition?

A. Well, anything that freezes a price in that way would reduce competition, and there would be certain types of operations that probably couldn't function under those conditions.

Q. As a matter of clarification, Professor, you were asked about discounts as—discounts as constituting a proper cost, and I think you said you had in mind functional discounts or discounts given to customers?

A. Yes.

Q. Arithmetically, wouldn't it amount to the same thing if a discount were treated as a cost as against a list 1708 price, or just taken off the list price and treated as a reduction in price? Isn't it just a matter of accounting?

A. You mean as to whether you add it on or take it off?

Q. Yes.

A. It is just a matter of accounting, not of arithmetic, I should say.

Q. Mr. Austin started to ask you a question which I am going to try to finish, Professor. He withdrew it.

He assumed that a manufacturer sold to a retailer at 20% off some list price, and might sell to a wholesaler at 30%, we will say, off the same list price. Assuming that the wholesaler who receives the 30% off is engaged in both the retail and the wholesale operation; after you have given a consideration to that operator's costs of doing business, both at wholesale and at retail, is there necessarily any price advantage enjoyed by that customer?

A. No, there is not necessarily any price advantage. The 10% would cover his wholesaling operations, the 30% would cover his wholesaling and retailing operations.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact, Professor, that generally speaking, in relation to all consumer commodities, including gasoline, that after a manufacturer sells the merchandise to a jobber, that manufacturer thereafter exercises no control over the manner in which the jobber sells, whether at wholesale or retail, nor as to the price at 1709 which the jobber sells the merchandise?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor. How can the witness answer as to whether or not it is a fact? It may or may not be a fact. A manufacturer may or may not control the retail price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. You have referred to the methods of operation employed by large stores, such as Hudson's here in Detroit and Carson's and Marshall Field's in Chicago. What is the fact, Professor, as to whether or not organizations of that kind buy all kinds of merchandise at a very much reduced price over what the ordinary retailer buys the same merchandise?

A. Well, the fact is that the majority of things which they buy, they buy on what could be roughly called a wholesale price basis. There are, undoubtedly, some items that the manufacturers may not sell them on that basis, or which they buy in such small amounts. But by and large they buy on the wholesale basis, because they perform both the wholesale and retail functions.

Q. I want to ask you a question which the gentlemen have already developed by their own witnesses, Professor.

Irrespective of the differential in price that may be given to a jobber, is it not economically true that if that jobber either consumes that differential in taking 1710 care of the cost of his own operation or pockets the differential or expends it in some manner other than passing it on to his customers, that his customers are on an absolute equality, so far as price is concerned, with those who do not have the advantage of such differential?

Mr. Austin: I would like to ask that that question be re-read, please.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read it, please.

(The question was read.)

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: I object to that question as indefinite and not permitting of a definite answer, because there is a reference to who does not have the benefit of the differential.

Mr. Hanley: I will withdraw it.

1711 By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Suppose, Professor, that the Standard Oil Company sells on a tank car basis to the Stikeman Oil Company, that basis being 1½¢ below the Standard Oil Company's tank wagon price to retailers; is it not true that if the Stikeman Oil Company either consumes that 1½¢ in taking care of the costs of their own jobbing operation, or if it is pocketed by the owners of that business, or if it is expended in any way other than passing the whole or any part of that differential on to the tank wagon customers of the Stikeman Oil Company, in those circumstances are not the tank wagon customers of the Stikeman Oil Company on an absolute equality, so far as price is concerned, with the tank wagon customers of the Standard Oil Company, assuming that the same prevailing tank wagon price is maintained?

A. Now, in that case the price should be the same to each retail customer.

Mr. Hanley: That is all.

Mr. Austin: That is all. Just one moment.

(There was a slight delay at this point.)

Mr. Austin: That is all.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner wants to ask the Professor a question.

The definition you gave of a jobber is a definition that was originated in 1931; is that correct? Or adopted in 1931?

1712 The Witness: That wasn't my definition. That was read into the testimony, it was my understanding.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And that is the definition you subscribe to.

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That was long before the Robinson-Patman Act was enacted, was it not?

The Witness: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In view of the Robinson-Patman Act, do you think that definition is still applicable?

The Witness: Yes. Definitions are a matter of fact, and not what the law says.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you think that would fit the situation?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is all.

Mr. Hanley: That is all.

Mr. Austin: That is all.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Hanley: Mr. Marshall.

JOHN C. MARSHALL was thereupon called as a witness for the Respondent, and, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

1713 Direct Examination by Mr. Hanley.

Q. Will you please state your name and residence, Mr. Marshall?

A. John C. Marshall, 5000 Cornell Avenue, Chicago, Illinois.

Q. What is your present occupation?

A. I am employed by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

Q. Is that the Respondent in this action?

A. Yes, sir. As manager of the gasoline and refined oil department, and assistant to the general manager of sales.

Q. How long have you been connected with the oil industry?

A. Thirty-five years and six months, I guess.

Q. When did you start and what was your occupation at that time?

A. I was employed by the Standard Oil Company in September, 1905 as a clerk and stenographer in the office of general manager of the sales department.

Q. Have you been continuously in the employ of the Standard Oil Company since that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has that employment been in the marketing department?

A. Entirely in the marketing department.

Q. Please tell us briefly what various positions you have held and what localities you have lived in and worked in in connection with your duties as marketer of the Standard Oil Company?

1714 A. Well, very shortly after my employment I became in charge of the office of the general manager, and continued in that capacity for about ten years. I think it was about 1915 when I started to travel the field on behalf of the general manager and assistant general manager, principally at that time in Illinois and Indiana and Michigan, contacting the local managements, selecting and directing the construction of bulk plants, service stations, offices, warehouses, and generally supervising the sales activity in the field.

During that period I was completely in contact with every phase of the sales developments, which were very rapid in that period.

In 1920 I was appointed manager at Grand Rapids, Michigan, and in November, 1922, I was transferred to the position of manager in Indianapolis. These two divisions happen to be among our largest divisions, exceeded only by Chicago and Detroit.

That brings me up to Indianapolis. I remained in Indianapolis until early in 1929, and I was appointed assistant general manager, and with headquarters at Chicago, and in charge of the Western Division as constituted at that time, which embraced the states of Iowa, Missouri, and Kansas, and part of Oklahoma.

In 1933 I was given charge of the Northern Division, which included the states of North and South Dakota, 1715 Minnesota, and part of Wisconsin. And at intervals during that period of years from 1929 to 1935 I, of course, traveled over other parts of the territory, so that I covered the entire marketing area of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, with the exception of the Rocky Mountain division, which consists of Colorado, Wyoming, and Montana.

In 1935 I was given the title of assistant to the general manager, and placed in charge of gasoline and refined oil departments, with the exception of bulk sales, which was then handled as a separate department; bulk sales involved tank car sales, and barge sales, and other sales of that character.

In 1939 the bulk sales department was merged with mine. Since that time I have been in charge of the entire operations so far as sales are concerned and refined oil.

1716 Q. Generally, what are your duties in your present office?

A. Well, my office is the clearing house for all sales policies, prices, and all sales of every description, gasoline and refined oil and certain other products, distillates, furnace oils, and such products.

Q. During the course of your experience in the marketing of gasoline, Mr. Marshall, have you had occasion to observe the development of the use of the jobbers' system of distribution of gasoline?

A. At the time I joined the company in 1905 gasoline was a comparatively unimportant product. The volume of sales of it were not great, and its distribution was not wide spread. Shortly thereafter as the use of the internal combustion engine increased automobiles began to be operated in large numbers, of course the development was very rapid, and I have had the privilege of observing and being in contact daily with the entire development of the system of marketing gasoline as it exists today.

Q. Did you hear the testimony of the witness James E. Dyer given yesterday?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the definition which Mr. Dyer gave of a jobber, wholesaler, or distributor?

A. Yes, sir. I am very familiar with that definition.

1717 Q. Do you concur in that definition?

A. Entirely.

Q. What is the fact, Mr. Marshall, as to whether or not jobbers of gasoline engage in the dual operation of selling gasoline at wholesale and at retail?

A. A bona fide jobber, as included in the definition, almost invariably indulges in both the functions that have been described; that is, tank wagon distribution to dealers and consumers, and the direct operation of the service station.

Q. In the oil industry, is there any distinction made in the classification of tank car buyers on the basis of whether that buyer disposes of gasoline in whole or in part at retail or wholesale?

A. I make a personal distinction, which I think is also made by a great many others in the industry. And in explanation of that statement, I might say to you that during the past 15 years or so there has grown up a large and increasing number of what I might term, and do term mentally, tank car resellers. These people are sometimes designated as trackage stations. They have only one location, or if they have more than one, they are segregated in their operations, and each one is complete as a unit. They receive their gasoline in tank cars, and through a suitable system of piping, distribute it to the public through 1718 measuring pumps, without any intervening operation.
Their entire operations being resale. They frequently erect signs which in so many words describe the sale as "From Tank Car to You." And their principal inducement to the public to deal with them is that they can give a lower price by reason of their elimination of the customarily intervening operations.

There has also grown up methods of distribution by old line elevators, as distinguished from cooperative elevators, and cooperative oil companies.

The story is, within my personal knowledge, that the old line elevators found their business was being taken away from them by reason of the association of the cooperative elevator with a cooperative oil company. These concerns very frequently carrying long time credit for the farmer, supplying him with his petroleum products, with the arrangement that the price of these petroleum products will be deducted from the value of his grain when deposited in the elevator. So these old line elevators in many instances, particularly in North Dakota, Kansas, Montana, but here and there in other states, put up tank car storage and began buying gasoline in tank cars, so that they might follow the same practice. The cooperative oil company is a bona fide jobber in practically all instances. On the other hand, the old line elevator is of this classifica-
1719 tion that I have personally designated as a tank car reseller. But they also have a dual operation, in that they will fill the farmers' barrel or barrels at what is, in effect, a wholesale price, and out of the same storage tank, and through the same pumps they will fill an automobile fuel tank at a different and higher price.

Q. Mr. Marshall, in respect to each of these types of operators that you have just described, I think you have said that all buy on a tank car basis?

A. They all do buy on a tank car basis, yes.

Q. Does it follow that they buy at some differential under the tank wagon price that their supplier may have?

A. Well, the great custom throughout the industry in selling to the so-called jobber tank car buyer, who resells, is to predicate the price on the published quotations in the trade journals, particularly the Chicago Journal of Commerce and Platts Oilgram, Oklahoma edition, for comparable price. With the further provision of a discount off the tank wagon price in the locality where the consumer is situated. And the purchase is consummated, the purchase and sale are consummated, at whichever of these prices may be lower at the moment.

1720 Q. Does that method of arriving at a tank car price result in a lower price than what is commonly known as the tank wagon price of a supplier of gasoline?

A. Necessarily so, because one of the elements in that method of pricing is a discount below the local tank wagon price.

Q. Are you familiar with the four jobbers who are named in this action; namely, Ned's Auto Supply Company, Stikeman Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company and Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. Well, I don't know what you mean by "familiar." I am not familiar—

Q. Do you know them to be customers of the Standard Oil Company?

A. Oh, yes. I met a couple of the gentlemen at this hearing and I haven't met some of them, yet, but I am aware of their existence and, in fact, we sell them, some.

Q. Are you familiar with the general type of operation in which they engage?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with the fact that in the aggregate they handle approximately 14 to 15 million gallons of gasoline yearly?

A. I had thought it was around 13 million, or something like that, but it undoubtedly varies from time to time.

Q. Do you know it to be a fact that each of these companies has its own bulk storage and maintains its own 1721 delivery system facilities?

A. I don't know that of my own knowledge as I have never inspected the bulk plants but I am assured, on very reliable authority, that that condition exists. I accept it as so.

Q. You understand that to be the fact?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with the fact that those companies have for some time past been purchasing gasoline on the tank car basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you regard those four companies as being bona fide jobbers and entitled, as such, under industry practice and contemplation, to buy on a tank car basis?

A. I regard them under general industry practice as absolutely entitled to buy on the tank car basis.

I will go further and say that I doubt that they could be sold, by us, at least, and probably not any other unit in the industry at other than tank car prices.

Mr. Austin: I move the last of the sentence be stricken as not responsive and stating a conclusion that is not asked for.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the last sentence of the answer.

(The last sentence was read by the Reporter.)

Mr. Hanley: It may be stricken.

1722 By Mr. Hanley:

Q. In your opinion and judgment, Mr. Marshall, do you think it would be possible to sell gasoline to any of these four dealers at a price above the prevailing tank car price in Detroit?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Based on your experience and knowledge, Mr. Marshall, what in your judgment is the fact as to whether or not each of these four jobbers could at any time now purchase gasoline, from a number of different suppliers on a tank car basis?

A. My definite knowledge is that they could.

Q. Are their operations such as to make them of a type of buyer that is generally regarded in the industry as a tank car buyer or jobber?

A. Certainly.

Q. It has been shown in this case that the differential under the tank wagon price which has been given to each of these jobbers on a tank car basis is about a cent and a half on the average. What is your information as to whether that is a smaller or a larger differential than is ordinarily accorded jobber buyers?

Mr. Austin: Are you referring to house brand gasoline?

1723 Mr. Hanley: Well, I will refer to house brand gasoline.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. You may understand that the question refers to house brand gasoline.

A. It would be necessary to limit the question to house brand gasoline.

Q. You may so understand.

A. It is a smaller discount. The general practice of the oil industry throughout the middle west is to allow a discount of 2¢ below the tank wagon price for that type of trade. In the Rocky Mountain Division, certain parts of it, that discount is expanded at least to 2½ and, I think, in some instances, 3¢ per gallon below the local tank wagon price.

Q. Within your knowledge, Mr. Marshall, are there many jobbers operating in the middle west and who purchase their gasoline from some supplier other than the Standard Oil Company and whose operations are comparable to the operations of these four dealers in Detroit?

A. There are a great many; several thousand.

Q. You say several thousand.

A. Yes.

Q. You referred to cooperative oil companies or elevators.

A. Pardon me. You said purchasing from other than the Standard Oil Company?

1724 Q. From other than the Standard Oil Company.

A. As a matter of fact Standard Oil Company has very few such; comparatively few.

Q. You mean the Standard Oil Company has comparatively few jobbers?

A. That's right.

Q. As distinguished from other suppliers?

A. That's right.

Q. You referred a moment ago to cooperative oil companies as buyers on a tank car basis. They supply service stations, do they not, in some instances?

A. Their own, only, as a rule. There may be a few exceptions where they supply other dealers, but the cooperative oil company, as a rule, attempts to confine its operations entirely within itself. The only—between itself and its customers.

Q. And such organizations give any savings that they make in their operations to their patrons as patronage dividends, do they not?

A. Yes, they do.

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor, and move that the answer be stricken. There is some question here about cooperative oil companies. This is the first time I have heard about them in this case and I submit that any testimony as to cooperative oil companies is irrelevant and immaterial.

1725 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness has testified with reference to them. They are in existence.

Mr. Austin: Only in the preceding question do I understand that there was some mention of cooperative oil companies.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Previously, he testified as to the existence of cooperative oil companies.

Mr. Austin: If he has testified to it, I still say that it is irrelevant and immaterial and it is no reason for permitting further testimony along the same line.

Mr. Hanley: We won't pursue it any further.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I don't see the materiality but I overrule the objection.

Mr. Austin: It is not contending that the Standard Oil Company is a cooperative oil company, is it, Judge Hanley?

Mr. Hanley: No, except as we try to be cooperative as long as you let us but we are not a cooperative in that we are out from under the Robinson-Patman Act, if that's what you mean.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Marshall, I hand you what has been marked espondent's Exhibit 19, entitled Flow Chart of Gasoline from Refiner to Consumer, and will ask if you have examined that chart (handing document to witness)?

A. Yes, I have looked at it rather carefully.

1726 Q. Does that accurately portray, in a general way, the system and methods of distribution of gasoline in this country?

A. It is quite comprehensive, from that standpoint. It includes methods that are not used by all oil companies but it appears to include all methods that might be used by oil companies. There are methods shown here that the Standard Oil Company doesn't use, but such methods are used by some companies.

Q. Within your knowledge.

A. Within my knowledge.

Q. You heard the whole of the testimony of Mr. Dyer, did you not, Mr. Marshall?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you agree with the answers which Mr. Dyer gave to the questions which were propounded to him?

A. In the main, yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is very indefinite.

Mr. Austin: Yes.

A. I would say, yes.

Mr. Hanley: All right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, do I understand that you are changing your testimony and agreeing with all of them; every statement that he made?

The Witness: I don't remember, your Honor, every answer verbatim that he said, but I—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you think you can 1727 correctly answer that question?

The Witness: That is why I said, "in the main," because I feel I am entitled to some qualification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But that leaves us in doubt as to which one of the questions—

Mr. Hanley: I will ask another question, if I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. Austin: I would like to move that that be stricken, first.

Mr. Hanley: All right. It may be stricken.

Referee: The answer is stricken.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Is there anything in the testimony of Mr. Dyer as to his answers with which you disagree, Mr. Marshall?

A. I don't recall anything.

Q. Do you agree in principle with the answers which Mr. Dyer made to the questions which were propounded to him?

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor. It is entirely too indefinite. It is an attempt to cover the entire testimony of an expert witness by indirection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained. Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Hanley:

1728 Q. Mr. Marshall, advertising to the dual operation indulged in by these various jobbers throughout the country—and by "dual operation" I mean indulgence in the retail operation as well as the wholesale operation—have you had any occasion recently to determine to what extent some of the larger suppliers of gasoline employ that jobber system of distribution?

A. I have, in certain specific towns.

Q. Can you give us at this time some of the results of your investigation in that direction?

A. If I may refer to a memorandum on that?

Q. Surely.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may. The memorandum was made by you?

The Witness: Well, I didn't physically make it, but it was all done under my supervision, by my direction and I collected the figures made on this memorandum.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may use it.

The Witness: Developed the whole thing.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I request that the memorandum be marked for identification, if the witness is going to use it.

Mr. Hanley: Well, we haven't any objection to that. I don't know whether that is a necessary part of the procedure, or not.

1729 The Witness: I don't think it would mean much to anybody else.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Hand the memorandum to the Reporter and let him mark it Respondent's Exhibit 22 for identification.

(The memorandum referred to was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 22" for identification.)

A. These figures that I am about to testify to represent dual operations on the part of the supplying company; that is, where they operated directly and also sell to jobbers in the same locality.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. To clarify that: Is that the type of operation that is analogous to the operation of the Standard Oil Company in Detroit?

A. That is so.

Q. And further, Mr. Marshall, before you go on in respect of the jobbers that are used by those supplying companies, is it not true that they also engage in the dual operation of direct retail selling as well as wholesale selling?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: I would like to know whether the witness knows that of his own knowledge, about these jobbers.

The Witness: I am very familiar with the operations in all these towns that I will refer to.

1730 Mr. Austin: How is that?

The Witness: I am very familiar, personally, with the operations in all these towns that I will refer to.

Mr. Austin: Of the jobbers, as well as the suppliers?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Austin: All right.

A. I have visited these towns at frequent intervals; not all of them in the immediate past; and that is why I compiled the information, had the information compiled for me to verify my personal knowledge.

Mr. Austin: All right.

A. The figures which I will give for the Standard Oil Company are accurate and exact. The figures which I will give for the other companies are based on the best and most reliable information obtainable where tax records and cooperative records were available, that was the source of them. Where official records were not available, they were based on observation and general knowledge of the local management.

1731 Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I object to that, where it goes beyond observation, where it is based upon some records, tax records of some other companies, and those things are not here and not authenticated. I don't object to this as far as it is within the witness' own knowledge, or even where it might have been prepared by some subordinate from personal knowledge. I would accept the witness' word for that, but this appears to have been collected from some records about which I know nothing, and I object to it to that extent.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let us go off the record a few minutes and find out about it.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record. Objection sustained.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Marshall, to give your knowledge of the extent to which oil suppliers are using the jobber method of distribution in the same territory where the supplier is also supplying retailers directly. If you have a memorandum—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you understand the question?

The Witness: Yes, I understand the question.

Mr. Hanley: I am not trying to qualify this memo-
1732 randum as an exhibit, your Honor. This memorandum, yet, is none of the Government's affairs.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I merely asked the witness if he understood the question.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I want your own knowledge now, Mr. Marshall. If you need to refer to any memorandum; refer to it, but I am asking you for your knowledge; wherever you got it.

A. I can't give it to you on a percentage basis, but I will say that that type of operation is confined to the larger metropolitan centers, and it was for that reason that I had a survey made of those metropolitan centers.

Q. Can you approximate the percentages, the split, as between direct operation and jobber operation of any oil suppliers in any communities?

A. Yes.

Q. Again, you may refer to any memorandum which you may have.

A. Yes. Shall I select a community?

Q. Yes.

Mr. Austin: Anything you can testify to of your own knowledge.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You are not to use official figures, but anything of which you have any personal knowledge, you base your answer upon.

1733 The Witness: Then I can only testify to the Standard Oil Company.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Marshall, irrespective of where you got your information, whatever your sources may have been, are you able now to give us the approximate percentages which I have asked you about?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of your own knowledge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right.

A. Chicago: Standard Oil Company, 84.8%—these are based on 1940 gallonage—84.8% direct operation, which means our own tank wagon distribution. 11% through jobbers who are conducting the entire jobbing business. 1.4% through jobbers who are merely tank car resellers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You said another class were conducting the entire jobber operation. What did you mean by that?

The Witness: They distribute through tank wagon and other facilities.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. And they may, also, retail?

A. They may also retail.

Mr. Austin: What are the last ones?

1734 The Witness: They buy in tank car lots and sell through service stations.

Mr. Austin: You mean retailers?

The Witness: Yes, tank car resellers, but included in this classification of jobbers as has been used here, and we have some unbranded jobbers, that is, concerns who buy but don't use the Standard Oil Company's trade mark brand in their own operations. That represents 2.8% of our business.

Socony Vacuum, 18.3% direct; 39.6% through the jobber who conducts the entire operation, and 42.1% through the jobber who is simply a reseller.

Q. That's like Ned's in Detroit, again?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: I believe, your Honor, that I am entitled to an objection here, to reading in these percentages for other oil companies, unless the witness knows or examined the records of those companies and can state that he got the information from original sources. He read in the Standard Oil, and I haven't objected to his testimony that other companies engage in this practice to a greater extent than Standard Oil. Beyond that, I don't feel called upon to admit specific figures of other companies.

1735 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Aside from the testimony with regard to the Standard Oil Company, it seems to me this testimony is hearsay.

Mr. Hanley: He says he knows, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understand he says he knows, but when he is examined further, he says he gets them from official sources.

Mr. Hanley: I am going to offer to prove it. I will read it in the record myself in the form of an offer. We certainly are entitled to prove this.

Mr. Austin: You are entitled to prove it by a proper witness.

Mr. Hanley: Well, if a witness says he knows, your Honor, he is entitled to—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But he also says that he has relied upon information that he has obtained from official sources. That is not personal knowledge. He also says he has relied upon information he has obtained from other sources, and that isn't personal knowledge.

Mr. Hanley: Of course, that is true, but he is an expert in the oil industry. He has followed this thing for 35 years. He knows whether these percentages are approximately correct without talking to anybody in any other oil company or seeing any of their records.

I know the world is round, but I never stood off and looked at it and saw it appear as a ball in the air, but 1736 I know it is round. How do I know? Because of the general information that has come to me that I couldn't escape in living.

Mr. Marshall couldn't escape this type of information, even if he tried, and I say when an expert, qualified as Mr. Marshall is, is willing to say that of his own knowledge these are approximately correct percentages, he is entitled to testify to it. He is subjected to cross-examination and if he is mistaken, it may be developed.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He has already, by his own admissions, disqualified himself from testifying.

Mr. Hanley: Very well. I want to make the offer.

Mr. Austin: I think the Examiner will well remember one Professor Taggart if the University of Michigan, where questioned as to his knowledge of things done by his assistant, under his direct supervision—

Mr. Hanley: His testimony, incidentally, goes into this record, if you will remember, Mr. Austin, notwithstanding the rankest kind of hearsay, admitted by Professor Taggart.

Mr. Austin: His opinion testimony got in and I got in the facts of what was actually done.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Here is a case where there are official figures and records available. This witness may have examined them and he may have taken the 1737 figures from them, but the objection is sound. Counsel is entitled to the production of the original documents, if he insists upon them.

Mr. Hanley: Well, of course, we can't produce them.

Mr. Austin: I am only making this objection because it seems to me that the only material thing is whether or not this practice is engaged in by other companies, and I don't think the exact percentages are material, anyway, and I don't want to be bound here by material that is given as exact figures of other oil companies.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Marshall, in the course of your experiences, up to the present time, have you observed the practices of the Socony Vacuum Oil Company in respect of whether that company uses the jobber system of distribution jointly with the direct system of distribution?

A. I have, and they do.

Q. Have you also observed the practices of the Texas Company, the Phillips, and the Shell, and the Sinclair Companies?

A. I have, and they do. I have got to make an 1738 exception on the part of Sinclair because you mentioned Sinclair. I have got to make an exception on the part of them, because of the testimony I heard yesterday.

1739 Q. Have you observed the practices of the Socony-Vacuum, Texas, Phillips and Shell in the cities of Chicago, Duluth, Fargo, Minneapolis and St. Paul, St. Joseph, St. Louis, Detroit, Milwaukee, Grand Rapids, Wichita, Kansas City, Des Moines and Sioux City?

A. Well, I couldn't observe the practices of all of them in all of these towns because they are not all represented in all of these towns but I have observed the practices by the companies that are represented in these towns; the direct or dual operation.

Q. That is to say, if I understand you correctly, Mr. Marshall, that where any of the companies which I named operated in any of the cities which I named, you have had opportunity to, and have observed their practices?

A. Yes; most certainly.

Q. Have you observed the practices of the Gulf Oil Company in the City of Detroit with respect to this dual operation?

A. Yes.

Q. And have you observed Cities Service in the City of Milwaukee?

A. Yes.

Q. And the Continental Oil Company in the City of Wichita?

A. Yes.

Q. And the Skelley Company in the City of Kansas City?

A. Yes, sir.

1740 Q. And the Mid-Continent Company in the City of Des Moines?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you made a personal observance from time to time over the years that you have been connected with the industry of the activities of these various companies in these various places?

A. Yes, sir, in many instances.

Q. I think you have testified that you have actually seen this practice grow up in the industry.

A. Yes.

Q. And in the territory in which these cities are located?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In the course of your duties are you not required to supervise certain of the activities of the field or district offices of the Standard Oil Company?

A. In relation to their sales of gasoline and refined oils, yes.

Q. Do you not, periodically, and have you not, periodically, over a long period of time, received reports of various kinds, oral and written, that indicate to you what is going on in the matter of the use of this dual operation by other oil companies; I mean, other than Standard?

A. I do receive such reports currently.

Q. Before you made any investigation of figures, as I think you were requested by me to do, relative to 1741 these percentages about which you have been asked, did you have any knowledge of your own as to whether the Standard Oil Company indulged in this jobber system of distribution to a lesser or greater extent than these other companies which I have named?

A. I had absolute knowledge.

Q. And what was your knowledge in that respect?

A. That the extent of the Standard Oil Company's activity through this method of marketing is extremely small in comparison to the activities of the industry as a whole and much smaller than those of any other individual company.

Q. Did you have any knowledge prior to the obtaining or making any figures on the subject relative to whether or not these companies other than Standard sold more gasoline or less gasoline through the jobber system than through the direct sale system of distribution?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what is the fact as to whether or not these other companies sell a greater amount through the jobber system or through the direct operation?

A. In specific areas in many—let me qualify that: In a number of these larger metropolitan centers other so-called major oil companies distribute substantial proportions of their entire volume through jobbers; in some instances more through jobbers than they do direct.

Q. Did there come a time recently when you were 1742 requested to determine the figures, the degree of relationship between these various methods of distribution in the various companies which have been named?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you do so?

A. I did so and at a number of specific metropolitan areas where, of my own knowledge, I was aware that such activities existed.

Q. Now, how did you proceed to do that, Mr. Marshall?

A. I asked the local manager to give me the percentages of volume sold through the respective channels by the oil companies which I named in the towns where I knew such activities existed, merely for the purpose of enabling me to answer the question which you had made to me, propounded to me, and to verify my knowledge to the extent that such operations continued to exist since the last time I had observed them personally.

Q. Are the localities to which you refer the list of cities which I mentioned a moment ago in some question?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are the activities that occur in those cities, in relation to this dual operation, generally the same type of activity that occurs throughout the country, in gasoline distribution?

A. No.

1743 Q. What areas would you think were excluded, if any?

A. I have already stated that these dual operations principally occur in large metropolitan areas. There may be a very few instances where they occur in smaller towns but there are very widespread areas where even the major oil companies, whose names you have mentioned, do not market direct at all but market entirely through jobbers, if at all.

Q. The condition which you have indicated as existing in these named cities, then, if I properly understood you, are typical of larger centers of population in the country?

A. Yes. I have not attempted to cover all of the towns or cities where these activities are carried on, but just to select a few to demonstrate the point.

Q. The dual operation, if I correctly understand you, is not so prevalent in the rural communities where they have the rural circuits and bulk plant operations?

1744 A. The dual operation on the part of the oil company who is a refiner, and that is the dual operation we are talking about now, we are not talking about the jobber's operation.

Q. But there are jobbers who serve the rural communities?

A. Oh, many of them; thousands of them.

Q. And those do indulge in the dual operation, do they not?

A. Almost invariably.

Q. Now, you have started to tell us how you obtained these figures. I think you said you applied to the various division managers to aid you.

A. Yes.

Q. Did your office do any work on this at all?

A. Yes. I personally checked these figures and tabulated them and had them reduced to statement form for my convenience.

Q. Was the entire job, whether done in your office or in the division office, done under your supervision and management and your direction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did there come a time when you got some figures?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you look at them?

A. I certainly did. I studied them.

Q. When you saw them, did they accord with what you knew to be the fact, before you asked for the figures?

1745 A. They absolutely verified the understanding which I personally had from former observation; current knowledge of what was going on.

Q. Are you able to say now from your own knowledge that the percentage figures which you have show, with close approximation, the percentage of indulgence in the direct operation and in the jobber operation in the various localities named by the various companies name?

A. I am, with a further statement that the figures, as far as the Standard Oil Company is concerned, are, of course, accurate.

Mr. Hanley: Off the record, please.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I think I did fail to ask you, Mr. Marshall, if, in obtaining these percentage figures, you had recourse to public and official tax records and other records applying to the gasoline business.

A. Not in all cases.

Q. Did you have access or recourse to many different sources of information of various kinds?

A. I did have access to all that were available.

Q. Do you know that those were reliable sources?

1746 A. I know they are reliable sources.

Q. As a matter of fact, you rely on them in doing your own business, don't you, Mr. Marshall?

A. Surely.

Q. I now ask you, Mr. Marshall, to state from your own knowledge as close an approximation as you can of the percentage of the business done in Chicago by the Socony Vacuum Company by direct sales to retailers.

Mr. Austin: Is this the same question or is this something that is limited to his own personal knowledge?

Mr. Hanley: Will you read the question, please?

Mr. Austin: I request that the witness be instructed that from his own knowledge does not mean from records, but his own knowledge means from information he has obtained himself from the books of the company which is, I assume, the only place it could exist. If that isn't true, then I still make the same objection that I did before: if this material is from the same source as before referred, to.

1747 Mr. Hanley: I object to the statement of counsel as being unfair to the witness and misleading to the witness, for the reason that the witness has been asked to give his own knowledge, and that he may not be told what his own knowledge is; that he is the only man on earth that knows what his own knowledge is; and the Court nor anyone else can tell him what it is, irrespective of where he may have obtained it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness may answer the question, but will confine it to matters of which he has personal knowledge, and not include therein any matters that have come to him by hearsay.

Mr. Hanley: To get the record straight, I object to the restriction placed upon the witness by the statement of the Court.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, Mr. Marshall, can you answer the question in view of the restriction made by the Court?

A. I cannot.

Mr. Hanley: All right. We are up to the point where I can make the offer, if your Honor please, and I don't know whether you want me to proceed any further with it or not.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You better dispose of this matter.

1748 Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may proceed to ask the witness any questions you want.

Mr. Hanley: I will do it that way, if that is preferred.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Marshall, I will ask you if you have arrived, in the manner in which you have indicated, at certain percentage figures in relation to this dual operation which, in your knowledge and best judgment, accurately reflect the split or degree of use of the two methods by the various companies in the various localities which have been discussed in your testimony?

A. I have.

Q. You may state what those are.

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: One moment. Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

(The record was read.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Mr. Hanley: In view of the ruling of the Court, the Respondent now offers to prove by the witness J. C. Marshall, who has been qualified and shown to be a competent witness to give testimony, that if permitted so 1749 to do, the witness will testify that in his knowledge and best judgment the following percentage figures fairly approximate the amount of business done directly and through jobbers by the several oil companies hereafter named in the localities hereafter named; to-wit:—

Mr. Austin: I would like to interpose an objection at this point. If your Honor please, I think an offer of proof such as that proposed to be made by counsel for the Respondent is entirely improper, immaterial, and would be improper practice to permit it to go into the record, for the reason that the question here is not as to the admissibility of the evidence proposed at all; the only question is whether or not this witness is competent to give the answer. That question is already thoroughly portrayed on the record. I contend that an offer of proof is only proper where there is a question of ruling upon the admissibility of evidence. The admissibility of the evidence has not been placed in question, but only the competency of this witness to give the evidence, or to testify to this particular subject matter. Therefore, there is no need for an offer of proof. The only question as to any ruling that has been made here is whether this witness is qualified to give the answers which are asked for.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, hasn't counsel
1750 for the Commission correctly stated the legal status?

Mr. Hanley: The best answer to that, if your Honor please, is this: that if the Commission or a Court reviews this record, and disagrees with the propriety of your Honor's ruling in excluding this testimony from Mr. Marshall, then where are we? It isn't in the record. The Commission may say it would have been proper for Mr. Marshall to have testified to these figures. But he hasn't been permitted to testify to these figures, because in the judgment of your Honor I haven't properly qualified him. Now, I think I have, and I hope the Commission will agree with me.

Now, if they do, then, these figures should be in the record, because if they are not, what are we going to do about it?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If the Commission disagrees with the ruling of the Examiner, and they consider this material to a determination of the case, the Commission will promptly reopen the case, remand it back for the inclusion of this evidence in the record.

Mr. Hanley: That is a long road.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is the road that they customarily take.

Mr. Hanley: Of course, I would have much less difficulty if I could understand the reason for this hypertechnical objection. I can't, for the life of me, see what is frightening anybody about me putting this stuff in the record. Who is going to see it that is going 1751 to get hurt by it? I just don't know why they object.
I bow to your Honor's ruling that this witness is not competent to testify to it. All I want it in there for is to have it in there if the Commission says he was competent to testify to it.

It is easy enough for counsel to say, "Well, you ought to go and bring in all these oil companies."

That isn't so easy to do.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is perfectly frank in saying that if this evidence is material at all in ought to be in the record with a greater degree of accuracy and definiteness than as it now appears. And that he would like very much to have it in the record, but that his hands are tied. He has no other alternative but to sustain the objection.

Mr. Hanley: Do I understand, your Honor, that I am not permitted to go on and dictate my offer into the record? Is that the ruling?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner so rules.

Mr. Hanley: Very well.

Now, I will prepare this same information in the form of an exhibit, and I will offer that exhibit through Mr. Marshall, and then it is bound to be in the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, it will be avail-
1752 able, at least—

Mr. Hanley: Even if it is rejected.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Even if it is rejected, were it can be included in the record without recalling the witness.

Mr. Hanley: I wonder if we might recess now? I don't know where I go from here with this witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Upon motion of counsel for Respondent, at 5:35 P. M., the hearing stands adjourned to be reconvened at 10 A. M., April 24, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(Thereupon at 5:35 o'clock P. M., April 23, 1944, an adjournment was taken to reconvene at 10 o'clock A. M., April 24, 1941.)

PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

This is a reconvening at 10 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, April 24, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, of Docket No. 4389, in the case entitled In Re: Standard Oil Company. The last hearing was held in Detroit, April 23, 1941.

The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

You may proceed.

JOHN C. MARSHALL resumed the stand, and having been heretofore duly sworn, testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Continued) by Mr. Hanley.

Q. Mr. Marshall, in your testimony yesterday you were outlining several different practices that involved tank car sales to jobbers and resellers of gasoline. I understand that there is one that you think you either did not cover or didn't cover as fully as you wish to. Do you have in mind that one this morning; something that either originated in Kansas or was quite prevalent in Kansas, as well as elsewhere?

A. Yes. There are, in the State of Kansas, many 1755 instances where small, comparatively small crossroads service stations have erected large capacity storage on the same lot and receive their supplies of gasoline direct by transport truck from Kansas and Oklahoma refineries. They have no sidetrack facilities. They are a distance from the railroad, as a rule, but by that means of operation they are put into the same classification as these tank car resellers that I spoke of. That situation is developing to some extent in Oklahoma and also in western and southwestern Missouri. It appears to be in the process of development in areas that are close enough to refineries or terminals where that type of transportation can be economically used.

Q. And that last statement, do you mean that the custom and practice is spreading generally territorially over the country?

A. It is.

Q. What is the usual price basis in that type of operation?

A. A price f.o.b. the refinery, which is, in effect, a tank car price, plus the compensation to the carrier for transporting the product.

In some instances the carrier makes the purchase itself at the refinery—I mean the transport truck operator makes the purchase himself at the refinery, and then adds onto its cost whatever he sees fit.

In other instances the purchase may be made by 1756 the filling station operator who will compensate the transport truck operator at the established hauling rate.

Q. And that gasoline is resold by the purchaser at retail?

A. At retail entirely, except as in the case of those old line elevators that I spoke of yesterday, farmers bring their barrels in and buy at a lower price, the barrels being filled through the same measuring pumps as the tanks of automobiles may be filled.

Q. With respect to jobbers generally throughout the country, Mr. Marshall, what is the fact as to whether or not most of them have a retail service station or outlet as a part of their plant, irrespective of whether they have other outlets, retail outlets, which they operate or not?

A. It is very frequently the case that at the bulk plant, and as an integral part of it, the jobber has retail pumps. He may not have a service station building separate and distinct from his warehouse or office, but in some instances, the so-called service station building combines the general office and warehouse facilities. But almost invariably the jobber has facilities for retail sales at his bulk plant.

Q. From your experience, Mr. Marshall, are you able to give us any idea as to the extent of the investment in this country in the jobber business?

1757. A. I couldn't estimate it in dollars and cents because it will run into many, many millions. And in reaching that conclusion I have personal knowledge of an instance of a jobber in the state of Indiana who was able to sell out, some ten years ago, to a major oil company—not the Standard Oil Company—for around $5,000,000, which, of course, included physical properties and his good will and so forth; entire business was sold out at a figure of around $5,000,000.

Q. Was that—

A. In one instance, of course. That is unusual and unique, I will say. But with the thousands of jobbers that are in business, the total investment which they have must run into many, many millions.

Q. That particular instance that you have referred to, was that jobber engaged in what we have been calling dual operation?

A. Oh, yes. He delivered by tank wagon to dealers and consumers, and conducted by direct operation, salaried and commissioned employees, a very large number of service stations.

1758 Q. Do you happen to recall who his supplier was?
A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether that supplier engaged in the dual operation, also; that is, supplying jobbers as well as retail outlets?

A. Oh, yes; yes.

Q. You have testified, Mr. Marshall, that you are generally familiar with the set up here in the Ned's Auto Supply Company and with their operations in respect of merchandising gasoline and certain other commodities: more particularly, automobile accessories. Do you have in mind, and do you know of many other instances of like operation throughout the country?

A. Yes, I know of quite a few.

Q. With reference to Chicago, for instance; are there any there of comparable size and character?

A. From the standpoint of gasoline marketing, yes. Possibly not from the standpoint of marketing items such as tires and refrigerators and radios, and so forth The concerns in Chicago that I have in mind don't market these electrical devices. They confine themselves, to my knowledge, entirely to related products of the petroleum industry, such as tires and batteries and things of that sort.

1759 Q. Are some of them considerably larger, from the standpoint of volume of gasoline handled, than Ned's?

A. Well, Ned's is a very large volume seller, but my judgment would be that there are at least two and possibly three such concerns in Chicago, who, by reason of having a larger number of outlets, and, of course, a larger city to sell their products in, handle more gasoline than Ned's do.

Q Now, you are familiar with the fact, are you not, Mr. Marshall, that Ned's handles a great many tires?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. I don't know, but I think it is in evidence in this case—it will be, at least—but that organization either is now or was, a short time ago, the largest distributor in the country of the Firestone tire line.

A. That has been my personal opinion, sir.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I don't think it is material how many tires Ned's sells. I don't think it is in the record. I object to a statement going into the record for that effect.

Mr. Hanley: I think he testified to it, your Honor. I am not sure, whether on his adverse examination, and he may be asked to testify to it, and thih is a foundational question.

Mr. Austin: I don't see what the regulation of 1760 the sale of tires has to the sale of gasoline.

Mr. Hanley: Well, if you let me ask the question, it may appear pertinent to you

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Reserving the objection to counsel for the Commission, with the right to move to strike, the witness may be permitted to answer.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, based on your knowledge and experience in marketing, Mr. Marshall, what have you to say as to whether it is true or otherwise that a purchaser of large quantities of gasoline or large quantities of tires or large quantities of any consumer commodity can and does purchase those commodities at a lesser price than such commodities can be purchased in relatively small quantities or by relatively small outlets?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I don't believe that—well, I don't think that question is susceptible to definite answer. It applies to practically every kind of an article that is sold.

Mr. Hanley: It does, I think.

Mr. Austin: It is so perfectly obvious that there are different rules by different sellers in each industry—to say that everybody that buys in a certain quantity gets a better price, I think the Court could take common judicial knowledge of the fact that that is not so, before the 1761 witness answers it. It simply couldn't be so.

Mr. Hanley: Do you mean quantity prices—

Mr. Austin: There is no such thing as saying everybody that buys in a certain quantity gets a lower price than somebody buying it on a lower quantity.

Mr. Hanley: That is not my question. Will you read the question, please?

(The question was read as follows: "Now, based on your knowledge and experience in marketing, Mr. Marshall, what have you to say as to whether it is true or otherwise that a purchaser of large quantities of gasoline or large quantities of tires or large quantities of any consumer commodity can and does purchase those commodities at a lesser price than such commodities can be purchased in relatively small quantities or by relatively small outlets?")

Mr. Austin: I will be glad to hear the witness answer that question, because it is so impossible of answer. I would like to know whether the witness would try to answer, or not, so I withdraw the objection.

A. I think it is a matter of common knowledge, and it is my personal opinion, based on my experience and contact with these various lines of business, that a concern like Ned's Auto Supply, handling a tremendous volume of tires—

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor. That is not 1762 responsive.

Mr. Hanley: It is responsive. Let him finish his answer.

Mr. Austin: I request that the question be reread.

The Witness: I will leave out Ned's Auto Supply, if you wish.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I take it he is answering this question piecemeal. He is segregating the various items included in the question.

Mr. Hanley: It is his answer, certainly, Judge. Counsel asked him to try, and he is trying.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

1763 A. But a concern purchasing a tremendous number of tires secures a benefit of a lower price from his supplier than another reseller of the same brand of tires who handles a relatively small volume.

It is a general practice in industry that carload buyers receive a lower price than small quantity buyers. It is self evident on the streets of Detroit that a buyer of five, ten, or fifteen gallons of gasoline from any supplier or through any method pays a higher price than the buyer of ten thousand gallons of gasoline at one delivery in a tank car or five or six thousand gallons of gasoline at one delivery in a transport truck.

In the fuel oil industry, it is public knowledge that even the domestic heating operator, that is the householder who has an oil burner in his home, pays a higher price for a delivery less than a certain volume, which is customarily one hundred gallons than he does if he buys three or four hundred gallons at a single delivery.

I could go on, because it is so well established as a practice that the quantity buyer receives the benefit of the lower price. There just isn't any argument about it.

Q. Now, Mr. Marshall, out of your experience and observation as a marketer, are you able to express any opinion as to whether that system is economically sound or otherwise?

1764 A. In my opinion it is economically sound and fundamentally essential in the conduct of business.

Q. What is your opinion as to whether that practice is promotive of competition or has a tendency to stifle, hamper competition?

A. It does not hamper competition in any way. In fact, I would say it stimulates and strengthens competition.

Q. In your experience have you observed any economic unfairness as a result of that general marketing structure and system? I mean now unfairness as between competitors in any line of commerce?

A. I have not, because all suppliers offer quantity prices to prospective customers who are situated with physical facilities and financial ability to make quantity purchases. To be precise, when an oil marketer establishes tank car storage with side track facilities and proper unloading equipment which permits him to receive tank car shipments of gasoline under the Interstate Commerce regulations, he is naturally solicited on a tank car basis by the various suppliers of gasoline. And it would seem almost an absurdity for any supplier to approach such a purchaser on any other basis. As if such purchaser were not privileged to buy on a tank car basis there would be no reason for him making the investment providing these large facilities. He might just as well have a few smaller tanks, such as the ordinary reseller has.

1765 Q. You have indicated that there is a tremendous money investment in this type of operation, jobber operation. Now, Mr. Marshall, assume that a jobber who has set up a business and has purchased some brand of product for many years and sold it, what is the fact as to whether or not that jobber builds up a clientele or customer following and a good will for his business and for the product which he sells?

A. Well, there is a certain volume of that business, that is the jobber's business, because of his local prestige and so forth; and to that class of customer he could in the end undoubtedly sell whatever product he might handle, assuming that it was a fairly satisfactory one. But the trade mark brand which he handles is of an estimable value to him, and should he be compelled to change after a period of many years from one trade mark brand to another, which might not have the same public acceptance in the locality, or to an unbranded product, and attempt to establish that product from the ground up, in the minds of the public he would inevitably sustain a very serious loss, and it would take him years to build back to where he was immediately prior to the change.

1766 Q. Would that not be true, Mr. Marshall, without any reference at all to the merits of the gasoline, for instance?

A. Well, the merits of the gasoline, necessarily, are an important element. If he went to an unsatisfactory product or a product without merit, his business naturally would be destroyed.

Q. I don't think I have made it clear, Mr. Marshall. Assuming that a jobber who has—well, I think I can make it more concrete.

It has been shown in this case that Ned's Auto Supply Company, for instance, has handled the branded gasoline of the Respondent for 20 odd years, I believe, and has built up from a small to a large volume of sales. Now, assuming that for some reason Ned's Auto Supply Company was unable to continue to purchase that brand of gasoline, and assuming that he could purchase a brand of gasoline that had equal merit with Standard gasoline—parenthetically, that is a violent assumption to ask a Standard Oil marketer to make—is it not true that for a time, at least, he would lose business?

A. It is true. Any change which would result temporarily in a loss of business, unless the change were made from a less popular brand or an unbranded product to a well-known branded product, which has very large 1767 public acceptance in the locality. All these brands have more or less of the following: they have been advertised, accepted by the public for many years, but there is a degree of acceptance which varies very considerably as between the brands. Standard Oil Company was one of the earliest marketers in this area, if not the earliest, and its products have been before the public and accepted by the public as a standard—and I am not playing on the word; I am using the word "standard" in its ordinary acceptance—and consequently the product and name, the brand have their individual following and Ned's couldn't sell some of these people other products if he tried.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge Hanley, the materiality of this line of testimony hasn't occurred to the Examiner.

Mr. Hanley: Well, of course, if your Honor please, I am not at all clear—indeed, I have never found anybody who was entirely clear—on just how the Robinson-Patman Act may be applied and interpreted. Theoretically, I assume it to be designed to prevent injury to anybody. I assume that the interest of the Commission in the handling of any application of the law is freighted with the underlying concept of public interest.

Now, there are always various elements in the public. One is the ultimate consumer. For instance, in this 1768 matter there are thousands of people who are buying gasoline and putting it in their automobiles. I assume that that is one element of the public that the Commission would have in mind.

Another element of the public that, I assume, would be regarded by the Commission, are the various marketers of gasoline which, in turn, break down into refiners and suppliers, into jobbers of these myriad types that have been testified to here, and retailers who follow no other function.

Now, any application of the law that results injuriously to any of that group or any of those groups, any application with distorts an obviously economically sound marketing structure, may well be regarded by the Commission as an improper interpretation and application of the law. It is no more proper that this law be applied in such a way as to injure one jobber than it is proper that it be applied in such a way, or not applied in such a way as to result against a public interest, having in mind the ultimate purchaser of gasoline; the consumer of gasoline.

We think that it is entirely proper in this proceeding to paint the entire picture for the Commission. All of these elements in the marketing structure, their place in it, how they reached that place, the functions that they per- 1769 formed and what would result if the thing were done which it seems to be the purpose of the Complaint filed in this action to bring about.

Unquestionably it is going to distort and re-arrange in some way a marketing structure in this country that has been the result of the growth of many, many years and involved many thousands of people and many millions of dollars.

Now, the purpose in this line of questions is simply to give the Commission the picture of what really happens in the marketing business.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Doesn't this testimony or line of testimony presuppose a situation whereby an order might issue against, for instance, this Respondent, and the Respondent would be precluded from selling to these four companies in tank car lots and that one of their competitors, or somebody else, could step in and supply the same—that is, their product in like quantity, to the same four operators? Do you think that a condition of that kind would be tolerated or could exist or the Government would, under any condition, permit it?

Mr. Hanley: I am very sure it could exist, your Honor, as the expert marketers have testified. If the Commission were to file complaints against everybody in the industry and issue cease and desist orders against 1770 everybody in the industry, and everybody were put on an equality and everyone were required to operate his business under the same rules, then I can see no reason why any one company could have any serious complaint. It might involve re-arrangements of their methods of doing business which might hurt them, but I don't think that under our system of government we can complain about the passage of a law that is a proper law and which applies equally to everyone. We just have to fit ourselves into that picture, but we have a situation here where it is quite apparent that this proceeding is starting at the wrong end of the road in this: that this Respondent has been singled out, out of all of the thousands of companies, large and small, that are operating under an accepted marketing structure.

The only thing that can happen in this proceeding is either that the Commission will say that we were either justified or have presented a sufficient defense, and dismiss the proceedings, or the alternate to that is that the Commission will say that we have been guilty of some infraction of the law and will enter a cease and desist order against us; one company.

Now, it would seem that it must be quite clear, without any evidence, notwithstanding, I recognize my obligation to prove it on the record, that that kind of an order would immediately result, so far as the Standard Oil Com-1771 pany is concerned, in very serious damage. First, it would deprive us of a tremendous amount of business, and whatever other companies might do, I assume that the policy of our company would be, if you entered a cease and desist order against us here in Detroit, that even though the order were limited to Detroit and to specific jobbers, that we probably would operate in violation of the spirit of that order in our own affairs elsewhere in our territory.

1772 I think it may be unfortunate, but I think it is true, just as these experts have testified, that that order wouldn't be binding on any other company and they wouldn't so regard it and they would just take our business.

Judge, the public interest hasn't been served at all. We have just been penalized for something we did in the past that was regarded as fair by everybody and the effect would be to penalize us and punish us for something that we did in the past, without having any future beneficial effect on the public interest, because nothing would be corrected. This thing would go on, just as it is going on now, without any result except that the Standard Oil Company would be sitting apart and hampered, restricted, placed under a rule of conduct that makes it impossible for it to compete with the suppliers who were engaged in identically the same line of business and with whom, I think, it is recognized we are entitled to compete on any fair basis.

Now I just feel that we are entitled to present that thing clearly to the Federal Trade Commission. I said a moment ago I thought this proceeding was starting at the wrong end. I mean by that that instead of the proceeding picking out one company out of all of these thousands and, in effect, making a guinea pig of that company, that this is an industry situation and if this thing is wrong, which we do not concede at all—which these experts say is sound—but if it is wrong, if that is the view of the Commis-1773 sion and if that is what this law means, if it is proper to abolish this type of marketing by governmental authority; law; then that thing ought to be done from the foundations. It ought to permeate the whole structure. It ought to be just the same kind of law as the law against larceny. That anybody that violates it has committed an offense. It ought not to be applied singly to one company when it is perfectly obvious in the industry that first it just punishes and damages that company and, secondly, it doesn't accomplish anything.

This matter, as I recall the so-called Mother Hubbard suit, started by the Attorney General, was not completed. It apparently wasn't regarded—this specific thing—as a vice and I think they have picked out about everything they could think of that was vicious, in the Attorney General's view, in the oil industry, and I don't understand that the Government now is seeking—I mean the Government in that suit—is seeking to place any such rule as this on the oil industry. That is the purpose of all this line of examination, Judge.

1774 Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may proceed.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I object to the statement that the practice involved in this case is something that everybody agrees is fair and recognized. It obviously isn't considered fair or recognized by a lot of people who came down and complained to the Federal Trade Commission from time to time against it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The mere fact that the Federal Trade Commission instituted this proceeding indicates that they want and desire an inquiry into the matter.

Mr. Austin: Yes. And I don't think it is, of course, any defense, nor of any relevancy or materiality to show that other companies are engaged in the same practice. Because if someone else is violating the law, it is certainly no defense to the Standard Oil Company, and that goes without saying. And I don't think Judge Hanley was even attempting to suggest that.

But, after all, the Commission has issued four Complaints against four companies already, here in Detroit. And for the purpose of the hearings, I can't see how it is a subject upon which testimony should be taken as to the number of companies engaging in the same practice. I don't see that that proves anything one way or the other about the practice.

1775 Mr. Hanley: I don't want to be misunderstood, your Honor, about this thing. It is highly important to us, of course, and I don't want to be misunderstood at all. I, of course, concede that if I commit a murder and I am caught and tried, the fact that John Jones committed a murder and was acquitted is no defense for me.

If this thing is, indeed, against the law, I know of no reason why the Standard Oil Company or any other company shouldn't be proceeded against. We are not complaining about the mere fact that there is an inquiry. We think, however, that there has been no determination so far by the Commission of the application of this law to this type of a structure, and that the Commission—just in fairness to the Commission, as well as to the Respondent—is entitled to know the magnitude of the results that would follow by placing the rule on this one company. Now, assumedly—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, the Examiner looks upon the evidence as more informative than having a direct bearing upon any issue in the case. And upon that theory we will proceed and admit it.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Marshall, assuming that a cease and desist order were entered in this case against the Standard Oil Company, the effect of which would be to prevent the 1776 Standard Oil Company from selling gasoline at tank car prices to the four jobbers, or any of them. What, in your judgment, would be the fact as to whether or not those four jobbers could purchase gasoline elsewhere?

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor, on the ground that it is immaterial as to what Mr. Marshall thinks about whether those jobbers could buy from somebody else in the event that there was an order by the Federal Trade Commission, or upon any other contingency.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the Examiner is of the opinion that it has no direct bearing upon any issue in this case. It may have an indirect bearing. It may be informative. And upon that ground he overrules the objection and will take the answer.

A. With due respect to statements previously made by the Examiner in my hearing, I will say that these jobbers would be solicited, if not by suppliers who are already represented here, by suppliers who are not represented in direct operation. They would secure their requirements in tank cars at as favorable or possibly a more favorable price than they are enjoying today. But these jobbers would be placed in the position where they would be unable to go out in the open market and buy products of their own selection. They would be limited, in other words, to buying products not generally distributed in this area, having 1777 no public acceptance, and possibly of not as acceptable quality. The Standard Oil Company would also be prohibited from following the function for which it was created, and which—

1778 Mr. Austin: I object to that statement and request that it be stricken.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That portion is granted.

Mr. Hanley: You mean as to the statement the Standard Oil Company—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes, the purposes for which it is created.

Mr. Hanley: You may proceed with your answer.

A. (Continuing.) Can I express it differently?

The Standard Oil Company would be prohibited from entering into full enjoyment of the market that is available to it and selling on the same basis and to the same classes of trade as its competitors were permitted to do.

Q. Assuming, Mr. Marshall, that the outcome of this proceeding were to result in an order which prevented by any means what has been referred to as the dual operation, either on the part of a supplier or refiner, or on the part of a jobber; what in your judgment as a marketer would be the result with respect to the various jobbers doing business in the City of Detroit, and the result as to suppliers such as the Standard Oil Company?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I object to that question, and I would like to have the objection to that question, the previous question, and all further questions which are based on, in any way, if the Federal Trade Commis-1779 sion issued an order. Because the Federal Trade Commission has no discretion as to whether it issues an order or does not issue an order; it must issue an order under the statute if it finds the law has been violated.
Therefore, questions as to what would happen if the order was issued are entirely immaterial, because they could in no way effect the discretion of the Commission, for the simple reason that the Commission has no discretion.

The only question here is whether or not the Robinson-Patman Act has been violated. It is not even a question as it is under the Federal Trade Commission when the Commission has to determine whether there is a public interest. But although I believe that is only determined at the time of issuance of the complaint, perhaps by inference it might apply to issuances of an order. But upon that I express no opinion.

But under the Robinson-Patman Act, either it determines that the law is violated or is not, and if it is violated an order issues, and the Commission has no discretion to refuse to issue the order under those circumstances, regardless of what it may conceive to be the order or the public interest affected.

For that reason I believe that any questions based upon the witness' opinion, or asking the witness' opinion as to what may be the result of an order issued by the 1780 Commission in a Robinson-Patman Act case are improper.

Mr. Hanley: May I inquire, your Honor, is it regarded by your Honor as true that the Commission is without any discretion at all under the Clayton Act, and not entitled to regard the public interest in its interpretation and application of that act?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is of the opinion that the Commission would act only in the interest of the public.

Mr. Hanley: I had so understood the law and the policy of the Commission. But it seems not to be the view of Mr. Austin.

Just for my own information I wanted to get that clear.

Mr. Austin: My opinion is the only thing that the Commission can determine is whether or not the act has been violated.

1781 Now, if there is some question as to what the Act means, I don't know that I ever heard of—well, strike that.

But if conceivably in some way the question of public interest could be involved in an interpretation of the statute, than it might come in at that point. But certainly there is no question of consideration of public interest as to whether an order should issue once it is determined that the Act has been violated.

In other words, the Commission can't say, "Well, we think the Act has been violated, but we won't issue an order, because we think to issue an order would be contrary to public interest." The only remedy would be to go to Congress and ask for a repeal.

Mr. Hanley: Those statements are probably technically true, your Honor, but it seems we are getting a little metaphysical in these discussions. All we want to do is aid the Commission in sizing up this marketing structure.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

Mr. Hanley: And to apply the law.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness may answer.

Mr. Hanley: Will you read the question, please?

(The last question was read.)

Mr. Austin: I further object to that question, 1782 your Honor, upon the ground that it is speculative and not based upon any proper hypothetical set of facts and doesn't permit of a definite answer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, that runs to the weight of the evidence. The witness may answer.

A. In my opinion, and it seems to me quite obvious, that the activities of the jobber would be very materially circumscribed, with a resulting loss to them in the conduct of their business.

I have testified that the vast majority of the bona fide jobbers operate one or more service stations directly, as well as selling by tank wagon to dealers and consumers. And to the extent that their gallonage went through their service stations, their business would be destroyed. So far as the effect on the supplier, is concerned, it would take away from him—and I mean the industry, as a whole—a substantial portion of the market, which he could only regain by very heavy investments for direct operation, or owned facilities, which many marketers would be unable to make. And it would result in a restraint of competition, or restraint of trade, which I have always felt we wanted to avoid.

Any rule or ruling of this character which wipes out a long-established avenue of trade and commerce would, in my opinion, necessarily have the result I have indicated.

1783 Q. Mr. Marshall, it has been testified to, I think by Mr. Dyer and by Professor Clark—the testimony, I believe, you heard, did you not?

A. Yes, sir, I heard it.

Q. You may have testified to it yourself.

—that there were in instances at least economies in the use of the jobber system of distribution that made that system in certain localities and certain times more economical than the distribution could be done directly by a larger refiner. Do you agree that that is true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, is it not also true that if the results occurred that you have indicated in your opinion would occur in your previous answer, that it would have the effect in many instances of bringing about a less economical system of distribution than now exists?

A. That would necessarily follow.

Q. And that, in turn, would be reflected to the disadvantage of the public who buys gasoline, would it not, Mr. Marshall?

A. In several ways, yes.

Mr. Hanley: May I have this marked as a Respondent's Exhibit?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document Respondent's Exhibit 23.

(The document referred to was marked, for iden-1784 tification, "Respondent's Exhibit 23.")

Q. Mr. Marshall, I hand you what has now been marked for identification Respondent's Exhibit 23 entitled: "Dual Operations by Supplying Companies," and without stating the contents of the paper tell us what it represents, if you know.

A. In relation to certain towns which are listed here this statement purports to show the percentage in business done by certain companies who are listed on this statement, direct through their own operations or through jobbers.

Q. Did you have that compiled?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it compiled under your supervision and direction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Marshall, if the figures that appear under column No. 1 relate to the Standard Oil Company, the Respondent in this action?

A. They do.

Q. Are those figures accurate and taken from your records and the records of the Respondent?

A. They are accurate and taken from the records of the Respondent, as far as the year 1940 is concerned. These percentages will vary, from year to year, of course.

Q. As to the other percentage figures relating to other companies, are you able to say that such percentage figures closely approximate the percentages of gasoline sold 1785 through the various channels of distribution that are indicated on the chart?

A. To the best of my information and belief, they do.

Q. Now, those figures and percentages are the same material that were under discussion, are they not, Mr. Marshall, in your testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hanley: Now, if your Honor please, I certainly don't want to bore the Court and burden the record with any further qualification. I am wondering if it may not be understood that the questions, the testimony relating to the qualification or competency of this witness to answer the questions asked of him yesterday, may not be regarded as the Respondent's testimony to qualify and form the foundation for the offer of this exhibit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will hear from counsel for the Commission.

Mr. Austin: Is that being offered in evidence?

Mr. Hanley: I am going to offer it but, of course, I don't want to offer it until I have offered the testimony which I think qualifies it. I am just asking, now, to avoid going through a lot of those questions, if they may not be regarded as asked in support of this document.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Your request is that the testimony introduced yesterday pertaining to this 1786 matter may be here considered in connection with the presentation of the matter now, is that correct?

Mr. Hanley: That's right. We haven't anything more to offer in the way of qualification or competency. I take it, unless there has been a change of mind or heart on the part of someone, that the ruling is going to be the same as it was yesterday. I just don't want to go through the mechanics of asking those questions again.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Before the Examiner rules on that I want to direct the Reporter to read the last question and answer.

(The last question and answer were read by the Reporter.)

Mr. Hanley: I might ask one further question.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. So far as you know, Mr. Marshall, they are the exact percentages, aren't they?

A. I again have to answer as I did before, that they are, to the best of my information and belief.

Q. And they may be exact?

A. Yes.

Q. But you are sure they closely approximate them? A. There is no question about that.

1787 Mr. Hanley: Is there any objection, Mr. Austin, to that line of testimony being regarded as supportive of the offer which I proposed to make?

Mr. Austin: I thought it already was in the record.

Mr. Hanley: It is. I wasn't offering any exhibit yesterday.

Mr. Austin: I don't see there is anything to object to there. There is no offer of anything in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: His request is to the effect that it may be considered as transposed and here considered.

Mr. Hanley: As supportive of this offer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: As supportive of his offer.

Mr. Austin: There has been no offer yet, has there?

Mr. Hanley: No, Mr. Austin, but I didn't want to make the offer until I had the basis made. I will make it right away, as soon as I find out what you are willing to do about this.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Irrespective of objection, it may be so considered.

Mr. Hanley: Very well.

I now offer Respondent's Exhibit 23, for identification, in evidence. 1788

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor, on the same grounds stated yesterday. This states figures as to other oil companies upon which I would have no opportunity for cross examination, either as to the figures or as to the material from which they were based, and that it appears that this is simply a compilation of figures which the witness has made from other sources, and there is no original source of information offered.

Mr. Hanley: In fairness to counsel and Court I ought to direct attention to the fact that the first column reflects the Standard Oil figures, and I don't think you mean to object to that.

Mr. Austin: I don't object to the first column.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner will permit counsel to read into the record that portion of this statement relating to the Respondent company, and sustains the objection to all other portions. You may read it in.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I am not sure that I want to read in the one list unless the Commission feels it proper, ultimately, to consider all of the figures, so if I may have the privilege of deferring the presentation of that portion of the exhibit that is admitted until the determination of the ultimate question, I would like to do 1789 it that way. It will be available for everybody now, anyway.

You may cross-examine.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will have a five minute recess.

(A short recess was had.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Marshall, you stated that there is no argument that buyers in smaller quantities pay higher prices, and I believe you were making that general statement regarding purchasers of various commodities in various industries.

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Would you say that there is any relationship between the amount of an article purchased and the price paid in any industry, or as to any commodity?

A. There might be an exception, of course, but if there is an exception, I can't think of it at the moment.

Q. Well, do you think there is such a relationship, or there isn't?

A. Certainly there is.

Q. Well, what is the relationship?

A. Oh, you mean the definite relationship?

Q. Yes; any constant relationship.

1790 A. Oh, there isn't any constant relationship and not necessarily the same relationship as between one commodity and another.

I can buy a package of cigarettes for 15c and I can buy a carton of cigarettes for proportionately less per package. I can buy a single cigar for a price and a box of cigars at a substantially lower price, but, again, if I buy, say, a hundred boxes, I will get a still lower price than I will get for a box.

Q. Necessarily?

A. As a rule of the business. As a practice in the business.

Q. Well, don't you know that there are many manufacturers that charge the same price for—per unit for their articles?

A. On the list price, yes. They have a unit price; nearly everybody, I think, has a unit price.

Q. And don't you know that there are a lot of manufacturers that don't make reductions on quantity purchases?

A. If there are, I don't know who they are.

Q. Well, do you know that in the paint industry that the hardware store that buys $80 worth of paint gets the same price as the hardware store that buys half a carload?

A. No, I don't know that.

Q. Do you know that the Sherwin-Williams Paint Company and, I believe, the duPont Company make no reduction for an $80 purchase of paint and a carload 1791 of paint; anything less than a carload of paint?

A. I don't know—if you will pardon my saying so—what an $80 purchase of paint represents. I don't know how much paint they would get for $80.

Q. I assume that they get about 40 gallons.

A. I am sure they get more paint for $80, proportionately, than they get for $2. Proportionately, I mean.

Q. Well, let us ask about gasoline. If the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company orders a carload of gasoline and suppose that the next week they order two carloads; do they get a better order on the two carloads than the one?

A. No. The carload becomes the unit. In various industries there are different relationships. There is a relationship peculiar to the oil industry. It is not on the same basis as the sales of certain other products. In the oil industry we have a carload price and a tank wagon price and those who operate service stations have a service station price and these are the three units of purchase. We don't operate on the basis of a list price from which various deductions are made.

Q. Isn't that arbitrary, to make a tank car price and a tank wagon price? That is, suppose somebody wants half a carload?

A. They can't order half a carload, because it just doesn't come that way. You can't ship a half a carload, tank car of gasoline.

1792 Q. How much does a tank car hold?

A. Well, tank cars are of various capacities, running from—I don't think you get any of them much below six thousand gallons, today, and they run up, a very few of them, to twelve thousand, but a great many of them to ten thousand.

Q. Suppose a retail dealer orders delivery of two hundred gallons of gasoline and another retail dealer on the same day wants delivery of three thousand gallons of gasoline. Do they pay a different price?

A. Pay exactly the same price because it is within the same method of delivery and subject to the same unit of price.

Q. We are talking about quantities. Then it doesn't follow that the price varies according to the quantity?

A. That's what I said. In the oil industry the price structure is on a slightly and necessarily different basis than what it is with solids.

Q. And it might be, as to some solids, that there would be an entirely different arrangement as to the relation of price as to quantity, isn't that right?

A. I think I know what you are trying to get at but I cannot fix the breaking point. I attempted to bring that out with the cigarette illustration. Nobody buys one cigarette unless they buy it out of a vending machine. They have got a unit, there, which is the package and the next unit is the carton. Now that is certainly not true with certain other products.

1793 Q. Who fixes those breaking points, as you call it?

A. The industries themselves; by established custom.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Those are arbitrarily fixed, aren't they?

The Witness: Surely. According to the—

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Now, Mr. Marshall, there was a retail dealer on the stand in this case who testified that he had a ten thousand gallon tank at his retail station. Assuming that he was buying his gasoline from the Standard Oil and he order the delivery of ten thousand gallons, which is as large as a tank car delivery. Would he receive the tank car price?

A. By what method of delivery would he receive it?

Q. The same method of delivery that you use in delivering to these four jobbers, here, which is by truck-train, at the present time.

A. By truck-train he would receive the benefit of the tank car price. By tank wagon, which, by the way, cannot deliver ten thousand gallons in one delivery—it would take many deliveries, because the tank wagons do not, as a rule, run over a thousand to fifteen hundred and, sometimes, in the rural districts not that high; three hundred fifty to five hundred fifty gallons, is the capacity of the tank wagon in the rural districts. It is based on the method of delivery there plus the quantity involved. In other 1794 words, you can't get the method of delivery without a certain quantity.

Q. I am assuming he orders ten thousand gallons. Now there is nothing to prevent you from running a tank train to his tank, as well as to the storage plant of the jobber, is there?

A. Oh, yes, there is. His tankage may not be so constructed or situated or placed that he can take tank train delivery, truck-train delivery.

Q. I am assuming he has a ten thousand gallon tank.

A. There are certain arrangements that have to be made in order to do that.

1795 Q. Well, will you permit anybody who has a 10,000-gallon tank and facilities for emptying the gasoline from the truck-train to purchase in tank car quantities?

A. If we accept the business, yes.

Q. If you accept the business?

A. Yes.

Q. The mere fact that he offers to buy and is able to buy in 10,000 gallon quantities, doesn't entitle him to the lower price, does it?

A. If we accepted the business and delivered to him through that method, he would get the benefit of that price.

Q. Well, but, do you accept the business from everybody who—

A. We can't take on all the business that is offered to us. We still reserve the right to select our customers.

Q. In other words, you may charge one man who offers to buy in 10,000-gallon lots one price, and somebody else who buys in the same quantity may pay another price; isn't that right?

A. No.

Q. Well, you just said you might not give this man with the 10,000-gallon tank—

A. I said we might not accept the business. If we accepted the business, I said he would get the benefit of the same price as others receiving deliveries in the same 1796 manner and for the same proportionate quantity.

Q. You mean you wouldn't sell to him at all or sell to him in tank-train?

A. We might not sell to him at all. I said we reserve the right to select our customers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Depending entirely on acceptance?

Mr. Austin: That is what I am trying to bring out.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. It doesn't depend on quantity at all, as I understand you, Mr. Marshall. It depends on whether or not you want to sell at a given price; isn't that so?

A. Well, of course, if we don't sell, the thing is all out. There isn't anything about it.

Q. Mr. Marshall, a witness in this case has testified, and Mr. Rupagh, who was your Detroit manager, has also testified, that an offer was made to purchase in 10,000-gallon lots at tank car prices, if the witness has a tank for that purpose, but he was not given the tank car price, although he was being sold gasoline by the Standard Oil Company. Now, he was refused, according to the testimony in this case, he was refused the tank car price upon deliveries of 10,000-gallons. I am not questioning—

A. Then we didn't accept the business.

Mr. Hanley: I object to that unless the witness 1797 is advised that no delivery was made by tank train in a 10,000-gallon lot.

Mr. Austin: That is true at that time.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. And I am asking the witness now, since it is established that they do deliver by tank-train to jobbers, whether there is any physical reason why you couldn't also make delivery by tank-train in 10,000-gallon lots to a retailer who has a 10,000-gallon tank.

A. No physical reason you mean?

Q. That's right.

A. Well, I can think of some physical reasons which you might think that I am drawing the long bow. There are a lot of things involved in it: industry problems and all that sort of thing. There is a limit to your capacity to load and handle these trucks through your terminal. There ought to be, and presumably is, some limitation as to the crowding of the streets and time of deliveries and the hours of the day you can work, and all that sort of thing.

And I have got to consider, and I do consider currently the limitations of all these things, starting with the limitations of the terminals from which the product may be drawn, the degree of facilities that they have got there for taking care of that type of business, and all that sort of thing. We just can't have—if you are familiar with the operations, you would appreciate it — we just 1798 can't have a myriad of trucks running in and out of our plants all day long. We have got to utilize the various methods of delivery that are available to us. And sometimes we reject the business on the truck-train basis because of our inability to handle it agreeably to ourselves.

Q. Mr. Marshall, does every dealer, whether he be a retailer or jobber, who offers to buy in a 10,000-gallon quantity from you, is he entitled to a 10,000-gallon price? Is that the policy of your company? Or does it not depend on whether or not you want to give it to him?

A. It depends on whether or not we want to accept the business on that basis. And if we accept the business on that basis, with that method of delivery, he gets the benefit of that price.

Q. And if you don't accept the business on that basis, he doesn't get it?

A. That's right. And we continue to deliver by tank wagon, and he pays the tank wagon price.

But let me say this to you: that if there were a dealer who had supplied himself with sufficient tankage and other facilities to enable him to take deliveries by truck-train; and we refused to accept the business on that basis and give him the benefit of the truck-train price, he would buy from somebody else. He would just be silly to con-1799 tinue to pay us a higher price for the tank wagon delivery when he had gone to the expense of making the investment necessary to equip himself to get the benefit of the lower price. So the whole thing is theoretical,
Mr. Austin, if you will pardon me for saying so.

1800 Q. What I am trying to get at, Mr. Marshall, is as to whether a price is determined solely by quantity or whether it isn't also determined to, at least a great extent, by the pricing policy of the supplier?

A. In the oil industry the price is determined not only by quantity but by method of delivery, and all people—when I say "all" I am talking for the Standard Oil Company—all people in the same classification getting the same type of delivery pay the same price. We have a tank wagon price, we have a tank car price, we don't have any service station price ourselves today because we don't operate service stations.

Q. You concede that method of delivery is one thing by which the price is determined, and in addition quantity?

A. In the oil industry, yes.

Q. And the method of delivery may be withheld or granted in the discretion of the Standard Oil Company, isn't that right?

A. Certainly. The acceptance or rejection of the business is discretionary too.

Q. And that depends on your pricing policies?

A. No, it doesn't depend on the pricing policies; it depends on a lot of things.

Q. It depends on your policies—it depends upon your discretion as to how you want to do business and who you want to do it with?

1801 A. That's right, to a certain extent. It may depend on the physical conditions I have already pointed out.

Q. Then would you say that any purchaser who comes to the Standard Oil Company to order ten thousand gallons of gas, and assuming that his credit is good and you know he can pay for it, would you say that he is entitled to a tank car price?

1802 A. If we accept the business on that basis, yes.

Q. Well, is he entitled to it? Do you always—

A. He is entitled to it whether we accept the business or not. Yes, he is entitled to it.

Q. If he is entitled to it, why doesn't he get it?

Mr. Hanley: He does get it. I object to this. It is argumentative.

A. I don't know what you are getting at. I am trying to answer you.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I am asking you if it is the policy of your company to grant a tank car price to anyone who has good credit and who orders 10,000 gallons of gasoline.

A. If he has the facilities to take in the tank car quantity.

Q. I request a yes or no answer.

A. I want to qualify my answer.

Mr. Hanley: I object to any demand for a yes or no answer to that question unless the witness himself wants to answer it that way.

A. I can answer you this way, Mr. Austin: I can say to you that a retail dealer who receives his products by tank wagon in two or three hundred lots or a thousand, even if it is a thousand a day, and in the course of a month buys twenty-five or thirty thousand gallons, 1803 pays the tank wagon price, regardless of the fact that he bought 30,000 gallons in a month. But if he is equipped with large storage, has the facilities to take tank-truck or tank-car deliveries, and we accept the business on that basis, if he only buys three tank cars representing 30,000 gallons in a month, he pays the tank car price.

Q. I understand that, Mr. Marshall.

A. So that again you have got a case there where quantity is not necessarily in the oil industry the controlling element, because there is the other important element of the method of delivery.

Q. I ask you again whether a dealer purchaser or would-be purchaser comes to you and orders 10,000 gallons of gasoline, and he has a place, he wants it all at once, and he has a place where he can receive it, and his credit is good, is it the policy of your company in every such case to sell that gasoline to such purchaser at the tank car price without any other considerations than I have mentioned?

Mr. Hanley: That is objected to as repetitious, already having been asked and answered, placing unfair and argumentative restriction on the witness. It has been asked and answered a dozen times.

Mr. Austin: I don't think he has answered my question. He has evaded it now.

1804 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let me have the question, please?

(The record was read by the reporter.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is of the opinion that a direct answer has not been given. The witness may answer. You may answer it yes or no and explain your answer.

A. With due respect to the Court, I must point out that the question is incomplete, in that it does not indicate the method of delivery desired.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well, the method of delivery desired is any method of delivery that the Standard Oil Company wants to get the gasoline there in. All the purchaser wants is the gasoline. He wants 10,000 gallons of it, and he wants it at one time.

A. Still incomplete, Mr. Austin. If we delivered it by tank wagon he would pay the tank wagon price; if we delivered it by transport truck, which we would not do unless all proper facilities were established, he would get the benefit of the transport truck price. I have already explained to you that the purchaser of as much as 30,000 gallons, taken piecemeal day by day throughout the month, pays the tank wagon price.

Q. I want to know whether or not the quantity
1805 ordered determines the price which you charge.

A. I have already informed you that in the oil industry method of delivery is also an element in determining the price.

Q. I have said that the customer isn't interested in the method of delivery; that is up to the Standard Oil Company. I am asking you whether or not the fact that a person will buy, can buy and pay for gasoline in 10,000-gallon quantity, entitles him—

Mr. Austin: And that is what I am getting at, this repeatedly saying somebody was entitled to a price because they buy a certain quantity. Now, what does he mean by entitled? Does that mean any time anyone orders 10,000 gallons of gasoline he gets tank car price he is entitled to it?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I have understood the witness to state that an applicant might be entitled to it, to the tank car price, and his application might be rejected, that they reserved the right to select their customers and determine what orders they would accept and what they would not accept.

Have I correctly stated the situation?

The Witness: You have correctly stated the situation.

Mr. Austin: I understand that, too, but what does 1806 the word "entitle" mean?

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I want to know if someone buys in 10,000 gallons is he entitled to it? Entitled might mean, to my way of thinking, he has a right to it, and yet you say you have a right to refuse it.

Mr. Hanley: That is objected to as argumentative. It is a quibble on a question that isn't in this lawsuit at all, and that is the question of the right of the Standard Oil Company, or anybody else, to select its own customers. We don't have to sell anybody gasoline if we don't feel like it. We want to, as a rule. We are after the business, and so is everybody else. But everyone has the right to select his own customers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If the Examiner isn't unduly interrupting, the Examiner will ask the witness a few questions.

In the Detroit area, the Respondent company sells direct to the service station, does it not?

The Witness: Direct to service station operators, yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It also sells through, sells to jobbers, does it not?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Who, in turn, are 1807 direct competitors of the company from whom they buy; that is correct, is it not?

The Witness: (No answer.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In the retail trade?

The Witness: Well, Judge, you have got another step in there.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: All right. Let us have the step.

The Witness: The Standard Oil Company does not operate any service stations.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I appreciate that.

The Witness: They are in competition to the degree that they are in competition with the private service station operator.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That's right. Now, some of your jobbers sell direct to private station operators, don't they?

The Witness: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: To that extent the Standard Oil Company is in direct competition to the jobber?

The Witness: Yes, yes. You mean as between whether the service station operator buys from us or buys from the jobber who is handling our products; yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, does not the 1808 question as to how many jobbers and to what extent the product of the Respondent company shall be sold through jobbers enter into the question as to whether or not you will accept or reject an offer in tank car lots?

The Witness: Would you kindly repeat that?

(The last question by the Examiner was read.)

The Witness: From a jobber?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That's right.

The Witness: Yes, I would give consideration to that if the matter was presented to me.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In other words, you would consider as one of the elements in determining an application as to whether you desired to sell additional gasoline through jobbers or whether you desired to market it direct?

The Witness: Yes, absolutely.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is all.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Marshall, is anyone entitled to a tank car price or any other price from the Standard Oil Company?

A: If we accept the business and the customer has the necessary facilities. And again I might remind you the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission, you have got to recognize them.

Mr. Austin: I would like to request the Examiner 1809 to instruct the witness to answer my questions directly. I cannot proceed with this cross-examination if the witness is going to be continually making unresponsive answers on the record. I would like to go back and have the question read and have a yes or no answer.

The Witness: If your Honor please, I have no desire to be argumentative—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let me have the question, please.

(The last question and record were read.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Isn't the question repetitious?

Mr. Austin: No. Because I have been trying to get an answer for the past half hour, and he hasn't answered yet. The witness stated on direct examination that price was determined by quantity, and he also stated that anyone who bought in certain quantity was entitled to a certain price. And he has repeatedly refused to say whether or not if a customer wants to buy a certain amount of gasoline he is entitled to a certain price, whether in every case he gets it. And that is what "entitle" means to me.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He also stated the Standard Oil Company reserved the right to select its own customers. He has already stated one or two other exceptions. And it seems to me that unless you desire him to particularize as to the exceptions—

1810 Mr. Austin: I don't. I want—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He has admitted that the Standard Oil Company does not sell to everyone who makes application to purchase in tank car lots.

Have I correctly stated you?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

I am sorry, Mr. Austin, but I can't answer that question. I am trying to be helpful. Because you have not included some very essential elements. In the first place—

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I am not asking you, Mr. Marshall, what elements you consider or what the Standard Oil Company—

A. Then I can't answer your question.

Q. You can consider all the elements in your mind before you make the answer. I am simply asking you whether or not anyone who offers to buy from the Standard Oil Company in ten thousand gallon quantities and has good credit, whether it is the policy of the company to give him tank car price?

Mr. Hanley: That is objected to as repetitious, for the reason that the witness has stated time and time again, if after having considered the elements the Standard Oil Company accepts the business on a tank car basis, that that customer gets the tank car price, because he is then entitled to it.

Mr. Austin: That isn't an answer at all. They 1811 may not accept the business.

Mr. Hanley: They don't have to, do they?

Mr. Austin: No.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness has stated repeatedly that they reserve the right to pass on the application, and that there are many elements that enter into the question as to whether they will or will not accept.

Mr. Austin: Then, why can't he say in so many words that anyone who offers to buy gasoline in ten thousand gallons is not entitled to it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He has said in effect, if not in so many words, that they do not accept every offer of that nature that is submitted.

Mr. Austin: Was that your testimony, Mr. Marshall?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Austin: All right. That is the first time it has been on the record, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He stated it in effect several times.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Then, is it or is it not true, Mr. Marshall, that in the gasoline business that the quantity of gasoline purchased determines the price received, and I will say—I will limit that as to whether a person buys in tank car lots or less than tank car lots?

1812 A. When you limit it to that, then I have to say, yes, the quantity determines, because the quantity is one of the elements that determines.

Q. Wait a minute. I asked you if the quantity determined. If there are other elements, then the quantity doesn't determine.

A. The quantity becomes a unit in tank car sales, but it doesn't matter whether it is one or two or three.

Mr. Austin: Will you read the question?

A. You asked me that before.

Mr. Austin: Will you read the question, please?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The record was read.)

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Now, Mr. Marshall, when I asked you whether quantity determines, I mean exactly what I said, and not whether quantity and a lot of other things determine.

Mr. Hanley: Then the question is objected to as repetitious and argumentative. The witness has explained exactly how this thing happens.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I thing the position of the witness is clearly portrayed on the record.

Mr. Austin: Can't he answer whether quantity does or does not determine price? He said on direct examination there was no argument that it did. Now, I 1813 understand that—in many ways, except directly admitted, that his direct testimony was not correct.
And I want to pursue the matter.

The Witness: We were talking about industry generally then. Not specifically about the oil industry.

Trial Examinar Ballinger: Can you answer that question with directness?

The Witness: Quantity is not the sole element that determines the price of gasoline.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Ultimately, Mr. Marshall, does not the price charged to any purchaser to whom you choose to sell depend upon the pricing policy of your company? That is, does it not depend upon your company's individual pricing policies? And if you say pricing policies is too narrow, upon your marketing policy?

A. The actual price applicable to a specific shipment does, yes.

Q. And isn't that true as to any commodity in any industry, that is, the price charged a particular customer on any quantity depends upon the marketing and pricing policy of the supplier?

A. Yes; depends upon the practice in that particular industry.

Q. Mr. Marshall, in your testimony yesterday, 1814 page 1722 of the record, you were asked whether these four jobbers in Detroit supplied by the Standard Oil Company—rather, as to those four jobbers, you were asked whether their operations are such as to make—make of them, I suppose, the type of buyer that is generally regarded in the industry as a tank car buyer or jobber?
And you answered that their operations were of that type.
Now, in stating that the operations of those four jobbers were such as to make them of a type generally regarded in the industry as tank car buyers or jobbers—

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I request that the witness be not referring to his testimony.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I insist that he has a right to see what he said.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner rules that the witness is entitled to look at his testimony.

Mr. Hanley: You may look at that, Mr. Marshall.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: So that he may know what he did testify to.

Mr. Austin: I assume if I make any misstatement I will be corrected by counsel.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If the witness desires to examine his testimony before answering, he may do so.

Mr. Austin: Well, if it is a question of misquoting, I certainly agree, I want to be corrected.

1815 Mr. Hanley: I don't know whether you misquoted or not. I am not presuming you did.

Mr. Austin: I don't believe the witness ordinarily has the right on cross-examination to—as a matter of fact, it is rarely that he ever has the opportunity, because the transcript isn't ready. I don't believe he would have the right to read the entire context of what he said before answering questions.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He would be entitled to it to the same extent as though you were examining him on something that he had previously written.

The Examiner rules that if the witness desires, before answering the question, he may examine the transcript.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, that would be impossible of being carried out in the ordinary case if I asked him something that he said this morning.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner has ruled. Proceed.

Mr. Austin: All right. I don't say—

Off the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion was had off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

1816 By Mr. Austin:

Q. You are familiar with the testimony to which I just referred, Mr. Marshall?

A. Yes.

Q. In referring to what is generally regarded in the industry as a tank car buyer or jobber, were you referring to the definition which I believe Mr. Dyer put in the record a day or two ago?

A. Well, I didn't have the definition specifically in mind, when I answered the question.

Q. Well, I will turn back—

A. I wasn't asked whether it fell with~~in that~~ definition or not. I was just asked if they were generally regarded as the type known as jobbers or tank car buyer, as I recall the question.

Q. Are these four generally regarded in the industry as a jobber or tank car buyer?

A. Yes.

Q. I would like to read from Mr. Dyer's testimony in which he said—and I believe you stated yesterday that you agreed with Mr. Dyer upon this definition—

A. Yes, on the definition.

Q. "A jobber or a distributor or a wholesaler or a bona fide jobber is one who is engaged in the purchase and sale of a petroleum product and who operates a storage 1817 tank or tanks of tank car capacity in conjunction with the facilities for the storage of lubricants and grease; and this bona fide jobber, distributor or wholesaler will sell a substantial part of his petroleum products direct to resellers or consumers but he may supply his own or controlled service stations or filling stations."

Now, is that the type of business which you referred to in your statement, that these four jobbers are what is generally regarded in the industry as a tank car buyer or jobber?

A. Surely. It is a type of business.

Q. In other words you are satisfied with the definition as applied to your answer to this question?

Mr. Hanley: Do you understand that, Mr. Marshall?

The Witness: I don't quite appreciate what you mean, Mr. Austin. I have adopted the definition and I have testified to these four operators in Detroit are the type that are generally regarded in the industry as tank car buyers or jobbers. I don't think I can go further than that.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Then by the use of the word tank car buyer or jobber were you referring to the sort of jobber or dealer as described by Mr. Dyer?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, the witness has testified to this. I was trying to make it short by not question-1818 ing him all over again as to what he means by jobber and he can't even say, now, as to whether or not he still agrees with Mr. Dyer, although he said so yesterday.

Mr. Hanley: You had better go ahead and ask him what he means, Mr. Austin, because if you don't, I am going to.

Mr. Austin: He has, already, and you are bound by his testimony,—

Mr. Hanley: I am not bound by that definition at all.

Mr. Austin: That he said he agreed with Mr. Dyer. Now I want to know if he doesn't agree with him any more. I want to know that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness says he will answer.

A. I will say yes, although I didn't have in mind specifically the definition. I answered the question as put to me.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. If you had anything else in mind than that definition when you made this answer yesterday, what did you have in mind?

A. Regular trade practice.

Q. What did you have in mind by tank car buyer or jobber, as generally regarded in the industry?

A. The type of people that are under discussion 1819 now; that is, these four jobbers. They represent both classifications.

Q. Did you have in mind what was described by Mr. Dyer and, if not, what did you have in mind?

Mr. Hanley: That is objected to as repetitious. The witness just got through saying what he had in mind.

Mr. Austin: I don't understand it that way at all.

Mr. Hanley: Read it please, Mr. Reporter.

Mr. Austin: It seems to me the answers of this witness are continually evasive.

(The question and answer referred to were read by the Reporter.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That certainly is responsive.

Mr. Austin: Why no, your Honor, because what he said was that these four jobbers are of the type generally regarded in the industry as tank car buyers or jobbers. Now I wanted to know just exactly what he means these four people are. I assumed he meant what Mr. Dyer described. Now, he is not sure of that, any more.

Mr. Hanley: That is a mis-statement and unfair to the witness.

Mr. Austin: I have asked him three times to tell me what he does mean, or if he accepts Mr. Dyer's definition.

Mr. Hanley: I object to that as untrue. You have 1820 asked him three times, and more than that, and he has answered it three times.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Marshall, will you describe what is the type of buyer that is generally regarded in the industry as a tank car buyer or jobber?

A. A jobber—I have got to differentiate—a jobber is one who equips himself with large storage facilities which enable him to buy gasoline and other products in car load lots which he distributes by tank wagon to dealers and consumers and may sell through service station facilities operated by himself.

Q. Did you say that he sells part of his—

Mr. Austin: Will you read the answer, please?

(The last answer was read by the Reporter.)

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Now, Mr. Marshall, that was only preliminary. I was simply trying to establish what we were talking about. If any concern which meets the description you have just given, comes to the Standard Oil and desires to place an order for the purchase of gasoline in tank car quantities, what do you consider before determining whether or not to fill that order?

A. Well, the first thing, naturally, is whether we 1821 want the business.

Q. If you don't want it, you don't accept it, is that right?

A. If you don't want it—and there are various reasons why we might not want it—we just don't go any further with it.

Q. Would you say, then, that any such concern coming to you was entitled to buy gasoline from you on a tank car basis?

A. Entitled to buy gasoline on a tank car basis; not necessarily from us, but if he bought from us he would get the tank car price.

Q. But, as you say, there are various considerations upon which you might not sell?

A. Yes; again getting back to the question of the right to select our customers.

Q. Yes, which I am not questioning.

A. No.

1822 Q. Then, so far as the Standard Oil Company is concerned, would it be true that anyone filling the description you have given would be entitled to buy on a tank car basis?

A. Yes. I will go further and say: couldn't be sold on any other basis.

Q. I am directing your attention to the word "entitled." You said you might refuse to sell him for considerations of your own.

A. Yes.

Q. If he is entitled to it, how could you refuse to sell him? I think it is a question of what we mean by the word "entitled," Mr. Marshall.

A. Well, I qualified my previous answer. I said not from us, necessarily, but that he was entitled to buy.

Q. But I am asking now only as from you; whether such a buyer or any other buyer is entitled to buy anything from the Standard Oil Company.

A. I have to answer that, no, because there is no obligation to us to sell to anybody if we don't want to.

Q. Well, of course, I expected that that would be your answer. And it is true, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. So not to be repetitious again, but regardless of the qualifications of the would-be customer, and whether he fills this description or not, it wouldn't follow from any 1823 description of his business, or regardless of the type of his business, it wouldn't necessarily follow that you would sell him, would it?

A. Not at all. Not at all.

Q. Now, Mr. Marshall, again referring to these four tank car buyers in Detroit, you are familiar with them; the same ones we have been talking about?

A. Yes.

Q. You were asked what, in your judgment, is the fact as to whether or not each of these four jobbers could at any time, now, purchase gasoline from a number of different suppliers on a tank car basis and your reply was: "My definite knowledge is that they could." Do you recall that testimony?

A. Yes.

Q. If you wish to see it, it is on page 1722 of the record. Now, how do you know, and what is the source of your definite knowledge that each of those four jobbers could at any time now purchase gasoline from a different supplier on a tank car basis?

A. Well, in the first place, I am fully familiar with the fact that other oil companies are endeavoring to sell their goods in the Detroit market.

In the second place, it is reported to me—

1824 Mr. Austin: I object to what is reported, Mr. Marshall, if you please.

Mr. Hanley: He is answering the question, your Honor. It may be hearsay, but it is what he asked him.

The Witness: Well, I have already answered it, but I was going further—

Mr. Hanley: Go ahead. Finish your answer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may answer.

A. —that one or more of these jobbers has advised us that he has been solicited and is being solicited currently by other suppliers.

Mr. Austin: Now I move to strike that last sentence, your Honor, on the ground that it is hearsay.

Mr. Hanley: We resist the motion. It is the explanation of the answer which the witness was asked about.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Motion is denied.

Mr. Austin: Well, I take it that that is only the reason for the statement that he gave, so that I concur in your Honor's ruling.

I would like to have the first sentence read, please, of that last answer.

(The answer was read as follows: "Well, in the first place, I am fully familiar with the fact that other oil companies are endeavoring to sell their goods in the Detroit market.")

1825 By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Marshall, do you have any personal knowledge of any offer made to any of these four jobbers by any other oil company to sell them gasoline at tank car prices?

A. No, sir, I have had no personal contact with these jobbers. They are sold, or they are handled by our Detroit people, our Detroit office. I don't have personal contact with them.

Q. Then, having in mind the fact you said a moment ago that the Standard Oil might exercise its right to refuse to sell to any customer, if the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, for instance, applied to a particular supplier of gasoline, wouldn't that supplier have the same right to refuse to sell to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company for any reason it chose?

A. Surely. In that event, they probably wouldn't solicit them, though.

Q. I didn't say who solicited who. It might work either way?

A. Yes.

Q. But I think I did assume that the jobber went to the oil company.

A. Well, that very seldom happens. A trough doesn't come to a horse, you know!

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, based upon the answers 1826 which the witness has given, I move to strike from the record the answer of the witness to the question on page 1722 of the record, in which he says: "My definite knowledge is that they could," on the ground that the witness has just testified that he has no personal knowledge upon which he based that answer, and it is based upon hearsay and upon simply his general knowledge to that other suppliers of gasoline are selling at tank car prices in Detroit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: May I see the record, please?

(A copy of the record was handed to the Examiner.)

Mr. Hanley: I would like to be heard, if there is any thought in your Honor's mind of granting that motion.

(Thereupon the Examiner referred to a copy of the transcript.)

Mr. Hanley: The motion goes to the one answer: "My definite knowledge is that they could."

Mr. Austin: Yes. And I want to say that that is what I have been trying to lead up to by a good deal of this testimony which I hope, now, its relevancy appears, if, perhaps, it didn't at the time I was trying to ask the preliminary questions.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you resist the motion?

Mr. Hanley: I resist the motion, Judge. All I can say 1827 about this is that the examination which has now transpired on cross may go to the weight of the testimony; that is, it may go to the basis upon which the wit ness expresses the thought that he had definite knowledge, but it doesn't go to the extent of saying that you can take a witness' answer out of the record. This witness believed the man that told him that these jobbers had definite offers and they did have, and we are going to prove it, and I suppose that's what's troubling Mr. Austin is that there is a definite statement in the record that these jobbers could have bought from somebody else besides the Standard Oil Company. I don't think they are entitled to ask to have an answer of a witness stricken simply because his knowledge of the answer is the result of the information which has been brought to him by others. That is the way we get most of our information.

Mr. Austin: I suppose that is a question of practice, whether or not it is proper or necessary to strike the answer from the record. I believe it definitely appears now that the answer is valueless and is not based upon definite knowledge, although the witness stated that it was his definite knowledge. Whether that is sufficient or whether my motion is in order to strike it from the record, is a matter which I certainly refer to your longer and broader experience.

1828 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is not familiar with the procedure suggested by counsel. The Examiner denies the motion on the sole ground that the question is one of weight to be attached to the witness' answer.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I believe, Mr. Marshall, you said yesterday at one point that the Gulf Oil Company was engaged in the practice in Detroit of exercising the so-called dual function; that is, that it sells direct to retail stations and also sells to jobbers?

A. Yes.

Mr. Hanley: What oil company?

Mr. Austin: Gulf Oil.

A. I didn't testify exactly that way, but it was one of the names I mentioned I was going to give some figures on.

Q. You mentioned Gulf Oil as to Detroit, I am sure of that.

A. Yes.

Q. And I don't believe you mentioned any other oil company in Detroit, specifically.

A. Yes.

Q. To what jobbers does the Gulf Oil Company sell in Detroit?

A. I couldn't give you any names. I merely know the fact it is so.

1829 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. How do you know that the Gulf Oil Company sells to a jobber in Detroit, Mr. Marshall, without in any way disputing the fact; that is, without your assuming that I am, because I am simply asking for information.

A. I testified yesterday as to the manner in which I obtained all of the information. I was so informed and have been so informed from time to time by the Detroit management and verified that at the request of Judge Hanley in advance of this hearing.

Q. That is the information you received through your contacts with the Detroit office of the Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir; in that particular instance.

Q. And you say you don't know any particular jobbers—

A. I don't recall the name of the jobber, no.

Q. This morning I think you mentioned some large jobber that does around 5,000,000 gallons a year business.

A. Yes.

Q. That you had particularly in mind, and I believe you said he was as large or larger than Ned's Auto Supply Company.

1830 A. Somewhere about that.

Q. Was that a jobber in Detroit or somewhere else?

A. No, that jobber was in Chicago.

Q. Would you mind stating his name?

A. I had in mind Gale and Sloan, who are jobbers of Socony Vacuum Oil Company products, and I also had in mind Waggoner's Service Stations. They operate a number of super service stations in Chicago. At the present time I think—I don't want to be positive; my mind is getting a little confused on the break-down of the brands, but I think they are handling Texas, I am not sure.

Q. Perhaps, then, you were referring, in the case of that jobber—perhaps in that testimony you had the same thing in mind that you had when you mentioned, I believe, awhile ago, upon questioning by Judge Hanley, certain Chicago jobbers who sell more at retail than Ned's Auto Supply, in your opinion?

A. That's what I had in mind, yes. There was one of our own I hadn't mentioned.

Q. What I intended to ask you was: whether you did say or did intend to say that those jobbers handled or sold more gasoline than Ned's at retail? What you said was they sold more gasoline than Ned's Auto Supply Company. I just wanted to ask you whether they were retailers, largely, or are they partially or largely wholesalers?

1831 A. My understanding of their operations is that they are retail entirely. This Waggoner Service Station, regardless of whose product they handle, is entirely a retail operation, and, to the best of my knowledge, and belief, Gale and Sloan is also a retail operation.

Q. Do they both operate bulk plants and deliver to their own stations?

A. You get into a still further element there which has not been brought up before, which is one that I didn't naturally think of, because we don't do it. It is on that chart of marketing operations that was introduced in evidence, and that is what is called a yard hauler. There are not a great many instances, within my own knowledge, but there are some, and these two I speak of are examples of that type.

They take over the transportation of the product from the bulk plant to their own service stations. In other words, they are permitted to drive into what is ordinarily the bulk plant, as distinguished from the terminal or refinery, with their own trucks and to do their own transportation and they get a yard price on the basis of being yard haulers, which is just another ramification of this competitive activity in the oil industry.

Q. You mean they drive their own trucks into the oil company's bulk plant?

1832 A. Yes, and get the benefit of a price that is lower than the tank wagon price, but according to my best information and belief may not be exactly as low as the tank car price or the transport truck price.

Q. You don't know the exact price that they pay?

A. I don't know the exact price, but I know it is a preferential price. There are just so darn many ramifications in this oil industry, unless an example of this sort comes up, that it might not be mentioned.

Q. How do you know it is a preferential price?

A. Oh, it is common knowledge in the industry and it is evident from the marketing set-up followed by these people. They wouldn't do it if they didn't get a preferential price. They wouldn't spend the money for trucks and labor and hauling and all that sort of thing.

Q. At least you assume they wouldn't?

A. I know darn well they wouldn't.

Q. That reminds me of one other question that I was going to ask you, Mr. Marshall. Perhaps you have already inferentially answered it.

Didn't you say awhile ago that there would be no point in the jobber operating the bulk plant and making his own deliveries unless he got a better price than he could get at a service station?

A. That's right.

1833 Q. That is, assuming that he operates a retail service station?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, again assuming that the jobber is wholly or largely engaged in resale at retail like Ned's and some of these others we have been talking about, how much better price must the jobber receive to make it worth his while to operate the bulk plant and make his own deliveries?

A. Well, that is more governed by industry practice and competitive situations than by how much he must receive. There isn't any such thing as how much he must receive. It is how much can he get.

Q. Of course, he would get all he can, I suppose.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, let us assume it cost a jobber a cent and a half a gallon to take on this additional operation of operating the bulk plant and making his own deliveries and suppose he gets a cent and a half gallon better price than the tank wagon price. Then he still wouldn't gain anything, would he, by having some tank wagon deliveries?

A. No, he isn't much ahead, there; if anything.

Q. Well, tell me whether it is or is not the general rule and practice that the jobber's margin is more than enough to compensate him for the actual expense of his jobbing operation. 1834

A. I would think, from my experience, that the jobber's margin, as a rule, outside of these highly competitive areas where it may be shrunk, as it is here and there—and I am thinking of the two cents and the two and a half that obtains in some areas, and even the three cent that occasionally obtains—is, as a rule, at least enough and sometimes more than enough to cover the difference of the cost of these operations, unless the jobber anticipated that he would make some profit out of that or gain some advantage out of that type of operation, I don't think he would go into that. You can't make a positive statement on that, because there are differences of degress in efficiency of operation on the part of the jobbers. Some of them are better business men than others, and all that sort of thing enters into it, but, on the whole, I am satisfied with my answer, if you are.

Q. Assuming a man is operating a chain—had a chain of retail stations that he operated himself. He could get delivery by tank wagon. Now, there wouldn't be any point in him changing over to tank car delivery and operating a bulk plant unless—wouldn't his natural objective in doing that be to make a profit; more profit?

A. Yes; to gain more personal advantage in doing so. The unfortunate thing is most of them don't gain 1835 the personal advantage; sometimes it is passed out in the reduction of price, for instance, in the trackage station I referred to yesterday, and all that sort of thing. Those trackage stations get their advantages in large gallonage rather than in additional profit per gallon.

Q. But take the normal case. If there is a normal case of a jobber who—I believe you mentioned one in Chicago, and we have Ned's here—who are engaged entirely in or almost entirely in selling at retail rather than in serving other dealers. Wouldn't you assume that they would not be purchasing in tank car quantities unless there was more profit in that than buying in tank wagon?

A. That would be the natural assumption, otherwise there would be no reason in the world of going to the expense, the risk of the investment, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. Austin: I think that's all I have.

836 Redirect Examination by Mr. Hanley.

Q. Mr. Marshall, the Court asked you a number of uestions on the subject of the various things that you conidered when you determined whether or not you would ccept a certain jobber's business. Do you recall the tesimony of Mr. Dyer and Professor Clark wherein they aid, in substance, that a choice was made by distributors f gasoline as to whether they would indulge in direct ales to retailers or operate through jobbers or employ the ual method of distribution and in their judgment, usully, the question was resolved on the economies and adantages of distribution, as the particular company viewed t at the time in the locality. Do you recall the testimony f the substance of that character?

A. Yes.

Q. In your experience and observation is that generally done by oil companies when they determine upon what method of distribution they will use?

A. Surely. They have to make a selection.

Q. And is that what you mean when you say that there re times when you give consideration to the fact that whether you already have distribution, either through jobbers or through direct operations in determining whether you will accept business further from jobbers?

A. Yes.

1837 Is it not true, Mr. Marshall, that there are a great many things that are considered by the Standard Oil Company, at least when a decision is made, as to whether or not a customer will be sold; on any basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it that in the main, you want to sell as many customers as you can?

A. Surely.

Q. And as much gasoline as you can?

A. That's right.

Q. A very lengthy examination was made of you, Mr. Marshall, as to the basis for the difference in price between the tank car and the tank wagon methods of pricing or delivery and some effort was made to tie you to the proposition that quantity, solely, and nothing else, made the difference in pricing in gasoline and I understand you to—

Mr. Austin: On the contrary, Judge, I was trying to prove just the opposite.

Mr. Hanley: You may have been trying to prove the opposite but that is the way I got it.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Anyway, you said, Mr. Marshall, did you not, that so far as gasoline was concerned, methods of delivery and quantity were both elements which resulted in pricing these different units like tank wagon and tank car?

1838 A. That's right.

Q. Now in the very physical nature of things isn't there a very definite relation between the quantity that may be involved and the method of delivery, in the gasoline business?

A. Yes, there is, because of the limitation of the size of the tank truck that is used in the tank wagon method of delivery and the limitation of the capacity of the tank car. You can't make a shipment with a thousand gallons in a ten thousand gallon car. If you put five thousand gallons in a ten thousand gallon car the thing would topple over the first corner it went around, the first curve, I mean, because of the swishing back and forward of the fluid in the car and, anyway, you pay on the full capacity of the car, whether it has a full volume in it or not. Suppose you get a ten thousand gallon car and are foolish enough to let it go out with nine thousand or ninety-five hundred gallons, even if the railroad accepts it and can handle it safely, you pay on the capacity of the car.

Q. In your judgment is it not or is it true that this practice in industry, generally, of granting lower prices as a rule for larger quantities is affected in part, at least, by the different methods of delivery that are applicable to large quantities, as contrasted with the methods of delivery that usually are employed in delivering small quantities?

A. That is true.

1839 Q. So they are rather inseparable; they are rather an inseparable thing; in the gasoline business, at any rate, aren't they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were asked a number of questions about whether or not a jobber, as you have repeatedly defined a jobber, was entitled to buy from the Standard Oil Company and you have explained the reservation, the right of that company to select its own customers. Then you were asked you had said that a jobber of the character that you have escribed would not just be entitled generally to buy gasone on a tank car basis and you said yes, he would be en-tled to buy. I will ask you if it is true that what you ean by that is that if some one supplier chooses to sell a bber, as you have described a jobber, that in the view of he industry, generally, that jobber would be entitled to the ank car price?

A. That is a correct statement.

Q. That's without reference to any compulsion on any ompany to sell?

A. Yes.

Q. And you do not mean, I take it, Mr. Marshall, that ny jobber is entitled to buy from any supplier in the sense hat some supplier has to furnish gasoline.

A. That's true.

1840 Q. You answered, Mr. Marshall, that you had definite knowledge that the four jobbers in this action ould at any time now purchase gasoline from a number f different suppliers on a tank car basis. You remember he discussion about that answer in your cross-examinan?

A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you now, based on your experience, knowledge, and observation, what is your opinion as a marketer of gasoline as to whether or not these four jobbers or any one of them could at any time purchase gasoline in tank car quantities and on the tank car price basis from a number of suppliers other than the Standard Oil Company, at this time?

A. My opinion is that they could; definitely.

Mr. Hanley: That's all, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any further questions?

Mr. Austin: No.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Marshall, you are excused.

(Witness excused.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, at 1:00 p. m. the hearing stands at recess until 2:00 p. m.

(Whereupon, at 1:00 p. m., a recess was taken until 2:00 p. m.)

1841 Afternoon Session.

2 P. M.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

ELMER E. LEDBETTER having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand and testified further as follows:

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You have been previously sworn?

The Witness: Yes, I have.

Direct Examination by Mr. Abbott (Continued).

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, yesterday Exhibit 21, for identification, was offered in evidence as to the per gallon price of wholesaling gasoline by the Wayne Oil Company. That was objected to by the Commission because, among other things, it was based on net profit basis rather than on an operating expense basis. Now, have you, at my request, since that, taken the figures from the Wayne Oil Company books to show the per gallon cost of wholesaling gasoline on an operating expense basis in relation to gallonage sold?

A. I have.

Q. And are you now prepared to state the per gallon wholesaling cost for 1938, 1939, and 1940, on the basis of operating expense in the wholesaling of gasoline alone as it pertains to Wayne Oil Company business for those years?

1842 A. I am.

Q. Taking the year 1938, what were the total sales of the Wayne Oil Company, including the State Highway and Federal tax on gasoline?

A. Total sales in dollars and cents was $276,202.04.

Q. And what was the State Highway and Federal tax on those sales?

A. $71,683.82.

Q. Leaving a total net after deducting taxes of what amount?

A. $204,518.22.

Q. Now, what were the gasoline sales excluding the Highway and Federal tax?

A. $169,109.68.

Q. I understand, then, that the item of $204,518.22 involved something else besides gasoline?

A. It does.

Q. What else?

A. All other sales made by the Wayne Oil Company.

Q. Now, what were the total of sales other than gasoline wholesaled by you in 1938?

A. $35,408.54.

Q. What was the percentage of gasoline sales to the total sales, expressed in percentage?

1843 A. Using the total sales, not including Highway and Federal tax, the percentage of gasoline sales to those net sales was 82.7%.

Q. And that represents the percentage of gasoline sales alone?

A. That's right.

Q. Excluding Federal tax?

A. Yes, excluding Federal and Highway State tax.

Q. And also State Highway tax?

A. Yes.

Q. What was the total operating expense, then, for 1938, on the total sales?

A. The total operating expense of the Wayne Oil Company for 1938 was $33,059.66.

Q. What was the total expense for the wholesaling of gasoline, applying that percentage that you have just mentioned?

A. $27,340.34.

1844 Q. What was the total gallonage of gasoline sold in 1938 by the Wayne Oil Company?

A. 1,821,002 gallons.

Q. And what was the cost per gallon of wholesaling gasoline, based on those figures, for 1938?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I assume that this calls for the conclusion which has been led up to and I object to the witness answering the question on the ground that the question is immaterial and irrelevant to any of the issues in this case.

Mr. Abbott: What is the particular basis of the objection?

Mr. Austin: I think I stated it at some length yesterday, that I urged that the cost of selling gasoline at wholesale is immaterial. That the cost of selling gasoline at retail by a jobber may be material to some extent but even there it must be limited to expenses resulting, or attributable to the operations which are engaged in by tank car buyers but are not engaged in by tank wagon buyers.

Mr. Abbott: Now, if your Honor please, we submit that this evidence is admissible on two grounds:

First, on the ground that the expense of wholesaling gasoline by the Wayne Oil Company is material on the question as stated by your Honor yesterday when your Honor stated that if the differential of a cent and a 1845 half between the tank car and the tank wagon price is not amortized or used up by the expense of selling, that there is an opportunity on the part of the person who is engaged in the wholesaling of gasoline, if he has retail stations, it is indulged in price-cutting and it is, therefore, very material for us to show what percentage if any of the differential which the Wayne Oil Company enjoys in buying gasoline in tank car lots is used up by way of expense in the marketing of that gasoline until the time that it gets in the tanks of the retail seller and the purpose of this testimony is, therefore, primarily to show that there is no such opportunity on the part of the Wayne Oil Company because, as we shall show, the cost of handling and selling gasoline by the Wayne Oil Company is approximately the same as the differential between the tank car and the tank wagon differential.

1846 Now, in the second place, it is contended that this testimony is material in that it has a tendency to show whether the differential is justified by the difference in the costs of marketing. That, I realize, is primarily a question for the Respondent to show by its own figures as to its marketing costs, but the operation of the Respondent and the operation of the jobber is essentially the same. I mean the steps taken in marketing between the bulk plant and the tanks of the retail dealer. They have the expense of maintaining the bulk plant, the administration expenses, depreciation on their investment, interest on the money invested, and the expense of hauling equipment; the expense of maintaining their personnel and salaries; those things go into the question of ~~whether the~~re is an opportunity on the part of the wholesaler, who also retails, as your Honor so aptly said yesterday, for him to indulge in price-cutting operations, and, thereby, to disturb competition, and I think that this is very material to the Respondent's case to show what the actual costs of the jobbers are. For that reason I submit that the testimony should be admitted.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Does counsel for the Commission desire to be heard further?

Mr. Austin: Well, I don't know that I have any further statement to make. I still, however, feel that as 1847 to a wholesaler or jobber, that there is no basis here on any of the issues for making of any relevancy the cost of that jobber in selling gasoline to other dealers. Of course, where he sells through a retail station, there are certain operations which would be engaged in in the same way, whether the gasoline would be sold to another dealer or delivered to a retail station, and there may be some of those costs that are material in certain limits, but I just don't think it proves anything after you have got it in.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is the question that has been bothering the Examiner. I understand the total cost of distributing the oil, after it reaches the hands of the jobber, is, after it has been delivered in tank car lots, the total cost of distributing that to not only his own stations but to all of the service stations that he sells to, those expenses, as I understand now, are intermixed in this statement; is that correct?

Mr. Abbott: This includes only the wholesale costs, and, as your Honor stated yesterday, it bears upon the question of opportunity of the person who engages in the dual operation of price-cutting, and that is the principal purpose for which it is now offered, because if it should appear that there is no difference between the differential between the tank car and the tank wagon price of the cent and a 1848 half, and the amount which it costs the jobber to do that operation, then, you see, there is no opportunity for the cutting of price. In other words, if he has no margin, then he can't offer gasoline to the public at his retail stations for less than the amount which it costs him. He would have a loss, otherwise.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is it not a fact that it cost less to deliver to his own service stations than it does to market it by selling it to other service stations which he supplies?

Mr. Abbott: Well, that is a question I would like to ask the witness, instead of answering it myself. I think we ought to go into that. But I think this—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think you should go into that before there is any question as to the cost of marketing.

Mr. Abbott: I don't think the one necessarily depends on the other. However, I would be glad to ask the witness the question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think that should be inquired into first.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I will ask you, then, Mr. Ledbetter—

Mr. Abbott: I understand that this question has not been answered, and I would like to have it understood 1849 that after I go into this other matter—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is reserving his ruling on the question.

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Is there any distinction or difference between the cost of selling and transporting gasoline to one of your company-operated stations and the oest of selling it and transporting it to one of your dealer stations? Do you understand the question?

A. I think I do. There were no company-operated stations in the period about which I have just testified.

Q. That is 1938?

A. Yes. Does that answer your question?

Q. Yes. Well, as to that year it ought to answer it. That year, I understand, that all of your business was with resellers and not through any retail cutlet?

A. I had no company-operated stations in the year 1938.

Q. Very well.

Mr. Abbott: Now, for that year, I think, if the Court please, with that explanation, that the original question should be answered. I will ask him the same question, of course, with reference to any possible difference for the year 1939.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, the Examiner
1850 doesn't appreciate the relevancy of that testimony as to that year.

Mr. Abbott: Well, we have got to strike an average, of course, and see whether it might be more for one year than for another. I mean, the cost of wholesaling might be different for one year than for another. So we would like to take three years in order to see whether it represents a fair situation.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is the opinion of the Examiner that you are entitled to show the cost of transporting your gasoline from bulk stations to and delivering it into the tank of the service station operated by your company. Any other testimony doesn't appear to be relevant. But upon that point I would be very glad to hear from counsel.

Mr. Abbott: Well, the Robinson-Patman Act, if the Court please, provides that it is a defense, one of the defenses which may be urged is that—and this is the provise in Section 2 of the Act: "Nothing herein contained shall prevent differentials which make only due allowance for differences in the cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery,"—

Now, your Honor mentioned delivery, but it includes also sale as well as delivery.

"—resulting from the different methods or quan-1851 tities in which such commodities are sold or delivered."

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But the difficulty that the Examiner encounters is that here is a company that is engaged in a dual operation. First the jobber's functions, and is what the Examiner would consider properly the jobber's function, buying it in quantity and reselling it.

1852 Now, you have another portion of the business, and that is the retail business.

Mr. Abbott: Which is only incidental, and which did not exist at all in 1938 as this witness has testified.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, the Examiner doesn't appreciate the materiality of testimony with reference to the cost of jobbing. I don't understand that there is any question present in this case where the party devoted his business exclusively to that of a jobber, but it is only where he has intermingled the jobbing business with the retail business that complaint is made.

Am I correct about that, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Abbott: Is that correct?

Mr. Austin: I would like to say in the first place I don't see that the—

Mr. Abbott: Will you answer the question of the Examiner, Mr. Austin, because I would like to have it on the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I would like to get it cleared up.

Mr. Austin: I would like to say first that the proviso of the Robinson-Patman Act refers only to the Respondent Standard Oil Company, so I don't see that has any application at all.

Mr. Abbott: I wish again to interrupt and ask Mr. Austin if he won't please answer the question of the 1853 Examiner.

Mr. Austin: I will get to that in a minute.

Mr. Abbott: All right.

Mr. Austin: Do I understand the question to be that the issues in the complaint only apply to sales by jobbers at retail or where they sell both at retail and wholesale?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I take it that is the ground of this complaint.

Mr. Abbott: What I understood your Honor to say was, you asked him this question:—I think I would like to have the Stenographer repeat it, because I think it is important.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The Reporter read the following statement: "Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now the Examiner doesn't appreciate the materiality of testimony with reference to the cost of jobbing. I don't understand that there is any question in this case where the party devoted his business exclusively to that of a jobber, but it is only where he has intermingled the jobbing business with the retail business that complaint is made.

Am I correct about that, Mr. Austin?")

Mr. Austin: Well, the amendment to the complaint which has, I understand, just been made—and I say parenthetically I have been trying to get from Washington the copy of the order amending it, but so far haven't 1854 succeeded, so that your Honor could have it before him—the complaint as amended alleges that certain of these jobbers, including the Wayne Oil Company and the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, resell to certain dealers, and that as the result of the discrimination in favor of those companies as against other retailers, some of whom are in competition with their customers, competition with their customers may be injured. In other words, if either of these companies passes on a part of that cent and a half differential to a subdealer, that subdealer has a competitive advantage over a station buying direct from the Standard Oil Company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, is it the contention of counsel for the Commission that the Respondent must police the sales after they are consummated to the jobber?

Mr. Austin: It is, your Honor, in territories where, as here, the Respondent elects to sell direct to retailers in the same territory. The theory there is that it would be idle for the Commission to prohibit the Respondent from directly discriminating between retailers, if it might set up a jobber, or through a jobber sell gasoline and the jobber perhaps at the Respondent's direction, and under the Respondent's control, which are matters which would be most difficult of proof, might have the jobber give the same concession to a retailer which the Respondent is now giving directly, and the Respondent might accomplish by indirection that which it would be prohibited from 1855 accomplishing directly, and it would be a matter most difficult to prove.

Mr. Abbott: You mean then we are required to reserve control over the gasoline after it is sold to a jobber?

Mr. Austin: If you elect to sell direct to retail stations by tank wagon in a district, and you also sell to jobbers in the same district, and the jobber resells at less than your tank wagon price, that you are responsible for that discrimination.

1856 Mr. Abbott: What part of the Robinson-Patman Act do you claim covers that?

Mr. Austin: It is the result of the better price you give the jobber, you are selling to the jobber at a lower price than you are selling to your tank wagon stations.

Mr. Abbott: You say that affords him an opportunity to discriminate?

Mr. Austin: Affords the jobber the opportunity to pass part of that differential on.

Mr. Abbott: The purpose of this testimony is, your Honor, to show the differential is all used up in the cost of wholesaling, and, therefore, it has a direct bearing on the question as to whether that opportunity is afforded to the jobber. I would like to say, though, before your Honor rules on that, that Mr. Austin hasn't yet answered the question.

Mr. Austin: I answered that a long time ago.

Mr. Abbott: No. Your question was this—I think I am stating now the question of the Examiner—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner has received from counsel an answer satisfactory to the Examiner.

Mr. Abbott: Then I would like to ask a question of Mr. Austin.

1857 Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Abbott: Is it your contention in this case in situations where the jobber does no retailing at his own outlets, that there is no offense charged, and that this complaint is not intended to cover situations of that kind?

Mr. Austin: Well, if the jobber does no retailing in his outlets, he still might resell to some of his customers, as I said a moment ago, at a price below the posted tank wagon price of the Standard Oil Company.

Mr. Abbott: Where there is no testimony in the Commission's case of any such situation, do you claim then that you have a case based upon that situation? I mean where you have not shown—

Mr. Austin: There is some proof of that in this case.

Mr. Abbott: Where you haven't shown that there is any distinction made or any preference given in the sale of gasoline to the dealer outlets, we will say, of such a company as Stikeman Oil Company, and where they operate no service stations of their own, do you claim, then, that there is any case predicated upon a situation of that kind?

Mr. Austin: Well, I would say as to a case like Mr. Ledbetter, where if there is no proof that he has cut the price to any of his subdealers, that there would be 1858 nothing in his testimony which would support the theory which I have just outlined as contained in the amendment.

Mr. Abbott: When you say "subdealer" do you mean a dealer?

Mr. Austin: A dealer to whom he sells.

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: There has been no proof adduced by the Commission that shows or tends to show that he has sold at preferential prices to retailers who have utilized the reduction in cutting prices, is there?

Mr. Austin: There has been no proof, I believe, that Mr. Ledbetter has sold to any retailer at a lower price than the prevailing price.

Mr. Abbott: In that case, then, I make a motion formally on the record that as to the Wayne Oil Company the complaint be dismissed and that the Wayne Oil Company be removed from any further consideration in this Complaint.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Your motion should be properly addressed to the Commission. The Examiner has no power to act on it other than to deny it.

Mr. Abbott: Then I make it for the record because, in this case, I think that motion should be granted, and I wish to make it a matter of record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: There is some evidence here that at certain times the Wayne Oil Company has operated its own service stations. I am not certain 1859 whether there is any evidence—and I ask to be advised with reference to that—as to whether service stations operated by the Wayne Oil Company participated in the price wars and reduction in prices.

Mr. Abbott: There is no testimony, as I understand, on the record, to that effect.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: I wouldn't want to make any commitment on that point, your Honor. It has not been shown that the Wayne Oil Company sold to anybody below the tank wagon price.

Mr. Abbott: The question is whether any of their dealers sold to the public at less than the prevailing marke prices.

Mr. Austin: I wouldn't say that the Standard Oil Company was responsible for that, if they did. In other words, if the service station pays the same price as anyone else, I suppose if he wants to cut the price to the public, he has a right to do it.

Mr. Abbott: You mean, without any reflection on the Standard Oil Company?

Mr. Austin: Yes. If they all pay the price, they are on the same competitive advantage.

Mr. Abbott: So you don't claim, in that case, we 1860 don't have to do any policing?

Mr. Austin: No. I would like to call attention, as long as the reference has been made to the Act, to Section 2-A of the Clayton Act.

Mr. Abbott: You mean as amended?

Mr. Austin: 2-a of the Clayton Act as it stands now, yes, which refers to "injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person who either grants or knowingly receives the benefit of such discrimination or with customers of either of them."

The case I was just putting is within the Act in that it is an injury to competition with customers of these jobbers; that is, the customers of persons who receive the benefit of the discrimination, and that may be true where the jobber sells to the retail station at lower than tank wagon price, but where that theory is invoked it seems to me it is entirely immaterial what the jobber's costs are of selling to his customers, because if the jobber has a cent and a half margin and he is selling to his customer at a one cent margin, the more it costs the jobber, the less able he is going to be—the more it costs the jobber to handle that gasoline, why, the more obvious it is that the concession that he has is necessary to enable him to sell at that price. It doesn't do a bit of good to show it cost him a cent or a half cent or two cents—the fact of the matter is, 1861 he is still selling it on the margin of a cent.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Evidently there has been, attemptedly, to bring into the case a new element, an additional element.

Mr. Abbott: One more link, as it were.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

1862 Mr. Abbott: The point I make from the discussion which has just been indulged in between counsel and the Examiner is this: If there is nothing in the processes of the Wayne Oil Company which have been substantiated which would reflect on the liability of the Standard Oil Company in this complaint, then I say that that part of the complaint referring to the Wayne Oil Company should be dismissed from further consideration in the case.

I realize that the Wayne Oil Company is not a Respondent here; the Standard Oil Company is the Respondent. However, if it appears, and it does now appear, it seems to me that nothing has been shown with reference to the practices of the Wayne Oil Company which would constitute any violation of the law, then I say that any case predicated on their practices should be dismissed. I mean that part of the complaint should be dismissed and withdrawn from further consideration in the case.

I don't see why we should be put to any defense with reference to the oil company's operations.

Mr. Austin: Well, if your Honor please, there is plenty of evidence here as to the Wayne Oil Company which is very material and relevant.

Mr. Abbott: At what point?

Mr. Austin: It has been proved that the Standard Oil Company sold to them at a lower price than you sell

1863 to other dealers in Detroit.

Mr. Abbott: We sell to them at the regular tank car price.

Mr. Austin: It is true they operate some retail stations?

Mr. Abbott: But it has been shown they never sell for less than the prevailing retail market price, in the Detroit area.

Mr. Austin: That depends on whether or not there is a case against the Standard Oil Company, when we get through. I don't see how it is possible to separate this thing and they are not a Respondent, either.

1864 Mr. Abbott: It is also a fact that there is no proof that the Wayne Oil Company ever sold to any of our dealers at less than the regular dealer tank wagon price at any time.

Mr. Austin: Those are things to argue before the Commission on the whole record, Mr. Abbott. At least, that is my opinion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there a motion pending?

Mr. Abbott: There was an objection made by Mr. Austin relative to the offer of proof of costs of the Wayne Oil Company in wholesale operations for the year 1936.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner, to save time, will admit the evidence subject to objection, and at the conclusion a motion to strike in whole or in part.

Mr. Austin: Now that that objection is disposed of, I wish to make another one upon the ground that the witness has not been qualified as an accountant and that he has admitted joint costs are involved here and it has been necessary to make an allocation, and it is my contention that only an expert accountant is able to do that.

Mr. Abbott: He qualified yesterday. For one thing, he testified he was the treasurer before he went into the 1865 oil business of the Everhot Heater Company, a Detroit company manufacturing hot water heaters. That he had, in that position, charge of the financial affairs of that company.

He testifies, also, that he is the majority stockholder of the Wayne Oil Company. In fact, it is a family corporation, and that he has charge of the management of its financial affairs and is the one who takes care of the books of that company.

That he has taken these figures that he is now proposing to submit to your Honor in the record, from the books of the company.

Now, I don't understand that anyone, to testify about his own personal, financial affairs has to be a certified public accountant or even an accountant who is not certified.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Isn't there a question of allocation?

Mr. Abbott: That is true, but nobody knows anything more about that than Mr. Ledbetter himself. The only allocation here is between gasoline sales and sales of other merchandise, and he has determined that in the same way that Mr. Taggart did in the testimony which Mr. Taggart gave.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Have you determined it from the proportion of gross sales of those commodities, gasoline and other mer-1866 chandise; is that the basis, Mr. Ledbetter, upon which that has been computed in dollars?

A. I am not quite sure what you mean by gross sales.

Q. I mean gross sales less taxes, both Federal and State.

A. Yes:

Mr. Abbott: That is just exactly the same thing that Mr. Taggart did, as I understand it, only Mr. Taggart didn't reduce the cost of gasoline by the taxes, which we claim he should.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: To save time, again, the Examiner reserves an objection to counsel for the Commission; the objection is overruled, reserving, further, the right to counsel for the Commission to strike the testimony in whole or in part.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, Mr. Ledbetter, we got down to the cost per gallon of gasoline for 1938. Will you state what that cost was; I mean the cost for wholesaling gasoline for that year?

A. The cost per gallon was 1.501¢ or one thousandth of a cent over a cent and a half.

Q. Now, taking the same study for the year 1939, what were the total sales, including State Highway and Federal tax for that year?

1867 A. $314,210.97.

Q. What was the amount of the State Highway and Federal tax on gasoline sold by you during that year?

A. $86,656.52.

Q. What was the amount of total sales less State Highway and Federal tax?

A. $227,554.45.

Q. Now, what was the amount of gasoline sold during that year, excluding Highway and federal tax?

A. $180,907.39.

Q. And what were the total sales of merchandise, other than gasoline?

A. $46,647.06.

Q. What was the percentage of gasoline sales to total sales?

A. 79.5%.

Q. What was, then, the total operating expense for 1939?

A. $43,715.80.

Q. And what was the total operating expense for gasoline during 1939?

A. $34,754.06.

Q. What was the total gallonage of gasoline sold in 1939?

A. 2,212,085.

Q. And what was the per gallon cost of wholesaling
1868 gasoline, based on those figures, during 1939?

A. 1.571¢

Q. How much was that in excess of 1½¢ per gallon?

A. .071¢.

Q. That is to say it was .071¢ in excess of a cent and a half; is that right?

A. That's right. I believe that's right. The cost was 1.571¢.

Q. Now, taking the figures for 1940, what were the total sales, including State Highway and Federal tax of the Wayne Oil Company during 1940?

A. $374,422.98.

Q. What was the amount of the State Highway and Federal tax on gasoline sold?

A. $98,272.57.

Q. What was the amount of total sales less the Highway and Federal tax?

A. $276,150.41.

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, in the $98,272.57, I think I said State Highway and Federal tax on gasoline. Did that include some other merchandise upon which there was some Federal taxes or State taxes?

A. No, we just used that on gasoline in these figures.

Q. I had in mind the Federal tax on lubricating oil.

Now, what was the total sales less Highway and 1869 Federal tax? Would ~~you~~ just give that?

A. $276,150.41.

Q. What was the total in dollars of gasoline sales excluding Highway and Federal tax?

A. $193,672.48.

Q. What were the total sales other than gasoline?

A. $82,477.93.

Q. That is, of merchandise other than gasoline?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, what was the percentage of gasoline sales to total sales?

A. 70.1%.

Q. What were the total operating expenses of the Wayne Oil Company for 1940?

A. $49,720.96.

Q. What was the gallonage for that year, 1940?

A. 2,340,671.

Q. What was the total operating expense allocated to the sale of gasoline?

1870 A. $34,854.39.

Q. And what was the cost of selling gasoline per gallon at wholesale during the year 1940?

A. 1.489¢.

Q. That was how much under a cent and a half?

A. .011¢.

Q. .011 of a cent less than a cent and a half, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, I want to ask you this: In the item of total operating expenses for 1938, will you state what items you include in that figure of $33,059.66?

A. Do you want the amounts of each item?

Q. Yes.

A. Salary and wages, $18,135.72.

Charged off bad debts, $633.43.

Interest paid, $100.44.

Taxes, $1,065.85.

Depreciation of equipment, $2,294.22.
Insurance, $87.16.
Telephone, $720.76.
Advertising, $2,494.83.
Maintenance of equipment, $532.04.
Miscellaneous expense, which means various expenses not previously classified, $6,295.21.

1871 Q. What is the total?

A. $33,059.66.

Q. That is the total which you have testified to in connection with your testimony as to 1938 per gallonage cost of wholesaling gasoline?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, on that miscellaneous item, Mr. Ledbetter, that you supported by your books which you have at your place of business?

A. Yes.

Q. And are those items of depreciation and interest on money and property invested, and other items such as that, taken from your income tax reports for that year of 1938?

A. Well, they are all in the income tax reports, taken from our books.

Q. I see. Have those been verified and accepted by income tax authorities of the United States?

A. They have. 1938 has. 1939 has.

Q. Very well. Now, taking the same comparative item in your 1938 account, namely total operating expenses for 1939, will you state what items enter into that figure, the same as you have for 1938?

A. Well, salaries and wages, $21,345.39.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, if these are all going in for every year, why wouldn't it have been much 1872 easier to put it in a schedule, instead of reading them off into the record?

Mr. Abbott: We only have one more year, we are just about through with it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

Mr. Abbott: All right.

A. Loss on rent, $366.16.
Bad debts, $716.37.
Interest, $78.27.
Taxes, $995.64.
Depreciation, $2,506.17.
Maintenance of equipment, $508.31.

Telephone, $1,080.84.
Insurance, $1,406.48.
Advertising, $4,432.77.
Allowances in discounts, $2,146.41.
Reserve for doubtful accounts, $1,805.21.
Truck expense, $1,170.04.
Stationery, $108.86.
Legal expense, $50.11.
Postage, $286.19.
Miscellaneous expense, $4,712.58.

Q. Making a total of what?

A. $43,715.80.

Q. Now, referring to the 1940 statement, will you 1873 state into the record the total operating expenses for 1940 in itemized form?

A. Salaries and wages, $25,378.28.
Loss on rent, $1,213.67.
Bad debts, $2,250.09.
Interest, $74.97.
Taxes, $1,802.32.
Depreciation, $2,702.50.
Maintenance of equipment, $1,401.74.
Telephone, $1,258.64.
Insurance, $986.51.
Advertising, $3,594.04.
Truck expense, $971.58.
Stationery, $88.94.
Legal expense, $113.64.
Postage, $455.71.
Station expense, which means the loss at gas stations company operated, $32.43.
Miscellaneous expense, $7,445.90.

Q. Total?

A. $49,720.96.

Q. Now, are those figures, Mr. Ledbetter, all supported, that you have just now read, are they all supported by your books to which access is invited to the Commission if it so desires?

1874 A. Right.

Q. It would appear from your figures of operating costs for these three years of 1938, 1939, and 1940, that the per gallonage cost of wholesaling gasoline for those three years, if you average it, amounts to slightly in excess of a cent and a half per gallon; is that not true?

A. I haven't figured it, but I believe it is; the average of those three figures I believe would be slightly in excess of a cent and a half.

Q. You mean to say then that your company actually lost business by reason of being a tank car customer and receiving the cent and a half differential when your operating cost was more than a cent and a half?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You don't mean lost business, do you?

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I mean lost money?

A. No, we never have lost money, we have always made a little, shown a little profit.

Q. Well, what do you mean by that? Your salary is included in the figures, is it not?

A. Right.

Q. And in the figures as to the salaries and wages, have you set up there in some way so that you could put it in the record as to the amount of salary that you have 1875 drawn for those three years?

A. I have it here.

Q. Will you state on the record what that has been?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you want the salaries of all executives?

Mr. Abbott: No, just the salary of Mr. Ledbetter.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I have it here, I don't know whether I took it off your figures or where I got it, but I show you this memorandum just to refresh your recollection, without putting it in evidence, and ask you whether that refreshes your recollection as to the amount you received for salaries in 1938, '39, and '40?

A. Well, I have it right down here for the two years except 1938, and I have it in my file, but I recognize the figure.

Q. Will you state, if you please, what was the amount for 1938 that you received for your salary?

A. $9500.

Q. And for 1939?

A. $8250.

Q. And for 1940?

A. $12,000.

Q. And the other items of salaries and wages covered what?

A. Cover my help, employees.

1876 Q. Both office help and drivers and persons who are in the personnel of the company?

A. That's right.

Q. Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, Mr. Ledbetter, did you ever have offers or solicitations to purchase your gasoline at tank car prices or less from any other suppliers of gasoline besides the Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes, I have.

1877 Q. And will you state who those companies were that made such offers to you?

Mr. Austin: Pardon me. What period is that referred to, Mr. Abbott?

Mr. Abbott: I am asking him what companies made such offers during any time since he became a tank car customer of Standard Oil Company or before he became a tank car customer of Standard Oil.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, ~~I object~~ to that unless it is directed to specific conversations, and if it is based on letters or written offers, I submit that they should be introduced. If it is based on any personal conversation with representatives of an oil company, then I request that the witness be directed to state with whom conversation was had and when it was had and what was said.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It should be confined to the period since June, 1936.

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: You mean after he became a tank car customer?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: Or do you mean after the time that the Robinson-Patman Act became effective?

1878 Trial Examiner Ballinger: After the effective date of the Robinson-Patman Act.

Mr Abbott: Very well.

Well, now, I don't mean by saying "very well" to admit that we are bound in the case of these jobbers to confine our questions on that to offers made since 1936 or since 1935, or any other date, because in the case of some of these jobbers that have been jobbers for a long time, some competitive offers may have been made previous to 1936.

I just make that for the record, because I don't want to be bound by any statement I make to the effect that we are willing to be circumscribed in our testimony to that extent.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, will you state, Mr. Ledbetter, what companies did make competitive offers to you, or did solicit your business to serve you on a tank car basis, and whether the offer was made in writing, and if not, how it was made, and who made it? What was the first company that solicited your business to serve you on a tank car basis?

A. Well, the first one that I can testify to, of course, is fairly recent, because I don't remember those things too long definitely. But on December 10, 1940, Wayne Oil Company was offered 80 octane gasoline delivered 1879 by transport truck at our bulk plant at the price of 6.1¢ per gallon without tax.

Q. That is to say excluding tax?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I assumed, or, rather, understood—

Mr. Abbott: We are going to bring in the name of the company. I understand you want that, and want the name of the person who made the offer, is that right, on behalf of the company?

Mr. Austin: Know how it was made. And I don't know whether it is admissible testimony. If the offer was made in writing, I claim the answer is inadmissible.

Mr. Abbott: I will ask this witness this:

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Was the offer made by the company that you have reference to, in writing, or was it made verbally to you by some representative?

A. Verbally.

Q. And you say it was made on December 10, 1940?

A. Right.

Q. And who was the person who made the offer?

A. Howard MacGready, Howard J. MacGready.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I object to the form of the questioning. The proper way for these questions to 1880 be asked, I submit, is to ask him whether he had a conversation with a representative of some oil company on a certain date, and have him say what was said. Now, counsel is referring to who made an offer; did he receive an offer from a certain oil company, and I claim that those questions are improper and leading and not based on anything which the witness has said. I am only insisting on this now, because they are evidently going on over a period of transactions.

Mr. Abbott: I will ask him what the conversation was.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You may state what the circumstances were and what was said between you and the representative of the oil company and also state, if you will, the name of the company.

A. The name of the company was Aurora Gasoline Company.

Q. And you may state also—you have already stated the date—state the circumstances and the conversation that took place as nearly as you can. I don't mean state the exact words, but just the purport of how it happened.

A. The purport of it was that they offered to sell me 80 octane gasoline delivered by transport truck at our bulk station at the price of 6.1¢ a gallon.

Q. How did that happen to be said? Where was the offer made?

1881 A. In the Detroit-Leland Hotel.

Q. And who was present besides you and the man whom you say represented the Aurora Gasoline Company?

A. Nobody.

Q. And what was his name?

A. Howard J. MacGready.

Q. How did you happen to be at the Detroit-Leland Hotel?

A. I believe we were over there together at the Oilmen's Club.

Q. What is the name of the Oilmen's Club?

A. Detroit Oilmen's Club.

Q. And did you happen to be there for lunch or under what circumstances?

A. It runs in my mind that we were at lunch or there prior to lunch.

Q. What is 80 octane gasoline, as mentioned by you?

A. Pretty good gasoline.

Q. Well, how does it compare with the ordinary house brand gasoline, if you know?

A. Very favorably.

Q. Well, do you mean by very favorably, that it is comparable or better?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I have to object to that again on the ground of lack of qualifications. That seems to me something for a chemist to testify to.

1882 Mr. Abbott: I think Mr. Ledbetter, no doubt, knows the gasoline business. It is not shown that it involves any technical understanding of octane rating, but is only a designation of a certain quality of gasoline, so far as I understand. I think the witness can clear that up, if your Honor has any question about it.

Mr. Austin: I think he should be qualified as to whether he can compare one brand of gasoline with another, and whether he knows what is in them.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, is there anything of a technical nature about octane rating of gasoline?

A. Well, somewhat, yes, and in some respects, quite a lot. But for the purpose of determining general overall qualities of gasoline, not so much. It is a generally accepted method of comparing performance qualities of gasoline.

Q. According to its octane rating, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now,—

Mr. Austin: I think there is an objection that hasn't been ruled upon, and I would like the question re-read.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question, please.

(The following question: "Well, how does it 1883 compare with the ordinary house brand gasoline, if you know?" and record were read by the reporter.)

Mr. Austin: That is the question I object to, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Abbott: Let me reframe the question, Mr. Ledbetter.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. How does 80 octane gasoline, if you know, compare with the octane rating of house brand gasoline?

A. Which house brand?

Q. Standard Oil house brand.

A. At that time I believe 80 octane was higher than Standard Oil's house brand.

Q. And you say that Mr. MacGready—I believe that is the name of the man?

A. MacGready, yes.

Q. How do you spell that?

A. M-a-c G-r-e-a-d-y.

Q. And how is he identified, if you know, with the Aurora Gasoline Company?

A. Sales manager, I would call him. It was in that capacity.

1884 Q. Sales manager?

A. Yes.

Q. Is the Aurora Gasoline Company a local gasoline company?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. At that time you say he offered you a price delivered by transport truck at your bulk plant at the price of 6.1¢ per gallon, excluding tax?

A. Right.

Q. How did that price compare on December 10, 1940, with the then-prevailing Standard Oil truck transport price of gasoline, house brand gasoline of Standard Oil Company?

A. It was half a cent less than Standard Oil's price.

Q. ½¢ less?

A. Yes.

Q. Per gallon?

A. Right.

Q. Did you communicate that offer to Standard Oil Company?

A. Well, not right at the time, but shortly after that I did.

Q. What did you do, communicate it verbally or by letter?

A. Verbally first, and then by letter.

Q. Then did you transmit it by letter?

A. I did.

Q. Did the offer of 80 octane gasoline delivered
1885 by transport truck to your bulk plant at a price of ½¢ less than the then prevailing tank car price, did that offer—was it considered by you in any way with the idea of accepting it?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What did you tell Mr. MacGready when he made you the offer?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What is the materiality of it?

Mr. Abbott: He asked me for the conversation that was had with the representative of the Aurora Gasoline Company. I think we ought to know whether the offer was considered by Mr. Ledbetter as to whether he should accept it or not.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He may answer.

Mr. Austin: I don't think consideration amounts to anything. I have no objection, your Honor, to what he said, but I object to what he considered.

Mr. Abbott: I withdraw the question.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What did you tell Mr. MacGready when he made you this offer?

A. I don't remember, to tell you the truth.

Q. Did you accept the offer?

A. No, I didn't.

1886 Q. Well, you say you did transmit it, however, to the Standard Oil Company.

A. I did.

Q. What was the purpose of doing that?

A. Because they asked me if I had had any such offers within recent times, about that time.

Q. I see. Do you know what the Aurora Gasoline Company is?

A. Yes. It is a refinery.

Q. And how many refineries do they have in the Detroit area, if you know?

A. I know of one.

Q. Is that located in River Rouge or at Lincoln Park?

A. It is down in that direction. I believe it is in the city limits of Detroit. I wouldn't be too sure, but it is down in that section.

Q. It is down in the southwest portion of Detroit metropolitan area?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do you know that they have another refinery at Elsie, Michigan?

A. I don't know, but it runs in my mind that they do have.

Q. And do you know whether that is a company with a large capacity or small capacity for furnishing gasoline?

A. I think it is quite large.

Q. How large volume, do you know; if you do know, do they have per day; expressed in gallons?

1887 A. I can't say now. It was told to me at that time, but I don't remember it.

Q. You can say, though, it is large and not small; is that right?

A. Yes, it is a large company.

Q. And do you know whether the Aurora Gasoline Company operates a marine terminal in the Detroit area?

A. I believe they do.

Mr. Austin: Do you know whether they do?

A. Well, I know they say they do. I have never seen it.

Q. Did Mr. MacGready tell you that?

Mr. Austin: I object to what Mr. MacGready told him about the business of the Aurora Gasoline Company as hearsay.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you ever have any other offer on the part of any competing oil supplier to supply you your requirements of gasoline on a tank wagon basis?

Mr. Austin: I object to the use of the word "competing" your Honor, as calling for a conclusion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Mr. Abbott: I withdraw the question and I will reframe it.

By Mr. Abbott:

1888 Q. Did you ever at any time since 1936 have any other offer from any other supplier of gasoline to supply you with your requirements of gasoline on a tank car basis?

A. Yes.

Q. When was that?

A. December 13, 1940.

Q. Where was that offer made?

A. It was made in the office of the Stikeman Oil Company, Detroit.

Q. And how do you happen to be at the Stikeman Oil Company, Mr. Ledbetter?

A. Mr. Stikeman and the company that made the offer invited me to come down to their office to get the offer.

Q. Stikeman Oil Company is one of the other jobbers of the Standard Oil Company, is it not?

A. That's right.

Q. And what time of day was it that you were summoned to come down to the Stikeman Oil Company?

A. Sometime in the forenoon.

Q. And did you go down to the Stikeman Oil Company?

A. Yes.

Q. And who was present?

A. Mr. Stikeman, myself, and the oil company representative.

Q. Do you recall his name?

A. Yes.

1889 Q. Very well, state what it is.

A. J. R. Rickley.

Q. How do you spell that?

A. R-i-c-k-l-e-y.

Q. What company did he state he represented, if he did so state?

A. He represented the National Refining Company at Cleveland.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge what the National Refining Company is?

A. Yes.

Q. What is it?

A. It is a refiner.

Q. Of gasoline?

A. Yes, motor oils, petroleum products.

Q. Is it a refiner on a large scale or a small scale, if you know, of your own knowledge?

A. I would say it was a large one.

Q. And what did Mr. Rickley say to you—

Mr. Austin: Just a moment, please.

Mr. Abbott: Pardon me.

Mr. Austin: I think the witness ought to qualify what he means by large or small, unless your Honor thinks that is proper ground for cross-examination.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think it would be best 1890 for him to explain what he means by large and small, if he can, in his direct examination, and save much time on cross.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Just what do you mean by large and small refiner, Mr. Ledbetter?

A. Why, the National Refining Company operates throughout several states and Canada, and therefore I would call it large. It seems large to me.

Q. Does the National Refining Company supply gasoline to any companies, according to your knowledge, operating in the Detroit area?

A. No, not in the Detroit area.

Q. It does not?

A. Not gasoline.

Q. Does the Aurora Gasoline Company, the other company you testified about, supply any companies or jobbers operating in the Detroit area, if you know?

A. Well, I only know what they have told me.

Q. Well, what do you know from what you have been told?

A. They do.

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor. That is hearsay.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, do you know by general reputation?

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

1891 Q. What do you know according to the general reputation?

A. They supply considerable gasoline in Detroit.

Q. Now, what did the representative of the National Refining Company tell you when you got down there to the Stikeman Oil Company?

Was Mr. Stikeman present?

A. He was.

Q. All right. State what was said.

A. A summary of what was said was this: He offered the two companies, Stikeman Oil Company and the Wayne Oil Company, as an inducement for the two of them together to purchase their requirements from the National Refining Company, their house brand gasoline, with the exclusive sales for Detroit, and a guaranteed margin of 1½¢ on a 6¢ Detroit market or better; below 6¢ we to stand the cut fifty-fifty.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was the offer submitted in writing?

The Witness: No. Verbally.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You say that offer was—

A. We were to have the difference between the Detroit market and the Chicago Journal of Commerce average any time it was more than 1½¢.

Q. In other words, do I understand from that that he told you that in some instances it the price got up 1892 to a certain point that your margin would be more than 1½¢?

A. Yes, that is the meaning of that.

Q. And that offer was made both to the Wayne Oil Company and to the Stikeman Oil Company; is that right?

A. Right.

Q. Any other conversation between you, Mr. Ledbetter: what other conversation was there between you and Mr. Stikeman and the representative of the National Refining Company?

A. The only thing I remember now is that we asked him to submit it in writing.

Q. Very well. And now have you or Mr. Stikeman, to your knowledge, acted upon that offer; at any time from December 13, 1940, up to this time?

A. I haven't. I don't think he has.

Q. I believe you stated yesterday, when you testified, that in the year 1935 you operated a station at Vinewood Avenue and Grand Boulevard in the City of Detroit. When I say "you," I mean the Wayne Oil Company; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And whom did you lease that station from?

A. The Highland Oil Corporation.

Q. Are they distributors of Hi-Speed Gasoline?

A. Yes.

Q. And were they, at that time?

A. Yes.

1893 Q. During the year 1935 did you distribute Hi Speed Gasoline at that station?

A. Yes, we sold it at that station.

Q. And who supplied it to you?

A. Highland Oil Company, or Corporation; I forget which it is. I think it is Corporation.

Q. And was that supplied to you on the tank wagon price or on a tank car price?

A. It was supplied to us by tank wagon delivery.

Q. At what price?

A. The price was a cent a gallon below Standard Oil's price, at that time.

Q. You were receiving, in other words, tank wagon deliveries but were getting it at a one cent discount from the regular prevailing tank wagon price at that time, is that right?

A. Well, it was a cent below Standard's.

Trial Examiner Ballinger. When was that?

The Witness: That was the first part of the year 1935.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now are there any other offers that you have had which you can state definitely in the record, Mr. Ledbetter, at any time since you became a Standard Oil tank car jobber?

A. Nothing that I can recall sufficiently definite at the present time to testify to.

1894 Q. What is your general recollection on that point; in a general way?

A. Well, in a general way, what I might consider—

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor. I would like to have that question reread, at least, before the witness answers it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

Mr. Austin: What is the point?

Mr. Abbott: I will withdraw the question, if there is any objection to it, and ask you this; Mr. Ledbetter:

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Has there been any time since you became a jobber of Standard Oil Company on a tank car basis, that it has been impossible for you to deal with other major oil companies on the same basis? In other words, has it at all times been possible, according to your knowledge, for you to secure the same basis and terms from other major oil companies?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor, as calling for a conclusion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, Mr. Ledbetter, in order that it may be definitely in the record, will you state whether you have ever sold gasoline to any of your dealers—and when I say 1895 "you," I mean the Wayne Oil Company—at less than the regular dealer tank wagon price of the Standard Oil Company?

The Witness: Read that question again, please.

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

A. I have never done it. The Wayne Oil Company has never done it.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Yes. I will ask you, also, in order that it may be definitely in the record, whether at any time that you have operated retail stations—and by "you," I mean the Wayne Oil Company—have you always charged, in your retail operations, the prevailing retail price of Standard Oil retail stations in the Detroit area to the consuming public?

A. I have always charged as much or more than the prevailing retail price; never less.

Q. You never have been a price cutter?

A. During the price wars we were frequently about the very last to meet the price cutting situation, so I would say in those circumstances we could easily have been selling at above the prevailing price.

Q. Does the Wayne Oil Company ever exercise any control over the price at which its dealers sell gasoline to the public?

A. Nothing beyond good business advice, once in a while.

Q. What I mean to say is, do you ever dictate to your dealers?

1896 A. No, we don't dictate. We try to convince them, sometimes, when they go haywire, a little bit. We try to correct them by argument.

Q. Will you state, Mr. Ledbetter, based upon your experience as a Standard Oil Tank car jobber during these years, what would be the consequences if the Standard Oil Company were prohibited from selling gasoline to you on a tank car basis? In other words, would it be possible for you readily to secure the same or more advantageous tank car prices from other major oil companies in the Detroit area?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor, upon the ground that the witness has not been qualified to state his conclusions upon that point. Similar questions were asked of qualified experts but I don't believe this witness has been so qualified.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

Mr. Austin: I would just like to say one word more. It is quite obvious that the witness has had no experience with that particular situation.

Mr. Abbott: You don't have to be an expert to answer that question. This man has had a long experience as a Standard Oil jobber and I am asking him to state, based upon his experience.

1897 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Can he testify, based upon his experience, with any degree of certainty what would happen in the event such an incident occurred?

Mr. Abbott: I am asking him to state whether he would be able to purchase from other suppliers if the Standard Oil Company were prohibited from selling to him.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Can he answer that question?

Mr. Abbott: I would like to ask the witness whether he can answer it, or not.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Isn't any answer that he gives purely speculative; is it possible for him to give a definite answer?

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I will ask you this: based upon your experience, Mr. Ledbetter, could you secure your supply on an equal or more advantageous basis from other suppliers of gasoline in the Detroit area?

Mr. Austin: I object to that, unless the witness testifies he has ever tried to do it. If he has never tried to do it, why—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. In the conversation you had with the representatives of the Aurora Gasoline Company in the Detroit-Leland 1898 Hotel, were any other Standard Oil jobber customers present or any representative of any such company?

A. No, we were alone.

Q. Do you remember whether Mr. Citrin was at the meeting which you were attending on that day?

A. No. He was at one similar to that, maybe the same day, later on, but the offer that I received was personally with me, alone.

Q. Did you overhear the same offer being made to Mr. Citrin of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company by the representative of the Aurora Gasoline Company?

A. I heard some such conversation as that. Whether it was on that day or not, I wouldn't say, but it was at about that time.

Q. Did you overhear it, did you say?

A. Yes.

Q. You overheard the conversation?

A. Yes. It wasn't very formal. I wasn't associating it with this offer that I had, personally.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Will you state again, approximately, when that conversation occurred?

The Witness: December 10, 1940, is the date that I had the offer from them.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. That is, from the Aurora Gasoline Company?

1899 A. That's right. That is the one you are talking about, isn't it?

Q. Yes. There was another offer on December 13th from the National Refining Company?

A. That's right.

Q. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: One was December 10th and the other was December 13, 1940?

The Witness: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And both of them were subsequent to the issuance and service of the Complaint in this case?

The Witness: I think that is true.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Complaint was issued November 29, 1940.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you know, Mr. Ledbetter, of your own knowledge, whether there was any connection between those offers and the fact that this Complaint had been issued?

A. Well, I think there was.

Q. In what way?

A. I think Standard Oil wanted the evidence for what it was worth to them.

Q. Do you mean to tell me that Standard Oil—

A. If I had any offers.

1900 Q. You don't mean to say, do you, that Standard Oil had anything to do with the National Refining Company and Aurora Gasoline Company in making the offers?

A. I should say not.

Q. What I wanted to ask you is this: when I asked you if there was any connection between the making of the offers and the fact that the Complaint had been issued, was there any connection between those two events?

A. I don't think so.

Q. I understood you to say there was.

A. Why, no. I didn't understand that question to be that way at all.

Q. All right. I was mistaken, then.

A. I think the question was asked by the Examiner, wasn't it? I would like to have that question again.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think the record is clear now.

Mr. Abbott: Repeat the record from the time the Examiner asked the question, because we don't want to have the record inaccurate.

(The record was read as follows:)

"Trial Examiner Ballinger: Will you state again, approximately, when that conversation occurred?

1901 "The Witness: December 10, 1940, is the date that I had the offer from them.

"Question: That is, from the Aurora Gasoline Company?

"Answer: That's right. That is the one you are talking about, isn't it?

"Question: Yes. There was another offer on December 13th from the National Refining Company?

"Answer: That's right.

"Question: Yes.

"Trial Examiner Ballinger: One was December 10th and the other was December 13th, 1940?

"The Witness: That's right.

"Trial Examiner Ballinger: And both of those were subsequent to the issuance and service of the Complaint in this case?

"The Witness: I think that is true.

"Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Complaint was issued November 29, 1940.

"Question (By Mr. Abbott.) Do you know, Mr. Ledbetter, of your own knowledge, whether there was any connection between those offers and the fact that this Complaint had been issued?

"Answer: Well, I think there was.

"Question: In what way?

"Answer: I think Standard Oil wanted the evidence for what it was worth to them.

1902 "Question: Do you mean to tell me that Standard Oil—

"Answer: If I had any offers.

"Question: You don't mean to say, do you, that Standard Oil had anything to do with the National Refining Company and Aurora Gasoline Company in making the offers?

"Answer: I should say not.

"Question: What I wanted to ask you is this: When I asked you if there was any connection between the making of the offers and the fact that the Complaint had been issued, was there any connection between those two events?

"Answer: I don't think so.

"Question: I understood you to say there was.

"Answer: Why, no, I didn't understand that question to be that way at all.

"Question: All right. I was mistaken, then.

"Answer: I think the question was asked by the Examiner, wasn't it? I would like to have that question again.")

By Mr. Abbot:

Q. Now, that you have heard the questions and answers, Mr. Ledbetter, do you wish to make any statement to clarify the evidence?

A. Yes. What I wanted to convey was that it was my idea that Standard Oil wanted any competitive offers 1903 on gasoline that had been made to me within recent times, or any times, and that was the reason why they wanted—why they asked me if I [illegible] had any, and I naturally told them that I had, and I gave them the information that I had.

Q. And whom did you give the information to?

A. Mr. Raupagh.

Q. And I understand that you did not mean to indicate by your answer to my question that there was any connection, any casual connection between the making of those offers and the fact that there had been a Complaint issued in this case?

A. No, no. No, that wasn't the way I got the question at all.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you remember approximately what date the Standard Oil Company inquired of you as to whether or not you had had any offers from what company?

The Witness: I have quite a distinct recollection that it was about a day or two after I got the first offer; that is, the first offer that I have related here, December 10th. I know that I had already had that offer when they first made that request, and it is my recollection that the National Refining Company proposition came in about the next day or two, so about that, Standard's request was between the two offers. That is my recollection of 1904 it at the present time.

Mr. Abbott: You may take the witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Austin, there is a certain portion of the witness' testimony to which you were reserved the right to move to strike in whole or in part. You may cross examine on that without impairing your right to move to strike.

Mr. Austin: Thank you, your Honor. I will take up a few other matters first here, and I will get back to that a little later.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And in the event your motion to strike should prevail, both the direct and cross will go out.

Mr. Austin: May I say something off the record?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, referring to the National Refining Company, did you state what octane that gasoline was supposed to be?

A. Could I state or did I state?

Q. Did your state, or do you know?

1905 A. I don't think I stated, but they did represent to us that it was comparable to good branded gasoline; competitive.

Q. Was it an unbranded gasoline that they wanted to sell you?

A. No, branded.

Q. What was the brand?

A. White Rose.

Q. Is that the brand of the National Refining Company?

A. That's right.

Q. Do you know anything about the quality of that gasoline beyond what they told you?

A. Well, by general reputation, yes, I know that it is good gasoline.

Q. Is it a major brand of gas?

A. There are probably some major companies that wouldn't consider them a major brand of gasoline, but they are a well-recognized national manufacturer of good gasoline.

Q. National? What do you mean by National?

A. Well, I would say they do business over quite a territory, several states and Canada.

Q. Well, several states doesn't mean national, does it?

A. Maybe not.

Q. Do you know what states they do business in?

1906 A. No, I couldn't enumerate the states. I know some of them.

Q. What states can you enumerate?

A. Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois; I believe are the only ones I have ever seen it in.

Q. Do they sell to any other wholesalers or retailers in Detroit?

A. No; not gasoline.

Q. Did this representative of them give you any indication as to—that they wanted to come into Detroit or why he was making you the offer?

A. I got the impression that they would like to be in Detroit.

Q. Do you know anything about the public acceptance of that gasoline, that is not sold here? Are you familiar with that public acceptance of that gasoline anywhere it is sold?

A. Yes, by general reputation, I am.

Q. What do you mean by general reputation?

A. Well, the kind of knowledge that a man in the business would have of a competitive product; naturally.

Q. What territories does that reputation cover?

A. Around in this section of the country. Around Michigan here.

Q. You mean it is sold in Michigan outside of Detroit?

1907 A. It is; quite close to Detroit.

Q. And did Mr. Rickley tell you anything about the quality of this gas as compared with house brands of other companies?

A. That's my recollection of it, that he did.

Q. Did he contend it was equivalent to the house brand of Standard Oil, for instance?

A. Yes. That is the way I recalled it. The fact of the matter is, I believe he said it was even better.

Q. I was wondering whether he probably didn't say that.

Mr. Abbott: I move to strike the last statement: "I was wondering whether he didn't probably say that."

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion is granted.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. You said that you were attending a luncheon at the Detroit-Leland Hotel at the time that you had a conversation with Mr. MacGready.

A. That is my recollection.

Q. Had you met him before that time?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Does the Aurora Gasoline Company have any distribution in Detroit?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. And is that how you happened to know Mr. MacGready?

1908 A. Really, the way I became best acquainted—the way I became more or less intimately acquainted with him, was because he was a brother member of the Detroit Oilmen's Club. We are both members of the same club.

Q. How long have you known him?

A. I had known him casually up to that time probably four or five years.

Q. Hadn't he ever approached you before to make an offer to sell you gasoline?

A. He had. Before even we were ever in the club together.

Q. I understood you to say that this one in December was the first one you could recall.

A. It was the first offer I could recall. I don't know what it was—he had solicited me for gasoline business at least, oh, within probably three or four years ago, half a dozen different times.

Q. But he never made you any specific offer at those times?

A. I can't recall whether he did or not. I know he was after my gasoline business.

Q. How did you happen to remember this particular conversation, particularly?

A. Because the request from the Standard Oil for any such evidence came in to me so shortly after the thing was made, why, I remembered it definitely.

1909 Q. Did you know before you had this conversation with Mr. MacGready, did you know about the Federal Trade Commission's Complaint against the Standard Oil Company in this case?

A. I might have. If the news came out before that, I did. I couldn't tell you whether I did or not.

Q. Did you have any previous indication when you went to that luncheon that Mr. MacGready was going to make you an offer to sell gasoline?

A. Well, in connection with this offer, he took me out to his cracking plant and took me all through it, and I can't recall now whether that was before this conversation or after. My personal recollection is that we went out and looked over the plant before we went up to the club and he made me this proposition. I wouldn't be too sure about it.

Q. Do you know whether—or was there any indication that anyone else other than Mr. MacGready and yourselves knew about this offer at that time, at the time it was made?

A. I don't believe there was.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will have a five minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

1910 Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, referring again to the offer which you say you received from a Mr. Rickley representing the National Refining Company, will you state again how you happened to go to the Stikeman Oil Company at that time, December 13, 1940?

A. Either Mr. Stikeman or Mr. Rickley asked me to go down there so that we could be together. He wanted to submit the proposition to the two of us, trying to get the two of us to take on his products.

Q. Do you remember who told you that?

A. Who told me that he wanted to submit the proposition together?

Q. Yes. Was that a telephone conversation?

A. I can't say. Rickley had been talking to us in this same way off and on for probably six months, and this is the first time that a real concrete offer ever came out of it. I had been down to Stikeman's office talking to Rickley probably three or four different times prior to that, and at one of which times he brought his—I believe his vice president from Cleveland—over to see us; probably six months prior to this time.

Q. Was Mr. Rickley the only representative of the National Refining Company present at that conversation on December 13?

1911 A. December 10th.

Q. Well, I think you said it was December 13.

A. December 13, that's right. Yes, he was.

Q. In your opinion was the offer which you described as having been made on that date a bona fide offer by the National Refining Company?

A. I believe it was.

Q. Was anything said by anyone at that conversation as to why the offer was made to you and Mr. Stikeman at the same time, or why Mr. Rickley wanted you both together at the time it was made?

A. The National Refining Company had been soliciting Stikeman and Wayne Oil Company off and on for a period of several months, and I would say—I can't say that anybody said as to why—but that must be the reason why is because they wanted to get the two outfits together to take on their line. Naturally, because the two concerns together would afford a distribution over Detroit that would warrant them coming in here and spending the money advertising to put it over.

Q. Was it a joint offer? In other words, was the offer made upon such terms that it wasn't open to you to accept unless Mr. Stikeman did also, or was not open to him unless you also accepted?

Mr. Abbott: I object to that upon the ground that we are entitled to know what the conversation was. He 1912 is asking the witness as to his conclusion from the conversation.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This is a cross-examination.

Mr. Abbott: That doesn't avoid the effect of it, which is to ask him what his conclusions were. He asked me to supply the conversation. I think I have the same right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think you have supplied the conversation, and he is trying to get the results.

A. I have to go back to that question, I am afraid.

Mr. Abbott: I understand the objection is overruled?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is right.

Mr. Austin: Read the question, please.

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

A. The whole thing was verbal, and there wasn't anything that definite about it, but I am sure that Mr. Stikeman understood it exactly the way I did, which was that it was a joint offer.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. You referred, Mr. Ledbetter, to the fact that in 1935 you leased a service station property from the Highland Oil Company?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. How long did you lease that property?

A. I think it was about seven or eight months.

Q. Did you continue to lease it after you began to 1913 purchase Standard Oil Gasoline on a tank car basis?

A. I believe for probably a month or two, that is my present idea about it.

Q. During the term and period of that lease did you operate the station yourself or did you sub-lease it?

A. I sub-leased it.

Q. Well, didn't you state that you purchased gasoline from the Highland Oil Company that was sold at that station?

A. I purchased the gasoline or guaranteed the account of the dealer, I don't remember which, or rather I believe that the contract for the purchase of gasoline was in the name of Wayne Oil Company; and my present idea is that I resold it to the dealer at my cost, which is the way that I handled all of my operations from about 1933 up to 1935. They were all sub-leased on a profit sharing lease.

Q. Well, will you explain that a little further. I understand you were operating retail stations up until the time you began to purchase by tank car from Standard Oil?

A. Well, that impression might easily be gained, but that is not the fact. I bought gasoline for a good many stations, you might say, and sold it to them at my cost, bought it for them because their credit wasn't as good as mine; those stations were all sub-leased by me to those dealers, and if they didn't have a credit standing sufficient to do business with the supplier, I furnished the credit. So 1914 the gasoline contracts frequently were in the name of the Wayne Oil Company.

Q. How many suppliers were you buying from at that time on that basis?

A. At that particular time I should say probably two or three different ones.

Q. Who else besides the Highland Oil Company?

A. Sun Oil Company, I think at that time.

Q. Standard?

A. Standard. Gulf.

Q. Was the gasoline so purchased delivered directly to the service station?

A. Yes, by the oil company, not by me.

Q. You stated that the Highland Oil Company was charging, I believe, a cent a gallon below the Standard Oil Company posted tank wagon price, during seven or eight months in 1935?

A. That is my recollection.

Q. Are you sure?

A. I am quite sure that I got a concession of something like a cent a gallon. It might have been in the form of rent from the Highland Oil Corporation partly, and partly in the price of gas. But it runs in my mind quite distinctly that the total concession was about a cent a gallon.

Q. Did you obtain that same concession from any other supplier at that time?

1915 A. No.

Q. And did I understand you to say that that was over a period of only seven or eight months that you got it from Highland?

A. I think that's right. I think it was the early part of 1935. And I think in September, 1935, I gave it back to them.

Q. You mean you terminated your lease?

A. Yes; month to month lease.

Q. So that you didn't sell any gasoline at that station after September, 1935?

A. That's about the time.

Q. Either at the station or to the operator of the station?

A. That's right, that is about the date. Now, understand, I am not making that date definite.

Q. Why did you give that lease up?

A. They cut out the concession they were giving me.

Q. Why wasn't it still as profitable a lease as any of your other leases—or was it?

A. It would have been if it was pumping the gallonage that some of the others were. But it wasn't. It was a very poor producer as a station. It wasn't making enough for the man that was running it to make a decent living out of it. And shortly thereafter I got the man after I terminated my lease, I got him and leased him another sta-
1916 tion that I had where I had Gulf.

Q. Where what had Gulf?

A. The station; where we had Gulf Gasoline.

Q. After you leased it to him, you sold him Standard Oil though, didn't you?

A. No, I never did sell this man Standard.

Q. Well, have you dealt as a jobber in other gasolines than Standard?

A. No. Only as a retailer.

Q. Well, in a case like—

A. I would say after 1933 at the time I leased all of these stations out, sub-leased all of these stations, leased on these profit sharing leases, I wasn't even a retailer. I was just a landlord, as I figure it.

Q. This is in '35 after you became a tank car buyer from Standard Oil?

A. Yes.

Q. That you gave up that lease with the Highland Oil Company?

A. I believe that is true.

Q. Now, you say after that you leased the same operator another property where he sold Gulf Gasoline?

A. That's right.

Q. And where did you get the Gulf Gasoline?

A. From Gulf.

Q. Are there any other stations that you are the 1917 lessor of to which you do not supply gasoline?

A. Not at the present time.

Q. Did the Highland Oil Company at the time we were speaking of, while you had that lease, offer to make you the same concessions to any other properties which you operated?

A. I can't recall that they did.

Q. Then, if I understand you correctly, Mr. Ledbetter, at the time that you obtained your tank car arrangement with the Standard Oil Company in 1935 and started selling gasoline to retail dealers, you were not operating any retail stations yourself?

A. No. I don't think—

Q. I mean just prior to that time, within a month previously, we will say.

A. I don't believe I operated any retail stations between sometime in 1933 and September 8, 1939. In fact, I know I didn't.

Q. Yesterday, Mr. Ledbetter, you gave some gallonage figures, I believe the total gallonage of your business firm—was it 1937 to 1940?

A. I believe it was '36.

Q. Where did you obtain those figures?

A. Those are Standard Oil's figures covering the gallons their records show they sold me.

Q. Where did you get them?

1918 A. From Standard Oil.

Q. When?

A. I think it was yesterday when it was handed to me. Although I had seen them before.

Q. Well, did you check them with your own figures?

A. I did.

Q. And are they correct?

A. They are correct, I believe, insofar as what they purport to represent. They are approximately the same as the figures I have on my books as to our purchases.

Q. Why did you use the figures that you got from Standard Oil Company instead of the figures from your own books?

A. Because Standard Oil Company handed me the exhibit and asked me questions about it, I guess.

Q. Now, if they just handed you those figures yesterday, how did you have any opportunity to check them?

A. I told you I had seen them before and checked them.

Q. Well, now, with regard to the Commission's Exhibits 6, to 17 inclusive, I believe—anyway, there are the reports from the Secretary of State's office—did the gallonage figures that you gave, do they correspond with the figures in the Secretary of State's reports?

A. You mean the gallonage figures I gave today?

Q. Yesterday.

1919 A. No, those figures I gave yesterday were Standard Oil's figures.

Q. Well, how about the figures you gave today?

A. These are sales, my sales figures.

Q. And what are the figures in the Secretary of State's reports?

A. Those are my purchase figures.

Q. The figures that you gave yesterday, the figures Standard Oil supplied you with, are those purchase sales?

A. Those are Standard Oil's sales figures to me.

Q. That is the same thing as your purchase?

A. No, it might not be exactly the same. They could be a little different, because—do you want me to explain why?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know they are different, but I would say that they might be for this reason; I think Standard Oil takes its figures as of the date of shipment to us. We make our figures as of the date the gasoline goes into our storage tanks.

Q. What do they charge you for?

A. What do they charge me for?

Q. Yes.

A. They charge me according to their figures, and that is what I pay for. But their figures will differ from 1920 the Secretary of State's figures very likely in that small way, that the Secretary of State's figures are taken from my figures which are based on the day the gasoline goes into our storage tanks, when we unload it, then we figure we have it, and we start to account for it to the State. Their figures I believe date from the time they ship it to me. Over the course of the year the total should be just about the same.

Q. Did Standard Oil Company furnish you with any other figures yesterday?

A. I don't recall any right now.

Q. Have you ever compared your gallonage figures—strike that.

Do you have any knowledge of the amount of gasoline sold by the three other Standard Oil jobbers in Detroit, other than the figures contained in the reports of the Secretary of State?

A. No, I don't. That is the only source that I have.

Q. Have you ever compared your gallonage figures as shown by those reports with the gallonage figures of other Standard Oil jobbers?

Mr. Abbott: I object to that upon the ground it is wholly immaterial.

What do you claim for it, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: I am not quite sure whether Mr. Ledbetter yesterday gave any testimony regarding any other gallonage than his own. It seems to me he did give some.

1921 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection is overruled. You may answer.

A. Yes, everytime I get one of those reports I scrutinize it pretty carefully to see what my competitors are doing. I do compare them.

Mr. Abbott: Are you referring now to the State reports that were introduced in evidence?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: There are three columns there. Which one are you referring to? A, B, or C?

Mr. Austin: I asked him about the total gallonage. Whatever column that is shown in.

1922 Mr. Abbott: Well, here is one of them. Off the record, Mr. Examiner?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Which column do you understand shows your total sales for a given month?

A. That doesn't represent my total sales, that report, that represents my purchases.

Mr. Abbott: I think you better identify what you mean by "that," and also your question is a little bit indefinite.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. From the Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Kindly connect that up, please.

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Has the paper been marked for identification?

Mr. Austin: They are in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If it is in evidence, refer to the exhibit, please.

Mr. Austin: Well, I did a little while ago. It
1923 is Commission's Exhibits 6 to 17, inclusive.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. And I ask you, Mr. Ledbetter, which column in those exhibits shows your total purchases from the Standard Oil Company, or purports so to show?

A. May I see the exhibit?

(Mr. Austin handed the witness a paper.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Read the question, please.

(The last question was read.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Referring to—

Mr. Austin: Commission's Exhibits 6 to 17, inclusive, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: All right.

A. Generally speaking Columns A and C added together, represent the purchases from Standard Oil.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, have you any arrangements with any of your lessees or service station operators now similar to the ones you described a moment ago with the man who sold the Gulf Gasoline or the one who sold the Hispeed?

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment, now, if the Court please.
That is not within the issues raised on the direct 1924 examination of the witness, and unless you want to make him your witness, I object to it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In other words, your claim is that it is not proper cross-examination?

Mr. Abbott: That's right.

Mr. Austin: I think it may be proper cross-examination on the question of costs and the questions which were asked on direct about the prices that he sells at.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The question was read.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The present period isn't embraced in the Complaint, is it? If you will confine that to the period covered by the Complaint—

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well, did you, in 1940, have any such arrangement?

Mr. Abbott: I object to it on the same ground and also on the ground that it assumes a fact not in evidence, namely, that there was an arrangement with the man who was at the Gulf station. The only testimony is with reference to the Hi Speed.

Mr. Austin: He testified as to both of them. He had a method of purchasing gas for them and it was redelivered.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

1925 A. Well, I have arrangements similar in this respect, that several of my stations are subleased, but none of them obtain gasoline from anyone except the Wayne Oil Company as supplier.

Q. Has that been true ever since you became a tank car buyer?

A. No, I don't think that has been true except, as I say, some time in 1938.

Q. Have you, during 1937, 1938, 1939, or 1940 had any arrangement or has there been any arrangement or agreement between you and any of the operators of the service stations supplied by the Wayne Oil Company other than a seller-purchaser relation? In other words, the Wayne Oil Company, as I understand it from you, sells gas to a service station operator?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, in all cases are they independent operators or do they, any of them, have any agreement with you or with the Wayne Oil Company as to profit-sharing or other disposition of the proceeds of the station?

A. Nothing except the company-operated stations.

Q. In those cases, the operator is an employee of the company, isn't he?

A. That's right. Now, I believe—I think I ought to try to explain this, I think it was some time in 1938 that I 1926 disposed of the last competitive brand station that I had any interest in.

Q. By "competitive brand" you mean some brand other than Standard?

A. That's right. And that particular station, I didn't dispose of the station. I disposed of the brand and took it over myself and supplied it.

Q. Well, Mr. Ledbetter, I just want to clear up that question of your dealing with your service station operators. I believe that since 1939 you found it necessary to operate some of those stations?

A. I did.

Q. And didn't you state the reason was that the stations were not making good or the operator was failing?

A. They were going broke.

Q. Did you ever have a case where that situation seemed to be existing or in danger of existing; ever make any concession to the service station operator in the nature of rent concession or rebate or otherwise?

A. There have been cases where the rent has been changed somewhat, but nothing on merchandise.

Q. Well, will you state just what has been done in individual cases as to rent?

A. Oh, I don't know that I could remember. You are referring to stations that have been or are now oper-1927 ated by the Wayne Oil Company? Is that part of your question?

Q. No. Stations that were leased from the Wayne Oil Company. I am asking you whether you ever waived the rent or made concessions or rent or other concessions to the operators.

A. Yes, I can recall one station in particular at Grand River and Birwood where my rent, the rent that I had to pay for the station under the lease, I had with the property owner, went up each year? I had it over the period of the price war. I remembered that I did not increase the rent to the tenant, and by the time the lease was up, he was broke and out of there, and I was paying the full rent on a closed station. My rent kept going up. His didn't.

Q. Have there been any cases where the service station operator has failed to pay his rent to the Wayne Oil Company?

A. Yes, along with his bills for merchandise.

Q. Has any of that rent ever been waived?

A. No. It has been charged off; uncollectible; but not waived.

Q. Was the rent ever reduced to any service station operator after he was in default on any payments, either for rent or for merchandise?

A. I think it has, but I just don't recall any specific instances.

1928 Q. You don't remember any case?

A. It runs in my mind that one of the stations that I operate at the present time, and I would have to check my records to see if this was true—which I took over because it became insolvent, and largely because of high rent and I was on the lease, that I made reductions during price wars on his rent.

Mr. Abbott: You are asking him with reference to stations which were operated by dealers, aren't you?

Mr. Austin: That's right.

The Witness: He was a dealer at that time. I wouldn't be too sure that that is true. I would have to look at the records.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. In your opinion, didn't that have the same effect as if you had reduced the price of gasoline and retaining the rent at the same price?

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment. I object to the question on the ground it is argumentative; as to whether it had the same effect.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

A. I don't think so.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Will you explain that answer?

1929 A. Yes, I can. The rent at that particular station was out of all reason, compared to the rents that my other stations were paying. I mean the man who got hooked on that lease was me, and I felt that I should take some of the gaff which I did, if it is true that I did reduce the rent at that station during the time that that man was a dealer. I am not so sure, but I think I did.

Mr. Abbott: That answer indicates to me that it is going to be necessary for Mr. Ledbetter to verify his office records on that, and it will necessitate his coming back here and stating what, definitely, is the fact. I just say that, because I thought, possibly, we could get through with him tonight. You wish to verify that from your office records, don't you, Mr. Ledbetter?

The Witness: Not to the extent of making another trip back here, if it is possible to avoid it.

Mr. Austin: I am satisfied with the witness' answer. Of course, I can't govern what the Respondents want to do, but I understand his answer to be that this rent was a high rent, and after he reduced it it was still as high as an average rent for a station doing average gallonage.

The Witness: And still the man went broke, after it was done. I am not saying it was done. I just have an impression it was.

1930 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The whole answer is pivoted upon an "if". If it is satisfactory to you, let us go on.

The Witness: I will say this much: that I never gave any reductions in rent that could ever have been construed by my other dealers as any concession in price, because they all know each other's business. It wouldn't be possible, in my outfit, to get away with that.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I don't doubt the sincerity of your answer at all, in making that statement, Mr. Ledbetter, but that is just a matter of your opinion, isn't it?

A. No. They have a very tight little association of their own, incorporated, and officers that really take their job seriously.

Q. To get back to the facts. Has there ever been a case where any rent for a service station was due the Wayne Oil Company, and where that rent had become due, that the payment of it was waived?

A. Never. Never. I want to qualify that to this extent; uncollectible rent has been charged off if it wasn't possible to collect it. I have charged off, as a bad debt, and if you get by the Federal Government with that, you are O. K., too.

Q. When any rent has been charged off as a bad 1931 debt was the man who owed you the rent still in business?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was he still operating the service station?

A. The one I have in mind I have never been able to find him since, and neither have the officers! He not only got away with the rent, but $500 worth of tires.

Q. Have you ever charged off rent as a bad debt where the debtor was operating a gasoline station supplied by the Wayne Oil Company?

A. No, never.

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, you have here for 1940, "Bad Debts, $2250."

A. Right.

Q. Can you state what those are comprised of?

A. Uncollectible debts, is about all I can tell you about them right at this minute.

Q. Do your know what kind of debts they were, or who owed them?

A. Yes. Dealers.

Q. What for?

A. Merchandise; probably some rent.

Q. But you have no record of it here?

A. I haven't got it with me, no.

Q. You read some figures into the record here regarding your gallonage and receipts, I believe, for gaso-
1932 line and operating costs. How were those figures prepared? Were they taken right from your books, Mr. Ledbetter?

A. They were.

Q. That is, was there any computation, or are they figures which actually appear on your books?

A. These are figures from our books.

Q. And who prepared the statement that you have given?

A. I did the most of it personally, with the help of my bookkeeper.

Q. Did anyone connected with the Standard Oil Company suggest to you the various items of operating costs which should be itemized and stated?

A. No.

Q. How did you set up your statement of operating cost that you read into the record; the various items, such as advertising, telephone, insurance, depreciation, and so forth?

A. I took my income tax returns and I copied the expense items off of those. Then I checked with the bookkeeper. She turned to her general ledger as far back as it would go and verified it with me.

Q. Did you not testify yesterday, Mr. Ledbetter, regarding your opinion as to whether there is a saving in unit costs when larger quantities of gasoline are delivered?

That is, didn't you say it would cost less per gallon to deliver gasoline in 2000 gallon quantities than in quantities of, say, 300 gallons?

1933 A. I believe I did.

Q. Do you know how much less it would cost, for any particular amount?

A. No, not offhand, I don't.

Q. Have you ever made any cost analysis to attempt to determine that?

A. I don't believe anything that I have ever done on that line could be called a cost analysis.

Q. Is that statement just your conclusion based upon your general business experience; that larger deliveries would cost less per gallon?

A. It wasn't really what you could call a conclusion; just one of the things that anybody in business knows.

Q. All right. I am not disputing it, except that I wanted to know whether you could state the difference in cost per gallon?

A. No, I couldn't.

Q. As between making deliveries in certain average quantities?

A. I believe I could figure it from our records; even though we don't make the big deliveries. I think I could come pretty close to it, but I don't know offhand what the difference is.

Q. But you are quite positive there would be a difference; is that right?

1934 A. I am sure there would be a difference.

Q. How many brands of gasoline does the Wayne Oil Company sell? I mean by that, brands of Standard Oil gasoline?

A. Two.

Q. Do you deal in any other brands than the Solite, Ethyl, and Red Crown?

A. No.

Q. No Ford Benzol or any other brand?

A. My dealers do, but I don't.

Q. And you don't sell any Stanolind?

A. No.

Q. What proportion of your sales are Red Crown and what proportion Ethyl?

A. Without looking at my records, I would guess at it, but I would say it was about 12 to 15% Ethyl; maybe not over 10%. It is small.

Q. Do some dealers order Ethyl and other dealers order Red Crown, without ordering both at the same time?

A. Once in a while. That is, once in a while for Ethyl, only. Quite a few of them order Red Crown only.

Q. Are the deliveries of Red Crown in larger amounts, larger quantities than the deliveries of Ethyl?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. I mean single deliveries to a station?

1935 A. Nearly always, yes.

Q. How is that handled? Do you have separate trucks for Ethyl, or do you have separate compartments?

A. We have eparate compartments on ths same trucks.

Q. Is it not true, then, based upon the same reasons which prompted you to say that it costs more to deliver in small quantities than in large quantities, that it costs you less per gallon to deliver Red Crown gasoline than it does to deliver Ethyl gasoline?

A. Why, I doubt if you would find any difference in my operation between the delivery of the two.

Q. Well, you deliver Red Crown ~~in~~ larger quantities than you deliver Ethyl, you said.

A. Well, the question as to delivery, originally, was as to total quantities delivered of gasoline.

Q. All right, now; isn't it true that you deliver frequently a thousand gallons or more of Red Crown to your station whereas your average for Ethyl would run much smaller than your average for Red Crown?

A. We very rarely make a run with Ethyl alone.

Q. Isn't the handling of the gasoline a considerable item in the delivery of it?

A. In the delivery of it? The handling?

Q. Yes; transferring it to the truck and out of the truck again, when it gets to the station?

1936 A. Will you state that question again?

Q. Well, the operation of handling the gasoline, which involves, as I understand, a certain amount of leakage, evaporation, and so forth; don't such handling costs increase per gallon when you make deliveries in small quantities?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He is referring to loading and unloading; are you not?

Mr. Austin: Yes. Including evaporation and leakage which, I understand, are things that occur whenever you transfer gasoline.

A. I don't think there is any doubt that handling costs would go up with smaller quantities, when smaller quantities are handled, and they go down when larger quantities are handled.

1937 Q. Well, I want to know whether it is your opinion that your cost per gallon of delivering Red Crown is greater or less or the same as your cost of delivering Ethyl?

A. Scientifically it might be slightly costlier. I think they are about the same, in my operation.

Q. Can you explain why it costs no more to deliver Ethyl than it does cost you to deliver Red Crown?

A. Ordinarily Ethyl is delivered at the same time Red Crown is delivered, in the same load; very rarely does Ethyl ever go out by itself. And it seems to me that in a case like that, Ethyl weighing the same as Red Crown, which I presume it does—in fact, I know it does—I can't see any difference in the cost of handling a truck load of gasoline part of which is Ethyl and part of which is Red Crown, or all one or the other.

Q. Well, aren't the two gasolines handled separately both at your bulk plant and at the service station? That is, doesn't it take one operation to empty the Red Crown into one tank and another operation to empty the Ethyl into another tank?

A. It takes an operation in loading and unloading to handle a compartment separately. Whether or not it has got Red Crown or Ethyl in it doesn't make any difference, so far as the loading or unloading is concerned, so far as I can see now.

Q. Let me ask you this: Suppose you have two 1938 compartments in a truck—I don't know how many you have—

A. You generally have four?

Q. Supposing you have—take two compartments, and suppose you have Red Crown in both of those compartments—well, before I go ahead with that, tell me a little more about the compartments on the truck. What size are they?

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, I fail to see the materiality of this. I would like to have some clearing up on that if we are going to keep on this track.

Mr. Austin: Because you have costs here covering all his gasoline, how much it cost a gallon to deliver it. I want to find out whether it is the same for both or whether it should be split up.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection overruled, if there is an objection. The witness may answer.

A. The compartments run from 250 gallons up to 400 or close to it, in my trucks. Does that answer your question?

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Yes. Well, if I understand you correctly, tell me if I don't, does it cost you just as much to deliver 600 gallons of gasoline by putting them into two compartments and taking them out of those two compartments, say 400 and 250, putting them into two separate tanks, would that cost be the same or greater than the cost of delivering per gallon of just delivering the same 1939 amount of gallonage in one compartment into one tank?

A. Well, theoretically that would be a slightly increased cost, you probably would have to have a microscope to see it. Actually in my operation I doubt if it could be detected, the way I understand your question.

Q. Well, when does—in your opinion—does the difference begin? If you say that your deliveries of Ethyl cost about the same as the deliveries of Red Crown, is that because of the size of your deliveries—I am trying to find out your distinction between your situation and the situation you testified to a moment ago when you said that the large deliveries would clearly cost less per gallon?

A. Well, I believe that question was embodying a 2000 gallon tank or something delivery, or some such example?

Q. Yes, I think it was.

A. Well, that is quite different from mine, where my deliveries average probably 500 gallons.

Well, I can see that if I could deliver 2000 gallons at a delivery, instead of an average of 500, then I undoubtedly could save quite a little money.

But as between the delivery of Ethyl and Red Crown in my operation, except insofar as we have to make a run with Ethyl only in a small compartment, I don't see any particular difference in the delivery cost or handling cost. There might be a slight one, but I don't see it offhand.

1940 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any difference in the bulk or weight?

The Witness: Bulk and weight are both exactly the same.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is what I assumed.

The Witness: They are, the same.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, has the Wayne Oil Company ever paid any dividends?

A. No.

Q. Do you know whether—I am sure you know—have you paid an income tax? Federal income tax during the past four years?

Mr. Abbott: When you say "you", you mean the corporation?

Mr. Austin: The Wayne Oil Company.

A. Yes. You can ask me that too.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Can you state the net profit shown upon the income tax returns of the company during the past four years?

A. Yes, I believe I can.

1937, $709.80.

1938, $521.85.

Now, I can't answer your question exact either, I don't believe. Maybe I have that for the next two years, I will see if I have.

1941 (Witness referring to papers.)

Your question is what my income tax report showed, or what I paid?

By Mr. Austin:

Q. What your income tax report showed for net upon which you paid your tax.

Mr. Abbott: You mean oil company?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Were the figures given for '37 or '38 the amount you paid or the amount of your net?

The Witness: That is the amount of the net income that I paid income tax on. I would have to look at the report of the other two years to give you the exact answer to your question.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. That is pretty recent, can't you give it to us approximately?

A. I can tell you what the sum of the two years would be, because I made a mistake in 1939 and adjusted it for 1940. And I don't know what the income tax figures will show. If you get what I mean.

Q. You mean you can give me the total for the two years?

A. Yes.

Q. What was that?

1942 A. $2334.35, plus $1431.90. I think that is it.

I would like to have the privilege of checking that and correcting it if it isn't right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may do so.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Now, Mr. Ledbetter, with respect to the operating costs which you testified to this afternoon I believe it was, of the Wayne Oil Company, for the years '38, '39, and '40—you didn't testify to '37, did you?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Suppose that instead of the way you do business now, let's assume that during those three years all of the service stations supplied by the Wayne Oil Company had been operated by the Wayne Oil Company? Do you understand that?

A. The last three years?

Q. Yes. Just assuming for the purpose of this question that you were operating all of your stations. In other words, you were selling gasoline only at retail, but supplying the stations yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. (Continuing) In the same manner that you now supply them, or did supply them during that period. Are there any costs which you stated in making your itemization of operating costs, which you would not have had under that system of operation?

1943 Mr. Abbott: Just a moment. I object to that question upon the ground that it is purely hypothetical, assuming the facts not in evidence, and it is therefore irrelevant, and inadmissible.

1944 Mr. Austin: If your Honor please—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question, please.

(The entire question was read.)

Mr. Abbott: That is purely hypothetical. He is asking him to assume now whether he would have had those costs if he operated the stations himself. I submit that the question is not proper, and purely hypothetical.

Mr. Austin: I would like to make it clear what I mean. The witness now operates or has for a year or two operated at least three retail stations, maybe it is two at the present time. I am asking him whether in his operating costs he included costs which are connected and arise from the wholesale operation.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. In other words, stations to which you sell, but which expenses would not exist if all of the stations were operated by Wayne Oil Company?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you understand the question?

The Witness: I don't believe I do. I am sorry.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well, I will try again. Do you know what costs you have in the operation of these two stations that 1945 you are now operating?

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment. I objected to the question, and I don't think that there has been any ruling upon the objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness couldn't answer it. It was unnecessary to rule on it.

Mr. Abbott: I think regardless of that the objection should be ruled upon.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If the witness understood the question the Examiner would have permitted him to have answered.

The Witness: Now, did I answer your last question? What was it?

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I will say it over to save time. Do you understand whether you have any differences in costs as to the stations which you operate, and as to the stations to whom you sell?

A. Let me explain that, and I think I can clear you up. We probably conduct our bookkeeping with reference to those company-operated stations a little differently from what anybody else would do it, or from what you think we would do it. We do it this way: so far as our books are concerned, we treat those stations exactly the same as any other dealer, running a ledger account, customers' account with them, the same as we would any other 1946 dealer; charging every expense to them that they should bear, such as rent, merchandise; all other things that we furnish for them, that they should pay us for. We treat them just exactly the same as any other dealer.

Q. Well—

A. I haven't finished.

Q. That is sufficient.

Mr. Abbott: He wants to finish.

Mr. Austin: I want to interrupt.

Mr. Abbott: I submit he should be permitted to finish.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness should be permitted to finish.

Mr. Austin: I am not going to pursue it.

Mr. Abbott: I submit he should be allowed to finish.

Mr. Austin: I don't object to it. I just want to save time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there anything further?

The Witness: I am not anxious to pursue it. I just wanted to clear up Mr. Austin.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Thank you. I wanted to clear up you, because I know you don't understand what I am driving at.

1947 A. Apparently I don't, because I don't quite get it.

Q. Let me ask you about the particular item such as bad debts, which is included in the items of costs.

A. Yes.

Q. If you were operating all of these service stations yourself, could there be any item of bad debts?

Mr. Abbott: I object to that on the ground that it is purely hypothetical.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection overruled.

A. Could there be an item of bad debts if I was operating these stations myself?

Q. Aren't all of these bad debts, bad debts to dealers to whom you sell?

A. I believe they are.

Q. Then, if you weren't selling to any dealers, that item would not be there, would it?

A. Why, sure it would be there, because I would be selling the public instead of the dealers, and they are just as crooked.

Q. Well, correct, Mr. Ledbetter, but you wouldn't have—hese particular bad debt items would not be on your books ·you had not sold to any dealers during that period, ould it?

A. No, but they would be there just the same in somebody else's name.

948 Q. But that would be bad debts, then, which resulted from the sale of gasoline at retail?

A. That's right. Just as bad.

Q. Isn't this item of bad debts one which relates only o the wholesale end of your business and not to the operaion of your retail stations?

A. I believe it is. I believe under our system that is he way it would be.

Q. I forgot to ask you about the operation of your etail stations.

Now, how about the costs of operating those stations, re they included in this statement of operating costs?

A. Yes. But I can tell you just what the cost was, xactly.

Q. Well, does this statement of operating costs include he salaries paid to the operators of the retail service tation?

A. Indirectly. Now, I will—I started to try to tell you ow I did it. I believe you should have let me finish it.

Q. Well, go ahead. Now we are talking about somehing else.

A. All right. Now, here is how we do it, and you have n accountant there, and I believe he will be able to tell ne if we are wrong about it.

We treat these company-owned stations exactly as 1949 any other dealer, so far as our bookkeeping is concerned, and anything that they owe us at the end of he year unpaid is charged off, and that is the loss that hey can't pay out of their assets and keep running. So hey are charged with gasoline at exactly the same price s any other dealer, and all other merchandise and rent and verything, just the same, you would never know they vere company-owned to look at our books. But what they ose is tallied up at the end of the year and we know xactly what the whole bunch of them lose altogether at he end of the year, we know what it costs us, and I have hose figures here for the two years.

Q. Suppose they make money.

A. I beg your pardon?

Q. Suppose they show a profit.

A. That would be fine. They haven't done it yet, quite.

Q. Haven't any of them shown a profit?

A. Yes, but the losses have offset the profits.

Q. Where are those losses reflected in this statement that you put in?

A. I believe—that is three years, isn't it?

Q. Yes.

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

A. Well, there wasn't any in '38, of course; we didn't have any such stations.

1950 In '39 I believe it is reflected in miscellaneous expense; and in 1940 it is shown as a separate item, station expense.

Mr. Abbott: Will you state the amount of each one of those?

The Witness: 1939—I can't give you the—yes, I can give you the exact amount of loss on these stations.

For 1939 it was $726.60.

Mr. Abbott: What is 1940?

The Witness: $32.43.

Did you get it, Mr. Austin?

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I didn't get the last statement, but I understood you were stating the amount of it.

A. The amount of loss for 1940 shown as station expense.

1951 Q. I got that, yes.

A. $32.43.

Q. In every case, Mr. Ledbetter, did you offset the receipts of those stations against their cost of operation?

A. Well, sure, that is necessarily done.

Q. Well, I mean it isn't necessarily done, because you might treat all the expenses of those station operations to the Wayne Oil Company, and then you might add the receipts of those stations to your receipts from stations to whom you sell gasoline at wholesale. But as I understand you, you offset—you treat that station as a separate enterprise, and only account, for the purposes at least of these figures, for a net profit or a net loss, and in this case a net loss?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is that correct?

A. No; I don't think you understand it, or I don't understand you. We have an account on our general ledger nat covers station operation, and the gain or loss of these tations goes into that account, and of course the gains ffset the losses, and vice versa; at the end of the year the alance, whether it is gain or loss is shown in this statement here. Is that clear to you?

Q. I think it is clear to me. But I want to be sure ... her any expense, operating cost incurred by Wayne il Company in operated stations as such, is included in ny of these figures?

A. Yes, there is $726. in 1939 that strictly belongs 952 to the retail operations; that is loss in those figures.

There is $32.43 in 1940; that is strictly a retail operating loss.

Q. That is a net figure, though, rather than any paricular operating cost, isn't it? It is a net result?

A. It is a net lump result of the operation of all the tations for the entire year, offsetting gains against losses nd so forth, right down the line; that is the net result.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Gentlemen, it is now 5:30 . m., and it is perfectly obvious this examination cannot e finished this afternoon.

Mr. Austin: I guess we better come back. At the rate his is going, your Honor, I may be—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You mean come back tomorrow morning?

Mr. Austin: Yes, tomorrow morning.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now at 5:30 p. m. the hearng stands adjourned to be reconvened in room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, at 10:00 a. m. Eastern Standard Time, April 25, 1941.

(Whereupon, at 5:30 p. m., April 24, 1941, the hearing n the above-entitled matter was adjourned, to reconvene at 10:00 a. m., April 25, 1941.)

PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order. This is a reconvening at 10 A. M. Eastern Standard Time, April 25, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, of Docket No. 4389, in the case entitled In re: Standard Oil Company. The last hearing was held in Detroit, Michigan, April 24, 1941.

The Reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

You may proceed.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Ledbetter.

ELMER E. LEDBETTER resumed the stand, and having been heretofore duly sworn, testified further as follows:

Cross-Examination by Mr. Austin (Continued).

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, yesterday you read into the record a statement of operating costs of the Wayne Oil Company for the years 1938, 1939, and 1940. The first item on that list and the largest is entitled "Salaries and Wages."

You yesterday told us what your salary or drawing account had been. What else is included in that salaries and 1955 wages item?

A. All salaries and wages paid by the company.

Q. To whom?

A. To employees.

Q. What sort of employees?

A. All sorts.

Q. Can't you tell us some of them; the principal types, as to salaries paid?

A. Yes; office help, stock room help, and delivery help.

Q. How about truck drivers?

A. That's delivery help.

Q. I see. How about salesmen?

A. Any commissions paid salesmen would be in that.

Q. Do you employ salesmen?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the distinction between commissions and salary, as to salesmen?

A. There isn't any in our records. We class commissions as salaries and wages.

Q. When you referred to commissions just now, were you referring to salesmen's compensation?

A. Yes.

Q. That is, do you pay salesmen anything else besides a commission, or is it just a matter of terminology? Or, you better just tell me how you treat your salesmen 1956 and go into it.

A. At the present time I have one salesman on part time, and he gets a commission for whatever work he does, a sales commission. Does that answer your question?

Q. What is that commission based upon?

A. Based upon his sales.

Q. What does he sell?

A. He sells motor oil, anti-freeze, spark plugs, tires, and if he secures a dealer account, I give him a commission for that. I think that about covers the subject.

Q. Is he being paid on the basis of what he sells or is he paid for the time he spends?

A. He is paid only on the basis of what he sells.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Does the same practice obtain during the last four or five years?

The Witness: During such portion of that time as I had a salesman at all, that is about the way it has been handled throughout.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. What selling expenses did you have in 1938? I am saying now "selling expenses," which is a broader term than merely a reference to salesmen.

A. Selling expenses, I don't believe I could tell you offhand what selling expenses I had.

Q. Did you have any such expenses?

1957 A. Surely.

Q. And where are they included on this list of operating expenses?

A. I couldn't tell you where, offhand, where you would find them in those expenses, because we don't subdivide our accounting into selling expense.

Mr. Austin: Well, see, your Honor, if we had a list here the witness could refer to it. But he must have the list he read from yesterday.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Haven't you got that list with you?

A. I have.

Q. Well, will you refer to that, and perhaps you can answer the question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Abbott: I will say this, Mr. Austin, if it will assist you any, I would be perfectly willing to have this list in the record.

Mr. Austin: I have a pencil copy. If he has something to refer to, let him go ahead.

Mr. Abbott: All right.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I want to know, Mr. Ledbetter, whether in the 1958 item of salaries and wages for 1938 there is any selling expense or salesmen's commissions or salaries?

A. For 1938?

Q. Yes. The figure, I think, is eighteen thousand and some dollars, is it not?

A. Yes. That's the figure. There might be. I couldn't tell you without making a research.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Have you a memorandum portraying the items that enter into each one of the months?

The Witness: I have none here. That's in our books, and that's quite a complicated process, digging it out. It would be my present idea that during the years that I had any selling expense in the way of salesmen—and I don't believe I had any such in 1938, though I wouldn't be sure—I might have paid a commission or so on a new dealer obtained—

By Mr. Austin:

Q. They even have new dealers in Detroit, do they?

A. They are rare birds in Detroit, as far as my company is concerned You are asking me for something that is difficult to answer without studying it out and looking over my books. I don't think I had a salesman, as such, in the year 1938.

Q. What selling expense, if any, did you have in 1938? I am not asking you now for dollars, but to describe it.

1959 A. Well, I would say that a great deal of my salaries could be properly allocated to selling; a great deal of it, for one thing, because it is the selling proposition that I have been able to do since I started this business that has really resulted in the building of the business and holding it intact through the years through which we have gone, which have been very difficult years.

Q. Does that selling apply to the various products that you named awhile ago, as well as gasoline, or does it apply to gasoline?

A. It applies, naturally, to all of them, but I would say the biggest share of it applies to gasoline because that is really the meal ticket of my business.

Q. You are referring now to your own selling efforts?

A. That's right. It seems to me that all of these other subdivisions, nearly all of them, at least, could be charged with some of the selling expense, for instance, telephone, insurance—there is miscellaneous expense. I have an idea that there is quite a lot of things in there that could be properly allocated to selling expense, had we carried it on a subdivision in our accounting or tried to allocate our expenses to selling.

Q. I was going to come to that item of miscellaneous expense a little later, but I might ask you now: there is an item of $6,295.21 in 1938. Can you give me any 1960 break-down as to any specific items that go in there?

A. I could, but I cannot now. I could give you every item.

Q. Can't you tell me now the principal items, not in dollars, but in type of cost that is included there?

A. Only in this way; it includes every type of cost we have that is not classified in the subdivisions above. It is a catch-all for all of the expenses we had that are not actually segregated in these other items.

Q. Can you explain why that miscellaneous column drops down considerably in 1939 and then goes up—jumps up about $2700 or 50%, between 1939 and 1940? It would appear that there were items included in the miscellaneous expense column in 1940—rather, the miscellaneous expense item, that were not included in 1939.

1961 A. That probably is true. But I can't tell you definitely without investigating to see, which I haven't done. Wait a minute.

(There was a slight delay at this point.)

No, I couldn't tell you without investigating, which I would be glad to do if you want it.

Q. Well, I will determine that later. I may ask you to bring an itemized statement of your miscellaneous expenses here, because they are the second largest item on your entire list.

A. I will be glad to do it.

Q. We have been discussing selling expenses, Mr. Ledbetter. Was any of the selling expense included anywhere in your operating costs that you have stated? Was any of that expense in 1939 or 1940 incurred in connection with the sale of gasoline through the retail service stations which were operated by the Wayne Oil Company? I am referring to selling expense in this account.

A. I think I understand your question. Well, I think it was.

Q. What part of it was?

A. That I couldn't attempt to give you offhand.

Q. Well, what operations or services were in that connection?

A. Well, the way I kept books on these company owned and operated stations I think I gave them exactly the 1962 same kind of selling effort and expense that I did my regular dealers, for one thing.

Q. Well, you didn't have to sell to those retail operated stations, did you?

A. Why, certainly; the way I kept my books; that is the way my books showed.

Q. They were your stations, weren't they?

A. That's right.

Q. You didn't have to expend any sales effort to get them to buy gasoline or other supplies from the Wayne Oil Company, did you?

A. I guess I probably didn't understand your question. Because I can plainly see that I am not answering the thing you have in mind. Would you mind restating your question again.

Q. I assume that there is some selling effort in connection with the station itself, but I understood you yesterday that all expenses in connection with the station itself were offset against the returns from that station, and that there was a small net loss which was included here. So I am not talking about anything that is any selling expense in connection with marketing products which are sold at the retail stations. I am talking about, however, whether there is any selling expense included in the cost items of your wholesale business, which you stated in the record 1963 yesterday, which was incurred in connection with your retail operation. By that I mean everything connected with your retail station.

1964 A. I think the answer to that involves theoretical knowledge of accounting beyond me. But I think I can give you the elements so that you or your accountant could determine it.

Q. Do the best you can, Mr. Ledbetter, on that.

A. When you consider that so far as our company-operated stations are concerned, we treat them exactly as we do an independent dealer, charging to them everything that we would charge to that station if he was an independent dealer, and determine the net loss or gain of that operation as an independent dealer, and absorb the loss or the gain, whatever it is. But it seems to me like you could tell, or your accountant could tell, what part of my selling expense belongs to that retail operation. I just don't seem to be able to determine it.

Q. Well, do you know approximately what portion of what you call selling expense it involved in, we will say, pushing the sale of items, or what part of it is in connection with the sale of any items handled by the Wayne Oil Company, including gasoline, to the dealers who purchase from the Wayne Oil Company?

A. No, I don't. I can't tell you that.

Q. Well, is a major part of your selling expense directed in maintaining the business of your dealers, or keeping them in line and getting them to buy accessories, 1965 tires, and so forth? Do you work at that all the time?

A. I will tell you. Quite a large part of the selling expense of my business is devoted to keeping the business from shrinking or dying. During the past years. And also devoted to an effort to cause it to increase. How to get it any more definite than that, I don't know.

Q. Well, those efforts—

A. That is about all I do about the place.

Q. Those efforts are directed toward your dealer customers, are they not?

A. They are directed to every phase of activity that will keep the thing from dying on my hands, or possibly make it grow a little. It is so involved and so intricate and complex that I don't see how you could separate it. I wish I could help you more and maybe I could if I understood just exactly—if I were sure just exactly what information you wanted.

Q. I won't pursue that further except to ask you: You only have two classes of customers, don't you Mr. Ledbetter; one class being retail service station operators, and the other class being people who purchase at retail at the two stations which you operate?

A. That is substantially true, although I do have a little so-called commercial customer.

Q. You have a certain amount of commercial busi-
1966 ness. Is that very small?

A. Very small.

Q. Is that as much as 1% of your total volume in gasoline?

A. No, it isn't; about a half of 1%.

Q. Will you now, Mr. Ledbetter, turn to the item of depreciation. That in 1938, was $2,294; is that correct?

A. $2,494.

Q. $2,494.

A. Yes.

Q. And what is the figure for 1939?

A. $2,506.17.

Q. And in 1940, was it $2,702?

A. That's what it was until the income tax people came in and set me right.

Q. What did they do?

A. They said it was too much.

Q. What was the adjusted figure?

A. You are talking about 1940 now?

Q. 1940; that's right.

A. It was 1939 that they came in to me about it and I revamped my method of computing, after these figures were made. Now, then, what is the question?

Q. Give me what you believe to be the correct depreciation figure as computed by the method approved by the Income Tax authorities.

1967 A. For 1940?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't believe I can do it without looking at my books.

Q. You have no record of it here?

Mr. Abbott: We had better make a list of these things you want.

Mr. Austin: I don't know whether this will all be in the record. If the Examiner should happen to strike it out, I won't have to ask for anything more.

Mr. Abbott: I thought we might as well make a list of it as we go along, in case you do want it.

Mr. Austin: If I ask him for anything, I will have to know what I want to ask him for.

A. For the year 1940, I think I would have to look at the books. I don't have anything here that will help me.

Q. How about 1939? Was that changed, too?

A. Yes. I believe I have the Examiner's report and findings here (referring to documents). The depreciation allowed for 1939 by the Bureau of Internal Revenue was $2,149.26.

Q. Was the reduction for 1940 in approximately the same amount; that is, in percentage?

A. The reduction?

Q. Yes. Do you remember that?

A. 1940 hasn't been checked by the Bureau.

Q. You have changed the figures—

1968 A. I tried to make it so they would pass.

Q. I just wondered whether that resulted in about the same percentage of reduction from your previous figures, that resulted in 1939. If you don't know, all right.

A. I don't think I do know, offhand. I know I gave you some incorrect figures yesterday when you asked me for the net income reported for the years 1936 to 1940, inclusive. For the last two years, I gave you those figures wrong. I reserved the right to correct them, do you remember?

Q. Will you correct those now, while we think about it?

A. Yes. The net income reported by the Wayne Oil Company to the Bureau of Internal Revenue for 1939 was $529.24, and for 1940 was $854.01.

Q. Was the figure for 1938 correct as you gave it yesterday?

A. Yes.

Q. There has been no revision of that?

A. No, nor 1937 and 1936.

1969 Q. In your 1939 return were any other figures which you gave yesterday changed by the income tax reviewer?

A. Yes. That is, 1939?

Q. Yes.

A. In 1939 I unwittingly set up a reserve for bad debts, not knowing that the Bureau wouldn't allow it where you hadn't started out that way, of $1805.21, and they wouldn't allow it. I took that into consideration when I first attempted to determine the cost per gallon of selling gasoline.

Q. To determine what?

A. The cost per gallon of selling gasoline based on the net profit of the business and to the figure of $529.24, which I had recorded as net income to the Bureau I added this $1805.21. That was before I filed my 1940 report with the Bureau; is when I made that computation, and I think that's what's puzzling you about those figures.

Q. I don't know whether I understand you correctly now. The figure you gave a moment ago was $529.24.

A. That's the net income reported in my income tax report for 1939.

Q. You say you added this $1805. figure to that. That's what I didn't understand.

A. I think you were asking me questions from a table you had there showing the cost per gallon of handling 1970 gas based on net profit of the business where I reported a net profit for 1939 of $2334.35. That figure that I used there of $2334.35 was this $1805 which the income tax people wouldn't allow me to have in 1939 as an expense so, in order to give a true picture, or as nearly true as possible, I included that arbitrarily in my table showing he profit for 1939. Now I think that's what is puzzling ou.

Mr. Austin: May I have an adjournment for a moment?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will recess for five min- ites.

(A short recess was taken.)

971 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

3y Mr. Austin:

Q. How about the bad debt item, Mr. Ledbetter, for 940, $2250; should that be eliminated from the operating osts for 1940 for the same reason that you eliminated the 939 figure?

A. I didn't eliminate bad debts for 1939; did we?

Q. You said you took the $1805 out.

A. No; the bad debt proposition stands. I just took out he $1805 reserve set up by mistake.

Q. Well, what figure is left for bad debts?

A. Just what is shown there for bad debts. What is it?

Q. All I have here is $1805.

A. Well, let's see. Bad debts, $716.37.

Q. Did you have a figure for reserve for bad debts in 1940?

A. No.

Q. What was the figure for bad debts in 1940?

A. $2250.09.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What part of those bad lebts were allocated to gasoline and what part to your other business?

The Witness: I couldn't state without an exhaustive research.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, on that point in connec-
1972 tion with your Honor's question, I wish to say that
Mr. Ledbetter has made a general allocation as between gasoline and all other merchandise, which is the same or practically the same allocation as made by Mr. Taggart for the purposes of his cost survey, and we, therefore, submit that if it was sufficient for Mr. Taggart's survey, it ought to be sufficient with respect to [illegible]is witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is not entirely clear upon that point. I will hear from you fully later on when we reach the matter.

Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, now, will you turn to the item of depreciation? I think—let's see. We just discussed that, did we not, to some extent, about a change that we made in 1939?

A. Yes.

Q. Upon what buildings and equipment was that depreciation figured?

A. No buildings.

Q. Is that entirely depreciation on equipment?

A. That's right. Furniture, fixtures, and equipment.

1973 Q. Where is that equipment located?

A. Mostly at gasoline stations. Some at the bulk plant, and, of course, some little at the office.

Q. What portion of the equipment and fixtures at the gasoline stations is owned by the Wayne Oil Company? Again, I am not asking for dollars. I want you just to tell me about it.

A. Roughly—

Q. Not even in amount. Just tell me about what it is. What is the nature of the equipment?

A. Oh. We ordinarily own the underground tanks, the pumps, gasoline pumps, the oil containing or dispensing equipment, and in some instances compressors and hoists.

1974 Q. Is this depreciation figured upon all those properties that you have just described?

A. This depreciation is figured on all of the equipment of every kind and description that the Wayne Oil Company owns.

Q. And in referring to the ownership of such equipment does that apply to all of the stations to whom you sell gasoline or only to part of them?

A. It applies to most, if not all, in varying degrees.

Q. In that figure for depreciation was that depreciation computed in part upon the value of the equipment; tanks, pumps, and so forth, at the retail stations operated by the Wayne Oil Company?

A. Such equipment as is at the stations owned by the Wayne Oil Company, was in these figures.

Q. Is there anything at those stations that is not owned by the Wayne Oil Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Who is it owned by?

A. The property owner from whom I lease the stations.

Q. Then I will have to ask you as to those two stations—or as to the three stations which have been operated by the Wayne Oil Company, whether you can state the value of the equipment or the figures upon which depreciation was figured for those stations.

1975 A. I could give it to you quite accurately by looking at my records, but I think I can give it to you fairly satisfactorily, offhand.

1976 Q. All right. If you are not sure, Mr. Ledbetter, just let me ask you this: does the Wayne Oil Company own the tanks and pumps at the operated stations?

A. Yes—no. Wait a minute. Owns the tanks and pumps at one, and the pumps and greasing equipment at the other. The property owner owns the tanks at one of those stations.

Q. How about the third one, that you did operate?

A. The Wayne Oil Company owns the pumps and tanks, and, of course, there are others besides the third one. There are five or six altogether that I have operated.

Q. You mean that you have operated from time to time?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you own the tanks at all of those?

A. I can't say without recalling the stations—

Q. I meant to say the pumps. I don't know whether it makes any difference in your answer.

A. Well, I believe I did.

Q. What is the most valuable equipment at a service station in the point of dollar value upon which depreciation is figured?

A. I don't know that I understand that question. It sounds rather—

Q. Is it the pumps, the tanks, the furniture, or what is it?

1977 A. I think the thing that runs into the most dollars and cents around a station, any one item, might be said to be pumps.

Q. What is the rate of depreciation that you use in figuring the depreciation on pumps?

A. Approximately 10% a year.

Q. How did you decide that?

A. I came to that conclusion after instructions from the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Q. Now, turning to advertising, Mr. Ledbetter. You have a figure, according to the notes I took, of about $2500 for 1938, a little over $4400 for 1939, and about $3600 for 1940.

A. That's right.

Q. Will you describe the nature of that advertising which is represented by that expense item, or those expense items?

A. Yes. Part of it is advertising, you might say institutional advertising, by the Wayne Oil Company in an effort to obtain standing prestige and new dealers.

Q. That is a small portion of it, isn't it?

A. Well, it might be less than half. I doubt if it is much less than that. A part of it is an assistance we give our dealers or have given our dealers in recent times.

Q. Will you explain that?

A. Well, I think I ought to explain how it got 1978 under way and how it got started. It got started during the price war times.

Q. Please explain first how the expense was arrived at; what sort of advertising it is, and what is advertised?

A. Most of that expense, outside of institutional advertising, as I call it, would be advertising expense that we give to our dealers in this way: we encourage our dealers to advertise rather than cut prices, in order to stay in this business. That is the way the thing got started, got started in 1938. If you notice for 1937 there is practically no advertising expense. We adopted a policy of encouraging dealers to advertise and maintain their business or try to stay in business by means of advertising rather than cutting prices or meeting cut prices. It was quite a desperate struggle.

Q. Now, what portion of the dealer's advertising does the Wayne Oil Company pay?

A. I was just getting to that. To do that, we adopted this policy: that where the Wayne Oil Company O. K.'s or approves any expenditure that a dealer wants to make in the way of advertising to carry out that fundamental idea, we pay half of it, and he pays half.

Q. What is the practice in that respect, does the dealer prepare the advertising and submit it to you for approval?

A. No, no; we prepare it ourselves. There isn't 1979 any dealer that is competent to do it in our outfit.

Q. I thought, perhaps, he might employ somebody.

A. Once in a while he will get a little hand bill, and it goes through without any change from us. But the most of it is done in our office and through our advertising counsel.

Q. And do you advise the dealer in the amount of advertising that they need?

A. In a way I do, yes.

Q. That is,—

A. I encourage them to use it. Or have been doing it.

Q. The Wayne Oil Company employs advertising counsel for that purpose, did I understand you to say?

A. We have advertising counsel. I wouldn't say it was for that purpose. It is for the general purpose that any advertising counsel is used for.

Q. And is the advertising that you speak of advertising of the various service stations?

A. Most of it is.

Q. That is, I mean the advertising in each case refers to a single case.

A. Most of it is advertising directed by a service station to the neighborhood immediately around it, to get business. That is the character of most of it.

Q. Now—

1980 A. Could I add another reason as to why we felt it necessary to do that advertising?

Q. If you wish, yes.

A. There are two large competitive oil companies in this town that do a tremendous lot of local advertising, Sun Oil Company and the Socony Vacuum, and I felt that it was absolutely necessary for our dealers, some way or another, to meet that advertising competition. And this is just one of the ways of trying to do it.

Q. Did the Standard Oil Company ever suggest to you that you do that, or have any part in it?

A. No, never had any part in it. Never even knew we were doing it, so far as I know. It was our own idea.

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, in connection with that advertising, service station advertising, as to which the Wayne Oil Company paid half of the cost, did that include advertising of or for the service stations which were operated by the Wayne Oil Company?

A. Yes; just exactly the same as the other dealers.

Q. Well, in the case of that advertising, I suppose one-half of it was charged to the advertising expense of the Wayne Oil Company, and the other half to the operating expense of the retail station?

A. One-half of it would be in this advertising expense here, and the other half would be in the retail 1981 operation; that's right.

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, did that advertising in this case take the form of giving away free goods of any kind?

A. Give away matches, advertising novelties, if you call that free goods.

Q. Any premiums in connection with gasoline?

A. No. No.

Q. Now, in connection with miscellaneous items that you read—I already asked you why that jumped in 1940 from 1939, and I believe you said you would give me a statement of it if I wanted it?

A. Yes, I will be glad to. I can, if I get back to the office, easily determine why the jump. It probably is due to some re-classification of accounts.

Q. Now, in 1939 you have an item of $2,146, according to my notes for discounts?

A. Right.

Q. You had no such discount item in 1938 and none in 1939, according to my notes; is that correct?

A. I believe that is true.

1982 Q. First will you tell me what those discounts represent?

A. They represent trade and cash discounts in the main.

Q. Just explain how they arrive on your operating expense list? That is, where does the money go? How is it an expense?

A. It is an expense only where the goods are sold at the full price, and that is treated as income. Now, for instance, in 1940 I don't believe you will find it there. The reason for that is that I was noticing the fact that it wasn't in 1940 myself and I looked to see why; it was deducted from sales, that item was deducted from sales.

Q. And how about 1938?

A. 1938 I couldn't tell you, because I didn't investigate it to tell you the truth.

Q. Do you think it was deducted from sales then too?

A. No. It would be my idea that in that year it is in miscellaneous expense, because I don't believe it was customary to deduct it from sales until 1940.

Q. That item then of discounts doesn't represent any expense or any money paid out by the Wayne Oil Company; is that correct?

A. I believe you are right. I think that is improperly included. That is my present idea about it, as an operating expense. That is for the year 1939—that is the only one that it appears in, isn't it?

1983 Q. That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What is the amount?

The Witness: $2146.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Now, Mr. Ledbetter, there is an item of trucking expense of $1170 in 1939, $978 in 1940, according to my notes?

A. Yes.

Q. Where is the trucking expense included for 1938?

A. In miscellaneous expense.

Mr. Austin: Now, if your Honor please, I renew my motion—or, rather, I will move to strike from the record the figures which were read into the record yesterday by Mr. Ledbetter, including all of the figures which preceded the statement of his conclusions as to the cost of the Wayne Oil Company of selling gasoline at wholesale and including those costs which were based upon his previous figures.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner asks that you make your motion more definite and certain. Can you refer to the page of the record and the lines?

Mr. Austin: Commencing on page 1841,—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Line what?

Mr. Austin: Line 22, over to and including line 5 on page 1844, and then commencing again on line 17, page 1866 to page 1876, through line 5. I believe that's all.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let me see the portion 1984 to which the motion is directed.

(A copy of the transcript was handed to the Examiner.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

Mr. Austin: The motion to strike is upon the ground that in view of what has been brought out in cross examination the figures are inaccurate on their face. That they do not portray either the cost per gallon of selling gasoline by the Wayne Oil Company at wholesale or at retail and that no allocation has been made as between the wholesale and retail functions. That certain retail expenses are included in what purports to be a wholesale computation.

Furthermore, I object to this testimony upon the ground that it is immaterial and irrelevant to the issues in this case, it being my contention that the per gallon cost of distribution of gasoline by the Wayne Oil Company, covering all of its wholesale operations, is immaterial and irrelevant in this case.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, in opposition to this motion I wish to make four separate points; first, that the motion should be properly deferred until Respondent has had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness with reference to alleged discrepancies in the figures, because it may be that the record will show that these discrepancies which he has testified to are not material, if he is further questioned upon redirect examination.

1985 Trial Examiner Ballinger: You don't mean until he is further cross-examined, do you?

Mr. Abbott: No. I mean until he is subjected to redirect examination by the Respondent.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understood you to say cross-examination.

1986 Mr. Abbott: Secondly, it appears from the testimony which was adduced yesterday that the witness has made an allocation comparable to that made by Professor Taggart in his testimony that was taken in Washington as the basis for his so-called cost survey—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Will you kindly state the particular items in which they are comparable?

Mr. Abbott: Yes. In that both of them, both Mr. Ledbetter and Professor Taggart made an allocation of cost as between gasoline and all other merchandise, Mr. Ledbetter having made that allocation in his testimony yesterday for the year 1938 on the basis that the operating cost of selling gasoline for the year 1938 was 82.7%, and that the balance of the operating cost was allocable to other merchandise.

For the year 1939 the allocation as to the cost of selling gasoline alone was 79.5%. The balance of the percentage between 79.5 and 100 being the operating cost for the sale of all other merchandise except gasoline sold by the Wayne Oil Company.

That in the 1940 figure as given by him the allocation which would pertain to the sale of gasoline, the operating cost of the sale of gasoline, was 70.1%, the balance of approximately 30% having been allocated by him in his figures to the operating cost of selling all other merchan-1987 dise, so, upon the claim of the Commission attorney, that there is no proper break-down as between gasoline and all other merchandise—

Mr. Austin: I didn't make that claim, Mr. Abbott, and don't make it now.

Mr. Abbott: You have made the claim, and I want to get this in the record.

Mr. Austin: No, I haven't made such a claim.

Mr. Abbott: I understand that you don't make any claim that there is no proper break-down as between gasoline and all other merchandise?

Mr. Austin: I did not make such claim and don't make it now.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

In the third place, as between the operating cost of operating retail stations operated by the Wayne Oil Company and the operating cost in connection with the servicing of dealer stations, I say this: that redirect examination of this witness, I am confident, will bring out this point based on his statement of the costs as given yesterday: the witness having testified that it is physically impossible to make a break-down because he has kept his books in such a way as to treat the two or three operated stations in the same bookkeeping method as dealer stations, that it will 1988 appear from the redirect examination that the cost of operation allocable to operated stations, stations operated by the Wayne Oil Company will be so infinitesimal as not substantially to change the per gallonage cost of operation which has been testified to by him in his testimony here this morning and yesterday.

Now, upon the other ground, No. 4, which I wish to raise, that relates to the general objection, which was stated by counsel yesterday, and which has been repeated just now. It is our theory and contention, with reference to the general admissibility of this evidence, and I understood yesterday that your Honor ruled that you would pass upon that at a later time, and for the present would permit such evidence to be considered, that this evidence is admissible on two grounds:

First, that it rebuts that element in the case which your Honor has often mentioned, namely, with reference to the opportunity of a jobber to use his differential for the purpose of cutting prices.

Now, on that point, with reference to the Wayne Oil Company, it has been my contention all the time, and I think it is well taken; as to the Wayne Oil Company and the Stikeman Oil Company there should be no issue made to those companies in this case at all. And I have made a motion several times that consideration of those two companies
1989 should be entirely dismissed from this case. But in order to rebut in this case the inference, or the implication, I should say, that there is an opportunity on the part of this jobber or any other jobber to use the differential between the tank car and the tank wagon price for the purpose—or, at least, the potential purpose of cutting prices to the public, it is important to consider whether the operating costs are more or less than the figure of 1½¢ per gallon, which is the difference between the tank car and the tank wagon price of gasoline applicable to the house brand sold by the Standard Oil Company. And, by house brand, of course, I refer to what is also termed Red Crown. Now, in the second place, I say that testimony as to the operating cost of the Wayne Oil Company, or any other jobber, also has a tendency to prove that the differential as between the tank car and the tank wagon price is justified by the difference in the cost of sale and delivery resulting from different methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered. Using in that statement the language of the Robinson-Patman Act. It is a defense in this case, and we are going to meet that defense—or, going to use it—that the differential between the tank car and the tank wagon price makes only due allowance for differences in the cost of sale and delivery from the bulk plant of the jobber to the tanks of the service 1990 station, the retail outlet, taking into consideration administration cost and other costs of sale, and also delivery costs, which are the words used by the Act: "Sale and delivery." Now, therefore, we say that on the general proposition as to the admissibility of such evidence, that it is admissible for these two reasons:

First, as showing the absence of opportunity for the jobber to cut prices, and

Second, because it has a tendency to show that the differential between the tank car and tank wagon price is justified by the cost of sale and delivery as between the two methods of delivering gasoline.

Now, it was my understanding that on this latter point, on the general point as to admissibility, your Honor intended to reserve ruling until at least we have an opportunity to subject this witness to redirect examination.
1991 Because I don't think the entire picture would be before your Honor until that time, until we have concluded the examination of this witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner will withhold his ruling on the motion until you have concluded your redirect examination of the witness in order that the entire picture may be in the record.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

Mr. Austin: I am through on cross-examination.

Mr. Abbott: Are you though on cross-examination?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. You advised me this morning that you wished to make some other corrections in your testimony that you gave yesterday with reference to some slight discrepancies in the matter of sale and delivery cost for 1940?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you make them at this time?

A. I testified that the total operating expense for 1940 was $49,720.96. It actually was $49,770.96.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What is the difference?

The Witness: $50. A typographical error.

By Mr. Abbott:

1992 Q. As I understand it, the only material change in your figures is the item of $2146 attributable to trade and cash discounts included in the 1939 figures of costs, operating costs?

A. That is an entirely different proposition from what I am talking about.

Q. I know it is.

A. What is that question?

Q. There was one item which you mentioned, it was the large item of $2146 attributable to trade and cash discounts?

A. Yes.

Q. For the year 1939?

A. Right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That can have no relation to the item about which you were making inquiry.

Mr. Abbott: That's right. I am just asking him to correct though any items which he wants to correct at this time.

1993 The Witness: I haven't finished with this one.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. All right. Go ahead.

A. I also testified that the cost of wholesaling gasoline for the Wayne Oil Company for the year 1940 was 1.489¢.

Q. Yes?

A. The correction of the figure that I have just given you makes the cost per gallon 1.486¢. Now, then, this allowance in discounts in 1939 of $2246.41 appears to me not—

Mr. Austin: Just a moment. What is the pending question?

Mr. Abbott: Well, I asked him to make any corrections that he wished to in his figures, either for 1938, 1939, or 1940, just so we will have them on the record.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Were you now referring to the trade and cash discount figure?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: This is redirect examination. I want the witness to make any corrections, too, but we have been over some of these things, and if the correction has already been made, is it necessary or proper to ask the witness 1994 again about the same figure on redirect examination? I don't mind specific questions, but I don't want to open the door wide open and go through all this.

Mr. Abbott: I will withdraw the inquiry at the moment, because I want to go into other things.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner requests that you tie these up so that we will know what they relate to.

Mr. Abbott: I intend to do that. I am going to withdraw that question as to that item of $2,146, Mr. Ledbetter, and go into some other matters, and then come back to that.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you know, when Mr. MacGready of the Aurora Gasoline Company, made you an offer to sell your requirements of 80 octane gasoline delivered by truck transport to your bulk plant at ½¢ less than Standard Oil home brand at tank car price, that Standard Oil wanted some evidence of competitive offers? That offer was, as I understand, made on December 10, 1940.

A. I did not.

Q. In other words, at that time when the offer was made, you had no knowledge that the Standard Oil Company was—

Mr. Austin: I object to that as leading.

Mr. Abbott: I just want to understand what he says.

1995 Mr. Austin: The record will show what he said.

Mr. Abbott: I will withdraw that question and reframe it.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Had anyone at the Standard Oil Company office told you, previous to December 10, 1940, that they wanted any such evidence reported to them?

A. I don't recall that they did.

Q. And when you stated yesterday that the offer of the Aurora Gasoline Company pertained to 80 octane gasoline delivered by transport truck at your bulk plant at the price of 6.1¢ per gallon excluding tax, there was a question asked you as to whether that gasoline was comparable to Standard Oil house brand, and you answered the question. Now, by "house brand" did you refer to the Standard Oil Red Crown gasoline?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many months before December 13, 1940, when the offer was made to you by National Refining Company of Cleveland, Ohio, as testified by you yesterday, had Mr. Rickley of the National Refining been attempting to get the Wayne Oil Company's business?

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor. Let him state the conversations or what was said.

Mr. Abbott: If you wish to have the conversations 1996 we will supply them.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. But I am asking you now how many months was it Mr. Rickley had been negotiating with you on that point?

Mr. Austin: There is an objection to that.

Mr. Abbott: I am not asking for the conversation but only as to the number of months that had been going on.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained. You can ask him when they commenced.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. When did Mr. Rickley commence those negotiations with you?

A. I couldn't give the date, but it was probably several months or maybe a year prior to that—and you used the term "those negotiations". I don't just exactly understand that. He was trying to interest us in—

Mr. Austin: Pardon me. I move that the question and answer be stricken upon the ground that the witness has stated he doesn't understand the question when he answered.

Mr. Abbott: I don't think that is justified by the record.

Mr. Austin: I think the objection is good because the question is still, as the witness has just stated, and as I noticed at the time, referred to negotiations without stating what sort of negotiations, and if the witness was 1997 asked what sort of negotiations, I think—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion is granted, and the testimony stricken.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. How long was it before December 13, 1940, that Mr. Rickley began to talk to you about supplying you with tank car gasoline?

A. Several months; maybe a year.

Q. You say that the National Refining Company which made its offer to Wayne Oil Company on the date of December 13, 1940, made its offer to your company and Stikeman Oil Company jointly, as I understood your testimony.

A. Right.

Q. From the conversation that you had with the representative of the National Refining Company, were you, by that conversation, given the opportunity to accept the National Refining Company offer by yourself, separate from the Stikeman Oil Company?

Mr. Austin: I think I asked the same question of the witness yesterday and he answered it, so I won't object. I assume he will answer it the same way.

A. I didn't so take it.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What was the conversation with reference to the nature of the acceptance?

1998 A. I can't tell you the conversation.

Q. Tell us the purport of it.

A. That was the purport of it.

Q. What was the purport of it?

A. That he made a joint offer to us in an endeavor to get sufficient distribution over the City of Detroit to warrant them to come in here and spend the money necessary to put it over, and it would take more than one little outfit like mine to do it. That was the gist of the way I got it.

Q. At that time, Mr. Ledbetter, was your company, the Wayne Oil Company, and the Stikeman Oil Company, considering a merger?

A. Well, at least we had talked about such possibilities. I wouldn't say we were considering it.

Q. Had you and Mr. Stikeman talked that over before December 13, 1940?

A. Yes.

Q. For how long?

A. Well, at least since 1935, when I became a Standard Oil jobber.

Q. And was that proposition discussed in the meeting of December 13, 1940, with the representative of the National Refining Company?

A. No, I don't believe it was.

1999 Q. Now, I understood you to say yesterday that you reported the offer of the National Refining Company to Standard Oil Company.

A. Yes, I did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understood you to say that those negotiations had extended over some period of time and that they finally culminated in an offer submitted on or about December 11th?

The Witness: December 13th.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: December 13th? 1940?

The Witness: Right.

2000 Trial Examiner Ballinger: That was the first definite offer that was made?

The Witness: That's right; and to call them negotiations, isn't accurate. You might say it was solicitation by them, would be a more accurate term to use. They were looking for customers. We weren't really negotiating. We were being solicited.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You were not, then, negotiating for a new source of supply?

The Witness: No, we weren't.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You say you were not negotiating for a new source of supply?

A. No, I don't consider that we were. We were listening to propositions.

Q. And you had a proposition made to you, didn't you?

A. That's right.

Q. As you stated yesterday?

A. That's right.

Q. By that you mean to say that the initiative was taken by the National Refining Company, and not by yourselves?

A. Right.

Q. Now, there has been some testimony to the effect that your statement of operating costs for the years 1938, 1939, and 1940 included the cost or the expense of 2001 operating your retail stations; I mean, the two stations or three stations, as the case may be, directly operated by your company. Can you state to what extent such operating costs of direct operation enter into the per gallonage cost for each of these three years; whether it was great or small?

A. Yes, I can.

Q. All right; so what—

Mr. Austin: Pardon me, please. I am sorry, but I would like to have the question read.

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor, as a conclusion. I don't object to him stating what costs of his retail stations go into it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I will ask you to state this: What costs did enter into the cost of operating your retail stations, if you know?

A. I do know.

Q. All right. State what they are.

A. 1938, there were none. 1939, there was $726.60 loss.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is not responsive.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I must object to that, too, because that calls for a conclusion and the witness is trying to state what costs—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained and 2002 the answer is stricken.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What was the figure for 1940?

Mr. Austin: Objection; same ground.

Mr. Hanley: You Honor; isn't the witness permitted to testify at all? The objection was made before a question was asked him.

Mr. Austin: He asked him for the figure. Wasn't that the same figure that was asked for for 1939; and to which an objection was sustained. I understood it was.

Mr. Abbott: I am asking him if he can state the figure as to the operating costs as to the retail stations for 1940.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you mean the total operation cost?

Mr. Abbott: Yes. In other words, if you can make my breakdown, Mr. Ledbetter, in any way, based upon your figures, for 1940.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He had better give us the breakdown, before he answers the question.

Mr. Abbott: I think he is entitled to give the answer to the question and then, if he has any breakdown, I can ask him that. I think it is purely arbitrary to insist that it be done the other way, if your Honor please.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You think it isn't 2003 necessary for him to show his knowledge; a knowledge sufficient to answer the question?

Mr. Abbott: I think it is necessary for him to show the knowledge but I don't think—the breakdown would naturally follow after he answers the question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This is all being admitted subject to a motion to strike.

He may answer.

The Witness: Now, what is the question?

(The record was read as follows:

"Mr. Abbott: I am asking him if he can state the figure as to the operating costs as to the retail stations for 1940.

In other words, if you can make any breakdown, Mr. Abbott, in any way based upon your figures, for 1940?")

A. For 1940 the retail operation cost the Wayne Oil Company $32.40 more than the wholesale operation did.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Just what do you mean by that, Mr. Ledbetter?

A. That is just another way of putting what I have been telling you all along; we keep our books on our company-owned station the same as an independent dealer.

Q. Making no distinction?

A. None whatever, as far as accounting is concerned, and for the year 1940 the total retail operation showed the Wayne Oil Company a loss of $32.40.

2004 Q. Was that by reason of the fact that you operated that station as a retail station? I mean was that loss attributable to that fact?

A. I don't know hardly how to answer that question. "Loss attributable to that fact—"

Q. What was that loss caused by; that figure you gave of $32 and some cents?

A. I couldn't tell you.

Q. Why is it there, then, Mr. Ledbetter? Just tell us why that is in the statement; that item of thirty-two and some cents, and what it represents.

A. Because that is the amount by which the station failed to make its income equal its expenses; I presume, or some such situation. It is an ordinary business loss.

Q. And apart from that, I understand the stations, the retail stations, the retail stations, were treated the same way as any wholesale station that you were supplying?

A. They were treated just exactly the same, so far as accounting is concerned.

Q. And the figure for 1939 comparable to the figure of $32 and some cents for 1940, was what figure?

A. $726.60.

Q. And in 1938 you testified that you didn't operate any retail stations?

A. That's right.

2005 Q. In other words, your operating costs for the year 1938 are based wholly on wholesale operations?

A. That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let me see if I understand your testimony.

I understand you testified that you received a differential as a wholesaler of a cent and a half a gallon?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And it cost you more than a cent and a half a gallon to transport it from your wholesale bulk plant to these retail stores—retail stations, and put it in the tanks?

The Witness: Well, that you don't understand right, Judge. That isn't what I have testified to or what I have intended to testify to.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If it isn't, I want to get it cleared up.

The Witness: This, in a nutshell, is what I mean by my testimony: that it costs about very close to a cent and a half a gallon for my company to perform all the functions of wholesaling gasoline. The figures that I have given seem to be slightly in excess of a cent and a half, so far as the cost is concerned. That could be true, and still the company could make money, because we sell other merchandise.

2006 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let me ask you this—and I am merely seeking information.

The Witness: And I am trying to give it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did it cost you more to supply the service stations to whom you furnished gasoline, sold it, than it did to supply the stations your company operated?

The Witness: That is very theoretical, and I doubt—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You know whether or not the cost was greater or less, do you not?

The Witness: Well, I say—I still say that is a very theoretical problem. And offhand—the way I see it at the present time, I don't believe there is any appreciable difference between the two. And when you consider all the functions that we do, so far as wholesaling gasoline, which is considerably more than just storing and delivering—it is a business venture; credit hazards, investment hazards, insurance, all kinds of expenses, taxes, and so forth, are involved, besides just delivery.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do I understand you to testify that it actually cost you more than a cent and a half per gallon to transport the gas from your bulk plant to these service stations that are operated by you?

The Witness: Just to transport the gasoline? No, 2007 I wouldn't say that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the allocable overhead.

The Witness: You take in all of the elements necessary to the wholesaling of gasoline, and it seems to me that there is no appreciable difference between handling the wholesale function, so far as our own retail outlets are concerned. I can't see where there is any difference between that and an independent dealer, offhand.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did you or did you not sus-~~tain a loss on the service that you supplied to your own~~ retail stores?

Mr. Abbott: You mean for 1939 and 1940?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

The Witness: Sustain a loss?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

The Witness: I don't see how I can answer that other than to give you the figures that I have already given you: that according to the way my books are kept, my system of bookkeeping, which I believe is a perfect—as perfect a method as could be devised for separating retail and wholesale functions—I can't think of a better one—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the basis of your books, did you or did you not sustain a loss?

2008 The Witness: For any one year?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: '39 and '40.

The Witness: Just about broke even, so far as the gasoline wholesaling was concerned. Based on an allocation of expenses with reference to dollars and cents sales.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did you or did you not sustain a loss on your deliveries to the service stations you were supplying and you did not own nor operate during that period?

Mr. Abbott: Now, does your question, Judge, include sale and delivery of gasoline to those stations?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: Do you understand the question, Mr. Ledbetter?

The Witness: I am just trying to determine in my mind whether I do or not.

Mr. Abbott: Do you want to have the question re-read to you?

The Witness: No, I don't think that is necessary.

I don't believe, your Honor, that I can answer that question yes or no.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you think you are in the twilight zone?

The Witness: Yes.

2009 Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is all.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You mean with reference to the twilight zone—what do you mean by that, when you answered that question?

A. I think you should ask the Court what he meant by it. I didn't use it.

~~Q. You said "Yes" in answer to it. I just wondered~~ what you had in mind yourself.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, I assume you meant that the line of demarcation between profit and loss was so narrow that it was indistinguishable; is that correct?

The Witness: Something like that; and yet there is another element in it. I am asked to answer whether I did or did not do a certain thing, when the only thing that I have to guide me as to whether I did or did not is a purely theoretical percentage allocation. And I submit that I shouldn't be compelled to say that I did or did not. All I can do is say that according to these figures, I did or did not. Which I am willing to say.

2010 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Ledbetter, all I am endeavoring to do is to clear up a situation here that has resulted in many questions being asked, and time is being consumed.

The Witness: I don't blame anybody for being puzzled by it.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, do I understand then that your selling and delivery costs were very close to the figure of 1¼¢ per gallon on gasoline for all these years?

A. Still I want to say that my costs are the costs of wholesaling gasoline.

Q. I understand that.

A. According to my lights. Now, you say "selling and delivery." Maybe it is selling and delivery. It costs me that much to run my business.

Q. It costs you what—the figures you have stated in operating costs?

A. The figures I testified to and are in evidence here.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I also understood you to testify that throughout all of the years you mentioned you did derive a profit, but that that profit is accounted for in your salary. Did I correctly understand you?

The Witness: No, that isn't right. My salary is charged as an expense of the business. And the profit that 2011 we have reported—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then in addition to that you did actually make a profit?

The Witness: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then if that is the case you couldn't have consumed the full cent and a half in costs, could you?

The Witness: In handling—in wholesaling gasoline?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

The Witness: Yes, we could have, because we sell other things besides gasoline. That little bit of difference there could easily be taken up by the profit on other merchandise.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But you haven't any breakdown that shows the profit on the gas separate from the profit on the other items that you handled, have you?

The Witness: No breakdown showing net profit.

Mr. Abbott: Well, I want to ask some questions on that.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. There was a breakdown made in your figures, was there not, Mr. Ledbetter, to exclude the operating cost with reference to the sale and delivery of miscellaneous merchandise? In other words, in the 1938 figure you took a percentage of 82.7 per cent as the operating cost for 2012 selling and delivering gasoline alone?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what was that based on?

A. It was based on the relation of gasoline sales to total sales.

Q. In dollars?

Mr. Austin: What figure is that, Mr. Abbott?

A. Yes, dollars and cents.

Mr. Austin: Which figure is that?

Mr. Abbott: That is in 1938, figure 82.7 per cent.

Mr. Austin: Oh yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. So that the difference of 17.3 per cent was allocated by you to the cost of selling other miscellaneous merchandise; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And that allocation was based on the ratio of gross sales in dollars and cents as between gasoline and other merchandise?

A. Yes.

Q. And where did you get that figure?

A. From our books.

Q. From your books?

A. Yes. These figures are right.

2013 Q. Those figures are correct, are they?

A. Yes.

Q. And you vouch for their correctness?

A. All except this one item in 1939 of discounts and allowances, which I still feel ought to come out of there.

Q. We will come to that in a minute. Now, for 1939 you made a further breakdown as between the operating costs of selling gasoline on the one hand and miscellaneous merchandise on the other hand, did you not? Will you refer to your figures?

A. Yes.

Q. And the ratio there in the 1939 figures is 79.5 per cent?

A. Yes.

Q. What is that based on?

A. Same thing exactly as in the year 1938. It is all done the same.

Q. Is that based also on the ratio between total sales of gasoline and total sales of miscellaneous merchandise in dollars and cents?

A. That's right.

Q. And then you allocated the balance amounting to 21.5 per cent to the operating costs of selling miscellaneous merchandise; is that correct?

A. That's right.

2014 Q. Now, coming to the year 1940, the percentage that you have allocated to the operating costs of selling gasoline is what per cent?

A. 70 and 1/10 per cent.

Q. And you thereby allocated the balance of 29.9 per cent to the operating costs of selling miscellaneous merchandise; is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. And what was that based on? I mean the ratio of those two percentages 70.1 per cent as compared with 29.9 per cent?

A. (No answer.)

Q. Let me ask you this: Is that the ratio based upon the comparison of total sales in dollars and cents of gasoline compared to total sales of miscellaneous merchandise?

A. Yes, that is what it is.

Q. The same as for the other two years?

A. Right.

Q. So you have made a very definite breakdown as between gasoline sales and miscellaneous sales?

A. Why, yes.

Q. For all three years?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is based on definite figures taken from your books?

2015 A. That's right.

Q. Now, will you state, Mr. Ledbetter, based upon your knowledge of your business as to retail operated stations to what extent the figures given by you on selling and delivery costs as to those stations—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What cost could there be of selling where it is delivery to his own stations?

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I believe you stated with reference to the question asked by the Examiner that you operated those retail stations on the same basis as dealer stations for all those three years, did you not? I mean for 1939 and '40?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you make the same charges for selling and delivering gasoline to them on the same basis as you did dealer stations?

A. I did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And that included an item of cost of sale, did it?

The Witness: Yes, I think it did.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. With reference to these—

The Witness: (Continuing.) Strange as it may seem.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. With reference to these retail outlets you had 2016 the same functional operations, did you not, that you had with reference to dealer stations that you had all the way through?

A. It appears that way to me. I can't see it any other way.

Q. And you have placed in the 1939 and '40 figures an item which represents the loss that you had on the operation of these retail stations?

A. That's right.

Q. And I want you now to state for 1939 the amount of that figure?

A. For 1939?

Q. Yes.

A. You mean the loss that I had on the retail operations?

Q. Yes.

A. $726.60.

Q. And that is placed in this tabulation of operating cost for 1939 as an expense of operation, is it not?

A. That's right, it is.

Q. That item then which you have just mentioned is included as an operating cost in the 1939 figures?

A. It is.

Q. Now, what is the figure comparable to that for the year 1940?

A. $32.43.

2017 Q. And have you included that figure in the operating costs for the year 1940?

A. Yes.

2018 Q. Now, you have put in some evidence as to your net income for 1939 and 1940. Yesterday you stated that the net income for 1939 was $2334.35. I understand that that was not the amount you reported to the Internal Revenue Department?

A. That's right.

Q. But was that the actual amount of net income as it was later revised?

A. No, not exactly, but very nearly.

Q. Well, would you say approximately the amount of net income for that year?

A. Yes.

Q. And for 1940, I believe you stated that the amount of your net income was $1431.90; is that correct?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. But that was not the amount that you reported to the Internal Revenue Department for 1940, was it?

A. No.

Q. Was the figure of $1431.90 approximately the amount of your net income for that year?

A. No. It was four hundred and some odd dollars too high.

Q. And what was that attributable to?

A. To this: that was before I filed my income tax return. I had already figured my profits for the year.
2019 I had taken depreciation, according to a formula of my own, and then because of the rather growing complicated nature of the income tax return, for the first time since I have been in business, I called in a certified public accountant to prepare it for me. He said I hadn't taken enough depreciation according to the way I figured it. And the difference between the amount I reported to the Bureau and the $1431 is the difference between his figures and mine on depreciation.

Q. Was that later amended by the Internal Revenue Department?

A. The figures you are talking about, the $1431, were compiled before that time. Naturally, I just forgot about it, about them ever being out any place, until they came up here.

Q. Now, you mentioned the matter of advertising in connection with the giving away of matches. Were these matches the small paper containers, such as hotels and clubs give away in advertising?

A. Yes; imprinted with the dealer's address.

Q. They were in paper containers, were they?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you and the dealer, I understand, each shared the expense of putting those out?

A. 50-50, yes.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, I want to ask at this 2020 time permission for the witness to consult with our accountant who is here, and I would like to have him straighten out one or two things before he proceeds with his examination. I don't want to adjourn at this time, necessarily.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a recess for five minutes.

Mr. Abbott: Yes, that is what I had in mind.

(A short recess was had.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order. You may proceed.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, at this time I wish to state that I have been asked to go over to the Wayne County Building and testify in a case pending there, for a few minutes, and I therefore ask that this hearing be at this time adjourned until 2 o'clock this afternoon at which time I guarantee to be back here.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion is granted, and now, at 12:10 P. M., the hearing stands in recess until 2 P. M.

(Thereupon, at 12:10 o'clock P. M., an adjournment was taken to reconvene at 2 o'clock P. M.)

2021 Afternoon Session.

2 P. M.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order. We are now reconvened at 2 P. M.

You may proceed.

ELMER E. LEDBETTER, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Redirect Examination (Cont'd.) by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, over the noon hour have you made certain corrections of the figures that you have submitted in evidence as to the wholesale cost of gasoline operation for the year 1939 covering sales and deliveries for that year?

A. I have.

Q. There was an item of $2,146.41 which you testified about this morning that was attributable to cash and trade discount, was there not?

A. That's right.

Q. Have you made any determination as to what should be done with that item?

A. Yes, I believe it should be taken out of the 2022 operating expenses.

Q. For the year 1939?

A. That's right.

Q. And have you so taken it out?

A. I have.

Q. Have you done anything with reference to the item of $726.60 which, as I remember, represented a loss from retail station operations for the year 1939?

A. I have.

Q. What have you done with reference to that item?

A. Taken it out of the operating expenses for 1939.

Q. Now, the total of those two items amounts to what figure?

A. $2,873.01.

Q. Have you applied the ratio for 1939, which is the ratio between the gasoline costs and the costs of selling other merchandise, to that figure?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is that ratio; what is the percentage?

A. The percentage is 79.5.

Q. And if you apply that ratio to the sum of $2873.01, what figure do you arrive at?

A. I didn't do it that way. I deducted the $2873.01 from the total operating expense that I testified to yesterday, and applied the 79.5% to that.

2023 Q. To the whole amount? You mean to the gross amount?

A. That's right.

Q. Of operating expenses for the year?

A. The same thing done in a different way. Which leaves a result—

Q. Let me ask you this question—

Mr. Austin: The witness hasn't finished yet.

Mr Abbott: He was going to answer another question.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You started to say it leaves what?

A. $32,470.02 applicable to the gasoline operation.

Q. Now, if you apply to that the total gallonage of gasoline sold during the year, what figure do you arrive at as the per gallon cost of wholesale operations for the year 1939?

A. 1.468¢.

Q. Instead of what?

A. Instead of 1.571.

Q. In other words—

A. As testified to yesterday.

Q. A difference of approximately .1¢ is that right?

A. Yes, approximately.

Q. Now, Mr. Ledbetter, is this figure of 1.468¢ an accurate reflection of your wholesale per gallonage cost 2024 for gasoline for the year 1939?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor, as to whether it is an accurate reflection. I assume it is accurate to the best ability of the witness. But I submit the witness has not been qualified to testify as to whether or not his results are accurate.

Mr. Abbott: The witness is an expert as to his own business, if the Court please. I think it has been sufficiently shown in this case that he has sufficient knowledge of the operation of his own business to testify.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is of the opinion that if the witness answered it would add nothing to the testimony the witness has already given. Accordingly, he sustains the objection.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. With reference to the 1940 operations, there is an item which you included in the operating cost of $32.43. Have you, over the noon hour, come to any conclusion as to how that item should be treated?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And what have you decided should be done with that item?

A. I think it should be removed from the operating expense of the wholesaling of gasoline.

Q. And have you made that reduction to the extent of $32.43?

2025-2026 A. I have.

Q. And does that make any change in the amended cost per gallon which you testified to this morning?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, now, state what, if any, change it makes.

A. It puts the per gallon cost of gasoline back to the same figure I testified to yesterday; 1.489. That is carrying it to three decimal points. It is the same.

Q. In other words, you testified yesterday that the per gallonage cost of selling and delivering gasoline at wholesale in 1940 was 1.489¢ per gallon.

A. That's right.

Q. Did you not?

A. I did.

Q. And this morning you amended that to the figure of 1.486¢ per gallon?

A. Yes.

Q. And you say that the elimination of the item of $32.43 from operating costs now changes the figure back to 1.489¢ per gallon?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you now, Mr. Ledbetter, segregated the wholesale from the retail figures on operating cost?

A. I have.

Q. And do these figures, as they now stand, cor-2027 rectly reflect the cost of operation at wholesale on a gallonage basis for gasoline for the years 1938, 1939, and 1940?

Mr. Austin: Same objection, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Same ruling; objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You testified that your figures on depreciation were amended by consultation, I believe, with the Internal Revenue Department?

A. Yes.

Q. Did the operating cost figures given by you yesterday represent the amended figures on depreciation? I mean, as amended by the Department of Internal Revenue for 1939?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. Well, what do they show, there, in the figures for 1939 and 1940, as to depreciation?

A. You mean the figures?

Q. Yes.

A. 1939 is $2506.17.

Q. 1940?

A. $2702.50.

Q. Was there any amendment of those figures by the Internal Revenue for 1938?

A. No.

2028 Q. There was not?

A. No.

Q. Do you want to make a computation, Mr. Ledbetter, right here as to the effect of amending the figure as to depreciation on your per gallonage operation cost?

A. I would like to.

Mr. Abbott: All right. Would your Honor permit us to make that figure? It will take just a few minutes to do that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you desire a recess?

Mr. Abbott: The witness has testified he omitted to change the depreciation figures for 1939 and 1940, and I wish therefore to have the figures that represent that correct, and they will require a moment of computation in order to do that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a five minute recess to give him that opportunity.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

(A short recess was taken.)

2029 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. The item of depreciation which you testified about his morning was $2506.17 for 1939, was it not?

A. Right.

Q. And what was the amount that it was finally amended o?

A. $2149.26.

Q. Leaving a balance of what figure?

A. The difference between the two.

Q. Yes. Now, have you made a computation to ascer- ain what change the difference would make?

A. Yes.

Q. On the per gallon cost for 1939?

A. I have.

Q. And what difference does it make?

A. .017 of a cent.

Q. And deducting that from the figure that you testified o of 1.468, leave a balance of what?

A. 1.451¢.

Q. Now, was there any change in the depreciation figure 'or the year 1940?

A. No.

Q. None at all. Have you therefore segregated the wholesale and retail figures for the year 1939 as they 2030 now stand, as that figure now stands?

A. I think we have.

Mr. Abbott: Take the witness.

Recross Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, did I understand you to testify that n the operating costs for 1939 which you gave yesterday, here was included an item of reserve for bad debts of $1805? Just look at your figures.

Mr. Abbott: That's for 1939?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

A. I believe that's true.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Did you state this morning that the item was im-properly included and had been rejected by the Internal Revenue Department?

A. I think I did.

Q. Well, has that figure been eliminated in making your revised statement of operating expenses for 1939? I mean, upon which your last testimony of per gallon operating costs was given? You know whether you eliminated that figure, do you not; since your computation of yesterday?

A. I am trying to think whether we did or not.

Q. Who do you mean by "we?"

A. Myself and the people I have been trying to 2031 figure it out with; Mr. Boatwright, for one. I don't believe it has been taken out.

Mr. Abbott: Well, be sure about that, Mr. Ledbetter; because if there are any other items, we had better get them all at once.

The Witness: Well, I can't be too sure in too big a hurry, here.

Mr. Abbott: Take your time.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Ledbetter, you have finished your answer, I believe, on that?

A. Well, I finished the answer I can make at the present time, without studying it some more.

2032 Q. Now, on the item which I believe you just discussed at some length with Mr. Abbott of discounts of $2146.41, which was included for '39, you stated this morning it was improperly included, and I believe you stated this afternoon that you had made a new computation eliminating that item from operating costs from 1939; is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. At page 1867 of the record in your testimony of yesterday you stated that the total amount of gasoline sold during 1939, that is, excluding Highway and Federal tax was $190,907.39. When you made this re-computation this noon in determining your allocation figure, did you deduct that item of $2146.00 from the total sales of gasoline for '39?

A. No.

Q. Well, after you arrived at your total costs, didn't you then take a percentage figure which was based upon the total gallons of gasoline, total dollar sales of gasoline as related to your total sales of all merchandise? You gave a figure of seventy-nine some percent, I believe, a minute ago.

A. Yes. That seems to me like that remains constant. I don't see yet how that is affected.

Q. What was the figure that you gave this afternoon for the percentage of gasoline sales to total sales for '39?

2033 A. 79.5.

Q. That was used in your most recent computation?

A. That's right.

Mr. Abbott: Let me interrupt again a minute. What is that figure for reserve on bad debts for 1939 that you testified to?

Mr. Austin: $1805.

The Witness: Yes, and 21¢.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Prior to last December, did you at any time have any agreement with Mr. Stikeman of the Stikeman Oil Company, or did the Wayne Oil Company have any agreement with the Stikeman Oil Company, providing for a merger of those two companies?

A. No.

Q. I want to ask you one more question about this allocation of operating costs. Were all operating costs of the Wayne Oil Company included in that allocation, regardless of the nature of such costs?

I am not trying to make you forget something, Mr. Ledbetter, but what I have in mind is this, whether, for instance, I would assume that depreciation on pumps was something that peculiarly relates to gasoline and not to any other item; would you agree with that?

I can understand how that might be so considered.

2034 Q. I am not questioning what you did, I just want to find out. Was that depreciation expense and expenses, such as trucking expense, was that all put into the pool in making your allocation?

A. I tried to take all of the operating expense connected with the wholesaling of merchandise through my establishm [illegible]

Q. [illegible] ated this morning that you had a salesman, I believe, in 1940; at least one.

A. That's right.

Q. And he worked on a commission basis and sold tires and accessories and so forth?

A. That's right.

Q. Did he get any commissions on the sale of gasoline or did he sall any gasoline?

A. He didn't sell any gasoline, but he got commissions, very likely, that could be chargeable to gasoline alone. If he got a new dealer on gasoline, he would get a commission based on the gasoline gallonage of that dealer.

Q. Did he get a new dealer?

A. I would have to look at the records. I think there was something of that kind last year; two or three occasions.

Q. I should think if the salesman got a commission on the sales of accessories, I would think none of that 2035 would be properly allocable as an expense to direct cost so I am just asking you whether expenses of all kind correctly allocated or not, were put together here for the purpose of making an allocation based on your total dollar sales.

A. I think that is true.

Q. I understood that was so, but I just wanted to be sure there was no direct allocation of costs either to gasoline or other items.

A. No. It is just an allocation based on the percentage of sales of each item.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I now renew my motion to—

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment. There was another question I wanted to ask the witness before you proceeded with that.

Mr. Austin: Would you prefer to do it first? That is all right with me.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Finish the examination before the motion.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, I ask the indulgence of the Court to allow Mr. Ledbetter to make another computation. May we have a recess of five minutes? I think this will be the last one.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

(A short recess was taken.)

2036 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Reconvening.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Now, Mr. Ledbetter, there was an item for reserve for bad debts which was included in your 1939 figures of what amount?

A. $1805.21.

Q. And I believe you stated in answer to Mr. Austin's question just a few minutes ago that that had not been excluded from your operating costs for 1939. Have you made a computation now excluding that item from the 1939 operating costs on gasoline?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. And by what amount does it reduce the per gallonage operating costs of gasoline for 1939?

A. 65/1000 of a cent per gallon.

Q. Leaving the figure for 1939 at what point?

A. 1.386¢ per gallon.

Mr. Abbott: That is all.

Have you any further testimony?

Mr. Austin: Just one question on allocation, Mr. Ledbetter

Recross Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. In relation to that discount figure for 1939 of 2037 $2,146, you told us what those discounts were. I don't remember whether you said whether they were figures of discounts on gasoline entirely or whether they were partly on something else. Can you tell me that?

A. They were not discounts on gasoline; we don't have any at all on gasoline. They were other discounts, trade discounts, cash discounts.

Mr. Abbott: They are out now, anyway. So does it make any difference?

By Mr. Austin:

Q. What do you mean by trade and cash discounts?

A. Well, cash discounts is the discount for payment of a bill within a certain period.

Q. Well, that would be on gasoline, would it not?

A. No. We allow no discounts on gasoline, no cash discounts, nothing. Gasoline is cash business.

Q. Well, can you tell me on what items those discounts were allowed?

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment. If the Court please, it has been eliminated from the 1939 statement, it is, therefore, immaterial.

Mr. Austin: It may be immaterial for this computation.

Mr. Abbott: I object to it on the ground it is immaterial and irrelevant, having been eliminated 2038 from consideration as a part of the 1939 operating costs. It is not in the case, therefore has no relevancy, and I object to having any questions asked as to the meaning of a trade or cash discount for that reason.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection is overruled.

A. I have forgotten the question.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I want you to tell me what those discounts are and on what articles they are granted?

A. They are granted on tires, anti-freeze, batteries, spark plugs, some on motor oil, not very much; that applies both to the cash and trade discounts. No trade discounts on motor oil. That is sold net, subject to cash discount. Cash discounts on motor oil. Trade discounts on anti-freeze, things of that type; tires.

Mr. Austin: That is all I have.

Mr. Abbott: That is all. You may be excused.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Ledbetter, you are excused.

The Witness: Thank you, Judge.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Austin: Now, if your Honor please, I renew my motion to strike from the record the portions of Mr. Ledbetter's testimony which I described this morning by 2039 pages. And the motion, I assume, should extend to testimony given this afternoon which amended those figures. I have no means of making it definite as to pages at this time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The testimony you propose to strike relates to the witness's conclusions with reference to the cost of marketing the gas to the service stations he furnished, and also the cost of furnishing gasoline to the service stations his company operated; is that correct?

Mr. Austin: It is correct so far as it includes all the conclusions that the witness gave, and figures as to what he called the wholesale cost of distributing gasoline per gallon.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Those all entered into the final conclusion, did they, as to the cost?

Mr. Austin: I understand that they did. I made the motion this morning, I believe, chiefly upon the ground that his testimony was irrelevant and immaterial. I now wish to extend the ground of the motion to urge that this testimony is incompetent as well as irrelevant. And on that point I wish to point out that there have been numerous errors in these computations, some of which have been admitted, and perhaps some of which have been corrected, but in addition to that, it is now clear from the testi-
2040 mony of the witness that these computations involve an allocation of costs as between the wholesale business and the retail operated stations of the Wayne Oil Company.

It appears from the witness' testimony, for instance, that certain advertising costs have been included in this computation which were advertising costs of retail operators, or so far as paid by the Wayne Oil Company were paid merely as a participation in the cost of retail service station advertising.

It appears that advertising of stations operated by the Wayne Oil Company was included.

It also appears that depreciation of equipment of stations operated by the Wayne Oil Company was included.

And any attempt at segregation of those items, if any has been made, involves questions of expert accounting and accounting principle, which it does not appear that this witness has been qualified to make.

In view of the fact that this appears to be an inseparable mixture of retail and wholesale costs—the witness has testified he makes no separation of such costs on his books, but operates his retail stations upon the same accounting system with his wholesale stations—I submit that these figures do not even—on their face—present a correct analysis or computation of the wholesale cost of distributing gasoline by the Wayne Oil Company, and I submit 2041 that the witness has in submitting these figures not been shown to be qualified to make any such computation.

2042 Mr. Abbott: Now, if the Court please, the reason that I asked this morning that ruling on the motion be reserved until I had an opportunity to take the witness on redirect was this: He has, upon redirect examination, segregated retail operations from wholesale. As a matter of fact the testimony which he gave this afternoon and this morning shows that he treated his wholesale outlets, the dealer stations, and the few retail stations that he himself operated—when I say "he," I mean the Wayne Oil Company—as a matter of bookkeeping, on the same basis.

Therefore, the per gallonage cost of handling gasoline, selling and delivery of gasoline, would be the same per gallon whether it was a wholesale station or a retail station. There wouldn't, therefore, be any difference on the per gallon cost for any of these years and, of course, it must be borne in mind that in the year 1938 he had no retail stations and, therefore, there can be no question but that as to that year the figure that he has testified to as to the cost of operation, of wholesale operations, is, without any question, accurate for the year 1938 and, therefore, even if the Court should, by any chance, decide that there has been no proper allocation as between wholesale and retail, that conclusion could not, by any stretch of the imagination, be directed to the 1938 figures in which there were no retail operated outlets.

He has also eliminated in the testimony the item of reserve for bad debts, and after all those eliminations, the figure that he originally testified to as constituting the per gallonage cost of wholesale operation for the year 1939 has been reduced to the figure of 1.386¢ per gallon for the year 1939. That figure is submitted in view of these corrections, and the Government, of course, has brought to light everything that they could possibly think of that might constitute an allowable deduction. That figure, I submit, is a fair figure, and he has testified that he has segregated, as to that year, the wholesale and the retail figures as to the cost of operation of the Wayne Oil Company for the period in question. I don't think it can reasonably be argued as to this year or as to 1940, as to which year there were no changes excepting for a change of $32.43, which made only a 2044 microscopic difference in the figure for 1940 so infinitesimal as not to be entitled to any consideration, leaving the figure for that year practically the same as testified to yesterday, and so, upon the ground as stated by counsel this morning, that the figures are not reliable, I now submit that by reason of the mathematical theory that he had a uniform flow of gasoline which went both to his dealer outlets and to his retail outlets, and the objection was the same on both of those; same operations of the bulk plant, the same haulage, the same time consumed in delivering to a retail outlet as to a wholesale outlet, the per gallonage cost—I don't care whether it was a retail outlet or a wholesale outlet—was necessarily the same, because he put it through his books and treated it on the same basis.

Therefore, I submit that the figures for 193(in which he did have retail operations, as well as wholesale, do show an accurate segregation of the figures as to the wholesale and retail operations of the Wayne Oil Company.

Now, I have already stated with reference to the general objection which was made by counsel this morning, that testimony as to the operating cost per gallon of a jobber in this case is necessary and relevant on the subject which has been often referred to by your Honor, namely, the 2045 opportunity of indulging in price cutting in the event that the operating costs were appreciably less than the differential between the tank car and the tank wagon method of delivery by this supplier.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You need spend no time on that.

Mr. Abbott: Now, I also urge in the record that this testimony has a further purpose, intending to show, just as in the wording of the act, the Robinson-Patman Act itself, to the effect that the differential may be justified, may be defended by testimony to show that it was reasonable, in view of the cost, the difference in the cost of selling and delivery under the varying methods in which the merchandise was delivered, and that is the one purpose for which the testimony is offered in this record. I say it is for a dual purpose, and I think that for both purposes it should be left in the record.

I think on the question of the accuracy of the figures and on the question of the segregation, we have very painstakingly reduced that, now, to a point where the witness himself has testified that it represents an accurate segregation as between wholesale and retail operations of the Wayne Oil Company, and that these figures now accurately reflect the per gallonage cost of sale and delivery at wholesale of gasoline for the three periods in question and 2046 as to the 1938 period I again direct your Honor's attention to the fact that there can be no question as to that year as to the accuracy of the figure, because in that year there were no operations of the Wayne Oil Company at retail.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I take it you also contend that the witness has sufficient basis to arrive at a proper conclusion as to the cost of delivery to his own retail stations?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, indeed, because he testified that the cost of delivery to his own retail stations was essentially the same as the cost of sale and delivery to other stations, which were supplied on a dealer basis; there being no difference in the way that he handled those deliveries on his books.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will hear from counsel solely with reference to the year 1938.

Mr. Austin: Well, as to the year 1938, my contention is that there is still an allocation required.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That year the Wayne Company operated no service stations, did it?

Mr. Austin: It did not, but he, nevertheless, testified that certain advertising of retail service stations was contributed to by the Wayne Oil Company, and that that contribution is included in the expenses. It is my contention that that is strictly a retail service station expense 2047 and not an expense of the whole distribution of gasoline.

Mr. Abbott: To get the picture straight, he testified that was an advertising expense which he put on in order to facilitate and further his wholesale operations, and in order to make the market distribution of gasoline wider by advertising to the public, and that this expense was participated in 50% by the Wayne Oil Company, and 50% by his dealers.

2048 Mr. Austin: Yes, and that over half of this figure, here, was his contribution to that.

Mr. Abbott: That's right, but that is a wholesale operation.

Mr. Austin: Depreciation, also, on equipment at the retail service station, in my opinion, is not part of the wholesale operation; at least not unless it is considered in connection with rentals, and I don't find on this list, either—I don't find here as to operating expenses, at least, any reference to rentals. I don't know whether there were any rentals, but I assume no rentals were included in the receipts that were used for the purpose of making the allocation. Do you know about that?

Mr. Abbott: Rentals of what? Dealer stations?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: I assume that that was figured in. I don't think there is any testimony on that. We can't go beyond the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Are you ready for a ruling?

Mr. Austin: Yes, your Honor. I had one other very minor thing I was going to say but it slips my mind at the moment.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner doesn't question the good faith of the witness Ledbetter, but he is 2049 of the opinion, and so holds, that the witness had no sufficient basis for the conclusion he reached. Accordingly, the motion to strike is granted, and not only the testimony indicated, but all relating testimony appearing in the record is stricken.

Mr. Abbott: Now, do I understand, if the Court please, that that includes testimony for the year 1938?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes, sir.

Mr. Abbott: In which he had no retail operations at all?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is correct.

Mr. Abbott: May I ask the Court, also on the record, whether the ruling is made on the basis that there was no proper allocation as between gasoline sales and other sales of merchandise for those years?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Partially upon that ground. Partially upon the ground that the Examiner is of the opinion that there was no sufficient basis for any of the conclusion arrived at.

Mr. Abbott: I wish to draw the Examiner's attention to the fact that in the Taggart testimony your Honor permitted an allocation—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is, any of the ultimate conclusions arrived at.

Mr. Abbott: What I was about to say is, in the 2050 examination of Mr. Taggart he arrived at the allocation as between gasoline and other merchandise sold by gasoline station operators on the same basis as Mr. Ledbetter used in his computation as to costs.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: To that extent the allocation was identical but from there on there was a broad distinction.

Mr. Abbott: Wherein does that distinction exist? Do you mean as between wholesale and retail sales?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes. Elements that enter into costs in both the wholesale and items that enter into costs of retail. The Examiner hasn't the record before him. In order to make an accurate and detailed statement it would be necessary for him to examine the record. The ruling of the Examiner stands.

Now before we proceed further the Examiner, of his own motion—and he does this in order that he may fully apprise counsel for the Respondents of his conclusions—will entertain a motion to strike from the record the testimony of the witness Ledbetter with reference to two offers made by two separate oil companies to furnish gas to his company, the offer having been made in the month of December, 1940; to strike all the testimony relating thereto from the record.

Mr. Abbott: Do I understand that the Examiner's suggestion is that this be done by the attorney for the 2051 Commission?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner will do it of his own motion and the reason that he is doing it is that he desires to be fair with counsel for the Respondent. If the record stood as it is the Examiner would wholly disregard the testimony in his report and he is advising counsel now, by stating that he will either entertain a motion of counsel, or he will, of his own motion, direct that the testimony be stricken.

2052 Mr. Abbott: May I ask the Examiner the reason for that observation?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reason for that conclusion is this: the testimony was adduced presumably under the proviso to Section 2-b of the Clayton Act; am I correct?

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment. I will have to refer to my book.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

The provision of the statute, as the Examiner understands, under which the testimony referred to was offered, is the proviso to Section 2-b of the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act. The proviso is as follows: "That nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Respondent here had been furnishing the services complained of four years before this offer was made, and therefore the facilities
2053 furnished could not have been furnished by the Respondent to meet competition or the prices offered by competitors for the offers tendered were four years after the Respondent commenced furnishing the facilities and the prices complained of to the four jobbers.

Mr. Abbott: Now, let me ask you: yesterday you made the observation that we couldn't introduce any testimony of other competitive offers made previous to July, 1936; is that correct? That is the effective date of the Robinson-Patman Act?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is correct.

Mr. Abbott: Now, assuming that a jobber became a customer of the Respondent previous to July of 1936, and was put on a tank car basis, I understand you to say that we couldn't offer in evidence any competitive offers on the part of other oil companies to supply the jobber, if those offers were made before July of 1936, and yet you are now saying that if he went on a tank car basis before July, 1936, we couldn't put in evidence any offers made after that date, either?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner rules that it would have been necesary for you to have shown at the inception of the effective date of the Clayton Act that it was necessary for this Respondent to continue to maintain those prices in order to meet competition.

2054 Mr. Abbott: Well, of course, that presents a question of law for the Commission.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is correct.

Mr. Abbott: And I submit that it should not be acted upon by the Examiner at this time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the Examiner is merely apprising you of the fact that unless counsel moves to strike the testimony, the Examiner will direct that the testimony be stricken. And he is doing that to apprise you of the fact that he will wholly disregard it in his report.

Mr. Abbott: Of course, both of those propositions involve matters of law, and I submit to your Honor that as to any tank car customer put on a tank car basis before July of 1936, upon your own ruling, we are foreclosed to show any competitive offers either before July, 1936, or after July, 1936, under the statement that is made by your Honor. In other words, it forecloses us both ways.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the law wasn't effective until the effective date of the Clayton Act; therefore, it wasn't necessary that there should have been any competition or that you had to reduce your prices in order to meet competition. But from the effective date of this Act, if you continued to maintain those prices, it is necessary for you to show that it was incumbent upon you to 2055 do so in order to meet competition.

Mr. Abbott: Yes, and I submit—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And the only evidence that you have tendered is evidence of some offers made four years later.

Mr. Abbott: Well, they have a tendency to show that, I submit; and it is also testified that Mr. Ledbetter was solicited by one of these competitors for several months previous to December 13, 1940.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is only a difference of a few months.

Mr. Austin: There was no offer of any price, anyway, and this specifically refers to a lower price of competitor.

Mr. Abbott: There was an offer made, and there were lower prices both on December 10, 1940, and December 13, 1940.

Mr. Austin: But prior to this time he testified there had been no offer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner will entertain such a motion if counsel desires to make it, otherwise the Examiner will, on his own motion—

Mr. Abbott: It doesn't make any difference one way or the other if you are going to disregard it; whether there is a motion made or not, is immaterial.

2056 Trial Examiner Ballinger: I want to be as fair as I can with counsel so that you will not feel you have been taken by surprise when the report is submitted.

Mr. Abbott: Of course, here is the situation, your Honor: we can only introduce testimony as to the offers that have been bona fidely made—I mean on the part of competitors; therefore, we are obliged to take the situation and the facts just as they are.

Now, I think that we are entitled to show all those matters in the record. We are entitled to bring in the record all the matters of defense that we have.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner has permitted you to incorporate them in the record, so that the record fully portrays the situation.

Mr. Abbott: That is all we ask.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And from the Examiner's ruling you have an appeal to the Commission, and from the Commission, if you desire to pursue the matter further, to the Courts.

2057 Mr. Abbott: I realize that. Well, I think we are adequately protected.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If the Examiner hadn't desired to afford you that opportunity he would have eliminated the testimony before it ever reached the record.

Mr. Abbott: I appreciate that. But I don't think the Examiner intends to do that, and I don't think he should do that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I make the motion at this time that the testimony of Mr. Ledbetter, all testimony with respect to certain alleged offers, which he stated were made to him by oil companies, other than the Standard Oil Company, for the sale of gasoline to the Wayne Oil Company, be—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And which were made during the month of December, 1940.

Mr. Austin: Yes, your Honor, the testimony so shows.

Be stricken from the record, because I am definitely of the opinion as your Honor stated that such testimony has no probative force in showing that a lower price of the Respondent was given to meet—in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, within the meaning of Section 2-B of the Robinson-Patman Act.

2058 Mr. Abbott: Now, for the record I want to say that I resist the motion as suggested by the Examiner, and as now made by the attorney for the Commission, upon the ground that such testimony does come within the proviso of Section 2-B of the Robinson-Patman Act, which provides: "Provided however that nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

I therefore resist the motion and ask that it be not granted.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion to strike is granted.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Citrin take the stand.

JACOB A. CITRIN was thereupon called as a witness for the Respondent and, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. State your full name.
A. Jacob A. Citrin,
Q. Where do you live, Mr. Citrin?
2059 A. 507 West Grixdale, Detroit.
Q. What is your business, Mr. Citrin?
A. I am engaged in the oil business.
Q. And in what firm?
A. Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.
Q. Is that a partnership or a corporation?
A. It is a partnership.
Q. And who are the other partners besides yourself?
A. Mr. Kolb and my father.
Q. Is it a three-way partnership?
A. It is based on a percentage, forty, forty, and twenty.
Q. What I mean to say is are there three equal partners or is one of the wives a partner?
A. Well, Mr. Kolb and Mrs. Kolb own their percentage jointly.
Q. And you own your percentage singly; is that right?
A. That's right.
Q. How long have you been engaged in the oil business?
A. About twenty years.
Q. And when did you first embark in that business?

A. Late in 1920.

Q. How did you start in the operation of the oil business?

A. As a boy I worked a short time for my brother who owned a service station.

Q. And did you in 1920 buy a service station yourself?

2060 A. [illegible] did.

Q. Is that located at 8611 Linwood Avenue?

A. It was.

2061 Q. What brand of gasoline was sold at that station?

A. Lincoln gas.

Q. Had you met Mr. Kolb at that time?

A. I had not.

Q. When did you first meet him?

A. I would say around 1923.

Q. And at that time did he have a different kind of business than the oil business?

A. He had just arrived from Baltimore, where he worked for his uncle, and he was looking to enter into some business.

Q. And did he have an accessory business on Fenkel Avenue?

A. He did buy an accessory store on Fenkel.

Q. That is before you went into partnership with him, was it?

A. That's right.

Q. And this place was on Fenkel Avenue near Dexter Boulevard, was it?

A. It was.

Q. And you decided, did you, to go into partnership with him?

A. Yes.

Q. Was the partnership—

Mr. Austin: He decided, too, didn't he?

2062 By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Well, was it mutual? You had a mutual agreement to go into a partnership?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that partnership with reference to both locations, the one on Linwood and the one on Fenkel?

A. No.

Q. As to which?

A. First we entered into this accessory store.

Q. On a partnership basis?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What is the date of the formation of that partnership?

The Witness: I would say it was around 1923.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. And did you still retain the service station on Linwood in your own name?

A. I did, that's right.

Q. Not in the partnership?

A. No.

Q. That was not in the partnership?

A. That is right.

Q. Later did you build a service station on Fenkel Avenue near Dexter?

A. We did.

2063 Q. And was it operated by you alone or in the partnership?

A. We bought the land as a partnership, and then we erected the service station.

Q. You built the service station?

A. That's right.

Q. And did you operate that service station at the start as a partnership?

A. We did.

Q. But later did you take in the Linwood Avenue station in the partnership?

A. We did.

Q. Now, you say that you originally sold at your Linwood Avenue station Lincoln gasoline and petroleum products?

A. We did.

Q. Under the brand name of Linco?

A. Yes, I believe they call their gasoline Lincoln gasoline.

Q. While the station on Fenkel Avenue was being built on the land that you bought, did you change your brand of gasoline at that time while the building was being erected on Fenkel Avenue from Lincoln to some other brand?

A. When we completed the station on Fenkel and Dexter, we had also—yes; we changed the gas to Standard.

Q. Changed at that point?

A. That's right.

2064 Q. That was about 1923?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. From that time on did you acquire other service stations in the partnership?

A. We did.

Q. Was the next one built at 8620 Linwood Avenue?

A. Yes, the next one was built on the original location. We shared a corner between the Moran Brothers, who operated a battery station, and I operated a service station; the lease having been on a month to month basis, necessitated us to go across and buy that corner. We did buy that corner and we erected a service station.

Q. That was across the street?

A. Across the street.

Q. From 8611?

A. That's right.

Q. What intersecting street it near?

A. Pingree.

Q. Did you later erect a service station at Linwood and Buena Vista?

A. We did.

Q. Just south of Davison?

A. Yes.

2065 Q. Did you later, after that, erect another station at Linwood and Rochester?

A. We did.

Q. Did you about the year 1926 acquire bulk storage from anyone?

A. It was between the year of 1926 and 1928, that we acquired bulk storage.

Q. From whom?

A. From another jobber. We shared storage with another jobber.

Q. And was the name of the jobber the Carnick Oil Company?

A. It was.

Q. And where was the bulk storage plant located?

A. It was in the rear of a coal yard on six mile road, right near Swift Avenue.

Q. Is that east or west of Woodward Avenue?

A. It is east of Woodward Avenue.

Q. And did you take shipments of gasoline at that bulk plant?

A. We did.

Q. Was that Standard Oil Gasoline?

A. It was.

Q. Well, what year was that that you went on a tank car basis? I mean, at the Carnick Oil Company bulk plant; if you did?

2066 A. It was between the year of 1926 and 1928. I am not quite sure; I am quite indefinite as to the exact date of starting. I haven't been able to just locate the records, but it was between the year of 1926 and 1928.

Q. Previous to that year and from 1920 on, at these various station addresses that I have mentioned, did you receive your supply of gasoline from either the Lincoln Oil Company or the Standard Oil Company on anything other than the tank wagon prices; tank wagon basis?

A. Well, the reason for purchasing gasoline from the Lincoln Oil Company was that at the time they owned a company station on Warren and 24th and they offered that station to us at a low rental as a consideration of purchasing their gasoline.

Q. And did you take over that station?

A. We did.

Q. When was that with reference to the time that you had the station erected on Fenkel and Dexter Boulevard; afterwards or before?

A. It was prior to the date.

Q. Before?

A. Yes.

Q. The question that I asked you was did you receive your gasoline from Lincoln Oil Company or from the Standard Oil when you had these stations on Linwood, mostly, and on Fenkel Avenue; did you receive them in tank 2067 car or tank wagon deliveries; your supply of gasoline?

A. At first we received them at tank wagon deliveries.

Q. Was that from the Lincoln as well as the Standard Oil?

A. From the Lincoln as well as the Standard Oil.

Q. And did you pay the regular tank wagon prices for your supply?

A. We did.

Q. Now did you do that with the Lincoln Oil all the time from 1920, when you first acquired the 8611 Linwood Avenue station, up to the time that you took over Standard Oil Company as a supplier?

A. We did.

Q. You received deliveries from Lincoln Oil on a tank wagon basis?

A. We did.

Q. But you say you had some consideration on the rental of a station on Warren Avenue?

A. That is correct.

Q. But you leased from the Lincoln Oil?

A. That's right.

Q. Now after you acquired your bulk plant storage—let me ask you this: What was the occasion or reason why you acquired bulky storage from the Carnick Oil Company?

A. Having had a few service stations at that time, and knowing that there were jobbers who had as many 2068 service stations or less than we had, who had been buying on a tank car basis, we had started to negotiate many connections in order to obtain tank car prices and we found that we had to have a siding and tank facilities.

Q. Who did you find that out from?

A. Well, the first company we inquired from was the Paragon. It was a Toledo company, at that time.

Q. What is the full name of that company, do you know?

A. It was Paragon Refining Company.

Q. What negotiation did you have with them? State what was said and where it was and what date, approximately, as far as you can remember?

A. As far as I can remember we were aware that they were supplying the gas to Waco; that is a jobbing outfit in Detroit.

Q. Is that the Schlee Brothers?

A. Yes.

Q. They are the ones that made the trip around the world, aren't they, in the airplane?

2069 A. That's right, and we believed that from the gas that Lincoln was delivering to us, also was sold to them by the Paragon, and we had inquired—I believe there was a representative that contacted us.

Q. Of the Paragon?

A. Of the Paragon, yes.

Q. Was that before you acquired the Carnick Oil bulk plant facilities?

A. Well, it was—I am just trying to remind myself—

Q. Take your time and be sure about it.

A. —whether we had the storage first or afterward. I believe it was before we acquired the storage.

Q. State what negotiations you had, giving the conversation, and the date, and the place.

A. It was a representative of that company that talked to us, and we told him the approximate gallonage that we had, or expected to have, with the additional outlet.

Mr. Austin: What year was that, Mr. Citrin?

The Witness: I would say that was around—well, between 1926 and 1928. I just can't remember the exact year.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Whenever it was, you were still acquiring gasoline on a tank wagon basis, were you not?

A. That's right.

2070 Q. Now, state what the conversation was which constituted the negotiations with Paragon?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I would like to raise a question here, also. I will object to this line of testimony on the ground it is immaterial as to what conversation he had with other oil companies as long ago as 1926 and 1928.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner doesn't perceive the materiality of the testimony. He would like to be enlightened.

Mr. Abbott: As I say, it puts us in this position. You say we cannot introduce testimony as to any competitive offers by competitors previous to July, 1936, and yet you have ruled that if we put a man on a tank car basis before 1936, that we can't introduce testimony as to any offers made after we put him on a tank car basis. Now, you see, that forecloses us from putting in any evidence of competitive offers in a case of that kind, and I don't think that that is the law. It can't be the law.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I don't think you have correctly stated the Examiner's position. The Examiner hasn't held that after the effective date of this Act you could not have shown that offers were submitted, and that it was necessary for you to maintain the price in 2071 order to meet competition, but the only testimony that has been tendered here was testimony with reference to other instances four years after the effective date—more ~~than four years after the effective date of the Act.~~

Mr. Abbott: I know, but you are assuming that we have no other testimony on behalf of the officers of the Company, the Respondent, to the effect—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now you are proposing to offer testimony, again, that seven years ante-dates the effective date of the Act.

Mr. Hanley: Suppose it were 30 years, your Honor, when they went on the tank car basis? Isn't the Commission interested in knowing what the development of these companies may be and what the relations between the Respondent and these companies are, and why they are?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, I permitted the testimony to go into the record, but the Examiner directed that it be stricken. You have all the benefits of the testimony and exceptions to the Examiner's rulings, so that your rights are fully preserved.

Mr. Hanley: Was any testimony stricken as to competitive offers?

Mr. Abbott: Yes; the two offers of the Aurora Gasoline Company and National Refining Company made in December, 1940.

2072 Mr. Hanley: To the Wayne Oil Company?

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Mr. Austin: I have an objection pending and I would like to get a ruling on it, but I would like to say, before your Honor rules, that in using this objection, I have not taken any position, one way or the other, as to the admission of bona fide offers to a customer of the Standard Oil Company within a reasonable time prior to 1936. My objection is based upon these conversations which go back to 1926 to 1928, which, I say, on their face, are so far back that they would have no probative force.

Mr. Abbott: How far back of 1936 would you suggest?

Mr. Austin: I won't attempt to say, but it would depend upon the particular case. I do think that the objection is proper here.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Tell me what the object of this testimony is; what you think it tends to prove in this proceeding?

Mr. Abbott: We are going to show, in this witness' case, a course of dealing with reference to his company of many competitive offers made between 1926 and the present time which made it necessary for the Respondent to maintain the jobber, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, o 2073 the tank car basis in order to keep from losing thei business, which the Respondent would have been deprived of if they had not met the competitive offers o other persons who made such offers between—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you think—

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment, if the Court please—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You think this testimony is material to your case, do you?

Mr. Abbott: I do.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner will admit it subject to a motion to strike.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

Do you wish to make a statement on the record, Judg Hanley?

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, the matter to which you evidently desire to address yourself has been disposed of by the Examiner.

Mr. Hanley: I understand that, and I want to take an exception on the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The exception has already been taken.

Mr. Hanley: Do I understand I cannot except and state the reasons on the record to the rulings of the Court, which reasons the Respondent feels the Court should 2074 be advised of at this time?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Counsel will be afforded full opportunity to present those reasons to the Commission. The Examiner declines to hear counsel upon that question at this time.

Mr. Abbott: What was the date of the filing of the Complaint in this case, Mr. Austin?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Complaint is dated November 29, 1940.

Mr. Austin: And it was served on the following day.

Mr. Abbott: So it was served on November 30, 1940; is that correct?

Mr. Austin: Unless November 30th were Sunday, in which case it was served December 1st.

Mr. Hanley: As I understand the effect of the ruling of the Court, it is that no offers subsequent to that time are material?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No offers subsequent to which time?

Mr. Hanley: To the filing of this Complaint.

Mr. Austin: I think the Examiner's statement on the record at the time will show that.

Mr. Hanley: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

2075 Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record. Read the last question.

(Last question was read as follows: "Now, state what the conversation was which constituted the negotiations with Paragon.")

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I mean, give the purport of the conversations and state the time and place. Was it here in Detroit?

A. It was in Detroit; at our station on Linwood. A representative contacted me, and, as I recall, at that time, there were several jobbers, who I had related to this representative, and I pointed out that those jobbers not having any more outlets than we had, were buying in tank cars, and we felt that we were going to expand and that we wanted to negotiate a deal.

2076 I pointed out to them the various jobbers having been in business and who had bought gas in tank cars. If you would like to, why, I would like to—if I may be permitted, I would like to call out some of the jobbers.

Q. You may state what your personal knowledge was as to the situation that existed at that time?

A. Well, the Lincoln Oil Company was buying in tank cars. The Great Western Oil Company; Waco; Savin Oil; Zip; Wilson Oil Company—and Indian Gas were sold, I believe, through a distributor at that time.

Q. Was this in 1926?

A. Yes, between the years 1926 and 1928, when we negotiated.

Q. So you had that knowledge of the Detroit area situation, did you?

A. Yes.

Q. When you talked to the representative of Paragon?

A. That's right.

Q. You may state further what conversation you had with him.

A. The first he told us that we would have to have facilities and he saw no reason why we shouldn't be able to buy in tank cars.

Q. Was anything said about the price at that time?

A. No, there was no price discussed at all.

2077 Q. Was there anything said about the difference between the price of tank car delivery and the price of tank wagon delivery?

A. Well, we knew there was quite a differential. I just couldn't remember right now as to what the differential was at that time. I know the differential at that time was—some cases, there, it ran between two and three cents.

Q. It was more then, than it is now?

A. Oh, yes:

Q. Proceed with the conversation that you had with him?

A. He was going to investigate and we were trying to obtain facilities.

Q. At that time you didn't have the Carnick Oil Company bulk plant?

A. No. Right after that we negotiated with Carnick to share his storage and we had also been building this station.

Q. On Fenkel Avenue?

A. At Fenkel. So we went to the Standard at that time —wait a minute, now. We did handle Standard Gasoline at that time.

Q. You were getting Standard Oil Gasoline in tank wagons, is that right?

A. Yes, in tank wagons.

Q. What stations were they supplying at that time?

A. The station at Fenkel and Dexter.

2078 Q. Any other?

A. And we were buying at 8620 Linwood.

Q. From Standard, also?

A. Standard, yes.

Q. The rest of the stations were being supplied by whom?

A. Then we had this Buena Vista station; Linwood and Buena Vista station.

Q. Who supplied that?

A. Standard. We had one station at Rochester, we bought gas from White Star, at that time.

Q. Was that bought on the tank wagon basis and price?

A. Yes.

Q. In other words, at that time, previous to this conversation with Paragon, you had always bought on the tank wagon basis, is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. With reference to the conversation concerning the bulk plant—

A. You mean the conversation between this representative?

Q. Of Paragon; was there anything else said at that time?

A. No, there was nothing else, only that he was to advise us and we weren't sure at that time whether we wanted to buy from them. We were just sort of feeling our way. We negotiated this storage with Carnick and went to Standard on the basis that we felt we had sufficient gallonage that we wanted to combine those 2079 outlets and that we were going to buy in tank car lots.

Q. Whom did you contact with the Standard Oil?

A. The first I contacted was Mr. Bennett, who was the sales manager, who referred me to the assistant manager, Mr. Carrington and Mr. Carrington took the matter up with Mr. Raupagh and I believe that several weeks—

Q. Did you talk with Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes.

Q. Personally?

A. Several weeks had elapsed and finally they had started to sell us in tank car.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When was that?

The Witness: Between the year of 1926 and 1928.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Can you more definitely fix the date of that by any of your records?

A. Well, having started off in sort of a small way, and moving several times, we just sort of lost the records, that far back.

Mr. Abbott: That will be identified, your Honor, by the records of the Company, then.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I don't think it is material.

Mr. Austin: I think it is in the record now, if we 2080 go back to Mr. Raupagh's testimony.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I am merely trying to get some starting point.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Before the Standard Oil put you on a tank car basis did you acquire any other bulk plant?

A. It was a while later that we had to acquire another bulk plant.

Q. Did they put you on the tank car basis while you only had the facilities of the Carnick Oil Company bulk plant?

A. If I may explain this—

Q. Go right ahead.

A. Just in my own way; to the best of my recollection. It later turned out that the Standard Oil were not aware of the fact that we were sharing this storage with another jobber and Mr. Raupagh, having found that out, has advised me that unless we had our own independent railroad facilities, storage and trucks, that they would not be able to go on selling us.

Q. When did he tell you that? Was it after you went on the tank car basis?

A. It was a short while after that. I know that we were put to a considerable amount of trouble.

We had sort of a lease with Carnick on this storage and the Standard Oil Company having refused, or 2081 threatened to refuse to deliver, we were sort of on the spot with Carnick. We had—we were tied up to him and I know we went back several times and tried to straighten the matter out and Mr. Raupagh put it to me in this manner. He said, "Now here: Assuming that we would let you handle the gasoline on the basis where you are now getting it with Carnick in the same storage. On that basis nothing would stop any dealer or bunch of dealers who would get together and acquire one tank, and they could all ship their gas in one tank and they would want to buy in tank car lots," so they said, "if you are a distributor and you want to continue to buy in tank cars, you must make an investment, have your own trucks and make your own deliveries," and they certainly wouldn't change their attitude at all. It was either get the storage or else they were going to stop selling us.

Q. What did you do after they told you that?

A. Well, we, at that time, bought the corner at Livernois and Lyndon.

Q. Is that where one of your bulk plants is now located?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you purchase that outright or lease it?

A. We did. We purchased that outright.

Q. Did you erect the building that constitutes the bulk plant?

A. Yes. We erected a small warehouse. We had 2082 a two-car railroad siding installed for us. We also erected, in connection, a service station and offices.

2083 Q. Did you erect any tank car storage?

A. Yes, we installed three 20,000-gallon tanks.

Q. What year was this?

A. I would say it was, oh, I'd say, six or eight months from the time we started buying gas originally in tank cars.

Q. In the meantime—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Can you place that in any one year?

The Witness: I would say it was early in '29; either the latter part of '28 or '29.

Q. Now, after you went on a tank car basis, with deliveries made to the Carnick Oil Company plant, was there any stoppage of your supply on that basis until you got the Lyndon and Livernois plant erected?

A. No. We told them we had bought this property; that is, that we were having the storage erected, and that the matter would be straightened out, and they continued for a while to deliver on the same basis.

Q. Then, when you had the Lyndon and Livernois bulk plant finished, did you begin to receive deliveries of tank cars at that plant on the sidetracks that you had provided?

A. We did.

2084 Now, you first went on the tank car basis with deliveries being made to the Carnick Oil Company on Six Mile Road east of Woodward Avenue—about what year did you say?

A. Between the year of '26 and '28.

Q. And first when you went on that basis, did you operate on a dual basis both as wholesaler and retailer, or how?

A. We operated solely as a retailer.

Q. That is to say you sold your entire supply of gasoline at your own operated service stations?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, did you change that method of operation after you went on a tank car basis?

A. We did.

Q. When did you do it, and what were the circumstances?

A. Having acquired several wholesale—that is, retail dealers—we found that we would be required to decide whether we were to operate either as a retailer or a wholesaler.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When did you discover that?

The Witness: Well, I would say around 1935.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Well, before that, after you went on the tank car basis in 1926 to 1928, what price did you pay for your gasoline that you received on the tank car basis from the 2085 Standard Oil Company, delivered on tracks at your bulk plant, either at the Carnick Oil Company plant or at your own plant at Lyndon and Livernois, what price did you pay?

A. It was a cent and a half below the tank wagon price.

Q. Did that vary from time to time?

A. It did.

Q. Is it your recollection that it varied back into 1926-28 period or was it fairly constant?

A. I would say it varied in later years.

Q. At that time it was fairly constant?

A. Yes.

Q. But you stated awhile ago that the prevailing differential between tank wagon and tank car prices in those days was more than a cent and a half, I thought?

A. It was on other brands. We knew that the other jobbers were getting a better price than we were.

Q. You refer to the jobbers that you have mentioned in your testimony this afternoon?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, why was it, then, that you decided to take on the contract with the Standard Oil on the basis of 1½¢ differential, if you could get more from other suppliers, more differential?

A. First of all, when we started at Fenkel and Dexter, that station having been somewhat one of the first 2086 stations down in that section, we started to do a tremendous business there, and, of course, we were sort of attributing a large part to the products we were selling, and we just felt that we would be better off to continue with Standard inasmuch as we had already established a certain amount of business in the stations we had.

Q. Was that about the time that Dexter Avenue opened up as a business street?

A. Yes, we completed the station just about the time they paved Dexter through Fenkel.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was that about the year 1929 or '30?

The Witness: Oh, it was prior to that time.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Dexter Boulevard had not been developed as a business street originally, had it?

A. Well—

Q. I mean before it was paved it was a residential section?

A. Residential, yes.

Q. Down around Chicago Boulevard and from there north to Fenkel Avenue?

A. With the exception of a piece right by the railroad crossing there, there were two or three—well, the motorbus company was there.

2087 Q. And there are also some factories there at the river?

A. Yes, Borden's.

Q. Aside from that it was mostly a residential street?

A. Residential, yes.

Q. And it later developed into a business street with a consequent increase in traffic and patronage of gasoline stations, did it not?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, after you went on the tank car basis with the Standard Oil Company and acquired your bulk storage at Lyndon and Livernois Avenue; I will ask you whether you had any negotiations with a Mr. Bailey of the Wilson Oil Company?

A. We did.

Q. What gasoline did they distribute? What brand of gasoline?

A. At the time when we talked to Mr. Bailey they were appointed sole distributors for Hi-Speed.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Will you please state when that was?

The Witness: That was about 1930.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. That is when you had the conversation with Mr. Bailey of the Wilson Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And how did that come about?

2088 A. Well, there again it is sort of hard to connect up just how we happened to—whether they came to us or we went there. Now, I will tell you, when we originally purchased gas from the Lincoln, we were quite friendly with one of the owners down there, Mr. Matoski, one of his sons was quite a friend of mine, and they were quite familiar with this Wilson set-up that they had obtained from Hi-Speed, that is Hicock.

Q. At that time Highland Oil hadn't been organized?

A. No; they hadn't been in the picture. I know that a meeting was arranged. We met Mr. Bailey—

Q. When you say "we" whom do you mean?

A. Mr. Kolb and I. And at that time he introduced us to a Mr. Van Kuren, who was a direct representative of Hicock.

Mr. Austin: Did the witness state when this took place?

The Witness: I would say around 1930.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. The Hicock Oil Company you mentioned, where did it have its offices?

A. Toledo.

Q. And did you ever go down there to have any of these discussions in connection with Hi-Speed?

A. Both Mr. Kolb and myself.

2089 Q. Mr. Kolb and you?

A. Yes.

Q. Who was instrumental in getting you to go down there?

A. As I stated, we were introduced to Mr. Van Kuren who was the representative of Mr. Hicock, who suggested that we take a ride to Toledo; that he would be glad to furnish the car and take us out there and have us meet Mr. Hicock. A date was set, and Mr. Van Kuren took us out to Toledo. We met Mr. Hicock after business hours, it was around, I would say around 7 o'clock in the evening.

Q. Was that at his office?

A. At his office, yes.

Q. That was an old frame house?

A. It was a sort of a house; it was either an apartment house or—it was a pretty good sized house.

Q. That is where the Hicock Oil Company had its office in Toledo?

A. That's right. I remember he pointed out various rooms; one room was the printing, and furnished the advertising; he took us into another room and showed us a photograph of various service stations.

Q. Mr. Hicock was present, was he?

A. Oh, yes: Yes.

Q. Was Mr. Kirkbride present, the vice president of the company?

2090 A. No. There was one man he introduced us to, I believe he was in charge of the advertising. I can't remember the name.

Q. What conversation did you have with Mr. Hicock in the presence of Mr. Kolb?

A. Well, naturally Mr. Van Kuren must have previously advised them as to our coming out there. We got into the conversation of entering into a similar deal such as was made between them and the Wilson Oil Company.

Q. Let me ask you this: at that time you were dealing with Standard Oil on a tank car basis, were you?

A. Yes.

Q. I mean the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Proceed.

A. He proceeded in outlining the advantages that we would have in making a deal with them, and told us about the way that they would make the deal. They would offer us a guaranteed contract, a margin, rather, of 6½¢ per gallon. In those days the margin was based from the retail price to the consumer.

Q. In other words, 6½¢ below the retail price to the consumer?

A. That is correct. In other words, the dealer margin would come out first, and whatever would remain would be the jobber's margin.

2091 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do I understand that you were to have a differential of 6½¢ a gallon?

The Witness: No, your Honor. 6½¢ was the price under the retail. In other words, if a motorist would buy the gas, we would buy the same gas and we would sell to the motorist at 6½¢ below—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I mean a differential between the purchase and sale price of 6½¢?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Austin: Not between the purchase and sale price of the jobber. Between the retail service station price—

The Witness: That is right.

Mr. Austin: —and the jobber price?

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Austin: Now, in between you have got the retail margin, and secondly the wholesale margin, if I understand it correctly?

The Witness: That is right.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Is that correct, Mr. Citrin, in order to confirm Mr. Austin's testimony?

A. That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let us get this straight.

2092 You were to buy it at 6½¢ above the retail price; is that correct?

The Witness: Below.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Below the retail price?

The Witness: Yes, below the retail price.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Was there any discussion of taxes in connection with that?

A. No.

Q. In other words—

A. That was the net price to us.

Q. The net price excluding taxes?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. In other words, this 6½¢ margin didn't include any taxes that you had to absorb?

A. No.

Q. Now, was there anything else in the deal that they discussed and offered to you at that time?

A. Well, they offered us unlimited credit facilities in the way of—

Q. What do you mean by that?

A. Well, first of all in order for us to get that kind of a deal they claimed that they would have to have us assign to them a certain portion of the stock of the company; we would have to incorporate.

2093 Q. In other words, in order to comply with their arrangement you would have to change your structure from a partnership to a corporation?

A. To a corporation, that is right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And take them in as stockholders?

The Witness: They would get 51 per cent of the common stock. We would—our investment would be returned to us by preferred stock.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. In other words, the amount that you had invested in the business you would acquire or keep by initial preferred stock?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I think counsel is doing a little too much testifying here.

Mr. Abbott: I didn't suggest that. He said it and I merely reiterated it.

Mr. Austin: The witness has been stating conclusions as to what was offered, rather than stating what was said. I haven't objected to that. But please, if he is going to give the conclusions, let him make it himself.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I would like to inquire of counsel how this becomes material?

Mr. Abbott: If your Honor please, we have a right—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Here is one outfit selling their stock to another outfit in which they are to become a part owner to the extent of 51 per cent of the common stock. 2094

Mr. Abbott: That is true.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you think that can afford any basis for establishing competition? I would like to hear from you on it.

Mr. Abbott: I am not going to say very much on that proposition, but here is a case where the margin was guaranteed per gallon on a Hi-Speed gasoline, which he testifies here the gasoline is comparable in quality to that of Standard Oil house brand gasoline, 6½¢ margin per gallon below the retail price, excluding taxes—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Provided he organized a company and took them in as partners and gave them a part of the profit.

Mr. Abbott: Not as partners. They were to get their investment back.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I don't mean as partners, but stockholders.

Mr. Abbott: They were to get their investment in the business back, or guaranteed to them by initial preferred stock.

I want to ask the witness something about that. I am not through with the witness.

2095 Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may proceed, but do you think this is material?

Mr. Abbott: I certainly do.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed, then.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, with reference to the conversation relative to preferred stock, was there any discussion as to the amount of investment that you had in your company and your facilities?

A. Well, the only discussion we had about that was that we wanted to know how much interest we would get on our investment, and in turn—

Q. You mean what per cent of interest?

A. Yes. They were to pay us 6 per cent interest on the preferred stock; that is, the company was to pay. First, out of the profits—

Q. You mean the incorporated company?

A. Yes. First, out of the profits we were to draw out 6 percent interest on the preferred stock. And then Mr. Kolb, my father, and myself would be the officers of the company, and we would be entitled to a certain fixed salary. After having drawn out the interest, salaries, and paid all expenses, if any profit remained we would be entitled to 49 per cent on the common stock.

2096 Q. And you would have 49% of the common stock allocated to you as stockholders?

A. That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And the common stock was the voting stock, was it?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: So that they would control the company.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. The preferred stock, did that participate in any way in the voting in the company?

A. Not the way they explained it to us. They claimed that the preferred stock was equivalent to a mortgage on the business.

Q. And that was preferred as to dividends up to 6%?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it also preferred as to distribution of assets? Do you understand what I mean by that?

A. No, I don't, Mr. Abbott.

Q. I mean was it preferred both as to interest and as to assets? In other words, you say it was explained to you that it was a mortgage on the assets?

A. That is right.

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor. This witness is really testifying as to a conversation he had with 2097 somebody. The limit of strict admissibility here is what was said to him and what he said. He is being asked to draw conclusions from that, and I think that the conversation should speak for itself.

Mr. Abbott: We will attempt to restrict it to conversation, but this was a long time ago.

Mr. Austin: That is why I haven't objected, Mr. Abbott, to most of this.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then the witness' memory should be better than yours. As I take it, you obtained your information from the witness.

Mr. Abbott: Well, that was very recently, however. I dont' think there is any knowledge between my memory and the witness'.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, at the 6½¢ margin between the retail selling price and the price which you were to purchase your requirements at, do you recall how that compared with the deal that you at that time had with the Standard Oil Company to purchase gasoline on a tank car basis?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I object to comparisons being made. He can describe his deal with the Standard Oil Company, if it isn't already described, and he can describe the deal here, and the Commission can make the comparison.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

2098 Mr. Abbott: I will ask it in this way:

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. At that time your differential between the tank car and the tank wagon price on Standard Oil house brand gasoline you testified was 1½¢ a gallon; is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And do you recall what was the difference, the prevailing dealer margin over and above the tank wagon price between that price and the retail price to the public? If you recall?

A. As I recall it, the 6½¢ would have given us 2½¢ differential.

Q. In other words, 2½¢ more than you were making on Standard Oil house brand gasoline?

A. 1¢ more. As I recall it, the dealer margin at that time was around 4¢.

Q. You had a 1½¢ differential between tank wagon and tank car which made 5½¢?

A. That is right.

Q. And you were to receive 6½¢ from the Hi-Speed?

A. We would have received 6½¢, yes.

Q. So that was a cent better than the Standard Oil price at that time?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, at that time did the Wilson Oil Company, to your knowledge, have a similar arrangement with the 2099 Hi-Speed Oil Company, the Hicock Oil?

A. They told us that that was the exact same deal, and in later years it was proven—well, it was common knowledge that they were operating right along, and still do, on the same basis.

Q. Wilson Oil Company still operates on that basis, to your knowledge?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any other knowledge—

Mr. Austin: He didn't say to his knowledge, I don't believe.

Mr. Abbott: Well, he is stating what it was, and I assumed that is his knowledge.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Have you any personal knowledge with reference to the matter?

The Witness: The only knowledge I have is from the time that Mr. Bailey of Wilson told me that that is the deal he had.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In other words, he told you that?

The Witness: Yes.

Q. Who told you that: Mr. Wilson or Bailey?

A. Bailey.

Q. And Bailey was the man who originally took 2100 you down to Toledo, wasn't he?

A. Van Kuren.

Q. Well, Bailey is the one that introduced you to Van Karen?

A. That is right, introduced us.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I think that answer is objectionable, and I would like to state that I assume that the purpose of the testimony is to show that Mr. Bailey told Mr. Citrin that he was offering Mr. Citrin the same deal that they were giving the Wilson Oil Company?

The Witness: Mr. Austin—

Mr. Austin: If it is testimony as to the Wilson Oil Company deal with the Highland, I think it is hearsay. But if it is part of the conversation, I don't object to it. I am not clear which it is. I just wanted to ask for some clarification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is likewise in doubt.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. When Mr. Bailey originally introduced you and brought this matter up and introduced to you Mr. Van Kuren, is that a part of the conversation that Bailey told you that the Wilson Oil Company had this deal with the Hicock Oil Corporation?

A. Yes. And then later Mr. Hicock told us that if 2101 we—we were always questioning him if that was the same deal that Wilson Oil had, and Hicock told us if we would make that deal with them, they would be willing to show us papers that our papers would be written in the same manner and the same deal that the Wilson Oil Company had. That was where I got my belief that their deal was the same as the one offered to us.

Q. At that time or some time shortly thereafter did you know a company by the name of Savin Oil Company?

A. Yes, I knew of such existence.

Q. Did you know, have any personal knowledge to the effect that,—with reference to a deal they made with the Hicock Oil Corporation or Hicock Oil Company of Toledo, Ohio?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What materiality has this?

Mr. Abbott: The purpose of this is to show, your Honor, that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company did not accept the offer of the Hicock Oil Company, but that the Savin Oil Company did. And I wish to show by the witness what has been the subsequent developments with reference to the acceptance by the Savin Oil Company of the same deal that was offered to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company by the Hicock Oil Corporation of Toledo?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, suppose they would have accepted it and suppose it had been a great suc-
2102 cess. How would it become material in this case?

Mr. Abbott: Well, this testimony relates to a competitive offer by another major oil company which was offered to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, which was a cent better than the then existing tank car price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Not made to this witness' company, was it?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, it was. That is what he has been testifying to.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you communicate that offer—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Are you speaking about the offer of the Hicock Company to him?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, I am.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That offer was not made to him, but was made to a company of which the Hicock Company was to be—was to have the controlling interest.

Mr. Abbott: Well, it was made to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and to the witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In other words, it was an offer made to themselves, in effect.

Mr. Abbott: It was made to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in such a way as they were to receive full credit of their investment by way of preferred stock, and were 2102 also to receive a larger differential on the sale of gasoline from tank car deliveries.

Mr. Austin: I request, if the Court please, that the last question, if there is any question, be re-read.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the last question.

(The record and the last question were read by the reporter.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you tell Standard Oil Company that you had received—

Mr. Abbott: Well, I understand there was an objection to the question as propounded to the witness just preceding, and I withdraw the question for the moment.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you communicate the fact that you had received this offer from the Hicock Oil Company to your supplier the Standard Oil Company of Indiana?

A. I did, personally.

Q. Whom did you communicate it to?

A. I can recall talking to Mr. Bennett about that particular offer.

Q. Did you make any request of the Standard Oil Company in relation to it?

A. I don't recall as we did. The only request we 2103 made, as I get it—as I can recall, the difference to us at that time, it seemed the amount of money that they were willing to advance to us for expansion, willing to give us an unlimited amount of credit in the form of gasoline shipments, and talking to Mr. Bennett, I pointed out—

Q. Who was willing to do that?

A. The Hicock.

Q. All right. Proceed.

A. I pointed out to Mr. Bennett the advantages and credit facilities. Of course, the differential margin was explained to me, and I realized that in order to obtain that differential, we would have to incorporate, and a certain amount of the profits would be shared by the Hicock.

Q. After you received 6% on your investment?

A. And the salaries.

Q. And your salaries?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there any further discussion with Mr. Bennett of the Standard Oil Company concerning the Hicock offer?

A. No.

Q. You have already fixed the year as 1930. About that time was it in 1930, if you recall?

A. I would say that it was in the fall. I remember that when we got there it was quite dark, and it must have 2104 been around 6:30 or 7.

Q. Now, in 1930, did you have any conversation with a representative of the Shell Oil Company concerning an offer to supply you with your requirements of gasoline?

A. I had conversation with several representatives of the Shell Oil Company.

Q. When was that with reference to the time that you had the conversation with Mr. Hicock at Toledo?

A. I would say it was—I would say it was a little while after that.

Q. It was after the conversation in Toledo, was it?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Approximately how long?

The Witness: I am sorry, your Honor, it is so hard to remember.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was it a year? Two years?

The Witness: I wouldn't say it was even a year.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. And whom was it, if you recall, that you talked with representing the Shell Oil Company?

A. That is something that I have already forgotten since.

Q. Where was it? Here in Detroit?

A. They had a sort of convention that was held in the Statler Hotel. I was called down there by another jobber, Mr. Middleton. 2105

Q. Is he of the Middleton Oil Company?

A. He was.

Q. And you met the representative of the Shell, did you?

A. I met several of them. Also at a later date—well, the second day, I think they stayed there about three days—I met the credit man, who wanted us to give him a statement. But I don't recall their names.

Q. Well, where were they from—out of town?

A. St. Louis.

Q. And at that time what brand of gasoline was the Shell Oil Company distributing that you made inquiry about?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He hasn't testified he made inquiry.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What brand of gasoline were they handling, if you know?

A. They themselves were in this city handling Shell gasoline. They also have another brand which is not handled in this city which is called Silver Flash.

2106 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Abbott, let him tell, now, what transpired.

Mr. Abbott: All right.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, state what conversation was had between you and the representative of the Shell Oil Company?

A. An offer was made to us, as well as to Middleton Oil Company, to take over the sole distribution of Silver Flash, not only in the city of Detroit, but, I believe, the whole Wayne County.

Q. Proceed. I don't want to lead you. Just state what the conversation was.

A. They endeavored to entertain us about three days—

Q. When you say "us," who do you mean?

A. Mr. Kolb was down there, Middleton, and myself. I understand at that time they had Mr. Roy Fisher down there from the Argo.

Q. Mr. Kolb, Middleton, and yourself?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you mean they offered you an exclusive agency?

The Witness: That's right, your Honor. They pointed out the advertising they would do for us; the equipment they would furnish; paint and also pointed out that 2107 the Silver Flash was a brand gasoline which was equally as good as Shell, which was handled in the city and is distributed in other states—or was distributed in other states at that time.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Was anything said about the price at which they would deliver to you?

A. The price—again I must say, was much more than the price that we got from the Standard.

Q. When you say it was much more, what do you mean?

A. I would say it was between a half and three-quarters of a cent.

Q. What do you mean by "more?" More differential, or greater price?

A. In addition to what we were receiving from Standard at that time.

Q. You mean that the differential between the tank wagon and the tank car price was half to three-quarters of a cent more than a cent and a half?

A. It would have been more, Mr. Abbott, only they pointed out that there was a certain amount of money taken out for the furnishing of advertising and paint. It would have left us a net of between a half and three-quarters of a cent in addition, or extra to the margin that we were receiving from Standard.

2108 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was that offer to sell it to you in tank car lots or was it an offer of an exclusive agency in Detroit under which you were to handle all of their product in the City of Detroit?

The Witness: Well, we were to handle just Silver Flash Gas. We were to handle their oil. They would have allowed us to handle another competitive brand of oil.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But you were to be their exclusive agents?

The Witness: That's right.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. In other words, as an inducement you were to be given the entire distribution of this without competition in the Detroit area, is that right?

A. Well, Middleton and our company would have been the only ones.

Q. You and Middleton.

A. Yes.

Q. At that time was the Middleton Oil Company a jobber of the Standard Oil Company?

A. They were, yes.

Q. At the time you had that conversation?

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Middleton was a party to the conversation—

A. Yes.

2109 Q. Was he, at the Statler Hotel, a party to the conversation?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you accept the offer of the Shell Oil Company?

A. We did not.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether the Middleton Oil Company accepted their offer?

A. They did.

Q. And did the Middleton Oil Company thereupon discontinue being a jobber for the Standard Oil Company?

A. They did discontinue.

Q. And they took over the offer of the Shell Oil Company?

A. They did.

Q. Did you communicate to the Standard Oil Company the fact that you had been made this offer by the Shell Oil Company?

A: I did.

Q. Whom did you talk to about it?

A. Mr. Raupagh.

Q. What conversation did you have with Mr. Raupagh? Was this before you had decided whether you would accept the Shell Oil Company offer? I will withdraw that and ask you this question: Did you immediately decide, after the talk with the representative—

Trial Examiner. Ballinger: Ask him when he decided.

2110 By Mr. Abbott:

Q. When did you decide whether you would accept the offer of the Shell Oil Company?

A. Several days later.

Q. And did you talk the matter over with Mr. Raupagh?

A. I did.

Q. Was that talk that you had with Mr. Raupagh before you came to a decision?

A. I would say it was.

Q. And what conversation did you have with Mr. Raupagh in the matter?

A. Well, there were so many different conversations that I had with Mr. Raupagh. Everytime we would have a different offer, I would go to him and point out the advantages and it sort of got to be a regular sales talk between one time and the other. In fact I remember walking out of there with the idea, "Well, there again you have done a good job of talking me out of leaving you, or quitting this company." It seems all the conversations were just a continuous sales talk on Mr. Raupagh's part.

Q. In 1930, before you had decided whether you would accept or reject the offer of the Shell Oil Company, you, as you say, had a conversation with Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you tell him what the offer of the Shell Oil

2111 Company was?

A. I believe I did.

Q. And what other conversation did you have? I don't want to lead you but merely state what the purport of the conversation was?

A. I believe I acquainted him of the fact that Mr. Middleton was strongly impressed with the proposition and that I thought that Mr. Middleton was going to leave them.

Q. Going to leave whom?

A. The Standard Oil.

Q. Did you state whether you were considering them yourself?

A. For a while I did, but—

Q. Did you tell Mr. Raupagh anything about that?

A. Yes, but again—.

Q. What did he say to that?

A. But again he pointed out the advantages; that we had built up a good share of our business on the Standard Oil franchise.

Q. Did you ask Mr. Raupagh to meet the price of the Shell Oil Company?

A. Well, I always did ask him to boost up the price.

Q. What do you mean by boosting the price?

A. Well, we still do.

Q. When you say "boost the price," what do you mean?

A. Boost up the margin; the margin of profits.

2112 Q. When you say "boost the price" you don't mean to increase the price?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You meant a greater differential, didn't you?

The Witness: That's right.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you ask him at that time in 1930, before you decided whether to accept or reject the Shell Oil Company's offer, to make a better differential for you?

A. Yes.

Q. You did?

A. Yes.

Q. And what did he say to that; I mean Mr. Raupagh?

A. Well, he thought that we had a better deal, although the differential was less; on account of the—

Q. And did he refuse to change the differential?

A. Yes.

Q. Now after that, what happened? Did you communicate your decision to the Shell Oil Company?

A. Yes, we did. I don't recall whether we wrote to them or they contacted us by telephone, but we did turn the offer down.

Q. But Mr. Middleton of the Middleton Oil Company, you say, accepted their offer?

A. Yes.

2113 Q. And he left the Standard Oil Company as a jobber?

A. He did leave.

Q. That was in 1930?

A. I would say it was around 1930. I couldn't swear as to the exact date. Again I say it is so difficult, eleven years having gone by, to remember the exact date.

Q. Now, Mr. Citrin, about 1935 did you withdraw from the retail operations in the City of Detroit; in the Detroit area?

A. Well, we started to withdraw. I would say at least a good portion of our stations, right after that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You started to tell us about that a little while ago. Will you tell us about your withdrawal and your reasons for withdrawal?

The Witness: Well, first of all, we realized that we would have to make up our minds whether to operate retail outlets or else be going more extensively into the wholesale business. Having had a few stations at that time, we found that it would be to their advantage if we would just conduct our business either one way or the other, either retail or wholesale, and we decided on taking the wholesale route.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was that purely for business reasons or because of something else?

The Witness: Well, Judge, we just felt that we 2114 weren't big enough or at least we didn't have the personnel at that time to conduct on a dual basis. In other words, we figured we were going to be either a wholesaler or retailer. It would be a lot easier for us.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. At the time that you made this decision you had eighteen stations, didn't you, or thereabouts?

A. I would say that would be about the number.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Abbott, let the witness testify as to what he had.

Mr. Abbott: You mean to say I can't suggest to him he had eighteen service stations?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He knows, or should know how many service stations he had.

Mr. Abbott: I can't change the number and I don't think I can change his mind as to the number.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But he says he thinks he had that number. You are stating the amount and he thinks that is correct. Let us get the facts from him.

The Witness: I could better testify to the number—that is the correct record of the number of outlets we had in the various years. I assume you read from the number on the list we furnished you, is that right, Mr. Abbott?

Mr. Abbott: I am not reading from a list. I am merely reading from a statement of the number you had at 2115 that time, in 1935. That is not very long ago.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If you desire any data with which to refresh your recollection, you may have it.

The Witness: I would say that we had eighteen stations.

Mr. Austin: What year, Mr. Citrin?

The Witness: When we started to lease out some of our stations right after 1935.

2116 By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you go on an entire wholesale basis?

A. It took us a little while. We don't just lease out the stations over night. We first have to obtain tenants.

Q. Were you successful in going on an entire wholesale basis?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor; whether he is more successful.

Mr. Abbott: I didn't ask him if he were more successful by reason of going on the basis. I asked him whether he was successful in going on the basis. I will reframe it this way, if you object to that:

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you ultimately go on a hundred percent wholesale basis?

A. There was a short time where we had been a hundred percent wholesale.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Can you give us a date when you had completely divorced all of your retail business and you were on a strictly wholesale basis?

The Witness: I would have to refer to some records, Judge.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Are they here?

The Witness: I believe that there were always 2117 one or two stations that we had been endeavoring to lease out, but there was a short while during the period after 1935.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Have you the records here that you refer to?

The Witness: I don't know.

Mr. Abbott: I will say this, your Honor, if I may interrupt: that we will put that in in connection with Mr. Biber, who is the general manager of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, if it is agreeable to the Commission.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, in the year 1936, Mr. Citrin, did you have any offer from any other supplier of gasoline to supply your requirements of gasoline on a tank car basis?

A. We had an offer through a representative of the Gulf.

Mr. Austin: I object to that question and answer, your Honor. I request that they be stricken.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is sustained and the motion granted.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you have any other offers from any other gasoline suppliers to supply your requirements of gasoline on a tank car basis, stating the conversation?

Mr. Austin: I object to that on the same ground, that he is asking the witness whether he had an offer and I 2118 think that calls for a legal conclusion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Mr. Abbott: I will withdraw the question.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Subsequent to the time that you had the offer from the Shell Oil Company, did you have any conversation with representatives of any other gasoline suppliers to supply your requirements of gasoline?

A. I personally had a conversation with a Gulf representative.

Q. And when and where was that?

A. I would say it was in the early part of 1936.

Q. Well, can you fix the approximate time?

A. All I could say is it was in the winter time. By saying that I sort of connect the salesman or the representative—why, I remember he wore an overcoat.

Q. Do you know the name of the representative?

A. I believe his name was Mr. Chandler.

Q. And where was the conversation that you had with him?

A. He called on me at one of our stations at Linwood and Buena Vista.

Q. And you can't state the month of the year 1936?

A. No. I couldn't. I would say that it was the early part of the year 1936.

2119 Q. You mentioned the fact that he had an overcoat on, to fix the time of the year.

A. Yes.

Q. State what conversation you had with him.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He stated it was in the winter time, and the early part of the year.

Mr. Abbott: Yes, I know.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, in the absence of any statement by the witness to the effect that he has any knowledge that this man represented the Gulf Oil Company, I object to the conversation.

Mr. Abbott: Well, didn't he state that the man stated he was a representative of the Gulf Oil Company, Gulf Refining Company? I think he has definitely stated that this man—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did you know him to be a representative of the Gulf Refining Company?

The Witness: Oh, yes. He was introduced to me by another Gulf salesman who I had known for a good many years.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. State the conversation.

A. Mr. Chandler called on us quite frequently with the idea of getting us away from the Standard Oil Company.

2120 Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor, and ask it be stricken.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained and the statement is stricken. State what occurred; what was said.

A. Well, now, maybe—if I may put it this way: I don't know what I may admit in there or not. That will be up to you, your Honor. I do know this: that Carnich Oil Company was a Gulf distributor at that time, and Mr. Chandler was aware of the fact that we had some connection with Carnick and he knew the gallonage and he was calling on us with the idea of getting us to buy in tank cars from them on the same basis that they were selling to Mr. Carnick.

Q. Well, what conversation did you have, now?

A. Well, he was telling us the advantages, such that were offered or that were being given to Carnick.

Q. What did he state that advantage was, if anything?

A. Mainly that Gulf would furnish the equipment; they would paint the stations. That we would also not be required to buy in large quantities or store large quantities, rather. We could haul out of their yard. It would not necessitate so much of an investment. We would not have any shrinkage. There were a good many advantages.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did he offer to sell you 2121 at less than tank car lots?

The Witness: Well, it would really be less, if you considered the amount that we would save by not having to furnish storage facilities; not having to invest money for the storing of gasoline or equipment; painting of the stations. It would involve—it would mean quite an increase in—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: At that time you owned your own operating facilities, did you not?

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What was it proposed to do with your bulk plant, if you did that? Was that discussed?

A. Well, of course, I pointed out that we would not be so bad off inasmuch as the bulk plant—we also had a service station erected there, doing a fair business.

Q. You mean the one at Livernois and Lyndon?

A. Yes. He pointed out that our office was on that ground and the service station. That it wouldn't be a total loss.

Q. In other words, you were, according to this plan, drawing gasoline out of their bulk plant instead of out of your own?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was there anything said about price?

2122 The Witness: The price was comparable to the Standard Oil with the exception of those differences.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What do you mean it was comparable?

A. Well, the differential between the tank wagon and tank car was 1½c.

Q. And you were to receive it at the tank car price?

A. Yes.

Q. But you were to receive it out of their bulk plant?

A. That's right.

Q. Without maintaining any bulk plant of your own; is that right?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Then, as I understand, Mr. Citrin—and tell me if I am mistaken—the arrangement would eliminate the bulk plant costs; is that right?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Was there anything said about furnishing station equipment for your dealers?

A. Yes. They would furnish equipment such as pumps.

2123 Q. Under your arrangements with the Standard Oil Company, what was the arrangement you had at that time with the Standard Oil Company?

A. We had to furnish our own pumps.

Q. Did the Gulf Refining Company's representative state that they would furnish the pumps for your agents?

A. Yes.

Q. I mean for your dealers.

A. Yes.

Q. Was there any other advantage that was discussed by him with you?

A. The maintenance of equipment.

Q. What did that involve?

A. That is quite an item; repairing the pumps, painting the station, and stuff.

Q. Under your arrangements with the Standard Oil at that time did you attend to those items of expense yourself?

A. We have, and we still do.

Q. Still do?

A. Yes.

Q. That relates to painting?

A. Painting, furnishing equipment, upkeep. We have to do all of that ourselves.

Q. Upkeep of what?

A. Of the tanks, pumps, installation of pumps.

Q. That's at the service stations of your dealers; 2124 is that true?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Now, at 5 P. M., the hearing stands adjourned to be reconvened April 26, 1941, at the hour of 10 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

Arthur J. Abbott, Esq., of the firm of Abbott, MacMahon, and Roberts, 2230 Buhl Building, Detroit, Michigan, on behalf of the Respondent.

2126 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order. This is a reconvening at 10 A. M., April 26, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, of Docket No. 4389, in the case entitled: in the matter of the Standard Oil Company.

The last hearing was held in Detroit, Michigan, April 25, 1941.

The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and the Respondent present.

You may proceed.

JACOB A. CITRIN, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Abbott (Continued).

Q. Mr. Citrin, did you have any other offers in the year 1936 from any other gasoline supplier to furnish Citrin-Kolb's requirements of gasoline by the tank car method of delivery?

A. We did.

Q. Relate the time, place, circumstances and conversations comprising the offer; first, as to the time.

2127 A. In August of 1936 we had an offer from the Texas Company whereby—

Q. Well, now, don't state the conclusions, but where was the conversation; where did it take place?

A. In our office.

Q. And who was present?

A. Mr. Germain, Mr. Murdy, on some occasion Mr. Kolb was in the same room when they were there.

Q. Was there anyone else?

A. And a credit man from the Texas Company.

Q. Where was he from?

A. Chicago.

Mr. Austin: What was his name?

The Witness: I can't recall his name.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What were the circumstances, how did they happen to come out there?

A. Prior to that time Mr. Germain, who was a special representative for the Texas, here, called on us constantly, and several times sold us some oil, Havoline Oil, and was leading up to the proposition of selling us Texas gasoline and making us the Detroit jobber. On the date, as I stated, in August, he has arranged to have Mr. Murdy and this credit man from Chicago to come to the office.

Q. Now, state what conversation took place between you gentlemen at the Citrin-Kolb Company office.

2128 What office was this?

A. On Livernois and Lyndon.

Q. That is where your first bulk plant was located?

A. Yes.

Q. The one you bought and built the first time?

A. Yes.

The conversation between us was merely to iron out some points as to the advertising, as to the type of contract that they would give us, and the type of contract that we wanted.

Q. Well, what was stated with reference to the terms of the contract? Had it been drawn up at that time?

A. Well, no, it hadn't. We first ironed out the clauses of the contract, such as we were to have a five-year contract, and it was to be an uncancellable contract on either part. And it provided for the furnishing of advertising, paint, globes, and the fixed margin.

Mr. Austin: Pardon me. Did the witness say this was written out?

Mr. Abbott: No, it hadn't been written up up to this point.

The Witness: We were ironing out the clauses that should go into the contract at that time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was the contract later reduced to writing?

2129 The Witness: At the conclusion of the meeting, it was agreed—

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment, if the Court please. I will state on the record—well, go ahead and ask the witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was the contract reduced to writing?

The Witness: We had written the contract.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, it was then reduced to writing?

The Witness: Yes, but not in their presence, your Honor. They told us to prepare the contract on the basis that we talked about. And we were to prepare the contract, submit it to them for acceptance.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was that done?

The Witness: It was done on our part. We, however, didn't give them the contract, because they wanted us to prepare the contract, we should sign it, and on giving it to them, so far as we were concerned, we would be bound by the contract.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Evidently there was no completed contract.

Mr. Abbott: No.

By Mr. Abbott:

2130 Q. You were just about to state what arrangements were made, or what the conversation was as to the margin.

A. The margin was 5½c off—that is, below the retail price.

Q. And at that time what was the dealer margin, if you know?

A. Dealer margin was 3½c.

Q. And what was the conversation with reference to the amount of differential between the tank car and tank wagon?

A. It left a 2c differential.

Q. Now, after those matters were discussed—and, by the way, did Mr. Kolb participate in those discussions?

A. He came in at various intervals. He met the people. Kolb at that particular meeting was busy and excused himself a couple of times, but he did meet the men that were out there.

Q. Who did the talking?

A. I did, mostly, and they did; I mean we talked between us.

Q. Well, you say there was Mr. Germain, Mr. Murdy—

A. Mr. Germain, Mr. Murdy, and this credit man.

Q. What did the credit manager—what participation did he have in the negotiations?

A. Well, it was assumed—

Q. Not what was assumed. Just state what participation he had?

2131 A. Well, it was agreed that we were going to go through with the deal. But it was then necessary for us to furnish our credit statement and he was asking for such statement, was looking over our facilities, properties, so as to tell us at that time how much credit they would be able to give us.

Q. Well, did you have your credit statement there that you submitted to him?

A. We did.

Q. Well, then, did he participate in the negotiations as to the terms?

A. Well, he sat in there. Of course, the terms were leading up prior to that meeting right along, and it was just merely confirming of the terms at the time that Mr.

Murdy was brought out, because we were to make up the contract on the basis—

Q. Had Mr. Murdy been out there before August, 1936?

A. No, I don't believe he had.

Q. Had Mr. Germain been out there before?

A. Yes. As I stated, he called on us constantly.

Q. Well, how long had they been going on?

A. I would say that he called on us for a year, and he sold us a considerable amount of Havoline Oil.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If you will permit an interruption: did you draft a contract and execute it 2132 and transmit it to the Texas Oil Company for execution?

The Witness: We drafted a contract, signed it, but we never delivered it, your Honor.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, did you communicate the matter of this offer to the Standard Oil Company?

A. I did.

Q. And with whom did you talk about it?

A. Mr. Raupagh.

Q. When and where?

A. Right after such meeting—right after the last meeting with Texas, we had prepared this contract, signed it and then the partnership had agreed that we should go down and talk to Mr. Raupagh on the basis that there was a contract that was going to guarantee us a certain fixed margin for a period of five years.

Q. Now, what margin do you refer to when you say "certain fixed."

A. 5½c off of the retail price, and that inasmuch as that we were buying from Standard at a lower margin, and also we had no protection as to contract, merely on a day to day basis with Standard, we felt that we ought to give the Standard Oil Company a chance to meet that proposition.

Q. Did you then take the matter up with Mr. Raupagh?

2133 A. I did.

Q. And did you discuss the matter with him?

A. I did.

Q. What did you say and what did he say?

A. Pointed out the negotiations. Pointed out the contract. I believe I showed him the contract that we had prepared, and, again, Mr. Raupagh took a couple of hours in convincing me that—

Q. What did he say?

A. What did Mr. Raupagh say?

Q. The point is, Mr. Citrin, the Court has several times asked that you state the conversation and not your conclusions.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What did he say to you and what did you say to him?

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. It has been a long time, but all you are required to say is the purport of the conversation.

Mr. Austin: I rather object to the word, "purport." I think substance is better. He doesn't have to quote exactly anyway.

Mr. Abbott: All right. Substance.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You state as nearly as you can recall, the conversation.

The Witness: I will.

2134 A. As I recall, Mr. Raupagh told me that he thought it was a mighty good deal and that he couldn't give me as good a deal, and that inasmuch that we had years of business relations and they were pleasant and had proven profitable to us, that he still was convinced that we would be better off if we stayed a Standard Oil Company customer, regardless of price or contract protection.

He also stated that as to the contract, he said that we had no contract for years, and we got along all right, and that no doubt we would get along in the future.

As to the price differential or advertising, he said that Standard was by far a better selling gasoline and that if we would make such a change, our sales would fall off and thereby, in the long run, reduce our profits so that the differential, the increase that we would get in this new deal would not even come up to the amount of business that we would lose.

Q. What did you say to that?

A. Well, I continued to ask him if they couldn't give us a contract, and also asked him to meet their deal or take it up at Chicago, and he continually pointed out that the deal we had was the best deal that they could give us at that time.

Q. Who said that?

A. Mr. Raupagh. We spent quite a bit of time. I 2135 remember, I told him, "By God," I said, "every time I come down here, you either have a spell over me or something, but," I said, "I have still got to go back to my partners and tell them on what basis that we should still be a Standard Oil customer."

And those were the very words. He thought that I, perhaps—

Q. State what he said.

A. Well, he said that if I would analyze the facts, that is, the proposition that we would lose business, and just take into consideration all of the advantages we had, that we had established our business on Standard Oil products, and I pointed out those elements to my partners, and that they more or less looked up to me, to my judgment, and I would have no trouble in convincing them to abide by my judgment.

Q. Is that what he said to you?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, what was there about this deal with the Texas Company besides the price that you talked about? You mentioned—I will just say this, without leading you—you mentioned something about the furnishing of equipment.

A. Well, equipment, I mean globes—globes, globes are considered as equipment; paint, that is quite an item, to furnish paint.

2136 Trial Examiner Ballinger: He was unwilling to make any greater differential to you in order to meet the competitive price, was he not?

The Witness: You mean Raupagh was unwilling?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

The Witness: Oh, yes, definitely.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you go back and talk the matter over with your partners?

A. I did.

Q. And what was the outcome? What was the result?

A. The result was that we did not submit the contract to the Texas Company.

Q. Are you referring now to the written contract that you drew up on their suggestion?

A. That is right.

Q. At the time you went down to see Mr. Raupagh, did I understand you to say that you showed him this contract?

A. I did. As I recall it.

Q. Did he read it, if you recall?

A. I recall him looking at it. I don't think he took the time to read it. Yet, he might have read it, because the contract, as I recall, was a four-page contract, it was possible for him to read it in a short time, as I recall right now.

2137 Q. Did you communicate to the Texas Company your conclusion?

A. I did.

Q. Or decision?

A. Yes.

Q. To whom did you convey that?

A. I told Mr. Germain.

Q. These other men, Mr. Murdy and the credit manager, did I understand you to say that they were both from Chicago, or only one of them?

A. Well, I knew that the credit man was from Chicago; Mr. Murdy at that time was sort of a—well, he was in charge of several districts, and he was traveling; I don't know whether his office was in Chicago, but I do know that he was from out of town.

Q. He wasn't from Detroit?

A. No.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The paper can hardly be referred to as a contract. It was a proposed contract.

Mr. Abbott: I realize that, and if it had been executed and delivered, then, of course, the other negotiations would have been merged in it.

Q. You mentioned the fact that at that time you were on a day to day basis with the Standard Oil Company,

2138 and didn't have any contract.

A. We were, and we still are, as of this date.

Q. Has that been the situation all the time?

A. It has.

Q. Since you went on the tank car basis?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, now, tell us something about that. What do you mean when you say you are on a day to day basis?

A. Well, first of all we have no contract in existence between the Standard Oil Company and ourselves. We never did have.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Either express or implied?

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Well, I don't know whether you understand what the Court means by ~~that?~~

A. I don't Mr. Abbott.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Have you any understanding of any kind with them?

The Witness: The only understanding we have is that they could stop selling us or refuse to ship any order that we may give them. And as to our side of it, we could quit any day by not giving them an order for gasoline, just merely ordering from somebody else.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Every order you send 2139 to them is subject to their rejection if they see fit?

The Witness: That's right.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. And on the other hand, from your standpoint, you can stop sending them orders?

A. That's right.

Q. You can get your gasoline somewhere else?

A. We can.

Q. Has that been the situation ever since you first began to receive tank car deliveries from the Standard Oil Company?

A. It has.

Q. Now, has that been the subject of conversations and interviews between you and the Standard Oil Company during the intervening time? I mean, have you objected to that arrangement?

A. We have always objected, and we still do. It is a sort of uncertain way of being in business. Yet, there are certain advantages, as we understand it, now, because we could always entertain a better proposition or quit. But that has been the business relations between the Standard Oil Company and ourselves.

Q. Well, on the occasion when you saw Mr. Raupagh, at the time that you took up with him the Texas proposal, did you discuss with him the matter of giving you a contract?

A. We have.

2140 Q. I understand that the Texas proposal contemplated a five-year guaranteed contract arrangement? Is that right?

A. It did.

Q. And guaranteed a margin of 5½¢ below the prevailing retail price?

A. It did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Will you repeat your testimony with reference to what was said to you when you submitted to the representative of the Respondent, the proposal from the Texas Company?

Mr. Abbott: By Respondent, he means the Standard Oil Company.

The Witness: Yes.

Well, Mr. Raupagh pointed out that he could not meet the price, he could not give us a contract.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What I had in mind was what he said to you with reference to your past and possible future relations.

The Witness: He said that in the past we have done pretty well in handling Standard Oil and that he thought we would lose a certain amount of business if we handled Texas. As to the contract, he just merely said that he could not give us a contract. That in the past we did not have a contract. The business relations were agreeable and 2141 that no doubt that in the future it would be to an advantage to both of us to go on on the same basis, inasmuch as that we had the same privileges of stopping to do business at any time any one of us felt that it was to our betterment. Does that answer your question, Judge?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You were at that time seeking security through a contract, were you not?

The Witness: We were.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That's all.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. And Mr. Raupagh, as I understand you, said that the Standard Oil would not meet the 2¢ differential between—

Mr. Austin: I think the witness said what Mr. Raupagh told him. I object to the question.

Mr. Abbott: The reason I ask that is this: the witness said Mr. Raupagh told him he could not meet the proposed Texas price.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What do you mean by "Meet the Texas price?" Just state the conversation of Mr. Raupagh. Did he use the word "meet"?

A. Well, he used the word that the extra half cent that we would have gotten would have been—

Q. Gotten from whom?

A. From Texas. But first of all, he couldn't give us that extra half a cent, and, secondly, that he thought 2142 that it wouldn't do us any good inasmuch as that we would lose a certain amount of business by making the change.

Q. Lose gallonage?

A. Yes.

Q. You testified yesterday in connection with an offer of Gulf Oil or Gulf Refining Company made to you in the early part of 1936. In connection with that testimony will you state whether, when you submitted that to Mr. Raupagh, as you stated, whether Mr. Raupagh said anything about meeting the Gulf offer?

A. Well, in meeting the Gulf offer, you mean by furnishing the equipment and painting the stations, furnishing paint; is that what you mean, Mr. Abbott?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And also the lower price.

The Witness: There wasn't any lower price, your Honor. I didn't make any such a—

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What I referred to was you stated yesterday that Gulf proposed that you should haul gasoline out of their own bulk plant.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you take that up with Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes.

Q. And what did he say about that when you took 2143 up with him the matter of the proposal of Gulf that you could haul gasoline at tank car prices out of their own bulk plant and not out of yours? Was that what the proposal was?

A. Yes.

Q. What did Mr. Raupagh say when you put that up to him?

A. He said that he could not change the methods, and the way they were serving us, and that as to the other differentials, they would have to remain the same. He couldn't meet the Gulf offer.

Q. The Gulf offer, as I understand it, contemplated that you would not use the Livernois and Lynden bulk plant for distributing gasoline; is that right, excepting at the retail station there?

A. That was right.

Q. Were you using that bulk plant at that time—that was before you constructed the one, the bulk plant at Linwood and the D. T. Railroad, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you using the Lyndon and Livernois bulk plant at that time for the purpose of a distributing point for the distribution of gasoline to your dealer stations?

A. We were.

Q. And, as I understand it, the Gulf offer proposed that you should haul gasoline direct out of the Gulf bulk plant and not out of your own?

2144 A. It was.

Q. Would that have eliminated some expense?

A. Yes, it would have.

Q. And it also related to the furnishing of some materials, as I understand it, and equipment; the Gulf offer did.

A. Pumps, maintenance of the pumps, painting of stations.

Q. At that time did the Standard Oil Company supply that equipment?

A. No.

Q. Or that maintenance?

A. No.

Q. Or the painting of the stations?

A. No.

Q. Did you take that up with Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes.

Q. As to the Gulf offer?

A. Yes.

Q. What did he say as to that?

A. Just wouldn't meet it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Would you state the year of the Gulf offer? I do not recall it.

The Witness: As I recall it, Judge, it was the early part of 1938; yet—as I stated, the only way that I can connect the time of year was I recall he had an over-2145 coat. Yet, it might have been later on. It might have been in the fall of 1936.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You say it might have been in the fall of 1936 when you received the Gulf offer?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: When was the Texas offer?

Mr. Abbott: He testified the Texas offer was in August, 1936.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You knew the Carnick Oil Company at this time, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. At the time of the Gulf offer?

A. Yes.

Q. And as a matter of fact, you had shared storage with them on Six Mile Road east of Woodward Avenue at their bulk plant, hadn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. That was in the early days before you got your own bulk storage?

A. That's right.

2146 Q. And was the Carnick Oil Company a Gulf Refining Company jobber?

A. They were, at the time that this Mr. Chandler was calling on us.

Q. That is, when Mr. Chandler called on you and made the proposal?

A. Yes.

Q. Was anything discussed between you and Mr. Chandler relative to the fact that the Carnick Oil Company had this same deal? If so, state the conversation.

A. Well, all he told me, that Carnick was doing a good job. I naturally assumed—

Q. Now, not what you assumed.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Where was Carnick operating?

The Witness: In Detroit.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Is Carnick a jobber also?

A. Yes.

Q. Operating his own retail stations, or operating through dealers?

A. Well, he had—I don't know whether he still has—I know he has some of his own stations. He serves to dealers.

Q. What I am referring to, Mr. Citrin, is not so much what the Carnick Oil Company does, as what Mr.
2147 Chandler told you about the Carnick Oil Company at the time he made the proposal to you to take your gasoline supply from Gulf.

Mr. Austin: How is that material, Mr. Abbott?

Mr. Abbott: If there is anything about it—I don't know. I haven't interrogated the witness about this previously, but I just wonder whether there was any discussion about the fact that Carnick Oil Company had the same kind of an arrangement.

Mr. Austin: That would be hearsay, anyway. It doesn't relate directly—

Mr. Abbott: Not if Mr. Chandler discussed it.

Mr. Austin: I object to the question. I don't believe it is material, anyway, what kind of a deal the Carnick Oil Company had in this connection.

Mr. Abbott: It would enter into the question. This witness knew the Carnick Oil Company, because they previously had shared a bulk plant, as he testified yesterday. If there was anything said with reference to the fact the Carnick Oil Company had this same deal that the Gulf was offering to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, I would like to have the witness state it. He can say yes or not as to whether or not there was any conversation.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you know what kind of a deal the other company had?

2148 A. Well, I do know this, that Chandler told me that Carnick was a pretty smart business man, said that—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That doesn't enter into the question.

Mr. Abbott: He ought to be permitted to state what the conversation was. He is just leading up to what your Honor asked him.

The Witness: I am trying to bring out just what he told me, if I may be allowed to.

Mr. Abbott: Proceed, unless there is an objection.

Mr. Austin: I object, because I don't believe the witness answered your Honor's question as to whether or not he knew the deal. And if this is an attempt to prove by hearsay the deal between the Carnick Oil Company and a somebody else, why I object to it.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor asked him if he knew what the deal was. Will you answer that question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you know what the deal was?

The Witness: Only that Chandler told me that it is the same deal that Carnick had.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. The deal he was offering you?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you know what deal Carnick Oil Company had?

2149 Mr. Austin: I ask for a ruling on that. I move to strike it out on the ground, first, it is irrelevant; and second, that it is hearsay. It is hearsay.

Mr. Abbott: Not what Chandler told him. That relates to the offer made by the Gulf Refining Company. Part of the conversation in the offer.

Mr. Austin: I don't think that is any part of the offer. I think that may be some sales talk to say, "I am giving you as good an offer as I gave somebody else."

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did he offer you the same service that he was furnishing to the Carnick Company?

The Witness: He said it was.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection is overruled.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you have any other offers between 1936 and 1940 from any other gasoline supplier to furnish your requirements of gasoline by the tank car methods of delivery after receiving the offers from the Gulf Refining Company and the Texas Company in 1936?

A. We did.

Q. When and with what company? Pardon me, strike that. When and from what company?

A. In 1939 the Argo Oil Corporation.

Q. That is all I asked you, the name and the time.

2150 Is the Argo Oil Corporation a Detroit concern?

A. It is.

Q. And in 1939 what business were they conducting in Detroit—a jobber business or what?

A. They are a jobber.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What were they then?

The Witness: What they have been?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What were they in '39?

The Witness: They were a jobber.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Dealing in what brand of gasoline?

A. Marathon.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, relate the circumstances, and the conversation comprising the offer, and with whom. First, who was the person?

A. Mr. Roy Fisher.

Q. And what were the circumstances?

A. He came out to our office on Lynwood on the pretense that he had been sent out to collect a donation for an Allied campaign that they were conducting at that time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When did you say this was?

2151 The Witness: It was in 1939.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Can you fix the date with reference to the time of that Allied campaign that you referred to?

A. Well I—to the best of my knowledge I think it was in '39. But, Mr. Abbott, if it is essential it would be no trouble for us to look up the date of the check of the donation that we gave them, and we would have the exact day.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Why do you say he came out on pretense?

The Witness: Do you say why?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Why do you say that, yes.

The Witness: Because shortly after it—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was that merely a conclusion of yours?

The Witness: Well, it might be called a conclusion. Yet—

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Well, state what you mean by pretense, Mr. Citrin.

A. Well, I couldn't say that he exactly walked in and the first thing he did was start talking gasoline. The first thing he did, he came in and introduced himself and told me what his business was there, and then while we were talking about the amount of money that we wanted to 2152 give, and he was to get, why—

Q. Did he ask you for a contribution?

A. Yes.

Q. Had you known the gentleman before?

A. Well, I had seen him several times.

Q. Is he in the oil business now, do you know?

A. Yes.

Q. And had you known him before that as being identified with the Argo Oil Corporation?

A. Yes.

Q. After you gave him the contribution—did you give him the contribution that day?

A. We did.

Q. Then what else was the conversation between you, if anything?

A. Well he started to tell us about the experiences that he had in the jobbing business. He pointed out the various deals that he had made with large oil companies for the distribution of gasoline; that he was going in on a big scale. I believe he even discussed the time there where he was going to take the entire output of the Mexican government petroleum. At least, that is what seems to come into my mind that he talked about.

Q. At that time had Mexico taken over the private petroleum interests in Mexico? Do you recall? Was that discussed?

2153 A. He just told me that he was going to have a big thing out of this oil jobbing business, he was going to do a big job.

Q. At that time he was distributing Marathon Gasoline, is that correct?

A. Well, Mr. Abbott, it was Marathon or Linco, really both of those come from the same company. It is the Ohio Oil Company.

Q. I see. And what did he say to you? Did you discuss terms of supplies?

A. He proposed—well, at first he sort of admired the amount of business that we had and the volume. He knew that we had a couple of salesmen that worked for us at that time that were previously connected with him.

Q. Who were they?

A. Mr. Treppech.

Q. How do you spell that?

A. T-r-e-p-p-e-c-h.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was the product he proposed to furnish you the product of the Ohio Standard Oil?

A. It was Ohio, it was Standard Oil of Ohio.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. When you say Standard Oil of Ohio, do you mean Standard Oil of Ohio or do you mean Ohio Oil Company?

A. Ohio Oil Company. I get them confused.

2154 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Which one was it?

The Witness: The Ohio Oil Company.

2155 Q. You were going to state what the conversation was as to the terms of sale.

A. Well, he knew of the amount of business we were doing, and knowing of the salesmen that we had, he told me that if we started buying gas from him, or through him, that we could do a big job, a better job, and we would have more money to do the business with.

Q. Are you relating now his conversation, are you?

A. Yes.

Q. State what he said about terms of selling gasoline to you.

A. Well, I tried to find out, knowing the various big deals that he was intimating, or he was telling me about that he had; I tried to pin him down as to how much more margin we could get, or how much of a contract he had, and of course he didn't want to tell me everything that he was getting, but he did tell me that our margin would be 2*c*, if not more.

Q. When you say margin, do you mean the margin between the tank car and tank wagon price?

A. That is what I mean, yes.

Q. Did you tell him what margin you were at that time receiving from the Standard Oil Company? Was that discussed?

A. Yes.

2156 Q. What did you tell him as to that?

A. Well, I told him that taking on another brand of gas, unless we received a considerable amount more than we were getting from Standard we would not be interested.

Q. Well, what did you tell him as to what you were getting from Standard?

A. We told him we were getting a cent and a half, and that is when he said that his deal would be 2*c*, if not more at times.

Q. Now, what else was said during that interview?

A. Well, he pointed out the fact that they were a big corporation, and stated that they had built up the largest fuel oil business—I believe he told me at that time that his business ran upwards of 20,000,000 gallons a year in the fuel oil business.

Q. Did he say anything about his gasoline gallonage?

A. Well, he thought that he had enough experience that he expected to do an equally as good a job on gasoline as he did on fuel oil.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did he tell you what business he was then doing in gasoline?

The Witness: The amount of business?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes. That his company was doing in gasoline.

The Witness: No, he didn't give me the figures
2157 on gasoline.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did he tell you in what territories they were operating?

The Witness: Well, no, only in Detroit, as I recall it.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Are they a company that has a distribution outside of the Detroit area?

Mr. Austin: Do you know?

A. I don't know.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you take up this—well, was any further conversation had between you? Did Mr. Kolb participate in it?

A. No.

Q. And this was at the bulk plant at Livernois and Lyndon, was it?

A. No; this was on Linwood.

Q. Linwood?

A. Yes.

Q. That was after you built the Linwood plant?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. That is where you moved your office?

A. That's right.

Q. From the Livernois-Lyndon plant?

A. Yes.

2158 Q. When did you make that removal?

A. Well, I think it was '37.

Q. Did Mr. Fisher—when Mr. Fisher left, did you leave anything to be attended to in a later conversation, or what was the conversation when he terminated the interview?

A. Well, I told him I would consider the matter, and if we wanted to proceed, I would call him.

Q. Did you take the matter up then with your partners?

A. I talked to Mr. Kolb.

Q. Then did you take it up with the Standard Oil Company?

A. I did.

Q. With whom?

A. Mr. Love.

Q. Who is Mr. Love, or who was he at that time?

A. He was the sales manager in Detroit for the Standard Oil Company.

Q. And where was that interview? Where did it take place? At your office or the Standard Oil Company's office?

A. At the Standard Oil Company's office.

Q. How long was it after you had the talk with Mr. Fisher?

A. I would say about two weeks.

Q. And in the meantime had you talked the matter over with Mr. Kolb?

A. I did.

Q. And what did you say to Mr. Love?

2159 A. Well, first I told him that the Argo is going in and they were going to do a big job in the jobbing business of gasoline. I told him they had a good deal, more margin, and that the offer was made to us, and that we were considering it.

Q. What did he say?

A. Well, he just talked in a manner, he thought that I ought—if I wanted to do something about it, tell it to Mr. Raupagh, who was out right at that moment.

Q. Well, did Mr. Love—did you say anything about submitting it to Chicago?

A. I did ask him, and he said that such a procedure would have to go through Mr. Raupagh's office.

Q. Was Mr. Raupagh in Detroit at that time, if you know?

A. I don't know. I know he was out of his office.

Q. Do your know that Mr. Raupagh in 1939, or thereabouts, was in Mayo's Clinic in Minnesota? Does that refresh your recollection of the matter?

A. I knew that Mr. Raupagh was at Mayo's. I don't just seem to be able to connect the period there.

Q. Well, anyway, you said when you went down to discuss the matter with the Standard Oil Company, Mr. Love was the one you talked to and not Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you discuss this matter with Mr. Raupagh?

2160 A. No, not that particular matter.

Q. Did you discuss it at any other time with Mr. Raupagh?

A. Not the Argo, no.

Q. Was anyone else in on the conversation you had with Mr. Love concerning the Argo deal at the Standard Oil office?

A. Not in his office.

Q. Did you talk the matter over with any one of the other officials in the Standard Oil office except Mr. Love?

A. No.

Q. As I understand you, did he say that he would submit the matter to Chicago?

A. He said that he would have to have it submitted through Mr. Raupagh.

Q. Did you receive any reply from Mr. Love on the matter, or any statement as to whether the Standard Oil Company would meet the extra ½c differential?

A. I wouldn't say we received a reply as to that offer. I do know that all replies in general were always that they wouldn't meet any other price than the one they were giving us at the time.

Q. After the Argo Oil Company—I think you said Argo Oil Corporation offer—was made, did you receive any other offers from any other gasoline suppliers to furnish Citrin-Kolb Oil Company its requirements of gasoline 2161 by the tank car method of delivery, either in 1939, 1940, or 1941?

A. I did receive another offer in 1940.

Q. Relate the time, place, circumstances, and conversation comprising this offer. First as to whom, as to the company.

Mr. Austin: I would like to ask counsel for Respondent if he will agree that the use of the word "offer" which he has used repeatedly in questions just past and previous questions, in asking the witness whether he received an offer, that he is not asking for a legal conclusion, but simply using that in a broad sense?

2162 Mr. Abbott: That, of course, is true. I merely am asking it in order to get the information as to what conversation took place, if any.

Counsel's statement is a correct statement for the purpose of asking the question in that way.

Mr. Austin: I didn't want it to appear that the witness was answering the question as to whether any particular word constituted an offer in a legal sense.

Mr. Abbott: We wouldn't indulge in any legal conclusions or conclusions of fact or law either.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understand that all of these proposals were merely tentative; is that correct?

Mr. Abbott: I won't agree to that. Because they speak for themselves. They were made—in fact, the Texas offer was not only not tentative, because it was reduced to written form, and was considered by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes, but not by the other company, the company that was to accept it.

Mr. Abbott: I don't agree to that. There is nothing in the testimony—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the record speaks for itself.

Mr. Abbott: There is nothing in the record that shows they were tentative.

2163 Mr. Austin: I think the record will show on that. I was just avoiding making objections as to questions which I don't really think are objectionable, but read on the record it might appear that some conclusion was involved as to the meaning of the word "offer".

Mr. Abbott: I don't know how any conclusion could be reached that these were merely tentative offers, because they were made directly and definitely.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The record will speak for itself.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. State the name of the company with reference to the offer made subsequent to 1939?

A. Aurora.

Q. What is the full name of the company, if you know?

A. It is the Aurora Oil Corporation.

Q. All right. What was the time?

A. Well, there were several times. There was one time that is outstanding in my mind, and that was in December. I will say that I heard another witness testify before me about the same occasion.

Q. What was the occasion?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: December when?

2164 The Witness: December 10.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: December 10, 1940?

The Witness: That is right.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Where was it?

A. It was at the Leland Hotel.

Q. In Detroit?

A. Detroit. At luncheon.

Q. Who did you talk with?

A. Mr. Howard J. MacGready.

Q. Now, you may state the circumstances of the conversation which was had with Mr. MacGready?

A. Well, at first, as I recall it, we were to meet there at a luncheon upon request of the Oil Club. Having arrived there a little earlier, Mr. MacGready invited me to have a drink with him, which we did. He started to tell me about this new refinery that they were going to enlarge, and the output was going to be so great that they were going to be able to supply a good many large jobbers, and that they were supplying.

Q. Did he tell you where this refinery was?

A. He did.

Q. Where did he say?

A. It was a suburb of Detroit here; I believe it is Lincoln Park.

2165 Q. Did he say they had more than one?

A. He said they had another one. As I recall I think he said Elsie.

Q. Michigan?

A. Michigan.

Q. Is that E-l-s-i-e?

A. Yes.

Q. All right. Proceed.

A. We got talking about the business that James J. Bright—

Q. In what connection was Bright mentioned?

A. He was telling me that eventually he was going to switch over all his stations, he thought, because he was doing a pretty good job in two of his stations.

2166 Q. Who was going to switch whose stations?

A. Bright.

Q. At that time, to your knowledge, was Bright distributing Aurora gasoline?

A. He was selling Aurora gasoline that he was buying in tank cars from Aurora at his retail station.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In Detroit?

The Witness: In Detroit, a one-man station, I believe it was, was in Royal Oak.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. That is, Bright was selling Aurora gasoline?

A. Bright was selling Aurora gasoline.

Mr. Austin: I move the last answer be stricken on the ground the witness has stated it was hearsay, only, from Mr. Bright.

Mr. Abbott: He is stating what Mr. MacGready told him prior to the conversation of making the offer.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: I think you are laboring under a misapprehension, Mr. Austin, as to that.

Mr. Austin: Of course, the witness knows what Mr. MacGready told him. If it is only a part of that conversation, all right, but my point is it has no probative value as to how Mr. Bright carries on his business, or as to the truth of what Mr. MacGready told him, but if you 2167 want to just prove what Mr. MacGready told him, if that is a part of the conversation, that is all right.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I am reminded by objection of counsel, of a favor I would like to ask of the Court. During the presentation of the Government's case, your Honor was kind enough to advise me of the name of a case under which you were ruling on the question of hearsay. I think I took a note at the time, but I have been unable to find it, and if your Honor would again advise me, I would be very grateful, indeed.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I don't know that it was a case that related strictly to hearsay, but I had in mind the Danbury Hatters case.

Mr. Austin: Isn't that Lowe against Lawlor?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think so, but it is listed in the United States Supreme Court Reports as the Danbury Hatters case.

Mr. Austin: It is known by that name, but very frequently it is known by, I think it is Lowe against Lawlor.

Mr. Hanley: Thank you very much.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Not at all.

Mr. Abbott: I would like to say to the Court I would like to have it definitely understood as to what extent we may rely on hearsay testimony in a hearing of this kind. I think that was the purpose of Judge Hanley's 2168 observation because, as I understand in the Commission's case, not only the Taggart testimony, but also in other testimony all through the record, it was permitted for the Commission to introduce testimony which was, to a large extent, hearsay testimony, and in our case, from the very start Mr. Austin has been making objections on the ground of hearsay.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I don't understand that Mr. Austin's objections have run to anything that the party to whom this witness was talking had told him, except where the matter was wholly immaterial to any issue in the case.

Mr. Abbott: Do I understand, then, that objections, as your Honor understands, of Mr. Austin's on the ground of hearsay, have also been linked up with the matter of materiality?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: And that is the basis upon which the rulings have been made?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: I wouldn't subscribe to that fully, your Honor. I think the record already shows what I have said. There is a distinction, and it is somewhat the same distinction as in the Danbury Hatters case, as between what was said to the witness being proved; if that, in itself, is material and relevant. Of course, he may tell what he heard somebody say to him. That, in itself, consti-2169 tutes proof, but, on the other hand, if the effort was to show a contract between James J. Bright and the Aurora Oil Corporation, and if that was what was to be proved, what was being attempted to be proved, that could not be proved by the witness saying that Mr. MacGready told him that such a contract existed, because, as to this witness, that would be purely hearsay. Of course, he knows—it isn't hearsay what Mr. MacGready said to him, but the truth of what Mr. MacGready said to him would not be within the knowledge of this witness.

Mr. Abbott: What do you call knowledge?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What materiality had the other contract with any matter in issue in this proceeding?

Mr. Austin: Whether it had any materiality or not, it couldn't be proved by this witness telling what somebody else told him.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I subscribe to that statement.

Mr. Austin: But, on the other hand, any conversation which is material to the point that Mr. Citrin has been testifying on, of course, I don't object to that as hearsay; Mr. Abbott. It depends entirely on what you are trying to prove. Are you trying to prove what Mr. MacGready 2170 told this witness or what the contract was between
Mr. Bright and the Aurora?

Mr. Abbott: What Mr. MacGready told Mr. Citrin.

Mr. Austin: If it is material in connection with this present case, in connection with the rest of the conversation between Mr. Citrin and Mr. MacGready, why, then, I wouldn't object to it. I would still say it had no probative force as to what the actual contract was between Bright and Aurora.

Mr. Abbott: You say that that distinction was established by the Danbury Hatters case?

Mr. Austin: I won't say that particular distinction.

Mr. Abbott: Or by the Lowe vs. Lawlor case you mentioned?

Mr. Austin: No. Established by the hearsay rule as well established in any treatise—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed, gentlemen.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. MacGready was talking to you about the Bright contract?

A. As I understand, Mr. Abbott, I was to tell exactly what Mr. MacGready was telling me.

Q. That's right.

A. What we were talking about.

Q. That's right.

2171 A. That was the reason I brought in this Bright.

Q. Proceed.

A. On the same basis.

Q. Tell us what Mr. MacGready said about Bright.

A. He told me that Bright was buying gas from them and that he was doing a pretty good job.

Q. You said something about Bright switching. Did Mr. MacGready tell you that?

A. He said—

Mr. Austin: I object to that, Mr. Examiner, on the ground it is immaterial whether Mr. Bright switched or not, and also I don't think it is material to the offer which the witness is attempting to describe.

Mr. Abbott: I understand he is leading up to what Mr. MacGready said about the offer, but I think anything germane to that can be stated so far as it only relates to statements made by Mr. MacGready. If there was any inducement, in other words, which Mr. MacGready put into his conversation by showing Mr. Bright was switching over to Aurora gasoline, then I think that is material and I think he should be permitted to answer.

Mr. Austin: If that is the ground, I withdraw the objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

By Mr. Abbott:

2172 Q. State what he said about Bright, particularly with reference to the switching that you mentioned.

A. He thought that by the way that Bright was selling their gasoline and that the type of—quality of gasoline that they were supplying, that there was no doubt in his mind that eventually Bright would handle his gas in all his stations and he started talking about the price being charged, and he told us that he could sell us gasoline at 2c differential.

Q. Between what?

A. The dealer price and the tank car price.

Q. Did you tell him what differential you were at that time getting from the Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you tell him?

A. I told him we were getting a cent and a half, and, again, I told him that anybody taking on his brand of gas, although he claimed it was much better than Standard Red Crown, would still have to buy it much cheaper than Standard, because of not having the advertising.

Q. What else was said?

2173 A. Then I asked him as to how he knew that the gas was better and I didn't enter into any octane conversation with him. He told me that he would guarantee the test and prove that the gas that they are making, to be delivered to us, would be better than Standard Red Crown.

Q. And delivered to you at a differential of 2¢ between the tank car and the tank wagon price, is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Was anyone else present at the time that Mr. MacGready had this conversation with you?

A. Not at the exact moment when we were having the drink, but later on we went upstairs and we had our lunch. After lunch there were several jobbers there and I remember at the time he was sitting right next to Mr. Ledbetter, then talking, and I remember walking up there and sort of hearing the talk about gasoline and, naturally, Ledbetter being a jobber and buying from the same supplier, and we sort of sometimes sympathize with each other. I walked up and I remarked, in front of Mr. Ledbetter, of the good offer that MacGready was offering and I asked if he had a similar offer.

Mr. Austin: Asked who?

The Witness: Ledbetter.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. By Ledbetter, you mean the Wayne Oil Company?

A. That's right.

2174 Q. The man who was here yesterday?

A. Yes. And, well, there was some talk, there, right between all the three of us.

Q. MacGready being present?

A. MacGready being present, yes, and he extended an invitation to go out and see this refinery. Told me that he would call me.

Q. To whom did he extend that invitation?

A. Well, he extended the invitation to me right in front of Ledbetter and from the conversation I understood that he also extended one to Mr. Ledbetter, before.

Q. All right. What was said by you as to whether you would accept the invitation?

A. I told him I would be glad to go out to the refinery and he was to call me, which he did a few days later. He was supposed to call me the first of the week, and, as I recall it, he called me a couple times claiming that it would be no use going out. It had rained and the one day it was cloudy. He said he would rather have me go out when the weather was much better and that we would have to postpone this date for sometime next week.

Q. Did you take up the matter of this offer with your partners?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you discuss it with them?

2175 A. I did.

Q. And did you consider the matter with them as to whether you should accept the offer?

A. I did.

Q. And did you take the matter up with the Standard Oil Company?

A. I did.

Q. With whom?

A. Mr. Raupagh.

Q. And when was that, with reference to December 10, 1940?

A. Oh, I would say it would be about ten days later.

Q. And what conversation did you have with Mr. Raupagh?

A. Just merely told him that, again, we thought that the costs of operation and delivery of gasoline was going up and that labor was going up and we again thought we should have an increase in our margin.

Q. You say your costs of labor was going up. Do you mean the cost of operating your business?

A. Yes, and I told him that, again, we had an offer.

Q. You say you spoke to him also about other costs. What costs did you speak to him about?

A. Well, as to the details—but I mean, the costs, when you wind up a month, and find out that you don't make any money, you naturally know your costs are going up 2176 and that you should, in order to be able—

Q. What relation does that have to your margin of a cent and a half between tank car and tank wagon prices?

A. You mean the cost?

Q. Yes.

A. Only to this extent: When you are going along and you have sufficient money left over after a profit, or you can meet your expenses, you feel you are doing all right, or else you are doing pretty fair, but when it gets to a point where you are not making any money and you have other companies offering you a greater margin, you feel that you have a right to point that out that you really need an increase in the margin.

Q. Did you take that up with Mr. Raupagh when you talked with him?

A. I always do. That is, ever since we have been able to buy or could have bought gas cheaper, we continually endeavor to get them to increase the margin to put it in line with the competitive companies.

Q. Did you talk with him along that line in December, 1940?

A. I did.

Q. What did he say?

A. Well, he just couldn't do anything about it. He said that that was the deal, and that the company wouldn't 2177 increase it.

Q. Did you discuss the possibility of your company leaving the Standard Oil at that time; say anything about that?

A. I told him that if conditions keep on, we may have to leave and get a better margin.

Q. Was any further discussion had with Mr. Raupagh, or did you then terminate it? Was anything further said along that line?

A. Well, I believe I again talked to him about helping out or the equipment or, at least, taking the burden off, because that is quite a costly burden. He again refused, and that's about all we talked about.

Q. In that connection did you discuss, in the December, 1940, meeting, with Mr. Raupagh, the offer that the Gulf Refining Company had made to you? Was that brought up at all?

A. Not at that time.

Q. Now have you, up to this time, April 26th, 1941, declined the offer made to you by the Aurora Gasoline Company?

A. Well, I wouldn't exactly say we declined it. We are still considering it.

Q. You are still considering it?

A. Yes.

Q. Right at this moment?

A. Yes.

Q. As far as you know the offer is still open?

A. As far as I know, it still is.

2178 Q. Mr. Citrin, based on your experience in the oil business, is it or is it not your opinion there has been any time since you began to receive gasoline from Standard Oil Company on a tank car basis that you have not been able to buy in the Detroit area your requirements of gasoline of a quality comparable with Standard Oil brands from other suppliers of gasoline at tank car prices, either equal to or less than the prevailing tank car prices of Standard Oil Company?

Mr. Austin: I am forced to object to that, your Honor. I don't doubt the witness has some experience, but it involves a conclusion on the question of comparable quality, for one thing, which I think makes the question bad.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness has testified to the facts and I don't think he is—

Mr. Abbott: I am asking him to state, based on the fact that he has been in the oil business for 20 years; he qualifies for that reason as an expert on the question of gasoline prices in the Detroit area.

He has testified with reference to representations made to him by these various suppliers as to the quality of their products, and by the very force of circumstances he must, as an expert on that subject, have a knowledge as to the quality of gasolines furnished by the different oil companies including Gulf, Texas, Argo, Aurora gasoline and other companies concerning which he has testified 2179 here this morning, and also yesterday, in his testimony.

I submit that it is material and that the witness should be permitted to answer as to whether there has been any time, any day, any hour, any moment from the time he became first a tank car customer of the Standard Oil Company, when he has not been able to purchase on the open market gasoline of comparable quality to Standard Oil brands at prices either equal to or less than the tank car price of Standard Oil Company's prevailing at all times.

Mr. Austin: I am sure that all the other gasoline—that the Standard Oil Company doesn't contend that all the other gasolines sold in Detroit are comparable to Standard Oil, and the answer would be meaningless unless you first defined what is meant by comparable quality.

Secondly, he has stated, as I understand it, all the offers which he has claimed to have received from other gasoline companies and, therefore, he can't know beyond that whether he could have bought from anyone else or not or from the same ones at any other time, because, as Respondent's witnesses have testified, any company has a right to choose its customers, and it doesn't follow from the fact they charged somebody a price that they will sell to somebody else at the same price.

Mr. Abbott: I didn't ask him whether he could have purchased. I asked him whether he was at all times able to purchase gasoline.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you mean by the word "able"? Do you mean that he was financially in a position?

Mr. Abbott: No. I mean considering the existing conditions of the market, whether he was able to make an offer to purchase, and whether that offer would have been accepted at all times by gasoline suppliers in the Detroit area at prices either equal to or less than the prevailing tank car prices of the Standard Oil Company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is prepared to rule, unless you desire to be heard further.

Mr. Abbott: I have stated all my reasons why I think an answer should be permitted.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is sustained.

Mr. Abbott: May I suggest we have a five minute recess at this time? It is half past 11.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may. We will take a five minute recess.

(A short recess was had.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Reconvening.

Mr. Abbott: You may take the witness, Mr. Austin.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

2181 Mr. Hanley: On the record. If your Honor please, your discussion now remainds me of a statement I wish to make for the record—more accurately, a request I wish to make to the Court. That henceforward in this trial, all statements of every nature made by the Trial Examiner or by any counsel for any party during open sessions of the Court be a matter of record and reflected by the record, and that no statements during open sessions of the Court be made off the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner will exercise his own discretion in the allowance of the request.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, I understood you to say that any time we wanted anything on the record when you said, "Off the record," we could make an objection and it would go on the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is true. But where there is consent of counsel that we go off the record for an informal discussion, there is no occasion for it being on the record, which would be required under the request made by the Judge.

Mr. Hanley: Of course, that is implied in the request, that if there is an agreement of counsel the request is abrogated, I understand.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then the request with 2182 that modification is granted.

Cross-Examination By Mr. Austin.

Q. When was it, Mr. Citrin, that you approached the Standard Oil Company about being permitted to buy gasoline on a tank car basis?

A. As I stated right along, it was between '26 and '28.

Q. Did you say at that time that you had been operating retail stations? By "you" I mean Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

A. Yes.

Q. Was your operation at that time chiefly the operation of retail service stations?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you supplying any dealers at wholesale at that time?

A. Not when we became—not until we became a tank car buyer.

Q. I believe you made the statement that around that time you had acquired several retail dealers, and you wanted to get on the tank car basis, and I didn't know just what you meant by that.

A. Well, if I did, I just merely made a mistake. I don't recall making such a statement. And I think we acquired several retail stations.

Q. About how many stations did you have then?

2183 A. Well, I would say we had five or six.

Q. That was the number you had when you first acquired your bulk storage with the Carnick Oil Company?

A. Well, let me just recall which location we had.

(There was a slight delay at this point.)

A. We had at that time four stations.

Q. Now, after you started to purchase in tank car quantities from Standard Oil, how long after that did you continue to operate all those stations at retail?

A. We operated, as I recall it, until—well, until '35.

Q. Was it around '35 when you began to change your business over to—that is, when you began to resell to dealers?

A. I believe we had some dealers prior to '35. But it is around '35 when we started to lease out our company stations.

Q. You mean stations as to which you owned or leased the properties?

A. Yes.

Q. But in the meantime had you acquired some dealers to whom you were selling wholesale?

A. We did.

Q. How did you get that new business?

A. Well, we just merely went out, making contacts with some of the dealers in the stations, sold them on the 2184 idea that we were just starting out, that we were close to them, and that it would mean a great deal if they would buy gasoline from us rather than from the supplier that they were getting it from at that time.

Q. What do you mean when you say "it would mean a great deal"?

A. Well, by saying that I mean that starting off in a small way and realizing that any additional business that we may obtain would reduce the cost of the distribution of the gasoline. We had at that time made quite an investment, and starting off small, we were sort of worried about those investments.

Q. Well, you mean it would reduce your distribution costs?

A. Well, naturally it would. In other words, if we delivered, let's say, 50,000 gallons of gasoline, and we had a rental on the property, or payments, insurance, and truck expenses, and a driver, it is no secret if you deliver twice as much it would reduce the cost than if we delivered half as much.

Q. Did you offer any of these dealers whom you took on as wholesale accounts, any lower price than they were getting from the supplier they already had?

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment. If the Court please, this goes outside the scope of the examination on direct.

2185 If the Commission wishes to make the witness their own witness, I think it might be admissible. But otherwise not. Because it is not proper cross examination.

Mr. Austin: I am just pursuing a subject which was brought up as to the development of the business on direct examination. I am not—I want to find out how his business developed and changed over from retail to wholesale business.

Mr. Abbott: You are going into the question as to whether they gave any preferential prices to dealers that they took on as an inducement to do business with the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, which is outside the scope entirely of the direct examination

Mr. Austin: I am not talking about preferential prices by Citrin-Kolb; I am not asking, or assuming that he charged one dealer a different price from another dealer, at this point. What I am asking is whether he obtained these new dealers by offering them a lower price than the dealers' suppliers. In other words, than that dealer had previously been paying somebody else.

Mr. Abbott: That also goes outside the scope of the direct examination.

Mr. Hanley: There is no desire on the part of the Respondent's counsel to argue the objection, but it is called to the attention of the Trial Examiner that upon the 2186 case in chief of the Government, a strict rule was applied as to the requirement that a witness be made the witness of the Respondent when it went in the least ways outside the scope of the direct examination.

Mr. Austin: I don't think that is true, either, because I only recall that being done in one case, and that was when Mr. Harrison was asked to testify about selling costs. I think that is the only place that the Respondent was required to make the witness their own witness.

Mr. Abbott: Is there any particular objection to making him your witness on this point?

Mr. Austin: Yes, because I am not pursuing any particular line of proof. I am just questioning the witness about what he testified to on direct examination. I am trying to find out what he meant by a previous answer.

Mr. Abbott: He didn't testify to that at all.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is of the opinion that the question asked is very remotely related to anything asked on direct examination, and sustains the objection.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Aside from price, Mr. Citgin, let me ask you if any of these dealers whom you began to supply prior to 1935 had formerly been supplied directly by the Standard
2187 Oil Company.

A. They were not.

Q. Now, since 1935 you have increased greatly the number of stations that you served, have you not?

A. We have.

Q. And has that increase been due to the acquisition of service station property by your company, or have the majority of these dealers been dealers to whom you sell, but as to whose station properties you have no control?

A. Well, I would say that was true on both parts; in other words, we have acquired more property, built more stations, and we have also acquired more dealers.

Q. Have you acquired any dealers who, before you started to sell to them, were purchasing their gasoline from the Standard Oil Company?

2188 A. I didn't get that, Mr. Austin. Would you mind repeating that.

Q. Were any of these dealers to whom you sell gasoline formerly direct customers of Standard Oil Company, before you began to sell them?

A. No.

Q. Now, didn't you state on direct examination that around 1935 you decided to make a change in the nature of your business and try to become wholesalers rather than retailers, so far as possible?

A. I believe I did state so.

Q. And what was the reason for that change?

A. I believe I had explained—at least the best way I knew why—as to why we decided to change the operation methods.

Q. Well, would you state that again? I didn't think that you finished your answer on that, or stated it very fully yesterday.

A. Well, I will be glad to.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Has counsel a copy of yesterday's record?

Mr. Austin: I have, your Honor.

Mr. Hanley: I have one here. I will be glad to let the Examiner see it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: May I have it, please?

2189 Mr. Abbott: May I say, that the matter now under discussion was gone into in some length with this witness, and he made a rather involved statement as to the reasons why he wanted to go on a wholesale basis in 1935.

I assume that is what your Honor wants to get the testimony for.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

A. As I recall it, we were doing a wholesale business and a retail business; having been limited to the amount of executive abilities that we had in our partnership, or else having realized that if we were to continue we would have to expand in such a way that we would have to hire more help, more personnel, that is the two businesses would require—well, in other words, one would have to run the retail end of it, and one would have to run the wholesale, and it would require quite a bit of more help. And we also realized that if we went into the wholesale end of it we could do a better job by devoting all our efforts just going after the wholesale end of it. So, for that reason we decided that not being large enough that we should decide which way to continue, and we have decided to continue in the wholesale manner.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Was the matter of expense a consideration? That is considering the nature of your retail operations and wholesale operations, which at that time you were 2190 combining, and did you decide—or, was it your opinion that if you restricted your operations to wholesale that it would decrease the cost of distributing gasoline?

A. Well, in reference to expense I could point out as to what we thought would increase the expense. In other words, if we operated a chain of retail stations and yet operated and supplied to wholesale accounts, first of all we would have the expense of hiring supervisors to supervise those retail stations; we would have to maintain an employment department; operating a chain of stations would also necessitate advertising. Whereby if a man operates one station it is a lot easier for him to do business in one station than it is in a chain of stations, because you work in the station yourself, you get to know your neighbors, you treat them—you give them personalized service. Then, going into operating a chain of retail stations, you sort of have to offset that by being able to advertise, or give such services that you otherwise could not—would not give. And all of that would entail additional expenses.

Q. Is it your opinion then, Mr. Citrin, that by restricting your business entirely to wholesale or almost entirely, that it is possible for you to operate your business more efficiently?

A. Well, at that time, Mr. Austin, it seemed to be the best road to follow; at least the most reasonable way to do business.

Q. Can you answer that question?

2191 A. I beg your pardon.

Q. Can you answer that question, whether, in your opinion, by restricting your operation to wholesale, that you could operate more efficiently than by engaging in both wholesale and retail?

A. I can state that but my opinion, when we operated a number of retail stations—

Q. Yes.

A. —at that time we did operate a number of retail stations and my opinion, or the partnership's opinion, it was that we would be operating cheaper if we operated at wholesale business.

Mr. Austin: Now I would like to make a motion at this time, your Honor, directed to the testimony of the witness regarding conversations he had with the representatives, I believe of the Hicock Oil Company of Toledo. The testimony in connection with an alleged offer made by the Hicock Oil Company to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company somewhere around 1928—

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Is that correct, Mr. Citrin? You testified yesterday when it was.

A. I believe it was around 1930, Mr. Austin.

Mr. Austin: 1930.

Mr. Abbott: That's what he testified to.

Mr. Austin: I thought that that Hicock deal went back farther than that?

2192 Trial Examiner Ballinger: 1930, was the testimony.

Mr. Austin: Wasn't the date of your Shell testimony 1930?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: Yes, the same year.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Austin: I would like to check that, please, before going further. My recollection is to the contrary. I am probably wrong, if Mr. Abbott says so, but I would like to see the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion may remain open.

Mr. Austin: (Referring to record.) Page 2069 of the record, the witness says:

"I would say that was around—well, between 1926 and 1928. I just can't remember the exact year."

Mr. Abbott: Which one is that?

Mr. Austin: Perhaps I was referring to the wrong company.

Mr. Abbott: That is when he said he went on a tank car basis and had bulk station relations with the Carnick Oil.

Mr. Austin: Oh, yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will go off the record until we can agree on this date.

2193 Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Austin: I am in error. I will proceed, your Honor, in reference to the testimony of the witness respecting an alleged offer from Hicock Oil Company.

I move that all testimony relating to that transaction and conversations with representatives of the Hicock Oil Company be stricken from the record upon the ground, first, that the transaction in question is too remote to have any bearing upon the good faith of the Respondent in lowering a price or making a low price to meet a low price of a competitor, after the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act or, in other words, during any of the time covered by the Complaint and;

Secondly, and more particularly, upon the ground that this statement, or rather the description of the conversation, clearly related to an offer to obtain an interest in the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and was clearly not an offer for the sale of gasoline. It was, rather, an offer which involved the acquisition and control of the Citrin-Kolb

Oil Company and, consequently, cannot be possibly considered as an offer of a price of the sale of gasoline.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will hear from counsel for the Respondent.

2194 Mr. Abbott: I understand the motion is based on two grounds:

First, as to the alleged remoteness of the offer from the Hicock Oil Company of Toledo.

Secondly, that it involved other considerations than price.

The part of the Robinson-Patman Act which is involved here is in sub-division "b" and reads as follows:

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The effective date of which, was what?

Mr. Hanley: June 19, 1936.

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

"Provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall prevent a seller rebutting the prima facie case thus made by showing that his lower price or the furnishing of services or facilities to any purchaser or purchasers was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor or the services or facilities furnished by a competitor."

Now that was, of course, an amendment to the Clayton Anti-Trust Act which was enacted by Congress in 1914.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This proceeding is brought under the Robinson-Patman amendment to the Clayton Act.

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Now, as to the claim of remoteness, the Respond-2195 ent maintains that it is material on this record, which is to be presented to the Commission, to show a continuous course of dealings between this jobber and the Respondent from the time when, in 1926, to sometime in 1928, the jobber was placed on a tank car basis of delivery, after which time it has been shown by the evidence there were repeated efforts on the part of other suppliers to proselyte this account of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company by offering equal or a better price to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company than was offered or maintained in the delivery of tank car shipments to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company by the Standard Oil Company.

I wish further to bring to the attention of the Court that it is in the testimony here, not only on the testimony of Mr. Raupagh, but on the testimony of this witness, that the arrangement which the Standard Oil Company placed Citrin-Kolb Oil Company on in 1926 to 1928, when they first went on the tank car basis, was a day to day arrangement, no contracts having been entered into; nothing to prevent the arrangement being cancelled on the part of either the Respondent or the jobber. It therefore, it seems to me, becomes necessary and pertinent to show, in order to establish a continuity and persistent course of dealing as between Respondent and the jobber, on the one hand, and other suppliers of gasoline on the other, to secure this account of the jobber from the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company by other oil companies, both major and 2196 others, that have been testified to in this case, from the Standard Oil Company, the Respondent.

Now those offers began, according to the testimony, here, from 1930 to the time of the offer of Mr. Bailey and Mr. Hicock of the Hicock Oil Company, right down until the present time and there is an offer at the present time, even under consideration by the jobber.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Pardon an interruption. The Examiner would like to hear from you as to whether or not the Hicock offer was, in fact, an offer to supply gasoline to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company at a price.

Mr. Abbott: I was going to come to that. If your Honor wishes me to pass from the matter of remoteness, I will do so.

In the second place, it is claimed by the Commission that the offer of the Hicock Oil Company of Toledo involved other considerations than price.

On the proposition, the testimony by this witness was that they were offered a contract by the Hicock Oil Company of Toledo which even went to the point of having Mr. Citrin go down to Toledo and confer with Mr. Hicock, himself, who is the head of that company, which contract guaranteed a 6½¢ margin per gallon; that is to say, 6½¢ under the prevailing retail price which the witness has testified involved a margin between the tank car and the 2197 tank wagon price prevailing of 2¢ a gallon.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: With whom was the contract to be made?

Mr. Abbott: With the Hicock Oil Company of Toledo.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes, but who was the party in Detroit?

Mr. Abbott: The Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I do not so understand.

Mr. Abbott: I know what the Examiner has in mind.

You have in mind the additional consideration that the offer involved the feature that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company should be incorporated and I say that the Act here, which we are considering, says that if an offer was made to meet an equally low price of a competitor, then it is a defense under the Act and there is—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understand—

Mr. Abbott: If I may be permitted to continue until I finish the sentence—and there is, in this case, in this offer, a definite offer not only to meet the price of the Standard Oil Company on tank car shipment but also to better that offer; namely, to give a differential not of a cent and a half as between tank car and the tank wagon price, but a differential of two cents.

2198 Now, as to whether the additional consideration of incorporating the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and allocating stock to the Hicock Oil Company on the basis of 51% of stock, to 49% to the partners in the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company partnership, with the proviso that preferred stock should be issued, in addition, to those stockholders representing the amount of their investment in the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, I say that merely goes to the matter of the weight of the testimony.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now will you permit an interruption?

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: As the Examiner remembers, there was no offer to furnish the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company gas at any price. There was an offer that in the event a corporation was organized, in which the Hicock Company was to own or receive 51% of the common stock, to then sell to the new corporation at a certain price. Now, if the Examiner is in error, I would like to have you point it out.

Mr. Abbott: I would like to have an opportunity to read the testimony, but I don't want to take the time, because there is quite a lot of testimony on the point, and, I, therefore, suggest that the Court reserve ruling on that until we have an opportunity to block out the testi-2199 mony and bring it to your Honor, because I don't want to take the time here. I would like to get on with the testimony, if it is permissible. I can't refer to it offhand, but I would like an opportunity to read that testimony back to the Court.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner's memory is very clear with reference to the testimony.

Mr. Abbott: I say, also, in that connection, that the fact that these incidents were involved in the offer does not detract from the proposition that there was an offer to sell the requirements of gasoline of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company at a larger differential than they were then securing from the Standard Oil Company, and there was an element of price involved, and [illegible] Act itself merely says that if the offer—that is to say, [illegible] the offer of the Standard Oil Company—from day to day to sell tank car shipments was made in good faith to meet an equally low price of a competitor, which the Hicock Oil Company certainly is, then it is competent evidence, even though something else is involved in the offer. That is a question involving the construction of the Act.

I submit that it is purely a matter presented to the Commission as a matter of law as to whether this testimony comes within the Act. We are involved here, as I understand it, in making a record for the Commission, and 2200 I think that testimony should be permitted to stand because it does involve a question as to whether that offer comes within the purview of subdivision "b" of the Robinson-Patman Act, which contains the language I have quoted.

Do you wish to say anything on that, Judge Hanley?

Mr. Hanley: Yes, I do, and may I have the objection of Mr. Austin read, please?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Hanley: For the record: Counsel for the Respondent at this time states to the record that counsel for the Respondent will not argue any question in the matter of the ruling of the Court until and unless the Court invites argument by counsel.

At this time counsel for the Respondent wishes to continue the stated reasons for its opposition to the allowance favorably of the objection of counsel for the Commission, or motion to strike on the part of counsel for the Commission, of certain evidence relating to certain offers made to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company by the Hicock Company, and, as a part thereof, counsel for the Respondent alludes to, because of inseparability, the rulings of the Court in respect of the admissibility of evidence and relevancy of evidence concerning competitive offers to the jobber-2201 customers of the Respondent. That, without repeating any of the factual matter alluded to in the statements of Mr. Abbott, there is added thereto, on the question of the character of the Hicock offer as a competitive offer, the statement of Respondent that the same is entitled to be considered as a competitive offer, notwithstanding that all of the circumstances and facts surrounding the same were not identically comparable to the relations existing between the Standard Oil Company and Citrin-Kolb Oil Company. That the effective situation results under the statute when the customer involved receives an offer, irrespective of what it is, which in his mind resolves itself into an inducement paramount to the inducements being offered or enjoyed from his then supplier and that the comparableness of the circumstances and terms are utterly immaterial.

Further, that it is error on the part of the Examiner to exclude any evidence of any offer that may be made by a competitor of the Standard Oil Company to any customer of the Standard Oil Company in this trial, for the reasons heretofore assigned, and for the following reasons:

First, that the Examiner has indicated on page 2051 of the record, in striking the testimony in relation to competitive offers made to the Wayne Oil Company, as follows: "If the record stood as it is, the Examiner 2202 would wholly disregard the testimony in his report, and he is advising counsel now by stating that he will either entertain a motion of counsel or he will of his own motion direct the testimony be stricken."

And, again on page 2054 of the record, the Examiner stated, after inviting the prosecuting attorney to make a motion to strike—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You mean counsel for the Commission?

Mr. Hanley: Yes. I beg your pardon.

Mr. Austin: I don't think this has any relevancy to the present objection.

Mr. Hanley: It will have. It all ties in.

The Examiner stated, quoting: "Well, the Examiner is merely apprising you of the fact that unless counsel moves to strike the testimony, the Examiner will direct that the testimony be stricken. And he is doing that to apprise you of the fact that he will wholly disregard it in his report."

Further, that the Examiner has indicated by his rulings that he regards any testimony of any offers subsequent to the filing of the Complaint as immaterial. And that he regards any offers of competitive nature to any dealer as immaterial, if such dealer were on a tank car basis on the effective date of the Robinson-Patman Act.

2203 That the result of such theory of trial and rulings of the Court result in an impossible situation and an impasse, so far as both the Federal Trade Commission and the Respondent are concerned, in that, first, if a dealer were on the tank car basis prior to the effective date of the Robinson-Patman Act, there is no challenge to the legality of that relationship.

If the legality of that relationship continues, there is no reason why the Respondent should justify the existence thereof.

If that relationship is challenged in its legality, as must be implied by reason of the fact that the Federal Trade Commission has charged the Respondent herein with an illegal relationship, the same must have occurred coincidentally with the approval of the Robinson-Patman Act in 1936.

That if such legality be challenged in this proceeding, then the Respondent is entitled to justify under any statutory grounds granted the Respondent for such justification, including the meeting of competition.

If there is no necessity, and it is not material that the Respondent justify or present evidence as to competitive offers since June, 1936, and after the customer went on the tank car basis, then the Respondent is entitled to have dismissed from this proceeding all of the transactions

2204 relating to the relations, on the one hand, of the Citrin-Kolb Company, the Wayne Oil Company, the Stikeman Oil Company, and, on the other hand, the Respondent Standard Oil Company.

Further, that if said transactions are retained in the proceeding, the Respondent is entitled, under the provisions of the statute, to justify its continuance of the tank car price on the basis that it is necessary to do so to retain its own customers in the face of competitive offers.

Further, that if there be excluded from the evidence any offers subsequent to the filing date of the Complaint, as was done by the Examiner in the matter of the competitive offers to the Wayne Oil Company made on December 10 and on December 13, 1940, then an impossible situation and impasse is created for both the Federal Trade Commission and the Respondent in this: That any result in this action adversely to the Respondent could result only in a cease and desist order, which cease and desist order would provide for conduct in the future from its date, which date would necessarily be not later in any event under such ruling of the Court than the filing date of the Complaint, and which order would preclude the Respondent from operating in a manner which had been established on the record up to but not beyond the filing date of the Complaint.

2205 And assuming that if the said three jobbers be retained in the action on the theory that they have been violating the law since June, 1936, that they have so violated the law up until the filing date of the Complaint, then they have cured such violations by a competitive offer bona fidely met on December 10th and December 13th, and the Federal Trade Commission, in entering its order, would be in the untenable position of entering an order based upon evidence that they never heard, and the Respondent would have been precluded from presenting a statutory and complete justification of the continuance of its operations after December 10th and December 13th.

That concludes that motion.

I am sorry, your Honor.

If it be the contention of the Government, as indicated it may be by the statement of the Trial Examiner, that no evidence of justification on the grounds of competition is admissible after the establishment of customers on a tank car basis, when it is shown that such establishment on said basis occurred prior to June, 1936, then, in that event, it must necessarily follow that there is no violation of law by continuing such customers, and consequently it is moved by the Respondent that all transaction alleged in the Complaint between the Citrin-Kolb Company, the Wayne Oil Company, and the Stikeman Company, on the one 2206 hand, and the Standard Oil Company, Respondent, on the other hand, be dismissed.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, the Examiner cannot entertain two motions at the same time. There is a motion pending. He will not entertain the last motion you have submitted.

Mr. Harley: I will be glad to renew that, of course, Judge. I don't want to get the thing too complicated.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is prepared to rule.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, may I make just two sentences before you rule?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Austin: In the first place, I would like to state for the record that the Complaint in this case involves no charge that any of the four jobbers named therein has violated any law administered by the Federal Trade Commission.

Secondly, directly in respect to the motion, I want to say in my opinion Section 2-b of the Robinson-Patman Act, when it refers to an equally low price of a competitor, as applied to this case, refers to a price for gasoline, and that the price mentioned or referred to by the Hicock Oil Company in its conversation with Mr. Citrin, was not a price for gasoline. It was a price for a lot of other 2207 things.

Mr. Abbott: What other things do you refer to, I would like to ask?

Mr. Austin: This was a price for agreeing to incorporate, and have 51% of the common stock issued to Hicock Oil Company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner refers to the record as affording sufficient grounds for the Examiner's previous rulings on all motions. On the pending motion of counsel for the Commission the Examiner sustains it and directs that the testimony of Jacob A. Citrin, so far as related to any offer received from the Hicock Company, be stricken from the record.

Mr. Hanley: Now, in view of your Honor's statement before ruling that there were two motions on the record, I would like now to renew the second motion, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may present any motion you have.

Mr. Hanley: It is on the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

(The following motion by Judge Hanley was read by the reporter:

2208 "If it be the contention of the Government, as indicated it may be by the statement of the Trial Examiner, that no evidence of justification on the grounds of competition is admissible after the establishment of customers on a tank car basis, when it is shown that such establishment on said basis occurred prior to June, 1936, then, in that event it must necessarily follow that there is no violation of law by continuing such customers, and consequently it is moved by the Respondent that all transactions alleged in the Complaint between the Citrin-Kolb Company, the Wayne Oil Company, and the Stikeman Company, on the one hand, and the Standard Oil Company, Respondent, on the other hand, be dismissed.")

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Motion by counsel for the Respondent is denied.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Turning now, Mr. Citrin, to your conversation, I believe, in 1930, with someone whom you said represented the Shell Oil Company, who was that conversation with?

A. Well, there were three of them from the home office of St. Louis.

Q. Did you know any of them before?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. Will you recall again how you happened to meet these three men at that time?

2209 A. Well, as I stated before, Middleton, having been a Standard Oil jobber—

Q. That is Mr. Middleton here in Detroit?

A. Yes. —whom the Standard Oil Company later lost as a result of the Shell offer—,

Mr. Austin: I object to the statement. I move to strike the last clause.

Mr. Abbott: I object to that. He is stating just what he testified to yesterday, that Middleton Oil Company was lost by the Standard Oil because of this very offer that was made to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

Mr. Austin: I don't know whether they were lost. And the witness doesn't know whether it was as a result of this offer, obviously.

Mr. Abbott: I don't know if that is so. I think he did have knowledge as a result of this offer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may find out.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well, anyway, Mr. Middleton had been a Standard Oil jobber?

A. Yes.

Q. And so let's now get ahead, and just stay on what happened at that time, and go ahead.

2210 A. Having been practically a neighbor of Middleton, as far as our bulk plants were concerned, he was located at that time on Fenkel, and we were located on Livernois close to Fenkel, we would frequently have sessions between us, inasmuch as we were handling the same products, and we would discuss the possibilities of expansion and what the future held for us, and as a result of such meetings he told me that the Shell was after him, and that he thought if we would entertain such proposition with our office and his we would have a better chance to start out distributing the products in question. He told that the Shell were going to have a sort of convention here in Detroit, and that the officials that he was in contact with would be here, and that he wanted me to come down and meet them. Which we did. We spent about three days in the Statler and met these people. I don't recall their names, it has been so long ago.

Q. Did any one of those three tell you what position he held with the Shell Oil Company?

A. One was the credit manager; I know that; because he always wanted to know about our financial end of it.

Q. Did any one of them tell you that they were authorized to make any offer to you on behalf of the Shell Oil Company?

A. Oh, yes. In fact, as I recall it, they had form contracts that they were showing and they were quite anxious in getting us to sign up right then and there over that 2211 period of three days they were to spend, here. They were sent here with the idea of obtaining a jobber or jobbers in the City of Detroit to handle their products, as well as Wayne County.

Q. That's what they told you?

A. Yes.

Q. Now that conversation was about Silver Flash Gasoline, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And is that a brand made by Shell?

A. It was a brand made by Shell which, as they explained to me, was as good as their regular Shell brand, only that in some states they advertised and sold their gasoline under the name of Silver Flash where, in other states, they sold it as Shell.

Q. Let me ask you this: Is Silver Flash Gasoline sold in Detroit now?

A. No, it is not.

Q. You said the Middleton Oil Company took it on?

A. Yes.

Q. After that time?

A. Yes.

Q. Shortly after that time?

A. They did take it on shortly after that time.

Q. And what happened to that?

A. Well, it since—of course, you don't know—

2212 Q. I am not asking you what happened to the Middleton Oil Company. I want to know whether the Silver Flash was discontinued by Shell or whether it is not handled by the Middleton Oil Company?

A. It was discontinued by Middleton in Detroit, as I recall it, by reason of his failure in his business.

Q. The Middleton Oil Company did fail?

A. To the best of my knowledge; I think they did.

Q. Now do you know whether Shell Oil Company makes or sells a gasoline under the brand of Silver Flash now?

A. Right today, I couldn't say that I know.

Q. It hasn't been sold in Detroit for several years, has it?

A. No.

Q. Isn't the Silver Flash the same gasoline that is now known as Silver Shell; third grade Shell Gas?

A. Now that you told me, you call it to my attention, I believe that that's probably what they are doing.

Q. And their regular house brand is called Golden Shell, is it not?

A. I believe that that, possibly, is correct.

Q. You stated that the Middleton Oil Company accepted an offer from Shell; that is, this offer which was discussed at the Statler, was it, at that time?

Didn't you state that the Middleton Oil Company
2213 made a deal with Shell?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did you ever see the contract, or do you know whether there was a contract made by the Middleton Oil and Shell?

A. Well, I saw the contract that was proposed to us.

Q. Did you ever see it after it was signed by either the Middleton Oil Company or the Shell Petroleum Company?

A. All I saw, that the same contract that they gave me, they also gave to Mr. Middleton.

Q. And you know that later on he began to sell this Shell Gasoline?

A. I do.

Q. But do you know, of your own knowledge, what deal he actually made with the Shell Oil Company?

A. Well, I know that the deal he made must have been the same as the one offered at the time.

Q. Couldn't it have been changed? It might have been made better for him, mightn't it, after you got through talking, or not so good?

A. It might have, yes.

Q. And you don't know what deal he actually closed with the Shell Company, do you?

A. I do know that after he made the deal, that upon several occasions that he told me that he accepted their offer on the basis that they had outlined to us and he thought—

2214 Q. Is that the only knowledge you have, is what he told you?

A. Yes.

Mr. Hanley: Pardon me, Mr. Austin. May I interrupt a moment, your Honor?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Mr. Hanley: I am doing this on behalf of associate counsel.

I am just advised that he made an appointment today for one o'clock with the understanding that we were going to adjourn at one o'clock. I would just like to remind the Court of that fact.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner assumes that it will require some little time to finish cross-examination?

Mr. Austin: It may take a little while, yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner will entertain a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Abbott: In connection with that, your Honor, I wish to say that Monday morning we have two witnesses coming here from a distance and it will be necessary, because they have been advised to be here at the opening of the hearing on Monday morning, to take that testimony up at that time.

I don't like to break into a witness' testimony, but that 2215 is the situation we are under and we will have to adhere to that program.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Abbott: I move we adjourn at this time until Monday morning, April 28, at 9:00 o'clock a. m.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion of counsel for the Respondent is granted and now, at 1:10 p. m., the hearing stands adjourned to be reconvened at the hour of 9:00 o'clock a. m. April 28, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(Whereupon, at 1:10 p. m., April 26, 1941, the hearing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned to reconvene on April 28, 1941, at 9:00 a. m.)

Room 859 Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan,
April 28, 1941.

Met, pursuant to adjournment, at 9 A. M.

Before: Webster Ballinger, Trial Examiner.

Appearances:

Cyrus B. Austin, Esq., Attorney for the Federal Trade Commission.

Harold R. Hanley, Esq., 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and

Arthur J. Abbott, Esq., of the firm of Abbott, MacMahon, and Roberts, 2230 Buhl Building, Detroit, Michigan, on behalf of the Respondent.

2217 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

This is a reconvening at 9 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, April 28, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, of Docket 4389 in the case entitled Standard Oil Company.

The last hearing was held in Detroit, April 26, 1941.

The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

You may proceed.

JACOB A. CITRIN, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Cross-Examination by Mr. Austin (Continued).

Q. Mr. Citrin, you were talking about the conversations you had with some men who were supposed to be from the Shell Oil Company. I believe you said that they came from St. Louis.

A. I did.

Q. Now, they talked to you and to a Mr. Middleton; is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. And I believe you said they were trying to get jobber representation here in Detroit. Wasn't there something about exclusive territory? Did they offer you, 2218 or either one of you, exclusive territory, or was there any offer that you and Mr. Middleton, between you, would have the sole representation here? How was that talked about?

A. Well, to the best of my recollection, we were trying to tell them that if we entertained a proposition of that kind, that we would want it exclusively, and not having completed the deal, I don't think we would have had any trouble obtaining it exclusively, because Middleton, having been the only one that they put on—there were no other jobbers at that time—so I—

Q. But was there anything said as to you and him, when they talked to you together about what—were they going to divide up the territory in Detroit, or what was the arrangement?

A. Well, we were mostly interested in the things they were going to do for us. As to the territory, it was understood we were going to be the only two.

Q. Is that so?

A. Yes.

Q. And I believe you said that after you had this talk with these Shell representatives that you then related your conversation to Mr. Raupagh.

A. Well, Mr. Austin, as I stated—

Q. It is quite a long time ago, I know.

2219 A. As I stated in the past, I have more or less related all of these offers at one time or another to the Standard Oil Company management, either the manager was out, or it was the salesmanager or the assistant manager; most of the offers we had were related to them in connection with the better deals that we could have gotten.

Q. Do you remember whether or not you told Mr. Raupagh about this at that time?

A. The Shell offer; yes.

Q. And I believe, on direct examination, you said in talking to him that he rather tried to persuade you to stay with Standard, and I think you said that he argued that your deal with Standard was a better deal, even though it was a smaller differential?

A. Yes.

Q. What reasons did he give in arguing that?

A. Well, namely, that we had built up a pretty good business on the locations that we had sold Standard. Silver Flash, although having been the first grade of Shell gas, would be a new product in the city of Detroit, and it would take quite a while before the public would start buying it, and that the gallonage, no doubt, would suffer. And, therefore, although we would have obtained a better margin or spread, still it would have been eaten up in the loss of business.

2220 Q. Do you remember anything else that was said at that time?

A. Well, we talked about the painting they were going to do for us; also talked about, as I recall it, that Middleton might obtain that proposition and he may lose a customer. Also wanted to know if we could have gotten a contract at that time; at least give us some protection—

Q. You were trying to see what you could get from Standard Oil to see whether there was anything to offset the other deal; is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. You finally decided to stay along with Standard?

A. Well, it took us a little while before we made up our mind, and turned it down.

Q. Since you started your bulk plant operation, you never have purchased any other gasoline except Standard, have you, through your bulk plant, at tank car lots?

A. No.

Q. Now, in 1936, Mr. Citrin, you told us about some conversations you had with a Mr. Chandler whom you said represented Gulf Oil Company, I believe it is, or Gulf Petroleum, I don't know which—

A. Yes.

Q. —I don't know what their title is. I think they have companies under both names, as a matter of 2221 fact. But, at least, we are referring to the major oil company that is known as Gulf?

A. That's right.

Q. And also that you had some conversations with some representatives of the Texas Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember which was first, whether the conversations with the Gulf people that you talked to, or the conversations with the Texas people, were earlier, in 1936?

A. Well, the conversation with Gulf went on for quite a period, ~~and I~~ would say that the Gulf was first, although I wouldn't say that they were last, because the representative called on us constantly, and—

Q. Well, that is the time that the man that you said wore an overcoat, so you decided it was winter—

A. That's right.

Q. —but you weren't sure whether it was early spring or late fall. You can't place those two conversations by relating one to the other; the Texas and the Gulf?

A. I am quite definite the Gulf was before the Texas, but what I meant before in stating what I did, right after the Texas offer, we still had a representative from Gulf called on us; not only Mr. Chandler but Mr. Cole called on us constantly, so I wouldn't say that the Gulf was the last one, but the offer first was from Gulf; before Texas.

2222 Q. Do ~~you~~ remember when Standard Oil ceased operating retail stations here and changed over to a leasing basis?

A. Well, I think they started in early 1936.

Q. I think the record shows it was September 10, 1936, when they started the Iowa plan here in Detroit.

A. I thought it was around 1936.

Q. So, do you remember whether this offer from Gulf was before that or after that?

Mr. Abbott: Now, Mr. Austin, it took a little while, didn't it, to change over? I think, in fairness to the witness, you should ask him whether it was before or after they started this change-over, or whether it was before they finished the change-over.

Mr. Austin: I mentioned the date September 10th, and

I thought perhaps he would know when they started, and by recalling that date it would help. I assumed that you didn't do it all in one day, although Mr. Raupagh did give a definite date, and I suppose that means when a number of the leases were started in effect; is that right?

Mr. Raupagh: That's when they were completed.

Mr. Abbott: That is when the arrangement was completed, and they made the change-over 100%.

Mr. Austin: Then that is so much the better.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Does that help you any, Mr. Citrin?

2223 A. The only thing I could say is that I know that the Standard started leasing out,—whether they completed leasing out to stations, I wouldn't know—but it was some time in 1936. I also testified that the Gulf offer, I assume, was in the early part of 1936.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What was the date that the Standard completed the change?

Mr. Austin: Put it into effect September 10, 1936.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is the effective date?

Mr. Abbott: That's right. I understand the only purpose of this is to try to enable the witness to connect up one date with another.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes. But I was in doubt as to the date when they first decided to make the change and then the date when it was actually put in operation.

Mr. Austin: So was I, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I am still in doubt. We have a date of September 10, 1936. Was that the date when they decided to commence?

Mr. Abbott: No. That is the date when they put the plan in operation. Now, as to when they began to consider it, I don't think there is anything in the record on that. The fact of the matter is, I don't think there 2224 is anybody who knows.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. What position with the Gulf Petroleum Company, or the Gulf Company, did Mr. Chandler hold?

A. He claimed that he was a special representative calling on larger accounts.

Q. Where did you meet him first?

2225 A. Well, he called at one of our stations. I don't know just where his first call was. I know that most of the times when he came out was at Linwood and Buena Vista.

Q. The Buena Vista station?

A. Buena Vista, yes.

Q. That was one of the service stations that Citrin-Kolb was operating at that time?

A. Yes. In fact, before we got Livernois, the Buena Vista station was a newer station built, and we had built, then, sort of a one room little office in there, and that was considered—well, the place where we held our books and records. It was considered our main office at that time.

Q. Did you ever call at the offices of the Gulf Oil Company here at about that time, or were all of your conversations with Mr. Chandler out there at your station?

A. I was over at the Gulf over on Warren, several occasions. I don't know whether it was right around that time or whether Mr. Chandler arranged for an interview. I know I was over at the Gulf offices.

Q. Do you remember talking with anyone at the Gulf offices about purchasing gasoline from Gulf?

A. I must have been talking to them about gasoline, all right, or else he wouldn't have been over there, but I just don't seem to connect whether I was in there when Mr. Chandler was there, or before that, or whether 2226 they had asked me to come up there, but I do recall being at the office up there.

Q. Do you remember when?

A. I couldn't remember.

Q. Do you remember who you talked to?

A. I don't remember. No. I was trying to associate a certain gentleman I have seen there. I don't think I could state who he was.

Q. As I understand it, these talks with Mr. Chandler that you testified about on Saturday, or it may have been perhaps Friday afternoon, all took place at your Buena Vista station?

A. I don't believe that I testified just exactly where, but as I recall it, now, it seems like they were mostly at the Buena Vista station.

Q. And did you testify that Mr. Chandler did not indicate to you that Gulf would give you any price reduction but that they made several other offers which you thought were beneficial?

Mr. Abbott: Now just a moment. I don't think that is fair to the witness because he did say that they—offered to—

Mr. Austin: I am asking him now, please—I object to interruption by counsel unless there is an objection to the question in which case I think the objection should be stated.

2227 Mr. Abbott: That assumes something not in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there an objection to the question?

Mr. Abbott: I object to the question the way it is stated.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: State your grounds.

Mr. Abbott: The ground is it assumes a fact that is not in evidence in this case.

Mr. Austin: I ask the question be read. I did not assume any facts. If I am wrong, he can say so.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

2228 Mr. Austin: I asked the witness a question not based on any assumption.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will hear from you on your objection.

Mr. Abbott: The objection, as I stated, attempts to inject into the record a claim that the Gulf Refining Company did not offer any differential as between tank wagon and tank car deliveries.

Now, the witness very plainly stated in his direct examination—

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I think this is absolutely improper for counsel to state what he thinks the witness said. I asked the witness whether he said a certain thing; if the witness can't state the same thing Friday and today, we ought to know, without counsel getting up and reminding him what he said before. I don't think it is important, but I object to it on principle, and I want that to appear on the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Witness, step out in the hall.

(At this point the witness left the hearing room.)

Mr. Abbott: The point that I make, if the Court please, is that counsel is trying to mislead this witness by stating on the record to the witness that there was no differential in the price offered, but merely some other incidentals which did not go to the question of price.

2229 Now, I think it is unfair to attempt to mislead this witness in that situation.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner does not consider the question misleading, and the objection is overruled.

Recall the witness.

(At this point the witness resumed the stand.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question to the witness.

(The last question was read by the reporter.)

A. Shall I answer now?

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Sure.

A. As I stated a little while ago, between Mr. Chandler and the other representative, Mr. Cole, in the period they were calling on us, as I recall, they pointed out that the difference would be, over a period of time there when they were calling on us, the difference between us hauling the gas out of the yard and that they would furnish the equipment, paint the service stations; and that seemed to have been the only difference between the Standard Oil and the Gulf offer.

Mr. Austin: Would you reread that answer, please?

(The last answer was read.)

2230 By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well, that is the way I recall it, Mr. Citrin, and I just wanted to go a little more into detail as to what the offer was regarding the equipment and obtaining of gas and so forth.

Now, what equipment did Mr. Chandler say that Gulf would be willing to furnish in the event you would be willing to become a Gulf customer?

A. Well, it is a common practice, or was at that time, that the oil companies in obtaining a dealer, that they would furnish equipment—when they say "equipment" that largely pertains to gasoline pumps—and if we obtained a dealer, we would have to furnish such equipment. Now, the difference was that the Gulf were going to furnish that equipment for us rather than us furnishing the equipment and spending our own money, because Standard would not do that. Now, that was the difference.

Q. Well, you already had your own equipment at that time at your various stations, did you not?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Did you at that time own the pumps at all stations which were being operated by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, or do you lease them? What was your arrangement on that?

A. Well, I would say we owned most of them with the exception that we may have bought some equipment 2231 on time, or maybe we had some equipment billed to us and it was not paid for.

Q. Was Gulf going to furnish those pumps free of any rent, or were they going to rent them to you?

A. Well, as I recall it, Mr. Austin, at that time, when a pump is furnished to a dealer, they used to charge them, I believe, a dollar a year per pump. I think that was the practice. And if they would have furnished the equipment, there would have been a charge made of a dollar a year a pump.

Q. That is sort of a nominal rental; isn't it?

A. Yes, I suppose that is what it was.

Q. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was the question of rental considered?

The Witness: We really didn't talk about that. It was such a minor subject as to that dollar a year.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was there anything mentioned about—

The Witness: There wasn't anything mentioned about the charge. The only talk was about the equipment to be furnished.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. This was in '36, Mr. Citrin; how many stations were you supplying at that time?

2232 A. Well, Mr. Austin, I wouldn't want to state without having the record or the schedule. I believe the records that Mr. Biber had or was going to testify to, has schedules of the various years.

Mr. Austin: Haven't we got an exhibit that went in here the other day? Have you got a copy of it? Do you know the number of it? Could we go off the record?

Mr. Abbott: You mean as to the number of stations?

Mr. Austin: I think it has gone in evidence while Mr. Biber was on direct examination.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The desired exhibit having been located, we will now go back on the record.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Citrin, it appears here from Respondent's Exhibit No. 17, that at the beginning of 1936 the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company had a total of 14 stations. I suppose that that includes the stations, if any, which you were operating, as well as those which you were serving?

A. I would say that was correct.

Q. At the beginning of 1937 there were 32 stations, so I suppose during 1936 you were somewhere between 14 and 32, is that correct?

A. I would say.

2233 Q. For the different times of the year?

A. I would say whatever the records show, I would say that as having been right.

2234 Q. Now, as to any of those service stations which were supplied by you in 1936, were the properties of any of those stations rented by you from the Standard Oil Company?

A. No.

Q. Do you know whether any of the dealers whom you were supplying at that time rented any of their properties from the Standard Oil Company?

A. None.

Q. Did the Standard Oil Company at that time furnish or had it furnished or supplied any of the equipment at any of these retail stations?

A. Of our own retail stations?

Q. The ones you supplied, these fourteen to thirty-two.

A. Well, I can answer that question this way, Mr. Austin: I think I called it to your attention before that there may have been some equipment that wasn't paid for. But prior to becoming a tank car buyer I testified that we bought gas from Standard at some of our stations at tank wagon price, at which time they may have furnished some equipment. Having become a tank car buyer, that equipment was billed to us, and whether it was paid for immediately or maybe spread out over a period of six months I just would have to refer to actual records. But the equipment was sold to us.

Q. I see. What was the arrangement suggested by Mr.

Chandler by which you were to obtain your gas, if you should buy it from the Gulf Company? I mean, as 2235 to where you were to get it?

A. Well, it was assumed that we were going to get it the same way as Carnick.

Q. How did they get it?

A. Well, I thought that he was hauling it out of the yard, out of the Gulf yard.

Q. What do you mean by the yard?

A. Well, at their bulk plant.

Q. Well, didn't Carnick have their own bulk facilities?

A. Well, he did at first, and it seemed like he abandoned it later on.

Q. Do you know whether he did?

A. Well, I wouldn't—

Q. You say "it seemed like he did."

A. I know that he hasn't used it for years. Now, as to the time or place that that took place I just couldn't tell you exactly when it happened, but I know that he has been hauling out of there, and the proposition to us was similar to the kind that was offered to Carnick.

Q. What was the arrangement that Mr. Chandler suggested to you?

A. Well, as I testified before between Mr. Chandler—over a period of time prior and later on—that there was a time there where he said that we could have the same kind of deal as Carnick. And I thought it included, or I 2236 am pretty sure it included, hauling out of their yard.
Whether that came right early in January of '36 or later on, or whether it came over a period of time there, why, I just couldn't place the exact date when he said that. But I know it was quite a while they called on us, and then Mr. Cole called on us. I know Cole called on us for at least a couple of years.

Q. Where did you meet Mr. Cole.

A. He called on us at the station.

Q. Suppose you got your gasoline at the Gulf yard; as you call it. Who would haul it?

A. Well, we would haul it. We would have to.

Q. In your trucks?

A. Our trucks, yes.

Q. And your truck drivers?

A. Yes.

Q. Now the conversations with the Texas Company.

Mr. Citrin, you mentioned in that connection a Mr. Germain and Mr. Murdy and a credit man.

A. I did.

Q. Which one of these gentlemen did you meet first, or did you meet them all at the same time?

A. No, Mr. Germain had called on us for quite sometime.

Q. And do you know what his position was with the Texas Company?

2237 A. He told me that he was sort of a manager, here. He was in charge of the bulk plants.

Q. Did he call on you at the service station, too?

A. No. He called on us—well, now, I get it, now. I connect these two things up. No, he called on us at Livernois. That's right, yes.

Q. And did he bring Mr. Murdy and the credit man with him?

A. Yes.

Q. Had you ever met either of them before?

A. I don't believe I have, although I have heard of Mr. Murdy. He was originally a manager in Detroit; stationed in Detroit, prior to the time they transferred him; giving him a better job. He was in charge of several districts.

Q. Is that you say now anything that you would say of your own personal knowledge; that you know?

A. I knew he was manager in Detroit and he was moved.

Q. Manager of what?

A. Of the Texas Company in Detroit.

Q. Then you heard he was moved from Detroit to some other office?

A. That's what Mr. Germain told us.

Q. I wish you would explain again just how it happened that you prepared that draft of a contract which I believe you said you did prepare, setting forth what you understood were the terms suggested by Mr. Germain and Mr. Murdy; is that correct?

2238 A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell me again just how you happened to reach the point of preparing that document?

A. Well, Mr. Germain, upon calling on us, seen, more or less, how loyal we were to Standard products. I know he worked quite hard before he sold us a carload of this Havoline Oil. He seemed to bring out the fact that they brought over a contract for our signature, which contract was a better deal than what we were getting from Standard.

We seemed to think that we would just use that contract or take that contract over to Standard and just sort of flash it and try to—~~first of all, show~~ what offer they had, right black on white, and he sort of insisted that we have everything executed and prepared and then give it to them for their signature. Now does that answer your question, Mr. Austin.

Q. Yes, except as to just how you arrived at the terms which you put into that draft?

A. Well, we talked about the differential; the different things that were going to be embodied in the contract; the territory. It wasn't anything out of the ordinary. It was just a certain amount of margin below the tank wagon price.

Q. Now you just said "below the tank wagon price." As I recall your testimony the other day the margin was to be 5½¢ off the retail price.

2239 A. Yes, that's right, but—

Q. Is that what your understanding was?

A. —but when I talked below the tank wagon price, Mr. Austin, we ourselves are mostly interested in the differential between tank wagon price and the tank car. At least that's our interest at stake.

Q. Oh, surely, but did Mr. Germain or Mr. Murdy make any statement to you—did they make any statement to you that the Texas Company would be willing to give you any definite margin?

2240 A. It was based with a 5½¢ margin off of the retail price.

Q. And was that the definite statement that was made? Did they say that the Texas Company would well you gasoline at that margin?

A. I believe that was the clause that we put in; although I again want to refer to the differential between the tank wagon and tank car price, because that was what we were mostly interested—

Q. I know, obviously, but what I want to know was what they said at the time. I believe the record will show, and Mr. Abbott can correct me on this if I am wrong, that your testimony was, the other day, that the offer was—or the arrangement, at least, which you discussed with Mr. Germain was that the margin was to be 5½¢ off the retail price, and I want to know whether that is correct, or whether there was anything else said about margin, other than that.

A. Well, I almost wish we had that contract, because it would sort of clear a lot of things up, but we talked about a 5½¢ guaranteed margin. Whether it was to be embodied in there or whether it was embodied two different ways—either 5½¢ or the differential between tank wagon and tank car, I am not just positive, but I do know it was a 5½¢ margin and I recall that the difference between the tank wagon and tank car was 2¢.

2241 Q. Well, that's because there was a 3½¢ dealer's margin?

A. Yes.

Q. At that time; is that correct?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. Now, when you say 5½¢ off the retail price, how was that to be determined; that is, how was the retail price to be determined?

A. Well, the retail price at that time—there wasn't any secret about it. The majority of the dealers were selling at that price.

Q. That is why; one of the reasons, at least; I asked you about the Iowa plan, because, as I understand it, when the Standard Oil was operating its own stations and the Texas Company was operating its own stations, they had a posted retail price, but when they changed over in 1936, then they no longer had a posted retail price, but they did have a posted tank wagon price, so that you see, I want to find out whether this retail price here was the price of a company-operated station, or did that refer to a situation under the Iowa plan?

A. I understand, Mr. Austin, your point, and I don't think that I could testify here whether the Standard Oil Company, at the time of leasing out their stations at the time of the Iowa plan, or the Texas Company, 2242 whether they all took part at that time. Maybe Texas were still operating their stations based on the tank wagon price. I don't recall that they all followed; that is, that they all did the same thing right at the same time.

Q. To get back to the point, Mr. Citrin: Was anything discussed or was anything understood between you and Mr. Germain as to how this retail price was to be determined, or did you just understand that they were talking about the prevailing retail price for major brands?

A. Well, I know that we talked the 5½¢ price. I know that the dealer margin was 3½. As to the absolute correctness as to how we put it in the contract, I just couldn't swear as to how we did put it in, but I know that those were the two points in there.

Q. The two points. You mean the 5½ below the retail?

A. 5½, and there was a 2c differential there between the tank wagon and tank car.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understood you to say there was nothing in the contract about the 2c differential.

The Witness: Well, it seemed to me that we talked more about the 5½c.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What I want to know is what there was in the contract.

2243 The Witness: Right now I don't know whether both were in there. I know I was positive one of them was in.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You are uncertain about the other?

The Witness: I don't recall. Maybe we put them both in.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I see.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, there was never a contract, you recall. There was a draft, which Mr. Citrin prepared.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understand that.

Mr. Abbott: You mean there was no written contract.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No written contract. There was a proposal.

Mr. Abbott: It was signed by Citrin-Kolb, and it was drafted as I understand it, according to their conversation.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Nothing but a proposal.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Who did prepare that draft of that contract?

A. Mr. Biber.

Q. Did he prepare it under your direction—let me 2244 ask you this first: Was Mr. Biber present at any of these conversations with Mr. Germain or Mr. Murdy?

A. No, he wasn't. He was doing work for us, but he wasn't in our office yet. I would just call him up and tell him to prepare certain agreements at various times, or I would see him at his office, and he would come out—

Q. He was an attorney then?

A. Yes.

Q. And he would represent you in connection with some of your business?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: Maybe all of it, Mr. Biber, at that time, I wouldn't know.

Mr. Biber: I wouldn't know myself.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Did you ever show that draft of contract to Mr. Germain or Mr. Murdy, after you had completed it?

A. Well, they wanted us to sign it and deliver it to them. That was supposed to be all, as far as we were concerned. I didn't deliver that contract. We had signed it up. We were quite definite in taking it up. As I testified, we changed our mind after having talked with Mr. Raupagh.

Q. Now, I believe the next conversation that you told us about was one when a Mr. Roy Fisher of the Argo Oil Company—

2245 A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Fisher was collecting other things besides tank car agreements, wasn't he?

A. I wouldn't say "things." He was in there on a mission; on one mission.

Q. Well, he was out there, anyway. I believe you told us that he was collecting some donations for some war chest of some kind or another, and you are not sure whether he came primarily to see you for the donation or to talk to you about gasoline.

A. Could I answer this—

Q. I don't think it is important.

A. I can explain to you why he came out on the pretense, really, to talk gas. If I may, I can enlighten you a little on it.

Q. Let's have it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What materiality is what this witness thinks?

Mr. Abbott: I don't think there is any use of encumbering the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If he knows the object and purpose of this person's visit, I think he may state it, but if he is merely thinking and conjecturing, I don't see it is material.

Mr. Abbott: He has testified about that Allied 2246 Campaign enough, I think. That was the reason Fisher came out there originally, I think.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That was apparently the reason assigned for his visit. What his real object or purpose may have been, is conjecture.

The Witness: Mr. Austin, if I may, or if you ar through with this—the Judge here said he was assigned What I tried to say was that I worked on those campaign myself and I know sometimes that these slips are no assigned. You rather pick these slips and prospects. know I have done it myself.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You don't know he picked it, do you?

The Witness: Well—.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: So far as you know, he was sent there, was he not?

The Witness: That's right.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Is the Argo Oil Company a jobber?

A. Yes.

Q. What's their business here in Detroit?

A. Well, fuel oil; distributors of gasoline.

Q. Is their business mostly fuel oil or mostly gasoline?

A. Well, I would say that they—and yet, I couldn't say.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you know?

2247 The Witness: Not right now. I haven't checked the records to find out whether they do more gas business or fuel oil. At one time they were doing more fuel oil business.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. When was that?

A. Oh, I would say four or five years ago.

Q. Haven't they been known here in Detroit chiefly as a fuel oil jobber?

A. Until they entered into the gas business, they were a fuel oil jobber, but they are pretty large gas jobbers now.

Q. Do they sell branded or unbranded gasoline?

A. They sell a branded gasoline.

Q. What is the brand?

A. Marathon.

Q. Do they sell to retail stations or to jobbers—or do you know?

A. They sell to both.

Q. Do you know the names of any retail stations they sell that Marathon brand?

A. Yes.

Q. The names or the locations?

A. Singer on Linwood and Monteray, I believe; it is one of those stations.

Q. What is that?

2248 A. Linwood and Monteray.

Q. Is that Singer, S-i-n-g-e-r?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that a chain of stations?

A. Well, there is a family of Singers. I know that this particular one there, while they have another one, they have one on Oakland Avenue.

Q. Do you know anybody else that handles this Marathon gasoline?

A. Well, there is a station on Linwood and Puritan. There are quite a number of stations. I just couldn't name the streets. They are quite obvious on a lot of streets.

Q. That is a major brand gas?

A. It is Standard Oil of Ohio—I mean Ohio Oil Company.

Q. That is something else, isn't it?

A. They are a large company, a major brand.

Q. Do you call them a major brand here?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, Marathon, is that just a name that the Argo Oil Company uses here, or is that used anywhere else other than Detroit, or do you know?

A. It is used other places, in Ohio.

Q. Isn't Linco sometimes used for that?

A. Yes, Linco. A lot of those Oil Companies, they have several brands or names.

2249 Q. Well, what I mean is do you know whether Marathon is a brand name of the Argo Oil Company, or is it a brand name of the Ohio Oil Company?

A. It is a brand name of the Ohio Oil.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You referred a few moments back to the Standard Oil of Ohio. Do you mean the Ohio Oil Company?

The Witness: There are two oil companies in Ohio. One is the Ohio Oil Company and one is the Standard Oil Company of Ohio.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Which did you refer to?

The Witness: I referred in this case to the Ohio Oil Company.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. When did you first meet Mr. Fisher? Did you know him before he came out to your station that time on a campaign?

A. I met him a couple of times previous at campaign headquarters.

Q. Had you ever talked gasoline with him until he came out to your station at that time that you referred to?

A. Prior to the time?

Q. Had you ever talked to him about gasoline prior to this time that you have told us about?

A. Just in a general way. Talked about the gas business.

Q. But you never discussed tank car prices with 2250 him before, had you?

A. No, not tank car prices, although I discussed other deals.

Q. Do you know of any other jobbers in Detroit who buy from the Argo Oil Company?

A. I know of one particularly, yes.

Q. Who is that?

A. Patterson Oil Company.

Q. Patterson Oil Company?

A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. Fisher say to you that he was authorized to make an offer to you on behalf of the Argo Oil Company?

A. Well, he was the Argo Oil Company, having been president of it; when he talked he talked for the Argo Oil Corporation.

Q. You say he was president of the company at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. How do you know that?

A. Well, they referred to him as president. He has always been the chief executive of the company.

Q. Who referred to him?

A. Well, the various salesmen. I know the sales manager refers to him as the boss, the president. Now, whether to check his official title, I never did, but I know his sales manager, Roy Buesett, he always referred to the boss, 2251 the chief, or the president. I assume that he is the president.

Q. Well, did he actually make any offer to you on behalf of the Argo Oil Company? In other words, how far did your discussion go? Did you just talk about the possibility of the Citrin-Kolb changing its source of supply, or was there a definite offer? Just tell me again what he did say to you?

2252 A. Well, he told me that he had made some very fine connections, he had some very good contracts, and if we would start selling the same brand of gas that he had, that through him we would share in this good contract that he had obtained; that it would help—

Q. Will you pause there just a moment. When you say he told you he had made some connections—and did you say you would share in the good contract he obtained?

A. Yes.

Q. What was he referring to, or what did he say he was referring to?

A. When I say "contract," when we talked about price he told us that we would get the gas through him, although he would make a little profit on it, sort of as a broker, that we would still be able to get two, or sometimes more than two cents differential.

Q. What was this good connection he was talking about?

A. Well, he made this contract with the Ohio Oil Company, and then he was talking to me about a big deal with the Mexican Government, and—

Q. Hadn't he had a contract with the Ohio Oil Company before that?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, what was new about this deal with the Ohio Oil Company?

2253 A. Well, there wasn't anything new about it only at the same time he was telling me he was going to have bigger deals yet, he was going to take up the output of the Mexican Government, and he was going to bring in gas here by boat loads; just talking in general.

Q. Has he ever been bringing in gas by the boat loads, to your knowledge, since that time?

A. I know the gas that he distributes now comes in to the Marine Terminal here on Wyandotte by boat loads.

Q. How did he get it in at that time?

A. I couldn't say at that time, but I didn't get into details as to how he was getting it in. We were just talking about prices.

Q. Now, he told you about all of this—and what did he offer to the Citrin-Kolb Company?

A. He told us that we could have a much bigger margin of profit to work on than we then had.

Q. If you would take on his gas?

A. Yes.

Q. And was that to be Marathon Gas or was it to be some kind of Mexican gas? What was it going to be?

A. He was talking of the gas he was handling at that time.

Q. Now, I think you said that there was to be a two cent jobber's differential between tank wagon and tank car?

A. Yes. At least two cents.

2254 Q. Was there any means of delivery discussed? How did he propose to get the gas to you? Was it going to be through your bulk plant or was anything said about that?

A. We didn't talk about that, Mr. Austin, as to how the gas was to be delivered, because he knew we were getting it in tank cars.

Q. Well, did Argo have a marine terminal at that time?

A. No, Argo didn't.

Q. How did they bring their gas i.. at that time?

A. Well, they would have the gas delivered to them, and they would have some come over in tank cars, as I recall now.

Q. From where?

A. Well, that we didn't talk about.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Austin, if I may interrupt. Last Saturday it was understood that Judge Hanley might produce a witness this morning at ten o'clock from out of town. Is that desired?

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I don't want to interrupt this witness. I think it is much better, certainly I would think it is more agreeable to Mr. Austin, if he could conclude his examination of this witness. It is perfectly agreeable to proceed.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

Mr. Austin: You have no one here right now, have you, Judge, at the moment, that you are waiting to put on?

2255 Mr. Hanley: I am ready to go on just immediately that you conclude. However long it takes you, go ahead. I don't care.

Mr. Austin: I don't think it will be very long.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well, now, Argo Oil Company is a jobber themselves, are they not, here in Detroit?

A. Well, Mr. Austin—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Can't you answer that question yes or no?

A. Well, they are considered a jobber.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well, what I wanted to ask you was when they sell to other jobbers, or if they do—I believe you mentioned the Patterson Oil Company—did I understand you to say that if you should have purchased gas through them that your understanding was that they would act more or less as a broker and perhaps get some commission on what you bought?

A. That's right.

Q. But that your source of supply would be the same as their source of supply?

A. Well, that is quite common.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, what was the talk?

The Witness: Well, the talk was that we were to get the same kind of gas. As to whether he would bill us 2256 or the Ohio Oil Company would bill us, it was immaterial to us. The thing was that he was just going to merely make a certain broker's profit on the negotiation of the deal, which is similar to the kind that is being done by other oil companies here in the city even right now.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. But, since they had no marine terminal here, then that wasn't contemplated that they were going to get gas and deliver it to you, but rather that you would get it from the same source they would, and you might, as you say, be billed by them or the home office; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. That is what I was referring to about the question.

A. We didn't get into too many details as to whether the gas would be delivered by them or whether it would come in by car to us. We assumed that the procedure would be similar to the kind that was being in effect at that time.

2257 Q. Now, I think we have one more here, Mr. Citrin, which is the Aurora Oil Corporation, and that brings us back to the conversation you had with a Mr. MacGready at the Detroit-Leland Hotel.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I believe Mr. Ledbetter was over there, or, at least, he testified that he also talked to Mr. MacGready at the Detroit-Leland; I am not sure whether his conversation is the same day as yours or not.

A. As I testified before, and we had several conversations, but I remember one in particular where Mr. Ledbetter was there and I walked up and they were talking, and we engaged in a sort of round table discussion there about the good deal that—

Q. That was last December, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, does the Aurora Oil Corporation handle branded or unbranded gasoline?

A. Well, they sell it as unbranded, I would say. They have a name for it, although—

Q. Isn't it unbranded gasoline, Mr. Citrin? Aren't they known as sellers of unbranded gasoline, and may not that gasoline come from any number of different sources?

Mr. Hanley: Your Honor, I am sorry, but I must object to that question as calling for a conclusion of the 2258 witness. He has said they have a name for it. And this question implies an intention on the part of the Government to arbitrarily classify gasolines.

Mr. Austin: I will withdraw it, Judge.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Just restrict it to whether or not they sell branded or unbranded gasoline.

A. Well, they are known as an independent refiner who sells their gasoline for the sole purpose—for the jobber to establish his own brand on the particular gas that he buys.

Q. Do they have a refinery here in Michigan?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know where their crude oil comes from?

A. I couldn't say that I know exactly. It would be just assuming.

Q. That is probably not a fair question. You would have to assume your answer, and I really had in mind more of the practice of these local refineries. But perhaps I shouldn't ask you that specifically as to Aurora.

You might explain a little further what you mean about selling gasoline to jobbers so they could establish their own brand. Does that mean that the Aurora Oil Company sells—rather permits the customer to sell the gasoline under any brand he chooses?

2259 A. Yes.

Q. What is the name that Aurora has for their gasoline?

A. I don't recall as I even asked them the name of their gasoline. We rather talked about quality of the gas, which was supposed to be guaranteed, because—

Q. Well, will you explain what you mean by an unbranded gasoline?

A. I didn't say it was unbranded. It is an independent jobber who sells a gasoline that is as good or better than major gas, which can be sold by independent jobbers under their own brand name.

Q. Well, when you say it is as good or better than major gas, weren't you just speaking of what they say about their gas?

A. What he said to guarantee, that he would guarantee to me. Now, when a man says that he is going to guarantee it, you assume that he will.

Q. But you don't know, do you?

A. I wouldn't know.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, would that be considered a branded or unbranded gas, here in the trade?

The Witness: Well, your Honor, some major companies here sell their gasoline—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, can't you answer my question?

2260 The Witness: It may be considered a branded gasoline, that they call a branded gasoline, but still that brand name wouldn't exactly mean a thing to the jobber.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Citrin, perhaps I can help a little here. I think you are thinking a lot about quality. Now, for the purposes of this question, I will concede with you, usually, that we don't know what the quality is of an unbranded gasoline. Perhaps it is as good or better than some of the major brands, or, as I understand it, there is a certain spot market, and perhaps some of the major gasolines, maybe Standard, may be sold on that market, but it is not sold—tell me whether I am correct—is not sold as "Standard gasoline"; in other words, under the "Standard" brand, but it may be the same gasoline; is that right.

A. As I understood it, Mr. Austin, gasoline may be sold by a major company and the only reason that they couldn't advertise it as Standard, because maybe the Standard wouldn't undertake to furnish advertising such as globes, but it is still a branded gasoline. At least, that is my opinion of it.

Q. But a branded gasoline—by that, do you mean gasoline sold under the brand, or where the name appears that can be used on the trucks, or on the pumps. It seems to me, just to try to clear this up, that you are thinking 2261 about whether it is the same gasoline, and I am thinking about whether it has a name on it.

A. Standard may sell a gasoline with a name, and yet not furnish their advertising, and it would be nameless. In other words, the gasoline we buy from Standard; it wouldn't mean a thing to us unless they furnish us the advertising that goes with it.

Q. Do you know, Mr. Citrin, whether there is a price differential between gasolines which are sold under the brand name and those which aren't, on the Detroit market?

A. Oh, I don't know whether there would be any price differential. It is just merely a matter of policy.

Q. What is the policy?

A. Well, it would be the matter of a policy if a major company sold a gasoline and wanted to furnish their advertising or didn't want to furnish their advertising. I don't know as they would make a concession or sell it for less if they didn't furnish the advertising, because, after all, they have their prices established on the gasoline. They want a certain price for it.

Q. Did you ever buy any gasoline on the tank car market?

A. We didn't.

Q. Do you know whether, if you bought gasoline on the tank car market, that you could sell it under the brand of the company that made it, assuming you knew the 2262 company made it?

A. I don't know. We haven't bought any.

Q. Does the Aurora Oil Company have any service stations in Detroit that carry the name Aurora Oil Company, or did you ever see any gasoline sold at retail in Detroit under any brand name that is identified with the Aurora Oil Company?

A. I don't recall right now as I have. They are strictly a refiner. They sell in tank car or tank transports. They don't engage in the retail business. They make it a business to sell to jobbers.

Q. Did you ever see any advertising of an Aurora brand or any brand identified with the Aurora Oil Company?

A. I have not.

Q. Do you know what Mr. MacGready's position is with the Aurora Oil Company?

A. He is their tank car representative.

Q. And who told you that?

A. Well, he quite often tells me of the various accounts he calls on, and that he is just assigned to the wholesale, that is, the tank car business of gasoline. He don't even sell any oil. That is his business.

Q. Do you know Mr. Max Fisher?

A. I met him two or three times.

Q. Is he an official of the Aurora Oil Company?

2263 A. Yes, I would say that.

Q. Did you ever meet Mr. MacGready, or, rather, did you ever talk to him about the subject of purchasing gasoline from the Aurora Oil Corporation at any other time except at the Detroit-Leland Hotel?

A. No. I talked to him. I have known Mr. MacGready prior to this date that is in this testimony, for a year.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Can't you answer that question direct? Read the question.

(The question was read.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did you ever have any discussion with him with reference to the purchase of gasoline except at that meeting?

The Witness: Why, your Honor, that's what I meant. I have been meeting with him for over a year previous to that offer that they have made, and we talked about gasoline and the purchase and methods prior to that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is, at previous meetings?

The Witness: Yes; right along.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. But this is the first time that he ever made anything which you would call an offer?

A. Well, it is the only time that he pointed out the fact that he was obtaining some pretty large accounts in 2264 the city, as I mentioned.

Q. Is there any petroleum produced in Michigan? I mean any appreciable quantities? I suppose that is a matter of common knowledge to the gentlemen here in the room.

A. Well, there is crude oil and this Keystone have a refinery here.

Mr. Abbott: I object to this on the ground—we didn't go into it on direct examination.

Mr. Austin: I will withdraw it. I will ask Mr. Raupagh or somebody important, and he can probably tell us right offhand.

Mr. Hanley: He will prove it for you in detail.

Mr. Austin: I think the witness previously said he doesn't know exactly where the crude oil comes from that goes to the Michigan refineries.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. That's right, isn't it, Mr. Citrin?

A. I don't believe that question was ever asked me.

Q. I started to ask you where the Aurora Oil Company got their crude, but I believe you said you didn't know, or, if you had any knowledge, it was only hearsay.

A. Hearsay; that's right, Mr. Austin.

Mr. Austin: I believe that's all I have, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I want to ask the wit-
2265 ness just one question that I am in doubt about.

What did you say the Argo Company did? Were its functions merely those of a broker?

The Witness: Well, I wanted to elaborate a little bit on that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, can't you answer my question?

Mr. Abbott: Well, if he can answer it yes or no.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes. Can you answer it yes or no?

The Witness: They are a jobber.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you mean by a jobber? Do they buy from a refinery?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And resell?

The Witness: They could resell it to another jobber and maintain a sort of a broker's profit on it. That's what I meant, your Honor.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please—the witness will correct me, if I am wrong—they may enter into both functions. I understand Mr. Citrin's testimony to be—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I want to find out from him—.

Mr. Austin: All right. I will say nothing further.

2266 Trial Examiner Ballinger: —if he knows; I am in doubt—

The Witness: Your Honor, if I may, I do know of one particular case that was related to me that brought out some of the facts that would clarify—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Weren't they operating here as mere brokers? You know that, don't you?

The Witness: Well, they are considered a jobber. Yet, when they see that a certain amount of gas delivered to another job from the refinery, although they would bill them for the gas, yet they would get a certain margin of profit which would ordinarily be called a broker's profit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: All right. Proceed.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Well, Mr. Citrin, with reference to the offer which the Argo Oil Company made to you in 1939, do you know whether the proposal made to you was as a broker or a jobber?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If he doesn't know whether they were brokers or jobbers, how could he answer that?

Mr. Abbott: I am asking him in reference to the proposal made to him.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did they offer to furnish you the gasoline here in Detroit?

2267 A. Yes.

Q. I understand that that proposal was not reduced to writing, in that instance?

A. It was not.

Q. And that they offered you a differential of 2¢ a gallon.

A. Or more, at various times.

Q. At that time you say that they were getting their gasoline from the Ohio Oil Company at a terminal or by tank cars?

A. As I stated, we didn't really talk too much about how they were getting it, I would assume—

Q. Not what was assumed. You seem to lapse into that quite a bit, but that is not testimony.

A. All right. By that I mean I knew how we were buying our gas, and we were going to buy it the same way.

Q. All right. Now, at that time, do you know whether they were getting their supply from the Ohio Oil Company in Ohio?

A. I did.

Q. That is where they were getting it?

A. Yes.

Q. And this talk about the Mexican Government, what was that?

A. Well, there was quite a bit in the papers about 2268 it, and I questioned him about it—

Q. Was he getting any supply from the Mexican Government at that time?

A. He told me he was not.

Q. He was not?

A. No.

Q. That was merely some talk, wasn't it?

A. Yes; and paper talk, newspaper talk.

Q. And they were getting their gasoline in tank cars from the Ohio Oil Company, a supplier in Ohio; is that right?

A. Well, again; Mr. Abbott—

Q. Answer that yes or no.

Mr. Austin: If he doesn't know—

A. I don't know how they were getting it—.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I mean from any talk that you had with Fisher, to find out where they were getting their supply?

A. I wasn't interested that much. I didn't find out.

Q. But you submitted that offer to Mr. Raupagh, didn't you?

A. I believe you stated that the other day.

A. No, I believe I stated I submitted that offer to Mr. Love.

Q. Mr. Love; Mr. Raupagh was out of town then; out of the office?

A. He was out of the office, at least at that time.

2269 Q. With reference to the Gulf Refining offer made in 1936, you testified that that provided for a cent and a half differential, but that it eliminated the bulk plant operations. You testified this morning that you were going to draw the gasoline in your own trucks from the Gulf Refining Company's bulk plant. Now, was anyone else doing that at that time, that you know?

2270 A. Over the period of time that they were calling on us, right along, they pointed out that Carnick was doing it.

Q. Carnick had been doing it for a long time?

A. At least that's what I thought.

Q. What did they tell you?

A. Well, I think—they were pointing out those advantages that I stated before.

Q. You knew Carnick, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. He was the one that you had a bulk plant with way back there in 1926, wasn't he?

A. He was.

Q. And you knew how he operated, didn't you?

A. I didn't after we stopped doing business, because of the trouble we have had on this storage that we signed up for.

Q. I understood you to say that the Gulf told you that you would have the same deal as with Carnick?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, the matter of furnishing and maintaining the equipment: was that a substantial item of expense or a small item of expense to you? I mean, in your dealings with the Standard Oil Company?

A. It is a large item of expense.

Q. How large an item is it? I don't mean in dollars and cents, because that is too much to ask you, but is it large or small? 2271

A. It is large. To my recollection a five hundred or six hundred dollar investment in each location: furnishing the equipment plus the maintaining, over a period of time, while doing business with that dealer.

Q. What is usually the life of equipment, including pumps, at a gasoline filling station?

A. The life is quite long. The only thing is that the dealers continually change over to up to date models. It is more or less like automobiles.

Q. In other words, you mean they become out of date?

A. That's it.

Q. And the Gulf Refining Company agreed that they would furnish the station equipment on the pumps as a part of the deal?

A. Yes.

Q. And I believe that you stated that you took this up with Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes.

Q. And that he refused to meet it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the Texas offer was in August, 1936, you testified the other day, and it was testified here this morning that the Iowa plan went into effect in September of 1936 and you had Mr. Biber draw the contract that you had 2272 discussed with Mr. Germain, Mr. Murdy, and the credit manager. Did Mr. Biber draw the contract?

A. Yes.

Q. Did he return it to you?

A. Yes.

Q. And when you talked to Mr. Raupagh, did you show him the contract?

A. I did.

Q. And you stated this morning that Mr. Murdy and Mr. Germain wanted that contract signed the way it was drafted. Now what do you mean by that?

Mr. Austin: I don't know whether the witness said that, your Honor.

Mr. Abbott: I took it down verbatim.

Mr. Austin: Did he say "the way it was drafted"?

Mr. Abbott: He said the way it was drawn up. I don't know whether he said "drafted."

Mr. Austin: That's the point.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. We will go into that in Mr. Biber's testimony, Mr. Citrin. The question was: You stated Mr. Germain, Mr.
Murdy and the credit manager wanted the contract
2273 signed the way it was drawn up. What do you mean by that? Is that something they told you?

A. Mr. Abbott, I may be wrong. I merely stated, on Mr. Austin's request as to why he prepared a contract and why we signed it, and I stated that we did prepare it and sign it and that they were going to take it and accept it after we had signed it.

Q. Did you sign it up?

A. Yes.

Q. And was it signed up when you took it to Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes.

Q. Was it just the way you had discussed it with Mr. Murdy, Mr. Germain, and the credit manager; do you recall?

A. I am pretty sure it was the way, because I made some notes on it when we talked about the various—

Q. And I believe you stated the other day that Mr. Raupagh, when you showed it to him, refused to meet the proposal?

A. I did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If you will permit an interruption:

Was that so-called contract drawn up and taken to Mr. Raupagh for the purpose of endeavoring to secure a lower rate from the Standard Company? Was that the object and purpose?

The Witness: That was the object, yes, or else, if we could obtain a lower rate, the object was to tell him 2274 that we were going to leave him because we had signed up.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But did you tell him?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That unless he did make a lower rate, you were going to leave him?

The Witness: Yes. Told him that there were the partners' signatures on it and all we had to do was to give this contract to Texas and it would be too late for us to back out.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That isn't exactly what I asked you. Did you tell him unless he did give you a lower rate you were going to quit dealing with the Standard Oil Company?

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, with reference to the Argo Oil proposal. You mentioned some stations in Detroit that handled Argo Oil under the Marathon brand; among them, Linwood at Puritan?

A. Yes.

Q. I. P. Taylor at Woodward and Davison.

Mr. Austin: I don't believe the witness mentioned any such station as that on direct—I mean, on cross-examination.

The Witness: Not that station, although he does handle it.

2275 Mr. Austin: I move the question and answer be stricken, your Honor.

Mr. Abbott: Possibly I was in error in suggesting it to him. I didn't mean to lead the witness. It may go out.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner maintains the objection to the question and strikes the answer.

Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you know of any other stations that handle Marathon gasoline?

A. I believe, Mr. Abbott, I have stated that there are a lot of stations; quite obvious. Exactly, I can't point out to the exact address of those stations but all you have to do is drive around and see a number of Marathon stations with signs up.

Q. They always have the signs exhibited, do they?

A. Yes.

Q. With reference to the Aurora offer, which is much more recent. You have a pretty good recollection of that, don't you, because it was only four or five months ago?

A. Yes.

Q. Now you say with reference to that gasoline 2276 that it is one on which the jobbers establish their own brand, is that what you understand?

A. That's what I understand.

Q. Now do you know whether J. J. Bright sells Aurora Gasoline?

A. I do.

Q. State whether or not he does sell it.

A. He does sell it at two of his locations, that I know of.

Q. What locations are those?

A. One is on Jefferson, East Jefferson. One is in Royal Oak.

Q. The one on East Jefferson is out in the location of the Cinderella Theatre, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And is that location near your station at Jefferson and Nottingham, or quite a little ways off?

A. Pretty close. The same neighborhood.

Q. And is that station also close to Ned's station at Jefferson and Manistee?

A. Just within a couple or three blocks.

Q. The Aurora Gasoline is sold at the Bright station on Jefferson Avenue under the name of Spitfire, isn't it?

A. That's right.

2277 Q. And I believe you stated that MacGready told you, when you had this conversation with him at the Detroit Leland Hotel, that he made some statement with reference to the quality of Aurora gasoline.

A. He guaranteed that it would be even better than the Standard house brand gas.

Q. Now I understand you to say that the Paragon offer made to you, before you went on a tank car basis, somewhere between 1926 and 1928; the Gulf offer made in 1936; the Texas offer also made in 1936; the Argo offer made in 1939 and the Aurora offer made in 1940, were all submitted to the Standard Oil Company?

A. I did.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I don't want to be too technical but I would like counsel to do a little less leading and, particularly, on redirect. A good many of these questions have been just a request of the witness to state in counsel's language matters which he already stated on his direct examination, rather than anything new brought out by cross-examination. I am not an authority on how far one can go on redirect, but I don't believe the purpose of redirect is just a restatement, in counsel's language, of what was formally answered on cross-examination.

Mr. Abbott: I will withdraw the question.

2278 Q. All the offers that you have mentioned were submitted to the Standard Oil Company, were they not?

A. They were at various times.

Q. And they refused to meet them?

A. Yes.

Mr. Abbott: That is all.

Mr. Austin: Two more leading questions that the witness only needed to say "Yes."

Mr. Abbott: That is all.

Recross Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. In regard to that contract, where it was a draft of a contract which was drawn up by Mr. Biber and which you signed, did you, Mr. Citrin?

A. Yes.

Q. And after that draft was prepared, you have already told us you never delivered it to Texas. Did you show it to Mr. Germain or Mr. Murdy at any time after you signed it?

A. I already testified as to that question. If we would have shown it and delivered it to them, it would have—

Q. Maybe you did answer it before, but—

Mr. Abbott: I submit the witness ought to be permitted to state his reply. He was cut off here.

Mr. Austin: I want him to.

2279 Trial Examiner Ballinger: As to his reasons, that may or may not be material later on. But can't he state what he did, without stating why?

A. I did not deliver the contract.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Did you ever show it to Mr. Germain or Mr. Murdy?

A. No.

Q. That is what I wanted to know.

And you said that James J. Bright sells a brand of gasoline called Spitfire?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that a name which Bright gives to it himself?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of any gasoline sold under that brand name in any other station in Detroit?

A. I haven't seen it.

Mr. Austin: That is all.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any further questions?

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. You say that you didn't show the Texas written draft of your proposal to Mr. Murdy or to the other two representatives of the Gulf Refining Company — or the Texas Company, but you did show it to Mr. Raupagh?

2280 A. Yes.

Mr. Abbott: That is all.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You are excused.

(Witness excused.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a recess for five minutes.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The hearing is reconvened.

JOHN W. BOATWRIGHT was thereupon called as a witness by and on behalf of the Respondent, and, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Your name, please?

The Witness: John W. Boatwright, B-o-a-t-w-r-i-g-h-t.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Direct Examination by Mr. Hanley.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, tell us first what your formal training has been with respect to your school training?

A. Would you like to start with my college training?

Q. Yes, after high school, start there and tell us.

A. I started in 1921 to attend William Jewel College at Liberty, Missouri. I was in and out of school intermittently with the necessity of stopping to rebuild 2281 my financial picture, and continued, graduating in 1927. The last year that I was in school I taught in the local high school as well as completed my course work at college. That was the year '26 and '27.

In the summer of 1927 I attended the University of Kansas. I taught in the high school at Liberty, Missouri, in '27 and '28, and again attended the University of Kansas summer session in '28.

In the fall of 1928 I received a Fellowship from American University in Washington, D. C., and I attended the American University in '28 and '29, taking my master's degree there in the spring of 1929.

One of the men under whom I studied at the American University was W. H. S. Stevens, he was assistant chief economist for the Federal Trade Commission. The Bill authorizing the chain store inquiry was passed, I think, in January or February of that year, and he made arrangements with the faculty of the American University, which permitted me to retain my Fellowship and start working at the Federal Trade Commission.

Q. So the fact is that you actually did work as an economist for the Federal Trade Commission?

A. That is correct.

Q. For some period of time?

2282 A. That is correct. I left the Federal Trade Commission in September of 1929 to start teaching at Northwestern University. My position there was lecturer in economics in the School of Commerce.

And the following year I retained that title and became research assistant to Dean Ralph E. Heilman at the University.

I received my doctorate at Northwestern in June of 1932; taught there in the summer session, and started working for the Standard Oil Company on September 6, 1932, as an economist in the sales research department.

Q. Permit me to interrupt you a moment. Did you have occasion to write theses in connection with getting your several degrees?

A. Yes. I wrote a thesis in connection with my work on my master's degree, which was a study of the central European tariff situation for the ten-year period following the World War. The thesis for my doctorate was a tracing of the evolution of economic concepts of the Supreme Court of the United States as used in their various cases of a trade regulatory nature.

Q. Now, in connection with your study preparatory to writing that thesis did you make a study of the several decisions of the Supreme Court of this country in connection with regulatory trade matters?

2283 A. Yes, sir. Every case before the Supreme Court, and many before the Appellate Courts were studied for a period of eighteen months prior to starting the actual writing of the thesis.

Q. I think you brought us up to a time when you went to work for the Standard Oil Company, the Respondent in this action. When did that happen?

A. September 6, 1932.

Q. And in what capacity did you go to work?

A. I went to work as an economist in the sales research department.

Q. Now, let me go back a moment. There came a time in your formal education when you received a Doctor's degree?

A. That is correct.

2284 Q. When was that?

A. In June of 1932.

Q. So that you are entitled to be addressed as Doctor, if anybody around our shop paid any attention to that sort of thing?

A. That is correct.

Q. The fact is we don't.

A. That is right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What official position do you hold with this company?

The Witness: May I continue my relation of experience, which will bring that out, Judge?

Mr. Hanley: We will bring that out.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. You went to work as an economist.

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, just trace for the court your various positions in the Standard Oil Company up until the present time.

A. From 1932 until the Fall of 1935 I was an economist in the sales research department.

In the Fall of 1935 I was asked to prepare estimates of value for the following year and prepare the annual product budget, looking to refinery schedules of operation, product movement by tankers, pipe lines, to the various terminals and so forth. That work was continued in charge of budget preparation to '36 and until No-2285 vember 16, 1937.

November 16, 1937, I became head of the combined budget and sales research activity for the company. I have continued in that capacity to the present time, my title being manager sales research department.

Q. Now, do you have a staff in your department that assist you in your several duties, Mr. Boatwright?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell the Court please what the general nature of your duties are at the present time?

A. Yes, they divide, in my mind, usually into six broad classifications.

No. 1 is the preparation of the annual budgets.

Q. Now, just stop a moment and tell the court what you mean by that.

A. The preparation of the annual budget means making estimates of sales by individual products, by months, by channels, by sales divisions. These estimates of sales are then adjusted for goods used, stock losses, and other shrinkage, as well as variations of seasonal inventory flow. This correction leads to an estimated shipment schedule from our various terminals or supply points. The shipment schedules at our lake terminals, our inland waterway terminals, are then adjusted for variations of inventory policy at these individual terminals into a refinery production requirement schedule. The refinery production schedule establishes the level of our operations 2286 by our various refinery units for the following year. This budget must be submitted prior to November 15 for the following year to enable our crude purchasing departments, our transportation departments, and the manufacturing departments to set up their plants in accordance with the anticipated requirements.

That in brief is the one function, is one of the six classifications.

Q. What other functions does your department discharge?

A. Another broad classification of studies have to do with prices. There is usually in our department at all times a study of price conditions on some one product, or many products, or a regional study of prices, in progress most of the time.

The next broad classification of duties is the cost accounting work, wherein we are responsible for preparing and submitting to the board of directors once a year an analysis of profits and marketing expenses by products, by channels, by sales division, for each of our major products. That includes the various brands of gasoline, refined oils, motor oils, tractor fuels, fuel oils, domestic heating oil, kerosenes, and so forth.

2287 A fourth broad classification has to do with advertising. Advertising studies may involve size of space that it is desirable for us to purchase, the type of an advertising appeal which should be used, the desirability of buying radio vs. newspaper, the desirability of adopting certain headlines or sales appeals in our advertising method.

Another broad classification has to do with consumer research. Each year we interview thousands of consumers both in the retail and the rural markets in an effort to ascertain their buying habits, their motives, their needs, their desires, their likes and their dislikes. These studies may have to do with gasoline, fuel oil, motor oil, the Atlas line of products, and so forth. I do not mean that we conduct all studies of this type each year in all channels, but there is usually one large study of consumer wants and needs in progress most of the time.

Now, there is a sixth classification. I think I have named five at the present time.

Q. That is right.

A. This sixth classification, for lack of a better term, I refer to as contingency problems. That covers a broad range of any type of contingency problem that Mr. Seubert or the executive vice president, Mr. Barkdull wishes to assign to our department for analysis. It may be the 2288 introduction of a new product, how it should be priced, distributed, how it should be handled on our accounting records, how it should be delivered, and so forth; it may mean an unusual competitive condition developing a given area; it may mean making a selection of the prope channels of distribution; it may be a problem of selection and training of salesmen, or selection and training of people on driveways in the form of reseller assistants. These, as I say, are merely a broad classification of any type of problem that they wish to assign.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, are you familiar with the fact until just recently there was a company belonging to the Standard Oil known as the Standard Oil Company of Nebraska?

A. That is correct.

Q. And did it occur that company dissolved and its corporate charter and assets were acquired by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, the Respondent in this action?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have anything to do with the mechanics of that acquisition? And if so, what?

A. I was loaned to the Standard Oil Company of Nebraska in November or December of the year prior to the dissolution thereof, and the acquisition by the Indiana Company.

My assignment was to go out to the Nebraska
2289 Company, study its entire marketing structure, accounting, and distribution plan, and realign that plan in an effort to find means of distribution whereby expenses could be kept within the limits of the gross margin.

Q. Now, did that study, Mr. Boatwright, involve cost accounting?

A. Yes.

Q. As related to various products which this company proposed to sell?

A. Yes, it did. It involved the entire mechanism of maintaining records.

Q. Now, in your department, in Chicago, is it or is it not a fact that you have a large group of assistants who are technically trained economists, cost accountants, and statisticians?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have access to the general accounting department of the Standard Oil Company and the several field accounting departments of the Standard Oil Company in your work?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that, I assume, just involves literally hundreds of people; is that not true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In your work, Mr. Boatwright, to whom do you report primarily?

2290 A. My department reports primarily on five of the six classifications mentioned to a sales research committee. This committee is composed of Mr. Seubert—

Q. Who is Mr. Seubert?

A. The president of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana. The initials are E. G.; Mr. C. J. Barkdull.

Q. Who is he?

A. Executive vice president of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana; Mr. Allen Jackson, vice president; Mr. Amos Ball, vice president, in charge of the sales department; Mr. R. H. McConnell, general manager of the sales department; Mr. H. E. Hanson, assistant general manager of the sales department; Mr. W. H. Tell, assistant to the vice president, in charge of operations. He is assistant to Mr. Amos Ball, and he is in charge of the operations of the sales department. This committee receives these reports, the recommendations included therein, and if any of them desire, prepare a rebuttal to the recommendations. The committee meets in session approximately once a month to go over the recommendations of the department, the rebuttal of the various individuals that may be involved, and in case the study touches upon any of the other departments of the company not represented on that committee, the head of these respective departments are invited to participate in the discussion.

2291 Now, in connection with the budget work, the sixth classification, that is reported direct to the Board of Directors.

Q. Beginning as of the time when you went with Standard Oil Company, Mr. Boatwright, can you give us an approximation of the number of studies that your department has been concerned with and made? Just an approximation.

A. Our studies at the inception of the department were divided among those given serial numbers and those which were brief reports not numbered. I shall exclude those short reports which were just analyses of minor conditions. Of the major studies we are now working on Study No. 105.

Q. Have those studies consistently, so far as you are concerned, involved the oil business in some of its ramifications?

A. I think there is not a single exception.

Q. I don't believe I have asked you, or I don't believe I know, how many people are there in your own department itself?

A. The number varies, depending upon the flow of studies. Our normal load is about 19.

Q. And have you any idea how many people there are in the general accounting department in our office in Chicago?

A. It would be a guess, Mr. Hanley.

Q. It would be hundreds, wouldn't it?

2292 A. Yes.

Q. I show you what has been marked Respondent's Exhibit 19, and admitted into evidence, entitled "Flow Chart of Gasoline from the Refiner to Consumer" and will ask you if you have made a study of that chart?

A. I examined that chart.

Q. And do you agree that that fairly portrays the general flow of gasoline from producer to consumer?

A. It does.

2293 Were you here in attendance on the Court during the testimony of James E. Dyer?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were you here and did you hear the testimony of Professor Clark of Northwestern University?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you agree with and adept the answers which Clark made to the questions that were propounded to him?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I contend that is a little too general. I didn't have an opportunity to object to it, but I object—

Mr. Hanley: We are willing that the answer be stricken if counsel wants to make an objection.

Mr. Austin: I object to it on the ground it is too general.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: With consent of counsel for the Respondent the question and answer is stricken.

Mr. Hanley: I don't want to strike the question. I was agreeable that the answer be stricken so that counsel can make his objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Only the answer is stricken. Now, the Examiner is not entirely clear, but he is of the impression that Professor Clark adopted the testimony in part of the witness Dyer, and the present witness 2294 didn't hear the testimony of the witness Dyer so the Examiner doesn't understand now how he can subscribe to all of the answers made by Professor Clark.

Mr. Hanley: Well, that was true, Judge, as to certain definitions. Your Honor is quite right as to certain definitions, but they appear in the testimony itself, so there isn't any part of the testimony that is undisclosed to the witness in the question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I am not clear about it and I take that is the basis of the objection.

Mr. Hanley: What is the state of the record?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: An objection has been interposed to your question.

Mr. Austin: There has been a ruling on it, hasn't there?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I haven't ruled. I merely made an inquiry of Judge Hanley and he answered.

Mr. Hanley: Well, if your Honor please, I just think

I am right about it and I say that the only thing that Professor Clark was permitted to adopt in the testimony of Mr. Dyer were these definitions of a jobber which were read into the record and became a part of the testimony of Professor Clark. Consequently, when I asked Mr. Boatwright if he agrees with the testimony of Professor Clark, there isn't anything in Professor Clark's testimony 2295 that is linked to Mr. Dyer's testimony, that doesn't appear in Professor Clark's testimony.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, if counsel for the Commission insists upon it, I take it his objection was probably good and it would be necessary for counsel for the Respondent to traverse the various matters testified to by the witness Dyer.

Objection sustained.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, in the course of your work as an economist and an accountant for the Standard Oil Company, have you had occasion to observe the different types of operations in the matter of distributing gasoline that are used by the Standard Oil Company and by other oil companies?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As a suggestion to you, have you seen anything of what is commonly understood in the industry as the jobber system of distribution?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what has been your experience as to observance of the direct distribution; that is, the selling by tank wagon directly to retail outlets by a refiner?

A. Do you limit your question to our company, or do you include—

Q. No, I am asking you the general question, now, 2296 as to the oil industry as you have observed it?

A. I have had many and intimate contacts with direct distribution of our own company and have observed the practices of others.

Q. What is the fact relative to whether or not oil companies generaly indulge in the practice of distributing gasoline by both the medium of a jobber and by direct distribution to retail outlets in the same territory?

A. It is a frequently encountered distributive plan.

Q. Directing your attention to the jobber who buys gasoline on that basis, what is the fact relative to whether he, in turn, generally speaking, operates service stations of his own and also supplies to the retailers?

A. You will find all three types of operation. You will find some jobbers who supply resellers, only. You will find some jobbers who operate only their own stations. You will find other jobbers who serve resellers as well as their own operated on controlled outlets.

Q. Are you familiar with the operation of Ned's Auto Supply Company in Detroit?

A. Yes.

Q. What have you to say as to whether or not that is a type of operation which occurs with frequency throughout the United States in the oil industry?

A. It does; definitely.

2297 Q. Many times?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In many localities?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it regarded as an integral part of the distributive system in the oil industry?

A. It is, sir.

Mr. Hanley: Now may I again go off the record for a moment, your Honor? It is for the witness' convenience.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Back on the record.

Mr. Hanley: I request to have this marked Respondent's Exhibit 24 for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Reporter will mark the document tendered by counsel for the Respondent as Respondent's Exhibit 24 for identification.

(The document referred to was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 24" for identification.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I hand you, Mr. Boatwright, what has been marked Respondent's Exhibit 24 for identification and will ask you if you know what that represents?

A. Yes, sir.

2298 Q. Did you have anything to do with the preparation of that exhibit?

A. I did prepare it.

Q. State just generally what your connection with its preparation was?

A. It was prepared under my supervision and, in part, directly by my own efforts.

Q. And what does the exhibit purport to represent, Mr. Boatwright?

A. This exhibit purports to represent the sources of various petroleum products supplying the three eastern states of Standard Oil of Indiana, excluding the upper part of Michigan, which is in the Upper Peninsula. It is limited to the Lower Peninsula of Michigan, Indiana, Illinois.

It shows all refineries, refined products, pipe lines, all river terminals, all gasoline or refined product terminals on the Great Lakes as well as refineries and other sources of supply in the near vicinity in adjacent states.

Q. Has there been an increasing production and supply of gasoline in the State of Michigan, with particular reference to the Lower Peninsula, during the last several years?

A. Are you speaking of Michigan production or 2299 are you speaking—

Q. I am speaking both of Michigan production and available gasoline supplies.

A. I would say that there has been an increase in both respects. There has been an increase in the production of Michigan refineries operated and located within the Lower Peninsula, as well as an expansion of terminal facilities serving this area, receiving, originally, their supply from outside of the State.

Q. And has that increase been going on during the past four or five years?

A. It has, sir.

Mr. Hanley: I think it might be well to mark this document with letters; there are two sheets.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document handed to him by counsel for the Respondent as Respondent's Exhibits 25-A and 25-B, for identification.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 25-A and 25-B.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I hand you, now, what has been marked Respondent's Exhibits 25-A and 25-B, for identification, which are a graph and a tabulation of figures, and will ask you if you know what those exhibits represent.

A. Yes. Exhibit 25-A is a chart showing the re-
2300 finery capacity of refineries within the State of Michigan as reported to the United States Bureau of Mines. The capacity as reported in total reads from the scale in the left-hand side of the chart, in terms of thousands of barrels per day, all barrels referring to units of 42-gallon capacity. The chart covers the time period from 1935 through 1940.

Q. What does Respondent's Exhibit 25-B, for identification, represent, Mr. Boatwright?

A. Respondent's Exhibit 25-B is the data that is pictured in the chart, taken originally from the United States Bureau of Mines Reports.

Q. Do you receive those reports currently, and are they a part of the records of your office upon which you rely in compiling data from time to time?

A. I do receive them regularly, and they constitute a part of our regular source in information.

Q. Were these exhibits numbered 24, 25-A and 25-B, for identification, compiled under your direction and supervision and at your request by your staff?

A. They were.

Mr. Hanley: The Respondent offers in evidence Exhibits Nos. 24, 25-A, and 25-B.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any objection?

Mr. Austin: Well, it is not clear to me just how these are relevant. I assume counsel thinks they have some 2301 relevancy to his case, or he wouldn't offer them.

I would not want to accept Respondent's Exhibit 24, for identification, as a correct showing of what refineries are operated by major companies and what refineries are not, in the absence of any indication of what this witness' opinion is as to majors and non-majors, or whether he is qualified to give such an opinion. I wouldn't intimate that he is not qualified to give it, but there seems to be a good deal of difference of opinion on that subject.

Mr. Hanley: There is, and I think that objection is perhaps very well taken, your Honor, and I will undertake to clarify it, if I may.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, on Exhibit 24, you have a symbol, which, according to the legend, represents a major company refinery and another symbol, which, according to the legend, represents other than major company refineries. Will you please explain for the Court what you mean on that exhibit by a major company and other than a major company?

A. Our terminology of major company, when speaking of total territory, designates those companies which are major competition throughout our entire territory. They are Sinclair, Phillips, Socony Vacuum, Texas, and Shell. These are, in our concepts, territorially speaking, major competitors, inasmuch as all of them operate through-2302 out the territory.

Now, in any given locality, if we were to name the majors in a restricted locality, we might include others.

Mr. Austin: Is that an arbitrary classification, then, which is on the basis which you have just stated?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: May I ask the witness another question (addressing Mr. Hanley)?

Mr. Hanley: Surely.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner rules on the admissibility of the examination.

Mr. Austin: Respondent's Exhibits 25-A and 25-B refer to the capacity of Michigan refineries. Has that got anything to do with the amount of gasoline actually turned out by those refineries?

The Witness: It has a direct bearing. They need not be the identical amounts. In other words, you may have a capacity of 9,000 barrels a day. Your plant-operating schedule at the particular time may be 7,000 barrels a day. An availability of capacity, however, tends to be reflected in the actual production that is accomplished in given areas.

Mr. Austin: Hasn't there been a variation in the amount of capacity?

The Witness: Oh, from time to time, yes.

2303 Mr. Austin: I mean the amount of capacity—I mean in the percentage of capacity at which the plants have been operating at times; from time to time?

The Witness: That is correct, and that is likewise reported to the Bureau of Mines, although that is not reported by individual state areas. That is available on a monthly basis.

Mr. Austin: In any event, these Exhibits 25-A and 25-B only purport to show capacity and do not necessarily represent production; is that correct?

The Witness: They do not.

Mr. Austin: I have no further objection with those—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: With that understanding,—

Mr. Austin: With that understanding.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: —Respondent's Exhibits 24, 25-A and 25-B, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 24, 25-A, and 25-B," were received in evidence.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, you have just been asked about production in gasoline. I think I want to refer my question, however, to consumption; that is, gasoline used in Michigan. Are you able to say, Mr. Boatwright, to what 2304 extent in the past year or two or three, Michigan has been able to produce the gasoline that is actually consumed in the State of Michigan?

A. The 1940 figures are not yet available.

For the three years prior to that, I could give you domestic consumption within the State of Michigan, as well as domestic production of gasoline.

Q. Will you please do that?

A. (Referring to documents.) I am afraid I don't have that paper here with me at the present time.

Q. Just out of your own knowledge and experience, can you give us an approximation of the percentage, Mr. Boatwright?

A. May we speak of the year 1939? The last reported figure?

Q. That's right.

A. The total production of gasoline within the State of Michigan in the year 1939 was 333,000,000-plus gallons. That is production.

Total consumption was 1,100,000,000-plus gallons. It was between the 1,100,000,000 and the 1,200,000,000 gallons. The exact figure, I can't quote.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, in respect of the gasoline prices to the public, what has been the general trend in the past several years as to whether those prices have been increasing or decreasing?

Mr. Austin: Is that limited to a particular terri-2305 tory?

Mr. Hanley: I will limit it to Detroit.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. First I will ask you over the country as a whole, what is the fact?

A. The fact is that there has been a reduction in the prices gradually over a period of years. In fact, the index of all petroleum products has showed a gradual decline over recent years.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Does that refer to the retail price? What price?

The Witness: Are you referring to gasoline only, now, Judge?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

The Witness: The retail price as reflected by the 50 leading city indexed has been interrupted in so many places because of the leasing program that we do not have a continuous series of data in that respect.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. What I am interested in is this, Mr. Boatwright: Is it or is it not a fact that in the United States generally that first the quality of gasoline has improved and the price thereof has consistently decreased to the public over the past several years?

A. That is a fact.

2306 Q. Now, with respect to Detroit, what is the fact?

A. Both of those statements are likewise the fact.

Mr. Hanley: I would like to have this document marked for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document handed to him by counsel for the Respondent as Respondent's Exhibit 26, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 26.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I hand you what has been marked Respondent's Exhibit 26, for identification, Mr. Boatwright, and will ask you if you have any knowledge as to what that represents.

A. Yes. This is a chart showing the Standard Red Crown tank wagon consumer price in the City of Detroit for the period of January 1, 1931, through and including most of April, 1941. The actual cents per gallon is read from the scale on either side of the chart.

Q. Now, referring to the broken line, I will ask you if that is not the important line on this chart, in reference to the question which you have been asked as to whether or not the general level of price has gone up or down?

A. That is correct. The broken line represents the trend of prices in the City of Detroit over this time. It is a mathematically calculated and fitted curve.

2307 Trial Examiner Ballinger: This line (indicating)?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Hanley: I offer Respondent's Exhibit 26 in evidence.

Mr. Austin: I would like to ask a question or two. Mr. Boatwright, what 's this jagged line; what does that represent? Up at the top it says "Tank Wagon Consumer Price." What is the meaning of that term?

The Witness: That is the price at which we make tank wagon dealers, direct to consumers.

Mr. Austin: To consumers. That is, commercial accounts?

The Witness: Yes; it may be commercial accounts.

Mr. Austin: This is not what is called the posted tank wagon price to retail service stations then?

The Witness: It is not—are you referring now to the posted tank wagon dealer price?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

The Witness: This is not the posted tank wagon dealer price. It is impossible to show a price series on that class because we do not start posting a price on the tank wagon dealer until after the leasing of the service stations. Prior to that our price was a price to the ultimate consumer through company-operated stations.

2308 Mr. Austin: Yes, but you didn't deliver—when the company operated the stations, why, of course, the delivery was at the station to the automobile owner, so that wouldn't—even when you operated your stations before 1936, you wouldn't call the price charged at the retail service station a tank wagon consumer price, would you?

The Witness: No, sir. This is not that. The tan' wagon consumer price in our price structure, is the basic price structure. Other prices, through other channels, are usually determined as deviates from this price structure.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I object to this on the ground it is immaterial, because we have had nothing in the issues in this case or in the testimony as far as I know, that has related to tank wagon sales by the Standard Oil Company direct to consumers. I think I asked Mr. Raupagh a couple of questions about who they sold to, and so forth, on direct examination, but I don't think it had anything to do with this particular subject.

Mr. Hanley: Perhaps the purpose of this offer is being misunderstood.

It is true this applies to consumer prices because the statisticians found that that is the only index that they could use that would accurately indicate the trend.

2309 Now all I am seeking to prove, here, is that there has been a general trend in the United States down in the prices of gasoline to the ultimate consumer, without reference to taxes, of course, which the refiner, of course, has no control over, and that the quality of the gasoline has increased and the price in cents per gallon has decreased. I think that is really a matter of common knowledge. I just feel sure, perhaps the Commission is apprised of that fact, already. It has been published so many times in trade magazines and A.P.I. reports and various petroleum journals, and so on, that I just don't think there can be any question about it. It all goes to this point, your Honor: The question of the public interest. We say that we have accomplished a job, here, in that we have reduced the ultimate price to the consumer.

Now, as to what is material, that is for the Commission; as to its materiality. That's all we are trying to prove, here; not the service station price, or anything of that kind; just the trend.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: With that explanation, is it still objected to?

Mr. Austin: Yes, I think it might be misleading because, first, as to a tank wagon consumer price, which is something we have had no testimony about and, furthermore, I think the Consumer in this case, as far as we have referred to him, is the automobile owner who purchases 2310 his gasoline at his service station and this has nothing to do with the price that he pays. Whether this chart, in general, indicates the trend of retail service stations' prices, I don't know. It doesn't purport to, and I am not questioning the correctness of the chart at all, but I don't think that it relates to consumer prices or tank wagon prices as they have been referred to in this case.

Mr. Hanley: That is quite true, Mr. Austin, and maybe I can get the same result, here, by a question of counsel: I am perfectly willing to withdraw the offer if it can be agreed, Mr. Austin, that the general trend of gasoline prices, exclusive of taxes has been downward during the last several years.

Mr. Austin: Judge, I just don't know.

Mr. Hanley: Well, it is true, and I just want to prove it, Judge. How I prove it, may be another matter, but that's all I am trying to prove. It is true, and this is one index that is the best that our statisticians could figure out.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If counsel for the Commission desires to withhold his objection or allow it to pend until he has an opportunity to cross-examine the witness, the Examiner will withhold his ruling.

Mr. Austin: I have no more cross-examination on this. I think it just happens that it doesn't relate to any-2311 thing that has been in the case and that is conceded and, as I understand it, the only offer is—this shows what the situation is as to retail prices insofar as the result is concerned, but this is not based upon any facts as to retail service stations' prices.

I just don't know. I don't like to concede that it go in, because it has the right result, even though it is reached upon some method based on different facts.

Mr. Hanley: In all fairness I want to state on the record that this exhibit is not offered with any view to trying to establish what retail service stations' prices may be. I have no interest at all, your Honor, in the cents per gallon. I don't care at all about that. All we seek to show by this is that on the over-all picture, whether you buy gasoline to run an automobile or clean your wife's clothes, or what you buy it for, the price of gasoline during the past several years to the ultimate consumer has consistently gone down. That's all in the world that this exhibit is offered for.

Mr. Austin: Judge, I don't deny that. I don't know whether it is true and, if it is true, I don't know whether it has any materiality, but I just don't want to concede that this exhibit would prove it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Can't this witness testify to that?

2312 Mr. Hanley: Of course he knows it. I thought it would be just a graphic way of testifying to it. Perhaps he has testified to it.

The Witness: The testimony did state that this price, tank wagon price structure to consumers, was our basic price structure. That the prices in other channels are determined as deviates from this particular price structure.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did your testimony relate to the country at large?

The Witness: It did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Or to the Detroit area?

The Witness: It related to both. I stated the decline of gasoline prices in the country at large and, specifically, in Detroit.

Mr. Austin: May I ask the witness one more question on that?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Austin: Isn't it true, Mr. Boatwright, that competitive situations in particular areas, such as price wars and other local conditions, may pull your curve out of line from what it would be upon your general trend based upon this curve?

The Witness: I am not sure I know what curve you are referring to.

Mr. Austin: In other words, you said, I believe, 2313 this is your basic something that you—

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Austin: That other prices more or less follow.

The Witness: This is our basic price structure.

Mr. Austin: That, as you just told the Examiner, is true as to your whole territory but would this necessarily be indicative of the price structure or the trend of the price structure in any other area, such as Detroit?

The Witness: This particular chart is Detroit city.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled. The Examiner holds that the witness has testified to the fact and that this is merely a picture of what he has testified to.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 26," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Hanley: Judge, I am just about to go into a new phase of testimony, here, and I am just wondering if you mind adjourning at this hour for the noon recess. I would be glad to reconvene at any time your Honor suggests.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will adjourn at this time to reconvene at 1:30 p.m.

Now, at 12:00 p.m., the hearing stands at recess until 1:30 p.m.

(Whereupon, at 12:00 p.m., a recess was taken until 1:30 p.m.)

2314 Afternoon Session.

1:30 p.m.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

JOHN W. BOATWRIGHT, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Hanley (Continued):

Q. Mr. Boatwright, are you familiar with what are known as the Zip and Joy stations in Detroit?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Have you been familiar with those stations over a number of years in the past?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you regard the Zip and Joy stations as being competitive to the Standard Oil Company in the sale of gasoline?
A. Definitely, they are.
Q. Do those stations sell a substantial amount of gasoline which is sold in the Detroit metropolitan area?
A. They have a large volume. Is that what you mean by a substantial amount?
Q. Yes, that is what I mean.
A. Yes, it is correct, they do.
2315 Q. And do they or do they not have a good public acceptance in Detroit?
A. They do.
Mr. Hanley: Will you mark this, please?
(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 27.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I hand you, Mr. Boatwright, what has now been marked Respondent's Exhibit 27, for identification, and ask you if you are familiar with that chart?
A. Yes, sir, I am familiar with it.
Q. What does it represent?
A. This represents the volume of Zip and Joy gasolines and the Sunny Service Oil Company, and the price differential at which their merchandise is sold below the prices maintained by dealers of Standard Oil gasolines. The studies of the price differentials are a discreet series specifically timed, starting in March of 1938, the last study being made in March of 1941. Would you like an explanation?

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Boatwright: are the results, as disclosed by the chart, Respondent's Exhibit 27, results which you and your department reached after a study or studies of the competitive situation in Detroit?

A. It is, sir.

Q. Were these studies made with a view to ascer-2316 taining the competitive situation for the benefit of the Respondent, the Standard Oil Company and without any reference at all to this particular lawsuit or proceeding?

A. They were made in that manner, sir.

Q. And do you have personal knowledge of the results, as they are disclosed by the graph or chart, Respondent's Exhibit 27, for identification?

A. I do.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When was the chart made?

The Witness: The chart was made approximately six weeks ago.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. The Court has asked you when the chart was made. I will now ask you when were the studies made upon which the chart is based, Mr. Boatwright?

A. There were ten studies. One was conducted in March of 1938; one in May of 1938; one in July of 1938, and one in September of 1938. One was conducted in March of 1939; one in September of 1939; and one in December of 1939. The next study was conducted in June of 1940. The next one in November of 1940, and the last one in the early part of March, 1941.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: They are each portrayed on the exhibit, are they?

The Witness: That is correct.

2317 Mr. Hanley: We offer Exhibit 27 in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any objection?

Mr. Austin: May I question the witness?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Austin: Mr. Boatwright, there is a column over on the left entitled "Volume: Millions of Gallons," and "Price Differential in Cents Per Gallon."

The Witness: That is true.

Mr. Austin: To which of those columns do the vertical black lines apply?

The Witness: The vertical black lines are read from the scale on the right of the chart.

Mr. Austin: What is the purpose of that column on the left?

The Witness: The volume as shown by the tax records of the State of Michigan, consolidating the volume of Sunny Service, Puritan Oil Company, and Charles E. Austin.

Mr. Austin: Then that curve line there, I guess you would call it, refers to the left column and not to the right; is that right?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: These heavy black lines running up from the bottom refer to the price differential column?

The Witness: Yes, to the price differential as shown on the right, but have no relation except as the line 2318 of volume moves with the extent of the price differential.

Mr. Austin: Does the line of volume move with the extent of the price differential?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: Would you say that there is a constant relationship there?

The Witness: There is no constant relationship in any one determinate of patronage.

Mr. Austin: Perhaps "constant" is not the right word. I wondered whether this was intended to show that volume increased as the price differential increased.

The Witness: It does so indicate.

Mr. Austin: Who is Sunny Service?

The Witness: Sunny Service is a predecessor of the—either the Puritan or the Charles E. Austin. I am not sure which of those two it was the predecessor company of.

Mr. Austin: What did it sell?

The Witness: It sold gasoline.

Mr. Austin: Under any brand or—

The Witness: Yes, it had a brand name. I don't recall the brand name.

Mr. Austin: Why is that included in here with these other two?

The Witness: Charles E. Austin does not date back to the beginning of the chart. The chart starting with 2319 1935 volume. Charles E. Austin was not in existence under that name at that time.

Mr. Austin: What does Charles E. Austin sell?

The Witness: He sells gasoline.

Mr. Austin: What brand?

The Witness: I think his brand is the Joy gasoline.

Mr. Austin: Do you know?

The Witness: No, I don't know, I couldn't tell you whether it is Joy or Zip. It is one or the other.

Mr. Austin: How about Puritan Oil Company?

The Witness: Puritan Oil Company distributes the other.

Mr. Austin: Well, you say up at the top "Volume of Zip and Joy Gasolines," and then you have got these three names down here in the square?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: Do you know whether Sunny Service ever sold Zip or Joy?

The Wtiness: No, I am not sure whether the brand name was Zip or Joy at the time Sunny Service was distributing prior to the origin of the Charles E. Austin.

2320 Mr. Austin: Was it either one?

The Witness: That is what I say, I am not certain.

Mr. Austin: Now, on this price differential chart it says "for a price advantage of leading cut price marketers secured from independent consumer surveys during the months indicated"; who are the leading cut price marketers whose data is included in makiing this chart?

The Witness: Zip and Joy, as far as prices are concerned, were the ones distributed during the time period when the consumer surveys were conducted.

Mr. Austin: Well, is this phrase here "leading cut price marketers"—does that refer only to Zip and Joy?

The Witness: It does.

Mr. Austin: In your opinion are they the only leading price cut marketers in the Detroit area?

The Witness: They are the leading cut price marketers.

Mr. Austin: Don't you think it would be less misleading to refer to Zip and Joy there instead of saying leading cut price marketers," down there in the lower right?

The Witness: I don't think that it would. I didn't think so when I made the chart.

2321 Mr. Austin: Well, there is nothing—

The Witness: There are other price-cut marketers, that is why I indicated that Zip and Joy were the leading cut price merchandise and—

Mr. Austin: I don't think it is clear from your statement down here in the square at the lower right that you are referring only to Zip and Joy.

The Witness: I should think it would be clear when taken in conjunction with your main title on the chart. The chart is clear in that respect: it says: "The volume of Zip and Joy gasolines and the price differential below prices maintained by Standard dealers."

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Are Zip and Joy standard gasolines?

The Witness: By "standard" are you implying the name of a corporation, your Honor, or are you implying quality?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Quality.

The Witness: I am not a chemist; I can speak as to the consumer acceptance; I cannot speak as to the chemical components of the product.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Speaking as to the consumer acceptance.

The Witness: They have a good consumer acceptance in the Detroit area, and are represented in the adver-2322 tisements of these respective distributors as being better than the house brand gasolines of major companies. The usual advertising compares them with the Ethyl product of the major distributors.

Mr. Austin: Now, there is a reference—are you through, your Honor?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

Mr. Austin: There is a reference here to information secured from independent consumer surveys conducted during the months indicated. What surveys are referred to?

The Witness: That will require a detailed explanation. Do you wish that I give the explanation of the process?

Mr. Austin: I want to know—I want you to answer my question in as much detail as necessary as to what surveys you were referring to when you refer to independent consumer surveys.

The Witness: Those surveys are conducted by my department. We have found over a period of years that it is extremely difficult to get reliable price information from postings. Accordingly, we periodically make interviews on the streets of different metropolitan markets throughout our territory. These interviews are made by individuals who do not know the company that is paying for their expenses, and their salary. The interview of this 2323 type is usually limited to three major questions: the opening question is: "Have you bought any gasoline lately?"

Any individual seated in a car will normally answer that question, "Yes." If they say "No," we go on to the next respondent. If they say, "Yes," we ask them the brand that they purchased on their last purchase. Then we ask, if they recall the price that they paid for that merchandise. And they tell us the price. The interviewer jots down the make and age of car and the license number, and that completes that particular interview.

Now, to illustrate the process, in the City of Detroit we first lay out the city according to income areas, there is an exact number of interviews specified by particular locations. If we designate a particular corner at which there shall be 23 interviews, the interviewer is to secure 23 interviews, with male members only, seated in their cars. Having jotted down the identification of the car, every tenth interview is checked by correspondence to insure accuracy of reporting. When the cards for the entire metropolitan area are secured and tabulated, the make and age of car is then classified against R. L. Polk car registrations by make and age of car. The distribution of our sample must compare with the distribution of the car registrations in the Detroit area before it is accepted.

To illustrate, let us say 23% of the cars in Detroit 2324 are five years of age or older, 23% of our interviews, or a close approximation thereto, may be ½ of 1% on either side, must be cars of five years of age or older. Now, the result of that, we take the prices that the consumer actually paid—it is not the posted prices, it is what he paid, if he gets any discounts, if he gets any undercutting of any kind of manipulation or anything of that type, that is all excluded from the actual prices that he paid. To check that in another way—

2325 Mr. Austin: Let me ask at that point: this survey didn't cover just Zip and Joy, because you wouldn't know; when your asked the customer where he bought?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Austin: So did your survey cover all kinds of gasoline?

The Witness: That is correct; a study of this type gives us two findings; one, the study gives us our position in the retail market and, secondly, it gives us our prices and the prices that prevail on the competitive gasoline sold in competition with our product.

I started to mention another check that we exercise on this. We frequently ask the offices to transmit to us tickets on credit card sales. That is only our own products, you see. They do that and we average the actual price as shown on the credit card sales receipts against the price that the consumers said they paid for our products and that usually averages within 1/10 of one per cent, that the prices that the consumer average indicates.

Mr. Austin: Just tell me that again. Who do you get that information from, that check.

The Witness: We get that from the field offices.

Mr. Austin: Of whom?

The Witness: To illustrate: We have done this particularly in the Indianapolis and Minneapolis markets.
2326 We ask the Standard Oil credit men to transmit a tabulation of the credit card sales in those communities for comparison with the prices the consumers said they paid for the Standard gasolines in those communities during the identical time period.

Mr. Austin: How would those credit cards work out with anything like Joy or Zip? Do they have credit cards?

The Witness: No, please understand. I said that is a check against the accuracy of our sampling process and if our credit card sales, which reflects against it, and what the consumer has told us he actually paid corresponds, then we have an accurate reflection of the prices maintained by Standard Oil dealers in that community, do we not?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

The Witness: It is merely a check of the accuracy of the proceedings.

Mr. Austin: That wouldn't apply, however, to the accuracy on the others except, possibly, by inference, is that right?

The Witness: It applies primarily to the Standard Oil accuracy but we have checked our sample two ways. First against R. L. Polk data, on car registration, which is universal and as a second check, if the price, as shown by credit card sales of Standard Oil products, corresponds exactly to the price as reported by customers of 2327 Standard Oil, there is every presumption our sampling process has been an accurate one.

Mr. Austin: Now on a survey of that sort how do you obtain your figures, here represented by this curve for millions of gallons? In other words, for volume?

The Witness: That line is, as I stated, taken from the tax records of the State, which are shown monthly.

Mr. Austin: Then the surveys are used in preparing these vertical lines on cents per gallon of price differential—it is these straight black lines?

The Witness: Yes, they are derivative entirely from the survey. The curve, as you refer to it, is the volume that is taken entirely from the tax records of the State of Michigan.

Mr. Hanley: Which I understand, if your Honor please, have been introduced in evidence here by the Government.

Mr. Austin: Yes, if it is those same records. I don't know whether Joy and Zip appear in those records.

Mr. Hanley: There aren't any different records. Tax records are tax records; that's all there is to that.

The Witness: You understand on a tax record it is not shown according to brand name, it is shown according to the company report.

Mr. Austin: That's right. And, your Honor, I 2328 object to this going in evidence for several reasons.

In the first place, it is not what it purports to be on its face. There is no adequate explanation here of the meaning of an independent consumer survey and the word independent, to me, if I were going through the record in this case in the position of the Commission or court, I certainly would not think that independent meant something that was compiled by the Standard Oil Company.

Furthermore, the statement down here, in reference to the survey, refers to "leading out price marketers," and the statement up in the top refers to price differential, but I don't think that the statements here, in either case, show clearly that the reference to leading price cut marketers is intended to refer only to Zip and Joy gasolines and I think if it is, it is a conclusion and that there is no reason why this statement down here shouldn't refer specifically to Zip and Joy.

Further, in regard to the surveys, I think that it is obvious that information obtained in that manner from consumers, as to the price differential, is not the best evidence because it is a question of fact as to what was the price differential between the prices charged at various times at Zip and Joy stations, and the Standard Oil stations and while the prevailing service station price at Standard Oil stations has been placed in the record, here, it seems to me that there must be better evidence than going to 2329 consumers to determine the price charged at Zip and Joy stations, and that whatever the automobile owner, sitting in his car, may say, that is only hearsay as to the price which he paid, and it is entirely different from getting the information at the source where is was compiled or from the man who has knowledge of it.

2330 I will have to change that statement. Of course, each car owner has knowledge of the price he paid in a particular instance, but, nevertheless I think that if this is intended to be a survey of price differentials based upon the reports made from consumers rather than from reports by the station owner, that it ought to so indicate. If it is intended to allege here that the consumers' statement as to what they paid is more reliable than any service station owner's posted price, I would quite agree to that, but that may be true in regard to proving a certain sale on a certain date, but it seems to me that this is a rather unreliable method, and certainly not the best method of showing the prices charged at these stations, and that it could be proved, I should think, by the companies themselves directly, just as the Standard Oil prices have been put in here by the Standard Oil Company.

I wouldn't object to this so much if it is indicated just what it was.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In view of the explanation offered by the witness, his explanation taken in connection with the exhibit, have you any objection?

Mr. Austin: I object to the things that I have already stated here about this use of the phrase "leading cut price marketers." I think that ought to be changed, if it goes in evidence.

2331 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The explanation would be read into the exhibit, would it not?

Mr. Austin: The purpose of the exhibit, I always thought was to look at the exhibit and learn something without turning to the record. Otherwise you might just as well read the whole thing into the record. The exhibit is a very convenient means of putting in some testimony which, otherwise, might take a long time to put in, and not be as graphic after it was in.

Another objection is that this Sunny Service appears here, and the witness states he doesn't know of his own knowledge Sunny Service sold Zip or Joy gasolines, and yet the proposed exhibit purports to relate only to Zip and Joy.

The Witness: May I amplify that, your Honor?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

The Witness: As I stated, that Sunny Service was a predecessor company of either the Puritan or Charles E. Austin. I did not state which firm it was the predecessor of.

Mr. Austin: Didn't you say you didn't know whether it sold either one of these brands?

The Witness: I said I did not know whether, when it was a predecessor company as a distributor of gasoline, called its product either Zip or Joy.

2332 Mr. Austin: Do you know whether it called it one or the other?

The Witness: I will give you my recollection on it. I am under the impression that it was the Zip brand of gasoline.

Mr. Austin: I am trying to make the question clear. We have both been using the question here at cross purposes; I will try again and ask you whether you know whether Sunny Service sold either one or the other of Zip or Joy gasoline.

The Witness: It sold one, yes.

Mr. Austin: That was where I misunderstood you, I thought you said you didn't know—

Mr. Hanley: I have something in my hand here that was just handed to me by our manager here, relative to these names of the Sunny Service Company and the Puritan Oil Company and so on. They change names and they have a continuing evolution in their corporate existence. I didn't think that was important. But if it is deemed important, we can prove it but they do sell the gasoline and they have been selling the gasoline under one name or another, and it just didn't seem to me to be important as to what their corporate name might be at any time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I take it the material point is the character of the gasoline?

2333 Mr. Hanley: Yes, that seems to be the only thing that is real important here. We can prove it, and be glad to do it, if your Honor thinks it has any materiality, but I just didn't think it did have any materiality what the corporate names of these companies might be from time to time.

My associate reminds me it covers nothing but this Zip and Joy gasoline. That's what we are talking about.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understand.

Mr. Austin: Well, do you know whether any of the service stations covered by this Sunny Service, Puritan Oil, or Charles E. Austin, handled more than one brand of gasoline?

The Witness: I don't think they did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Have you any knowledge—

The Witness: I don't.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: —sufficient to answer?

The Witness: I do not have definite knowledge as to whether they handled one or two brands.

Mr. Austin: If they handle two brands wouldn't they be lumped in the Secretary of State's report?

The Witness: That's correct.

Mr. Austin: So there, again, your Honor, there is no assurance here that this volume curve is restricted to either Zip or Joy, in case they sold some other brand at 2334 the same station.

The Witness: I stated that that was the total volume as reported on the State tax report.

Mr. Austin: Yes, the total volume, which might include more gasoline than Zip and Joy, if they sold something else.

The Witness: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is correct, isn't it?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: However, I don't think the volume curve here is particular important, but—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Exhibit purports to show the volume.

Mr. Austin: Whether one curve is supposed to show the volume of gasoline sold and the other lines are supposed to show the average difference in price, I guess at the periods on which these surveys were taken, and I object to this price differential chart upon the ground that it is not shown to be reliable evidence or a reliable means of getting evidence upon the information which is attempted to be portrayed. It seems to me that these surveys have a very definite purpose, and I have no question about the fact that they were well conducted for the purpose which they were intended to cover various brands of gasoline and obtain important information for the Standard 2335 Oil Company, but when you get it down to the question of price per gallon and the price differential charged by Zip and Joy, on the one hand, and Standard Oil Company, on the other, as distinguished from a survey covering a general situation, it seems to me they are likely to be quite unreliable.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you think the volume of Zip—and what is the other name?

The Witness: Joy.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: —Joy gasoline sold is material?

The Witness: Is your question directed to me?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No, to Mr. Austin.

Mr. Austin: I think it is material only to the extent that it may have some materiality on the contention that these are—well, I don't think it is material, but I think that the Respondent's contention is that it is material, and if he is right, why, of course, it is a question that is rather hard to argue. I am assuming that if it goes in at all that it is material. But I don't see any direct materiality of it except as to the percentage of this gasoline that is sold in Detroit, and possibly to the question of how much of a competitive factor it is. It may have some materiality.

Mr. Hanley: The witness has testified, your Honor,
2336 that it was a competitive gasoline so far as our company is concerned; that is the reason we offer it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you consider the volume material?

Mr. Hanley: Absolutely, sir. I may say to your Honor, in all fairness to your Honor, in view of the obligation your Honor has to rule, that we expect to prove, in detail just what that volume is before we have finished our case.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then the Examiner will withhold his ruling on this exhibit until further proof is offered.

Mr. Austin: What is the last statement of the Examiner?

(The record was read.)

Mr. Hanley: Will you mark this, please?

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 28.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Before we leave Exhibit 27, Mr. Boatwright, and so there may be no opportunity to misunderstand, the heavy black vertical lines represent, as I understand it, the differential at which these several companies were selling below the prevailing service station price, as indicated by the right-hand column; is that right?

2337 A. That is correct. That is below the Standard Oil dealers' price?

Q. Yes, sir.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So taking the highest vertical column, and following it out to the right-hand side, does that indicate or does the chart mean—well, I will ask you what the chart means.

A. That indicates that during the month of May, 1938, the brands of gasoline sold at Joy and Zip were sold at a price averaging exactly 6¢ per gallon less than the average prices maintained by Standard Oil dealers on Standard Oil products.

Q. Yes. Now, referring you to the "Volume" line which you say is controlled by the figuration on the left-hand side of the chart, will you state what relation there is between that volume line and the price differential as indicated by the vertical lines?

A. Yes. I should like to state that the unusual growth that was taking place during the year 1938 in this market by this class of distributors led to our department being assigned the task of studying prices. Three times between the month of March and the month of July, when the price differential is the widest, the growth of the volume as indicated by the tax reports is the more rapid. As the price differential is reduced, the growth is reduced, or it 2338 may even be reversed.

Q. Now, Mr. Boatwright, I hand you what has been marked by the reporter as Respondent's Exhibit 28, and I will ask you if you have seen that exhibit before?

A. I have seen this chart before.

Q. Was that chart prepared under the direction and supervision of your department?

A. It was.

Q. What does it represent?

A. This chart represents the gasoline price maintained by Standard Oil Company dealers with prices maintained by leading cut-price marketers in the Detroit area.

The lower part of the chart shows the relationship between the price differential maintained by cut-price distributors under prices maintained by Standard dealers and our proportion of the retail market in the Detroit area as indicated by last time purchases of the responding consumers' interview.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, just assume that we don't know anything about this at all, and take the upper half of the chart first, and the lower half next, and just tell us in A, B, C's, exactly what it proves.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What it purports to prove.

By Mr. Hanley:

2339 Q. All right. What it purports to prove.

A. May we start with the first line on the chart?

Q. Surely.

A. Each of the surveys as to the date of the interviewing is indicated by the circled cross incorporated in the line. The circled cross indicates the average absolute price paid by consumers for Standard gasoline in the Detroit area during the respective months. The connecting line is merely an indication of the movement as we go across the time series chart. But the chart is not a continuous series of studies broken down by individual months. Each of the respective circled indicators show at that particular date the prices maintained on Standard gasolines.

The Reporter: Is that "Standard" a proper name?

The Witness: Yes.

A. (Continuing.) The second line indicates a similar factual condition relative to the prices paid on cut price gasoline.

2340 Mr. Austin: Mr. Boatwright, let me interrupt a minute. The Reporter asked you if you meant "Standard" meaning Standard Oil Company. What gasoline do you mean? Is this restricted to Red Crown, or does it cover all three?

The Witness: The average price paid for the three Standard brands Stanolind, Standard Red Crown, and Solite.

A. (Continuing.) Now the area between the two observations indicates the price difference that prevailed at the date that survey was made. That difference is transposed into the third line on the chart which reads from the lower level of the chart upward, according to the scale as shown on the lefthand side of the chart. It is the dotted line which shows the price advantage of the leading cut price marketers, which is merely the difference between the top two lines of the chart.

Now, the fourth line shows the reported proportion of the retail market being served by Standard Oil branded motor gasolines, Stanolind, Red Crown, and Solite.

The significance of the chart is that our market position in the Detroit area tends to move in an inverse relationship with the width of the price differential maintained by these leadings price cut marketers. Thus, if you will read the line from right to left on your chart you will notice that when the price differential was between 5½ and 6¢ per gallon—

2341 Trial Examiner Ballinger: You are now referring to the—

The Witness: Third line, so called.

A. (Continuing.) Our market position was declining quite rapidly. That as the prices grew closer together, as you will note when you compare lines one and two, and as is reflected again by line three, where the price differential was approximately 3½¢, the Standard Oil dealers started showing a gain in market position. That gain was continued by successive studies until the early part of 1939, at which time the price differential again had exceeded 5¢ per gallon.

Again our market position reversed. It struck a low of about 17 per cent of the market which we maintained for the period of November 1939 until June of 1940. During this time period the differential grew narrower again, and we started gaining in market position. As the differential continued to narrow we continued to show an improvement in our position, indicating the tendency of our market position to move in a negative relationship with the price differential maintained by these products.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, Mr. Boatwright, just to boil this thing down in the simplest kind of language, in your judgment, and based on your studies of the competitive situation, is it or is it not true that as these so-called cut price marketers 2342 reduce their price they sell more gasoline and we sell less, and as that margin narrows we sell more gasoline and they sell less?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Hanley: I don't know whether I made an offer of this particular exhibit or not.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It has merely been identified.

Mr. Hanley: I offer it now, Exhibit 28.

Mr. Austin: Just a moment, please.

Mr. Boatwright, on Respondent's Exhibit 28 for identification at the top of that the heading refers again to "leading cut price marketers in Detroit"; to whom do you refer there?

A. Zip and Joy.

Mr. Austin: And is that same reference intended wherever you say "leading cut price marketers"?

The Witness: On these charts, that is correct.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Limited to those two brands entirely, isn't it?

The Witness: It is limited to the volume of those companies distributing those two brands entirely.

Mr. Austin: Are the surveys referred to on Respondent's Exhibit 28 the same as those referred to on Respondent's Exhibit 27?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: And in Respondent's Exhibit 27 when 2343 you were making up this computation of price differential, and as I understand it, the same differential is shown on Respondent's Exhibit 28—is that correct?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: Were the prices of all three gasolines sold at Standard Oil stations included? That is, was an average price taken?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: How was that weighted, or was there any weighting done?

The Witness: According to the number of purchases of individual brands. The respondents automatically weight your price according to the flow of merchandise. If your respondent told you he bought Solite, that would be at that price. The majority of them naturally telling us they bought Standard Red Crown, some few buying Stanolind. They automatically weight themselves according to your flow of merchandise.

Mr. Austin: But all three gasolines were included in that?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: How about the computations made on responses from people who bought at Zip and Joy stations? Did that include any brand of gasoline they might have bought at those stations?

2344 The Witness: That includes only the brands that they designated as Zip and Joy. In other words, had we in a given community had made an interview or series of interviews in which everybody said they bought Standard Red Crown, it would only be an average of the actual responses, and would in that case represent that particular brand. Now, in the respondents of Zip and Joy every consumer's price is averaged according to the brand name of Zip and Joy.

Mr. Austin: Did you find that there were different prices charged at the same station?

The Witness: Such a study does not isolate the station; it isolates brands, but not stations, you see. May I amplify that just a little bit to say that we do find different prices, and that is why this type of a study is conducted. The posted prices frequently are not an accurate reflection of the true price condition in a given area. I am speaking now as an economist. We know from our experience that the posted price does not reflect the true price condition in an area, and accordingly we ask the consumers what they pay, because it is difficult to kid twelve hundred consumers about the prices, when you don't know which twelve hundred you are starting your joking with.

Mr. Austin: What I am getting at is do you know whether there is more than one priced gasoline sold at any of these stations, or did the information obtained from these consumers include at all the stations where 2345 they bought it, or only the brand?

The Witness: It included the brand.

Mr. Austin: Brand only?

The Witness: Brand only.

Mr. Austin: Then it wouldn't necessarily show how many prices there were at one station at one time?

2346 The Witness: It does not.

Mr. Austin: I make the same objection to Respondent's Exhibit 28 that I made to Respondent's Exhibit 27. I think that upon the basis upon which they were compiled, that they are immaterial, and if they go in the record, I feel there should be some change made in the typing on them. I can suggest specific changes, if your Honor wishes to indicate just what they refer to.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What changes would you suggest?

Mr. Austin: In the first place, on Respondent's Exhibit 27, I think in the last sentence in the block down here in the lower right-hand corner, the words "leading cut-price marketers" should be eliminated and "Zip and Joy dealers" should be inserted in place of that.

And the word "independent" should be stricken out, and after "consumer" surveys—rather, after the word "conducted", I should say, should be inserted the words "by the Standard Oil Company", so that it will show just who made the survey, and what brands are referred to.

Now, on Respondent's Exhibit 28, again, I think the words "leading cut-price marketers" should be eliminated wherever they appear, and "Zip and Joy stations" or "Zip and Joy retail dealers" should be inserted in place of that. That simply makes it more accurate, and it doesn't vary at all from what the witness has said 2347 these things are.

And I think, again, that down here in the lower right-hand corner of Exhibit 28 where it says "Private surveys conducted in the Detroit market," it should read: "Private surveys conducted by the Standard Oil Company in the Detroit market."

Mr. Hanley: Have you finished, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: Just a moment. I think I have.

Mr. Hanley: Of course, your Honor, I think the witness has explained what the language means on the exhibit, and of course we are offering the exhibit which was prepared by an economist of the Standard Oil Company. We are not offering an exhibit that is prepared by counsel for the Commission here. If there is anything that is not fully explained, certainly I think we should explain it. It is an obligation we have in offering the exhibit, and the witness is subject to cross examination.

As to materiality or relevancy, I don't care to make any argument at all, but I do want to request, if your Honor will do me the favor, I haven't laid as much foundation about the mechanics of how the surveys were conducted as I can lay, and I just don't want to get into any trap about that. If any part of this objection goes to that feature, I would like to lay more foundation.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That was the only question that the Examiner had in mind.

2348 Mr. Hanley: If your Honor does have such a question, may I -

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If the objection doesn't run to that, as to the foundation upon which the exhibit is based, then the Examiner is prepared to rule.

Mr. Austin: I won't concede that these surveys are formed on a sound basis for the conclusion reached. But on this question of what was said in here, there is certainly—no exhibit is admissible if it says on its face one thing, and it is something else. And I think that goes to the fact where the language is misleading. If your Honor will just permit me to express an opinion on it, I don't think that it is proper to admit the exhibit in evidence if it is misleading, even though the witness has explained what is on there. If it says one thing and the witness says it means something else, then I think that the exhibit itself should be corrected, because there is no point in an exhibit unless it can be read apart from the testimony.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Apparently the only difference is in the use of language. The witness has used the language that would properly identify it in his mind; you have described it as it would be described by the attorney.

I think the record fairly portrays the true meaning 2349 and intent for which the exhibit is offered, and the meaning of the exhibit, and unless the objection runs to the basic ground upon which the exhibit is based, the Examiner overrules the objection and admits the document in evidence.

Mr. Hanley: Do I understand, Mr. Austin, that your objection does go to just the mechanical foundation of this exhibit?

Mr. Austin: Well, my objection goes to the point that I don't believe the surveys as described by the witness establish what is intended to be stated by the exhibit as a fact. I am not convinced that that is the proper way of obtaining that sort of information.

Mr. Hanley: Then I think there is an obligation upon me to examine him further, your Honor.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, in respect of both Exhibits 27 and 28, will you please tell the Court in meticulous detail just exactly what you and your department and your staff did in the matter of collecting and then compiling the information which is reflected by these exhibits.

A. Well, our first step is segregating the city, any given city, according to income groups, for areas in which interviews are to be conducted.

Our questionnaire is as simple as it was outlined in 2350 my previous testimony.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: State what it is.

A. Namely, covering three questions: one, being a lead question, merely to start conversation: "Have you bought any gasoline recently?"

Nothing is done with the answer to that particular question.

2. "What brand of gasoline did you buy at your last purchase?"

3. "What price did you pay for the purchase of that gasoline?"

The questionnaire then contains notations as to the make, the age of the car, and the license number.

No interviews are conducted on corners at which service stations are located, but frequently will be conducted in local trading areas in outlying as well as downtown sections so that we are not getting the influence of a particular location, but, rather, the influence of the branded distribution.

Having laid the plans for the study, we call for bids of outside commercial consuming research organizations.

Such organizations at which we usually get bids are the Booz, Fry, Allen, and Hamilton, being the firm name of one organization; secondly, the Psychological Organization of America; thirdly, the Market Research Corporation of America and two or three others, the names 2351 of which do not come to me at this particular moment.

The bids for making and conducting this survey exactly in accordance with the rules laid down by my department, are received. Their interviewees are trained centrally so that interviewers in the Detroit area will be comparable with similar individuals gathering similar information in other metropolitan areas.

They are then sent to the respective markets and they pick up the identical designated number of interviews, according to identical corner locations in given communities, and then each tenth interview, according to the license number of the car, is addressed, and mail follow-up as to whether that particular respondent had been approached, asked specific questions, and as to his responses on the questions. Any time that the interview check does not indicate a good return of the direct mail follow-up, the interviews are reconducted in those given areas to insure an accurate portrayal of the prices consumers tell us that they are selling gasoline for. The results of this study are sent back to the successful bidder, be it either the Psychological Corporation or the Booz, Fry, Allen, and Hamilton firm, or any other successful bidder, and are there tabulated according to the cross tabulations which we designate. Those tabulations, in brief, provide information on the proportion of the market being served by each of the leading competitive brands in that given 2352 area.

I use the word "leading" there to differentiate from the word "major" as it has been used in this testimony.

To illustrate, Sun and Hi-Speed would be tabulated separately in the Detroit area. Those brands would not be tabulated separately in any other metropolitan market.

The market position is shown for the City of Detroit and the surrounding suburbs. In addition, this is but a part of a similar study conducted throughout the State of Michigan which is weighted, according to the relative proportion of gasoline consumption, by given county areas in the state that we have at one time the proportion of the retail market we are to do, and in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan, as well as the portion of the market we are securing in the market through our sellers in the Detroit metropolitan area.

The second tabulation has to do with prices at which the various brands of gasoline are being sold. This is merely an averaging process of the interview responses as given to the interviewee. It is averaged by brands and the total isolated by individual outlets.

Have I adequately covered the subjects?

2353 Q. I think so.

Now, Mr. Boatwright, the process and mechanics that you have been describing, as I understand it, apply to the basis of the information upon which you predicate Exhibits 27 and 28. Am I right about that?

A. That is correct.

Q. Let me ask you this further question: Were any of these surveys, upon which these exhibits are predicated, made in connection with or in contemplation of this lawsuit?

A. Definitely not.

Q. Are they made as a matter of information for the Standard Oil Company in the conduct of its own business?

A. Certainly.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact that upon the results of your surveys and your conclusions and judgment the management of the Respondent company, the Standard Oil Company, spends large amounts of money every year?

A. It is correct.

Mr. Hanley: I now offer, again, Exhibits 27 and 28.

Mr. Austin: I would like to ask another question, if your Honor please.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Austin: I intended to ask it before. Well, in the first place, what area is covered by Respondent's 2354 Exhibit 27 for identification?

The Witness: That is Detroit.

Mr. Austin: I don't see that it says so on there anywhere, although it does say on Exhibit 28.

The Witness: Well, I have so stated. It is Detroit.

Mr. Austin: Now, when these surveys were made I assume, of course, that they were made here in Detroit as well as other places. Do you know as to any survey, what percentage of the responses received were related to purchases of gasoline at Zip or Joy stations?

The Witness: The studies did reveal that. I did not have the complete studies with me but they do reveal that.

Mr. Austin: Do you know as to any of these surveys how many responses were received and tabulated in the City of Detroit?

The Witness: In total?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Austin: Can you tell me that?

The Witness: Yes. The recent studies cover, approximately, fifteen hundred interviews. Earlier than that, the earlier studies covered about eight hundred to a thousand.

Mr. Austin: That is just the City of Detroit, you 2355 are speaking of?

The Witness: That is the City of Detroit, Dearborn, Hamtramck; the metropolitan area.

Mr. Austin: But in referring to other portions of the state—because I think you said about a survey having been made in the whole State of Michigan—

The Witness: That's right. We make about three thousand in the lower peninsula of Michigan, of which approximately 50 per cent are made in the Detroit area.

Mr. Austin: And over how long a period is the survey conducted?

The Witness: All interviews must be made and submitted to the Chicago office of the contracting company within a ten day period from the letting of the contract to the receipt of the responses.

Mr. Austin: I would be interested in knowing how many responses were included in each one of these tabulations; I mean, in the tabulation on each one of these surveys, from persons who said that they purchased at Zip or Joy stations?

The Witness: I have that information right here. Would you like that I should read this into the record?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Austin: Yes.

The Witness: In March of 1938 sixty-one respondents stated that they purchased Zip and or Joy.

2356 Mr. Austin: Have you got Standard Oil for the same survey?

The Witness: No, but I have the total number of interviews.

Mr. Austin: All right. State that.

The Witness: That particular study encompassed 769 interviews.

The May study of 1938 showed 77 Zip or Joy and 760 total interviews.

The June, 1938, study was 59 Zip or Joy, out of a total of 751 interviews.

September, 66 Zip or Joy; 763 total interviews.

March of 1939, 102 Zip or Joy, out of 1299 studies.

August of 1939, 134 Zip or Joy, out of 1522 interviews.

November of 1939, 90 Zip or Joy out of 1494 interviews.

June, 1940, 104 Zip or Joy, out of 1496 interviews.

November of 1940, 74 Zip or Joy, out of 1531 interviews.

March of 1941, 63 Zip or Joy, out of 1687 interviews.

Mr. Austin: Based upon the figures from the Secretary of State and from the gallonage figures of the Standard Oil Company itself, as for its own volume, do you know how the volume of gasoline sold by Zip and Joy in Detroit compares with the volume of gasoline sold in Detroit by the Standard Oil Company; say, for 1940? Do you know it for that year?

2357 Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, that seems to be clearly a matter for cross-examination.

We recognize the right of counsel to test the foundation for the introduction of this exhibit but it is assumed, of course, that the cross-examination will be curtailed; in relation to the extent to which counsel goes in his examination now. I don't think he is allowed to go into purely cross-examination questions at this time, beyond the foundation of the exhibit.

2358 Mr. Austin: I don't want to. The only thing that suggested that question is the fact that the market position here, for Standard Oil, was shown on this Respondent's Exhibit 28, and I assume that means—well, what does it mean; that fourth line, I believe you would call it?

The Witness: That proportion of last time purchases that were Standard gasolines.

Mr. Austin: On the surveys?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: Oh, I see. Then, at a particular time here the figures 4½¢ a gallon—I guess it is over on the other side—percent of retail gasoline market; that is the position of Standard Oil Company, based upon your surveys, is it not; upon your actual figures?

Trial Examiner Bailinger: Which exhibit are you referring to?

Mr. Austin: Respondent's Exhibit 28, in the lower half; the solid line which, I believe, refers to the tabulation on the right-hand side.

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: That is based on the survey, as I understand it, and not upon your own gallonage figures?

The Witness: That is based upon the survey responses.

2359 Mr. Austin: So that it isn't necessarily the same as your own figures would be, compared with such other gallonage figures as you obtained from other companies?

The Witness: May I explain that you cannot get from any public source the market position in the reseller channel as distinct from the total consumption figure. This pertains to only reseller portion market. The State tax reports indicate the total consumption according to brands, as reported by the various marketers. It is impossible to split that according to channels of sales. There is no way that can be done.

Mr. Austin: That being true, then, why is there any reliability to this line here, on Respondent's Exhibit 27, for identification, which is supposed to be the volume of Sunny Service, Puritan Oil, and Charles E. Austin? Why isn't that subject to the same criticism, that that does not relate strictly to retail reselling?.

The Witness: That is the total sales of gasoline as reported by those companies as it is associated with the price differential maintained in the retail market. These distributors are primarily resale distributors, marketing primarily through resale outlets to consumers. They may have some direct distribution to the ultimate consumer, but their retail sales, primarily, reflect their total volume.

2360 Mr. Austin: You think to a greater extent than the Standard Oil Company retail reseller business would?

The Witness: I think so, yes.

Mr. Austin: Do you have any knowledge as to the amount of business that the sellers of Zip and Joy gasoline have, other than sales through retail gasoline stations?

The Witness: That is indicated in the State tax report where it is sold with the purchaser paying the tax. You see, the State tax reports are broken down and show the gasoline upon which the marketer reports and sells direct and pays the tax. It also shows, separately, sales of gasoline by that marketer in which the purchaser pays the tax.

Mr. Hanley: May I ask a question, your Honor, just while I think of it, on this subject?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge, Mr. Boatwright, whether it is or is not a fact that almost the entire sales of the Zip and Joy gasoline are to consumer accounts at service stations; that is, resales at service stations, rather than to commercial consumers?

A. I know that most of our sales are through their reseller channels.

Mr. Austin: I think that's all I have, your Honor.

2361 Mr. Hanley: I think, if your Honor please, that there was an offer made of the Exhibits Nos. 27 and 28, which inspired this examination by the counsel, and we have that offer pending on the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I was in doubt whether you had furnished the greater mechanical basis for your Exhibit 27 than existed at the time that I reserved my ruling on that.

Mr. Hanley: Oh, yes. I went into it further, if your Honor please. We went into it, into the details of how many interviews were had and when they were had and how they were performed. That evidence, I think, went in under your Honor's suggestion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I was under the impression that was in at the time you tendered 27.

Mr. Hanley: It may have been, your Honor, but I am sure it is in now and I will re-tender the offer of Exhibits 27 and 28.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled and Respondent's Exhibit 27 and 28 are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 27 and 28," were received in evidence.)

2362 Mr. Hanley: May I suggest these next documents be marked Respondent's Exhibits 29-A, 29-B, and 29-C? They are of the same character, and it will help to identify them if we just give them letters with the same number.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the documents Respondent's Exhibits 29-A, 29-B, and 29-C.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 29-A, 29-B, 29-C.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, Mr. Boatwright, inviting your attention to Exhibit 28, which has been under lengthy discussion here, and which refers to the City of Detroit, I now call your attention to three exhibits denominated Respondent's Exhibits 29-A, 29-B, and 29-C, and which appear to refer to the Cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul, as one unit; the City of Milwaukee, and the City of Chicago, and will ask you if those represent, in graph form, the same information that is represented on Exhibit 28 in respect of Detroit, the lower half of Exhibit 28, I should say?

A. These charts do represent the same type of analysis as revealed by the lower chart on Exhibit 28; for these respective cities.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: For the record, will you state the materiality of this line of testimony?

Mr. Hanley: Surely, your Honor. There has been some suggestion—more than a suggestion—it seems to me 2363 there has been a studied intention on the part of the Government to arbitrarily define what kind of gasoline the Respondent was in competition with.

We take this position, and assert that the Respondent is in competition with gasoline in the City of Detroit and elsewhere in its territory, irrespective of whether it may be arbitrarily, by some people, called unbranded or branded, or what have you. We are proving by these exhibits and by this witness that our volume of business is affected, not only in Detroit, but elsewhere in our territory, by the kind of competition that is offered by what the Government says is an off-brand and which the Government says, or is seeking to imply is a gasoline which is not in competition with us in the City of Detroit. Now, we know from our studies, and that's what we seek here to prove, that we are in competition with those gasolines and that it materially and financially affects our business, here and elsewhere. I am offering these three studies from other cities.

We have the studies in many cities, Judge, but I just thought I would give the Commission three other cities, here, just to point the objective. We could go on indefinitely, but we don't care to do that.

There is one other reason; and I thought that had been made clear from the outset, here: that in view of the existence of these competitive gasolines, all at a lower 2364 price, consistently, than any gasolines that our company offers for sale, that there can be no injury to competition by reason of any price differentials that our company gives, because the lowest price that we ever gave to anybody under any circumstances in Detroit was far higher than the actual retail sale price of these gasolines in the filling station market, so they are the real Defendant in this action, as we see it. They are the people who really determine what competition is in Detroit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any objection?

Mr. Austin: There is nothing pending. I think your Honor asked counsel to state the relevancy of certain papers there, that have not been offered yet.

Mr. Hanley: I am not sure I asked the qualifying question yet. I will.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Are these statements that have now been presented to you, Mr. Boatwright, Exhibits 29-A, 29-B, and 29-C, made up in the same way in relation to the respective cities which they represent as Exhibit 28 in respect of Detroit?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And from corresponding information?

A. They are, in response to both questions.

Mr. Hanley: I offer the exhibits.

2365 Mr. Austin: I object, if your Honor please, upon the ground that they are irrelevant and immaterial and relating to other cities. That they are outside of the Detroit area, which is the only area involved here, and I can't see that they could tend to prove anything that is relative with respect to the Detroit area.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the Examiner is of the opinion that that is a matter that should be passed on by the Commission. He overrules the objection and admits the documents as Respondent's Exhibits 29-A, 29-B, and 29-C.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 29-A, 29-B, and 29-C," were received in evidence.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will have a recess for five minutes.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

2366 Q. Mr. Boatwright, in connection with these several exhibits in your testimony the term "cut rate stations" has been used quite extensively, and I think it is quite clear on the record in relation to these exhibits in Detroit that you have been referring to Zip and Joy stations?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, in your judgment and experience what have you to say as to the effect of the operations of those stations in the matter of their proximity to outlets which deal in Standard Oil Company gasolines?

A. That has a very definite relationship.

Q. Just explain in detail to the Court what that effect is and how you know how that effect results?

A. Let me state first that there is no product that I know of of the ordinary consumer type of merchandise on which a price comparison of an individual with any shopping tendency can be made as is true of gasoline. Prices normally are posted, and rather than attempting to shop by making purchases you observe your prices as you drive by and make comparisons.

In 1938 I made a special study in the Detroit area in the month of July. At that time there were some stations selling either Joy or Zip at 8 for $1, and other stations selling
Joy or Zip 7 for $1. I took 31 of our stations that 2367 were not located on traffic arteries or in the trading zones of the particular outlets of either Joy or Zip—in other words, geographically and according to the traffic flow they were isolated as well as it is possible to isolate a mobile market. Our losses at these 31 stations over the corresponding first six months of 1937 was ~~slightly~~ in excess of 10 per cent.

Mr. Austin: Pardon me. I think you ought to explain what you mean by "our losses."

The Witness: The losses of the Standard Oil Company dealers.

A. (Continuing.) Was slightly in excess of 10 per cent. Where they were not in the immediate trading area of the Joy and Zip outlets.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You say 10 per cent?

The Witness: 10 per cent.

Mr. Austin: I don't want to ~~interrupt~~, Judge, but I don't know what he is talking about as to 10 per cent of what when he is talking about loss. Is it money, gallons, or what?

The Witness: I stated it was a 10 per cent loss over the corresponding first six months of the preceding year.

Mr. Austin: Loss in gallonage?

The Witness: I am referring to gallonage, yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: I see.

2368 Mr. Hanley: Your Honor, we are just undertaking to show here what the influence of these so-called cut rate stations are as they have been defined by the witness. Isn't that clear?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I so understood from your question.

Mr. Hanley: That is the purpose of the question.

A. (Continuing.) I then took a second group of Standard Oil dealer outlets in the trading vicinity, or on traffic arteries passing Joy and Zip outlets which were posting prices of 8 for $1.00; the losses of sales for the first six months of 1938 at this second group of Standard dealers as compared with the first six months of the preceding year was 17 per cent plus; it was between 17 and 18, but it was better than 17.

I then took a third sample of Standard stations located in the trading areas or on traffic arteries passing Joy and Zip stations where they were posting prices of 9 for $1.00. Our losses through this third group of Standard dealers for the first six months of 1938 as compared with the corresponding period of the preceding year on gasoline was 20.8 per cent.

I think this indicates rather clearly that the proximity of the competitive outlet has a definite influence upon the diversion of gallonage from one supplier to the second supplier.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. You made some reference to the fact that there 2369 was a great facility in shopping for gasoline as compared to other commodities. I don't think that is explained as fully as it should be. Mr. Boatwright, just what do you mean by that?

A. Perhaps I can best illustrate it by purchasing habits; let us say my wife—if she wants to buy food for our table, and she compares canned peas, she must go into a store, observe the prices on different brands of peas, or any other commodity that she may wish, and her price comparison on that commodity involves both time and effort on her part. In the gasoline market, likewise, representing a product for consumption, wherein purchases are made with a relatively high degree of repetition, the comparison involves little time and little effort as prices are posted prominently and large enough in front of the station so the operator of that outlet will hope that the passerby can easily detect the price differences and compare it with other stations on the same artery. It is, perhaps, the commodity in which price comparisons are made with the greatest facility of any ordinary consumption commodity.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, what is your judgment and opinion in respect to this matter: Is there a point between the cost of gasoline and the sale price of gasoline—that is the spread for the margin, or whatever you call it—beyond which a marketer cannot go without inviting competition and cut prices?

2370 Do I make that clear, Mr. Boatwright?

A. Yes, I think so. May I rephrase slightly your question as I understand it?

Q. Surely.

A. Is the margin over your accepted tank car spot market in a given market, having varying widths, a factor in determining the flow of gasoline purchases among the varying brands?

Q. Yes.

A. If that is your question, the answer is yes, definitely.

Q. Now, you referred to—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you care to elaborate on your answer?

The Witness: I shall be glad to.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I would like to have you do it.

A. When the margin of gasoline, margin on gasoline, reaches certain levels—

Mr. Austin: Pardon me, Mr. Boatwright. Are you talking about the manufacturer's margin, the jobber's margin, or the retailer's margin?

The Witness: I am talking about the margin between the price to the consumer as maintained by the reseller on one side, and the recognized spot market on the other.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you refer to as the spot market?

2371 The Witness: The accepted tank car market by given communities.

As that margin widens the distribution of gasoline attracts capital, which, in turn, attracts additional distributing facilities. These additional distributive facilities, to acquire volume, will offer an incentive to the consumers. The change of your pattern of distribution in a given market may take a year in its completion, but it is a change that will take place in that market whenever your gross margin between these two price levels reaches a point sufficient to attract added capital into the distribution of petroleum products. I should state that that margin required to acquire capital will vary among different metropolitan areas; will likewise vary according to different economic conditions in different areas; and will vary according to the degree of satiation that there is in that market of the particular class of cut price distributors. But in each market there is some level at a given time in which this margin becomes an effective means of inviting competition. And you will notice I limited that to a time. It tends to vary in a given market from time to time also.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I don't wish to limit you to any figure unless you have one in mind, Mr. Boatwright, but referring you now to tank wagon prices as distinguished from tank car 2372 prices, does there come a time when the difference between the tank wagon price to a reseller of gasoline and his price to the public reaches some degree when that spread invites competition and cut prices?

A. Oh yes. It works exactly the same as I have just illustrated, the only difference is you are taking one segment of your price function.

Q. I am taking the tank wagon and reseller.

A. It works the same. You have taken a segment of your total price structure, while I took a slightly broader segment. The principles are exactly the same.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, did you yourself ever work in a service station?

A. I did.

Q. And garage?

A. I did.

2373 Q. What have been your experiences in that?

A. Well, while I was in college I spent almost four years in a combination service station and garage, having drive-in facilities, and I was a night attendant at this outlet while I was going to school.

Q. So you have had actual experience on the driveway of these service stations?

A. I have.

Q. You might tell us where that occurred, Mr. Boatwright?

A. That was at Liberty, Missouri, which is about 15 miles northeast of Kansas City.

Q. Now, in the course of your work in the Federal Trade Commission, and more particularly in the Standard Oil Company, have you had experience with cost accounting?

A. I have.

Q. Has that experience been an extensive one?

A. It has been particularly extensive and continuous in the Standard Oil Company.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact that the conclusions which your department reaches, and for which you are responsible, in matters of cost accounting, form the basis for decisions by the management of the Standard Oil Company, based upon which decisions they risk a substantial amount of capital every year?

A. That is correct.

2374 Q. Do you know Herbert F. Taggart, or do you know of him?

A. I do not know him personally. I know of him.

Q. Do you know who he is?

A. I do.

Q. Have you read Exhibit 76 in this case, which I think is a survey of costs prepared by Mr. Taggart on Wayne County?

A. I have read two surveys by Professor Taggart; one being Wayne County, and one being, as I recall, a supplement, or part thereof, limited to Detroit.

Q. Just to keep the record straight, I think the Wayne County survey is Exhibit No. 76 in evidence, Mr. Boatwright, and the other one which has to do with Detroit proper—do you remember such a survey?

A. I do.

Q. —is Respondent's Exhibit No. 2, for identification.

A. I have read both of them.

Q. Have you read both of them?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you read a copy of the questionnaire which was prepared by Mr. Taggart?

A. I have.

Q. And is it your understanding that that is the questionnaire upon which he based his conclusions in his two surveys?

2375 A. It is.

Q. Have you read all of the testimony of Dr. Taggart given in this proceeding?

A. I have.

Q. You have given us some indication of the type of work that your department does in making surveys; is this survey that was made by Dr. Taggart of a general character such as your department is continuously making?

A. We have made several studies that would be closely related to this type of study that Dr. Taggart has made. To amplify, we have studied profits of reseller outlets; we have studied expenses; we have studied sources of profits by products, and we have studied especially under company operation, we have made detailed and exhaustive studies of profits and expenses by sizes of reseller outlets.

Q. Now, have you studied carefully the analysis made by Dr. Taggart as reflected by his surveys and by his testimony?

A. I have.

Q. Based upon your experience, what have you to say as to the propriety of the procedure which Dr. Taggart followed in that survey?

A. There are several points on which the conduct of such a study, if made by my department, would have differed widely from the procedure followed by Professor Taggart.

2376 Q. When you say "as made by my department", Mr. Boatwright, do you mean by that that you think there are different approaches which should have been made?

A. I do.

Q. From the standpoint of an economist?

A. Yes, definitely.

Q. Now, directing your attention primarily to the sources of information upon which Dr. Taggart based his conclusions, namely, the service station operators, in your view are there or are there not any probable defects or possibilities of lack of reliability in those sources from the standpoint of those reported?

A. Well, I would say, first, that I would question whether the reports as submitted came from an unbiased source.

Q. Well, now, will you just amplify that, Mr. Boatwright. Tell us what you mean by that.

A. Yes. One of the first precautions in making any survey such as those I have described in the consumer survey, or anything else, is to insure an unbiased source of your data. I noticed in the explanation of the study, and in the testimony submitted by Professor Taggart, that he was employed by the dealer associations his questionnaires were distributed by individuals furnished by the dealer association; they were delivered in person by these 2377 individuals; the explanation of the questionnaire was first given to individuals furnished by the association, and, in turn, was explained to the individuals submitting the answers to the questionnaires by individuals secured or furnished by the association; therefore—

Q. By the use of the word "association," are you referring to the Michigan Retail Dealers Association?

A. I am, sir.

Q. Proceed.

A. Therefore, had there been any bias or had there been any margin wherein an estimate or a bias could have existed in the data, because there are places in the questionnaire where Professor Taggart asked the respondents in case they didn't have the exact amount of sales to calculate it based on gallonage sold at differen price levels and so forth. It leaves room in the completion of the questionnaire for bias to exist. This could have been checked against very easily.

Q. Explain how it could have been protected.

A. Had Professor Taggart, upon the receipt of his questionnaires, classified his results according to membership or non-membership in the association, and had the results of his cost per gallon calculated by individual outlets and then classified according to dealer membership showed one level of cost as compared with another 2378 level of cost, when the calculations were classified upon the basis of non membership, he would have had his first inkling as to the lack of reliability or the presence of any bias in his data.

Q. Now, in your analysis of his reports and of his testimony, did you find any place where he had taken any such precautions as you suggest?

A. I found no such place. In fact, I tried to find from the responses received whether they were wholly from or largely from association members. I can find no such evidence.

Q. Now, it appears from the evidence that Dr. Taggart based his findings on figures which he gleaned covering the month of May, 1938. In your studies, as a general rule, do you attempt to determine representative costs based on a period limited to only one month?

A. We do not.

Q. Why not?

A. It is so difficult to find a normal or representative month in the petroleum industry. Especially in a restricted locality. We prefer to take a longer time period, and if necessary, a smaller sample to determine the representative condition.

Q. Do you mean by that, Mr. Boatwright, that you would regard it as more authentic to have a small 2379 sample over a long period of time than a large sample over a short period of time?

A. I do, if the proper precautions are taken to insure that your small sample represents a cross section of your population that you are studying.

Q. Now, referring you specifically to the month of May, 1938, are there any features about that month that occur to you as making it an inappropriate month for basing a cost study?

A. It was an unfortunate month to select.

Q. Will you please just go ahead in your own way, Mr. Boatwright, and tell us why you think that?

A. In the first place, it was a month in which there was an abnormal amount of precipitation; precipitation influences retail sales; that is particularly true when that precipitation or threatening weather conditions exist on week ends, as it did in May of 1938.

Secondly, it was a month in which industrial conditions in the Detroit area were at a very low ebb. That is indicated in several ways:

First, it is indicated by automobile productions as reported by the Federal Reserve Bank.

Secondly, it is indicated by bank debits. If we tabulate bank debits for the Detroit Metropolitan area, and for the rest of the State of Michigan, and in the third 2380 classification for the country as a whole, the bank debits in Detroit reached a lower index in the year 1938 than did the bank debits for the rest of the state, and did the bank debits for the rest of the United States.

Nextly, I would say that the month of May, coming after the majority of the spring change-over period is a month in which gasoline sales as a percentage of total sales are not representative of conditions throughout the year. The usual tendency in May is, of the total receipts from the operation of the outlet during that month, is that gasoline tends to represent a higher proportion of the total than it does in many other months during the year. And it is higher than the average months of the year.

Q. Now, in respect of the average price of gasoline sold per gallon, do you recall what the findings of Dr. Taggart were?

A. Yes. 18.16 per gallon.

Q. And do you know what the average price was, in fact, in the City of Detroit during that period?

A. I know that the average price of gasoline in the City of Detroit during that period on Standard gasolines was 18.2. The overall average price on all grades of gasoline in the Detroit area at that time was 17.1.

Q. Now, on the basis of Dr. Taggart's finding of the sale price of gasoline being 18.16 as against the actual 2381 price as you stated over all of 17.1, what would be the general effect of that difference in respect of the conclusions at which Dr. Taggart arrived in his survey?

A. It leads me to two thoughts:

First, that if Dr. Taggart's study indicated a price of 18.16, it would appear that a sample was made up largely of stations distributing so-called major gasolines, because the price so reported is almost identical with the price reported by Standard Oil Company customers in Detroit at the same time.

Secondly, if the price of 18.16 was high, relative to the actual price prevailing in the market, when he allocated his costs on the basis of the percentage of gasoline realization to total, his 80.99% which he used in the Wayne County study is high, because of that higher price reported.

Q. Now, with—would the same influence be apparent in his factor of 80.75 used in the City of Detroit survey?

A. Yes, the same principle exactly would apply.—

Q. Am I right about that?

A. 80.75 in Detroit, and 80.99 in the Wayne County study.

Q. What is your judgment, Mr. Boatwright, as to whether or not there was a fair inclusion of all types of price stations in the City of Detroit in view of the fact that Dr. Taggart reached an average price of 18.16¢ per gallon?

2382 A. In the absence of the data of his actual work sheets, I could conclude nothing other than the suspicion that the reports were submitted primarily by the representatives of the major companies' products.

Q. Doesn't that just mathematically follow from the fact that the average price as you found it from a consumer's survey was 17.1¢?

A. It does.

Q. Now, if you know, tell us what the relation was as between 1938 in the matter of gasoline consumption in the State of Michigan, in relation to the year 1937 and the year 1939.

A. 1938 gasoline consumption in the State of Michigan dropped 5.1%, as I recall the figure, over the year of 1937. Gasoline consumption in 1939 was 8.6% higher than it was in 1938. I may be wrong by a tenth of a percent, but those are approximately the magnitudes.

Q. Now, assuming that the exigencies of the situation required that Dr. Taggart use the short time period in which to make his determination, and that he found it advisable to use the month of May, are there any tests or checks that he could have introduced into his survey to indicate whether or not the costs as he found them or as calculated on the basis of the reports for that month were representative fairly of a longer time period?

2383 A. Yes, there are several checks he could have made. He stated that some of the reporting stations maintained records for the preceding year. He could have checked his calculated cost for this group of stations for one month as against the cost which prevailed at these identical stations for the preceding year. Had his costs for the one month corresponded exactly with the costs for the preceding year at this sample within a sample, he would have felt a greater justification in the representativeness of his cost. Had it differed widely, I believe that the student normally would inquire as to the cause of that difference. Another thing that he could have done, having used a short time period of which he recognized limitations, he could easily have checked the results tabulated by his analysis with several other published reports. I think of the report on Allen County, Indiana; I think of the Profit Standards for Service Station Operation established by the National Petroleum News, almost coincidental with that study; I think of the testimony on costs submitted to the investigating body when they were establishing the codes; I think of the annual reports submitted each year by Dun & Bradstreet on service station or filling station operation; and here are others which have occurred in the trade press from time to time, the names of all of which I do not recall.

Now, that would have been a second general class-2384 ification of checks which he could have introduced to insure the representativeness of his sample.

2385 A third thing which he could have done was to have studied the economic conditions in the market for which his analysis was intended to purport cost conditions as representative of a longer period of time; to see whether the conditions in that market were normal as to economic income, industrial activity, bank debits, factory payrolls, temperature and weather conditions, and all of the ordinary precautions relative to the reliability of the time period used in his analysis.

Q. Were you able to find any indication in your analysis of either of the reports prepared by Dr. Taggart or in his testimony that he had taken any of these precautions?

A. As I recall there were only two precautions that were mentioned in his evaluation of the month of May. He pointed out that the month of May was larger in terms of gallonage than was the average monthly sales during the first five months of the year. That is true, and that occurs normally year after year. It is indicative, however, of the relative significance of May on an annual basis, because that is usually merely a seasonal influence.

Secondly, he pointed out that May of the preceding years at those stations which had maintained books on an annual basis represented a certain proportion of the annual business. He did not inquire as to whether the month of May in 1937 was representative, if his inquiry is properly 2386 portrayed in his report.

Q. And is there anything in his report to advise anyone as to whether or not it is properly portrayed?

A. No, there is not.

Q. Assuming that you were making a survey, Mr. Boatwright, in an effort to determine a fact as Dr. Taggart was attempting to determine it, would you have followed a similar procedure of allocating costs? And if not, why not?

A. We would not.

In studies that we have made of a similar nature those items of expense which can be charged direct to given services are as a rule, so charged; thus, if you have a super station in which you have a boy working on the wash rack, and his full time is devoted to wash rack activities, we would not have included that in the lump sum to be allocated on a ratio basis, but would have charged it against the service of washing. Having charged direct as much of the total expenditures of operating the outlet as possible, we would then have pro rated the residual amount among the different products for services on some basis as logical as we could determine. In some such studies a time analysis has proven to be desirable. In other such analyses it has been necessary to use the total realization. In a comparatively few cases when neither the time analysis or the total realization seemed adequate we have used a gross margin basis of allocation among products. In using 2387 the gross realization we exclude the tax feature.

Q. Now, you recall, I assume, Mr. Boatwright, that Dr. Taggart in his computations included in the total revenues of gasoline sold the excise and sales tax, which amounted to a State tax of 3¢ a gallon, a Federal tax of 1¢ a gallon, and an amount equal to 3 per cent of the sales price as a State sales tax. Having in mind those considerations, and that the use of the total gasoline revenue was the basis for Dr. Taggart's cost factor, what have you to say as to the influence that the inclusion of the taxes referred to would have as weighting his cost factor?

A. The inclusion of the tax factors would tend to increase the proportion of gross realization represented by gasoline sales. As that ratio increases, and the application of that ratio on to total expense, it would tend to increase the amount of the total expense chargeable to the distribution of gasoline. As you increase that proportion of the total chargeable to gasoline, dividing it by your gallonage, it would tend to increase the cost.

Q. As an economist, Mr. Boatwright, are you able to think of any reason or justification for including taxes in the gasoline revenues when such revenues were used as Dr. Taggart used them to form a basis of arriving at a cost percentage or factor?

A. No, I cannot. And that struck me as quite surprising. Because a tax of an excise tax nature is usually 2388 a part of price upon which the merchant does not make a mark up, does not anticipate an added profit, and does not receive a compensation for its collection. It is in reality merely a part of the money which passes through his hands for State and Governmental purposes.

Q. Did you find from your analysis of Professor Taggart's work that that part of the service station revenues that he employed, but which did not originate from the sale of gasoline, was weighted with taxes of any kind?

A. That is not apparent in either his study of Detroit or of Wayne County. It came out in his testimony that he had included the excise taxes: You cannot find, from the study itself, whether he did or did not. The only way that could be determined would be from the actual questionnaires and the questions and responses. He did, however, state in his testimony he did not exclude excise State and Federal taxes.

Q. As to all commodities and services other than gasoline, would there have been in May, 1938, within your knowledge, any tax other than an excise tax of 1¢ a gallon on lubricating oil and 3 per cent of the sales price of commodities as a State sales tax?

A. You are wrong on your tax on lubricating oil. The tax on lubricating oil is 4¢ a gallon. It is a cent a quart.

Now your question was whether any other excise taxes other than on gasoline and motor oils?

2389 Q. That's right.

A. And the 3 per cent sales tax.

Q. Yes, which, as I understand, applied to commodities and not to services. Am I right about that?

A. That is my understanding, yes, sir.

No, I know of no other excise tax other than the gasoline and the motor oil taxes.

Q. So it is true, is it not, Mr. Boatwright, that in Dr. Taggart's computations he had, on the one hand, gasoline revenues which included 3¢ State excise tax and 1¢ Federal excise tax and 3 per cent Sales tax, based on the sale price?

A. That is correct.

Q. On the other hand he had a sum of money resulting from all other revenues that accrued to the station, which included no taxes except 4¢ a gallon excise on lubricating oil and 3 per cent sales tax on commodities sold, which does not apply to services rendered. Is that right?

A. That is true. I think that there was an excise tax on tires, at that time, to the exact extent of which I don't know, but there was a small excise tax on tires. I think that was introduced prior to May 30, 1938. I don't know the exact date of its introduction.

Q. Now without consideration of any other factors at all about Professor Taggart's computations, but with reference only to this question of tax inclusion; In your 2390 judgment would it have materially affected his conclusions, had he excluded taxes from his revenues for gasoline?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor, upon the ground that it is indefinite. The witness should be asked to state—in the event that he does know the answer, he should know how much. I think "materially" is a conclusion, there.

Mr. Hanley: He made them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

A. It would have a material influence on the resultant per gallon cost, as reported.

Q. After your reading of Dr. Taggart's testimony and his report, have you been able to determine, Mr. Boatwright, that there was any classification of varying types of gasoline outlets given any consideration by that survey?

A. He didn't report in his study a classification by types of outlets; no, sir.

Q. Well, in your judgment what effect would the overweight of a number of large super service stations have on the cost figure obtained by Dr. Taggart?

A. If his sample represented a higher proportion of so-called super service stations then existent in the entire market, his resultant analysis would have shown a cost figure on a per gallon basis higher than would be rep-2391 resentative of conditions if representing a true cross section of the market.

Q. Now assuming that an excessive number of large service stations had been included. Would you expect that the cost of operation charged to gasoline would be increased?

A. Yes, sir. By "large", there, you are referring to the super service station type, as distinct from large gallonage?

Q. Yes, sir. Is there anyway that you can tell or, in your judgment, any economist could tell, from a review of Dr. Taggart's surveys, or his testimony, how many of any particular types of outlets he used?

A. It cannot be determined.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What is the distinction between a super-service station and an ordinary service station?

The Witness: In the parlance of the trade—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any line of demarcation?

The Witness: The super service station is usually regarded as the so-called one-stop outlet, performing all of the functions of washing, greasing, and selling gasolines and motor oils; tires, tubes, batteries, accessories, and pretty generally conforming to the one-stop idea of a motorist's needs. We differentiate that, normally, from what we might regard, first, as a neighborhood station.

Now the neighborhood station may not perform the 2392 washing part. It may have a greasing rack. It may sell tires, tubes, batteries, motor oils, accessories, and so forth, but it does not serve all the motorist's needs.

The third broad classification is the highway or transit station, where the operator depends largely upon transit business and it is a drive-in and drive-out type of activity with little of the elaborate service that you can get at the so-called super service station.

Does that clarify the differentiation?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes, but I wonder how many stations there are that have a fairly complete service?

The Witness: There are many in the City of Detroit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Roughly, could you give me an approximation?

The Witness: I am sorry. I could not. I couldn't do that on any town unless I had a survey on something I had completed or worked out.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Giving consideration, Mr. Boatwright, to these different types of outlets, would you, had you been making a survey of this kind, have used any constant ratio as to all outlets in reference to allocating costs?

A. No, we would not.

Q. And just tell the court why you wouldn't have done it?

A. The reason is largely explained in the answers as given.

2393 Your expense at different types of outlet are susceptible to a classification according to product, of service, to a greater extent in one type of outlet than another. Therefore, the expenses of a direct nature would have been classified and then we would have determined the ratios applicable for the distribution of residual amounts, according to classes or types of outlet. That is, if we were classifying all in one classification, would be the super service type. In that we would charge all direct, we could. Those expenses that we could not charge direct; if they were using net realization for our factory and allocating other costs; we would determine a ratio for that class of stations.

Then we would determine a ratio for the parking gasoline sales type. Then we would have to determine another type for gasoline, groceries, and miscellaneous type.

Another one for the transit station, and so on.

Q. Do you recall an item employed by Dr. Taggart of 2 per cent charge-off for bad debts?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have you to say as to the propriety of the use of 2 per cent as a bad debt charge-off in the service station business, based on your experience with that business?

A. It is too high.

Q. What do you think is a proper percentage?

A. ½ of 1 per cent.

2394 Q. Do you usually charge interest on investment in an analysis of cost?

A. No, unless we are figuring on a contemplated investment. As long as the capital still retains the degree of fluidity, as a bank account or capital that is not invested in some fixed type of investment, we normally regard interest, there, as a cost to determine the allocation of capital funds.

However, once capital is invested in equipment of a fixed nature, we do not normally charge interest on investment. I think that is the more frequent manner of preparing operating statement commonly accepted.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When you say "we," are you referring to the practice of the Standard Oil Company?

The Witness: To the practice of the Standard Oil Company and to the cost analysis work which we do in my department.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you do any work except for the Standard Oil Company?

The Witness: We do not.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. That's a matter on which there is disagreement, is there not, Mr. Boatwright, among accountants?

A. Yes, there is disagreement among both accountants and economists on that question. You can find both practices followed.

2395 Q. Suppose you were to include a cost of that type. Upon what basis would you make the calculation?

A. If I were to include interest on investment, my interest charge would be against the depreciated book value of the properties, or if I had a reasonable impartial or fair appraisal, I might base the calculation on that. You can find illustrations where both practices have been followed.

Q. Do you have any objection, as a cost accountant, to including interest as a cost based on original investment? If you do, please explain.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I don't think this witness has been qualified to answer questions as a cost accountant. At least, I would like to object to any such questions unless I could ask him a few questions along that line.

Mr. Hanley: I would be glad to have you.

Mr. Austin: Probably he is, but I think we should have it on the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may examine him.

Mr. Austin: Are you a certified public accountant, Mr. Boatwright?

The Witness: I am not.

Mr. Austin: You are not?

The Witness: I am not.

Mr. Austin: At the outset of your testimony you told us something about your education. I think you went 2396 to the University of Kansas.

The Witness: I did.

Mr. Austin: Did you study accounting at the University of Kansas?

The Witness: I did not.

Mr. Austin: Did you study accounting at the American University?

The Witness: I did not.

Mr. Austin: Have you ever taken a course in cost accounting?

The Witness: No, sir, I have never taken a course in cost accounting.

Mr. Austin: In what subject did you obtain your doctor's degree at Northwestern?

The Witness: The field of economics and statistics.

Mr. Austin: Have you ever made a study of production cost accounting?

The Witness: Have I ever—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you mean by production cost accounting, may I inquire, please?

Mr. Austin: I think the witness ought to be able to tell us that.

Mr. Hanley: Suppose you tell us. You asked the question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you understand what 2397 he means, Mr. Witness?

The Witness: There are so many phrases used. They refer to distribution cost accounting, cost accounting generally, and so forth. I am not sure what the attorney has in mind.

Mr. Austin: Can you answer the question as to whether you ever studied production cost accounting as a subject?

The Witness: I have never taken a formal college course in production cost accounting.

Mr. Austin: You said that, and that included, I presume, neither did you in distribution cost accounting.

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: Can you tell me, Mr. Boatwright, when have you been employed as a cost accountant, or have you ever been so employed.

The Witness: That is one of my regular responsibilities at the present time.

Mr. Austin: When did you start working on cost accounting?

The Witness: It was about 1933, when I began looking into cost accounting, as far as the Standard Oil Company is concerned.

Prior to that I have read many books that discussed problems in cost accounting and problems in other 2398 accounting not having to do with the costing processes; while associated with the University.

Mr. Austin: Can you tell me some of the treatises that you have read on distribution cost accounting?

Mr. Hanley: Judge, I don't know that I have any objection to that question beyond the fact that it seems it is just an encumbrance on the record. This man is certainly a cost accountant. To try and find out now what books he read years ago just seems to burdening us with just an unusual and unfair burden.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, I don't know the importance of it, but if counsel desires to pursue this line of inquiry, I take it he is entitled to it.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, the Respondent now objects to any further questioning on the part of counsel for the Government:

First, that this is not cross examination. That the witness is on direct examination, and the witness was merely asked a question which had to do with a cost accounting practice. The witness has been qualified as a cost accountant and an economist.

It is not understood by the Respondent that in order to defend itself before the Federal Trade Commission on a matter of costs, that its employees must necessarily 2399 have had a formal education in cost accounting or any other kind of accounting.

This witness has testified that the results of his cost accounting are acted upon by this Respondent to the extent that this Respondent risks vast sums of money every year on the basis of his judgment, and it just amounts to a denial of common justice, your Honor, when there is an attempt made to disqualify testimony on his part because he may not have gone to school as an accountant.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, we haven't come to the point as to whether or not the witness may testify—

Mr. Hanley: That's what this is all pointed to, and I don't like to have this witness subjected to this kind of an examination.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

The Witness: Would you read the question?

(The last question by Mr. Austin was read.)

The Witness: I can't give a complete list. I can enumerate some. I have read Professor Finney's, at Northwestern; David Himmelbau's work; Gillespie's Treatise on Cost Accounting. I have read Professor Taggart's book on that subject. There is a professor at the University of Minnesota that has written and treated particularly with 2400 distribution cost accounting. I am sorry I can't recall his name at the present moment, but he is a capable student on the question also.

Mr. Austin: Do all of those deal with distribution cost accounting or simply cost accounting, generally?

The Witness: Not necessarily. May I also add to the list Mr. Clark's book on the "Economics of Overhead Costs," which I think is recognized among both economists and accountants as a classic in the field.

Mr. Hanley: That is the Professor Clark who testified here some days ago, is it not?

The Witness: No, it is not. He is at Columbia University. This is Professor of Economics at Columbia University. J. M. Clark's "Economics of Overhead Costs."

Mr. Austin: I understood you to say just now these books you just referred to are not limited to distribution cost accounting?

The Witness: They are not limited to that subject, no.

Mr. Austin: Do you know whether—how about Professor Taggart's book?

The Witness: Taggart's book, Gillespie's book, and the professor at the University of Minnesota are the three having to do primarily with distribution costs. I am 2401 sorry I can't give you his name at the moment.

Mr. Austin: When did you first begin to work at cost accounting in the course of your business or profession?

The Witness: When did I start to work as a cost accountant?

Mr. Austin: Yes, when were you first employed as a cost accountant?

The Witness: I was employed as an economist on September 6, 1932. The first study that I undertook with the Standard Oil Company involved a complete break-down of costs. That was in the fall of 1932 and spring of 1933.

Mr. Austin: Do you understand the words "economist" and "accountant" to be synonymous?

The Witness: Not at all.

Mr. Hanley: That is objected to, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness is fully able to take care of himself.

Mr. Austin: I will rephrase that. Is an economist, necessarily, an accountant?

The Witness: Not necessarily.

Mr. Austin: That was the question I was asking.

And since that time, to what extent have you been employed, or have you employed your time with the Standard Oil Company as a cost accountant, distinguishing there between cost accounting, as such, and general advice 2402 and supervision as an economist?

Mr. Hanley: If there is any distinction.

Mr. Austin: Well, I want to lay the basis for it.

The Witness: I think the testimony I offered this morning bears on that subject. I stated that one of the six principal classifications of my duties had to do with the preparation of an analysis of profits and expenses by products, by sales divisions, and by individual channels of distribution. These studies covered the principal products distributed by the Standard Oil Company; are prepared once a year, and are submitted to this group of gentlemen that I enumerated this morning under the heading of the Sales Research Committee.

In addition to that, there is scarcely a study that we undertake that does not involve or bear directly upon some cost analysis, be it the introduction of a new product, or be it the changed method of distribution of a product, or be it some question of reorganization of a subsidiary company. All of these subjects have their cost element in anything that we do touching upon possibilities of improving profit. They all bear on that subject.

Mr. Austin: How many men do you have under you in your department?

The Witness: That was testified to this morning as varying, according to the flow of assignments on our 2403 docket. Our normal personnel covers between 17 and 20.

Mr. Austin: Are any of those men certified public accountants?

The Witness: None.

Mr. Hanley: Is this all on the one question that counsel asked on direct examination?

Mr. Austin: Yes. Well, isn't it a fair assumption, Judge, that you were going to ask this witness' opinion as an accountant on many other questions?

Mr. Hanley: I am going to. He is a cost accountant, and I am going to put in costs by him. If you have any notion that he doesn't know about costs, I think he will educate you tomorrow. This seems to be cross examination, Judge.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I realize it is probably broader than counsel would be entitled to, but I also have an idea that the same question will arise frequently, and I propose to let counsel exhaust himself at this time.

Mr. Austin: You referred this morning, Mr. Boatwright, to the general accounting department in Chicago of the Standard Oil Company.

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: That is not your department, is it?

The Witness: It is not.

2404 Mr. Austin: Is that department in charge of the cost accounting for the company?

The Witness: We have several accounting departments. I think my reference this morning had to do with the general accounting department in the sales department. We have a so-called general books department, which is directly under the comptroller. We have a manufacturing accounting department. We have a sales accounting department.

Mr. Austin: That's your department?

The Witness: No. My department is the sales research department.

Mr. Austin: Oh, yes.

The Witness: Now, no one of these have information of the overall nature of the entire company. Thus the sales accounting department does not know product cost.

The manufacturing accounting department does not know sales costs.

The comptroller, or the general books, takes the results of these two departments and puts them together.

My department has access to the information of the three departments, and we do make these analyses continuously and present them to the sales research steering committee.

2405 Mr. Austin: As I understand it, then, you have access to the work of these other departments, but does your department make any determinations, itself, of costs?

The Witness: Many, many of them; yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: In what field? That is, referring, now, to the company's business?

The Witness: In the field of marketing and distribution.

Mr. Austin: And how does your work in that respect differ from the work of the sales accounting department?

The Witness: The sales accounting department keeps a tabulation of the past expenditures and classifies them. It times results of our studies, which is classification of costs. In our work we go behind the various items of cost and break them down according to various functions performed, frequently to a greater extent than is maintained regularly by our sales accounting department. Our sales accounting department maintains a record which is primarily directed and intended for a purpose of expense control. It has proven itself to be an efficient form, and has enabled us to control various expense items. Our analysis frequently goes behind the itemization that the sales department employs, as to the component parts of these different items of cost.

2406 Mr. Austin: Is there anyone who now has supervision of your work as a cost accountant for the Standard Oil Company?

The Witness: I don't think so. It is a difficult question to answer. The Company is so big and there are so many items of cost entering into any decision that it is foolhardy for one man to attempt to reach a decision without consultation.

You recall this morning I set forth the line of my authority from my department to the Board of Directors. As such, we have complete freedom of movement among all the different departments, and we do consult. We counsel with, we secure their advice, and they consult, counsel with and discuss problems with us, but, as far as an individual having supervision over us; no, only as any of us exchange ideas among each other.

Mr. Austin: How long have you been at the head of the sales research department?

2407 The Witness: I think I stated the exact date in the testimony this morning—

Mr. Austin: I think you did, too.

The Witness: —as being November 16, 1937.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any further questions?

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, that's all I have on qualification of the witness and I submit that it is clear that the witness has never been employed as a cost accountant except in connection with his work with the Standard Oil Company. It appears he has worked on cost accounting for the Standard Oil Company for a number of years and the witness is not a certified public accountant and I think his work has been largely of a statistical nature and based upon the results obtained by cost accountants rather than on direct cost accounting work.

However, the record, I think, now shows pretty well what the witness' qualifications are and I would like to make an objection upon the record to the qualification of the witness to answer questions calling for his expert opinion as a cost accountant.

I make no objection to his answers and have made none, have made no objection to his answers as an expert economist, but I do not believe he has been shown qualified to testify as an expert cost accountant.

Mr. Hanley: Let the record show counsel for the 2468 Respondent is taken at a disadvantage—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner doesn't care to hear from counsel for the Respondents.

The objection is overruled.

Mr. Hanley: I haven't the vaguest idea, your Honor, what question I asked which precipitated this cross-examination and I was just about through with this examination, anyhow, and I wonder if we might recess until morning and I will start on the costs.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Hanley: I am just about to get into the question of costs. I am almost through with this line of examination.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Upon the motion for counsel for the Respondent, at 4:50 p.m. the hearing stands adjourned to be reconvened at 10:00 o'clock, April 29, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(Whereupon, at 4:50 p.m., April 28, 1941, the hearing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned, to be reconvened on April 29, 1941, at 10:00 a.m.)

2409 Room 859 Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan,
April 29, 1941.

Met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10 A. M.

Before:

Webster Ballinger, Trial Examiner.

Appearances:

Cyrus B. Austin, Esq., Attorney for the Federal Trade Commission.

Harold R. Hanley, Esq., 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and

Arthur J. Abbott, Esq., of the firm of Abbott, MacMahon, and Roberts, 2230 Buhl Building, Detroit, Michigan, on behalf of the Respondent.

2410 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

This is a reconvening at 10 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, April 29, 1941, in Room 856 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, of Docket 4389 in the case entitled Standard Oil Company.

The last hearing was held in Detroit, April 28, 1941.

The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

You may proceed.

JOHN W. BOATWRIGHT, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Hanley (Continued).

Q. Mr. Boatwright, at the last hearing I had asked you a question which precipitated a discussion relative to your qualifications.

Mr. Hanley: I think I had better withdraw that question, if your Honor please, and I will re-ask it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The question is withdrawn.

By Mr. Haney:

Q. Substantially, it was this: What would be your objection to including interest as a cost based on original investment? 2411

A. Why, there are two objections normally offered to that procedure. One objection has to do with the fact that frequently current values are absolutely unrelated to the original values of properties, and, secondly, when you are charging a depreciation on your original investment, if your properties are substantially depreciated, interest on investment, at whatsoever rate you may use, tends to double up.

To illustrate, if you are using a 5% depreciation rate, your building and properties having been in existence for 10 years; let us say, instead of using 5% you are, in reality, using approximately 10% as your ratio of interest on investment.

Q. In your various studies, when you attempt to determine the representative cost, do you always use a weighted average of the entire sample?

A. No, we do not.

Q. Just at that point—did Professor Taggart use the entire sample?

A. He used a weighted average cost on a per gallon basis, using the volume of the stations during the month of May as his weighting factor.

Q. Just explain what your criticism of that is, if you have one.

2412 A. Well, if we are seeking a truly representative cost of a particular class or type of business operations, we frequently exclude sport cases on either end of the series.

Q. Just tell the Court what you mean by a sport case.

A. A sport case is an observation that is so far removed from the centralizing tendency that it obviously is not representative of conditions in that particular class of business. To illustrate by an example: Professor Taggart shows his costs of marketing of gasoline above 22¢ a gallon. According to his own evidence the average price per gallon was 18.16. In such an illustration as that, there is obviously some condition, either in his processes of manipulation of costs, or in the conditions incident to the operation of the unit study that is not representative of conditions within the industry.

I think he would have been on substantially sounder ground had he eliminated the so-called sport cases from his analysis.

Q. Now, assuming, Mr. Boatwright, that you were charged with the responsibility of making a survey designed to determine what Professor Taggart is trying to determine, would you have attempted to check your results irrespective of what they might have been before presenting them or representing them as representative of distribution costs in any phase of the petroleum industry?

2413 A. Yes, I would have introduced every check that I could think of.

Q. Just explain to the Court what you mean by those checks. What would you have done?

A. I think, perhaps, one of the best illustrations of what we mean by introducing checks was given in the testimony of yesterday when I explained the different checks that we introduce in attempting to insure the price data secured by these surveys to represent truly the conditions in an area. In this particular case, had Professor Taggart made several checks, he could have insured the representativeness of his findings to a far greater extent than it is obvious that he did.

First, he could have checked his results against the various published studies of a similar nature. He could have checked his results against the books and records of those reporting outlets who had maintained a set of records over the preceding year. He could have taken his expense items and classified them according to functions performed, and then expressed each of his various expense items as a proportion of realization for comparison with such reports as are published by Dun & Bradstreet's or other similar reporting commercial organizations.

Now, had any expense, any particular expense been completely out of line with these published reports, he 2414 could have made inquiry as to the justification of the deviation that he had as compared with other studies in existence at that time.

Q. You have testified, Mr. Boatwright, that over a number of years last past you have had occasion to make in excess of 100 surveys involving the petroleum business and gasoline distribution. What has been your experience and observation in attempting to find accurate records of either expense and or profits maintained by service station operators?

A. Our particular experience in that respect has been quite unsatisfactory, in this respect: we have found it very difficult to find true records of profits or expenses at the retail outlets.

Q. Is your statement applicable to all types, sizes, and kinds of outlets?

A. Not equally so. Where records are found, they are usually found at the larger stations operated by the more alert merchandising men who gauge and judge their operations largely from a profit point of view. Such records as we find reflect the upper level of service station operations rather than the medium or the lower level.

Q. Now, if you feel willing to do so, I would be glad if you could give the Court some percentage figure, Mr. Boatwright, as to the number or proportion of outlets 2415 at which you find reasonably good records of the business.

A. We are currently engaged on a study wherein we are attempting to determine expenses and profits resulting from the distribution of a particular line of merchandise. Either one of the members of my department or myself has visited eight of our sales divisions, attempting to secure records of accomplishments by filling station operators. We are not finding 5% of the outlets with books on costs and profits.

Q. That is to say, Mr. Boatwright, that in your experience there are less than 5% of the outlets which keep accurate records; is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, giving consideration to all of these various things that you have developed in your testimony relative to what you think the witness Taggart should have done in his survey, what have you to say as to whether or not his results or conclusions as to the cost of selling gasoline in Detroit would have been higher or lower had he observed these precautions that you suggest are proper for an economist to observe?

A. His findings on the per gallon cost would have been below the 4.8 reported.

Q. Professor Taggart testified that as a result of his survey, he found that the spread or gross margin be-2416 tween the cost of gasoline and the average sale price of gasoline was 3.63¢ per gallon, and, as you know, he found that the cost or average cost of sale was 4.8¢ per gallon.

A. That's right.

Q. Now, as an economist, Mr. Boatwright, could that condition persist for any appreciable length of time and anybody remain in business?

A. Your question is extremely broad in the effect that you ask if anybody could. I would say that if that condition prevailed over a substantial period of time, service station operators, as a class, would have extreme difficulty in staying in business, because, as a rule, we do not find these individuals sufficiently fortified financially to operate at a loss over extended periods of time.

Q. Well, just mathematically, those figures demonstrate a loss, do they not, Mr. Boatwright?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, supposing that you add up a number of items of expense and arrive at a total and then supposing that you take 80.75% of that total. Mathematically and economically, Mr. Boatwright, do you not take 80.75% of every component part of that total?

A. It is the same thing.

Q. That's just mathematically true, is it not?

A. That is correct.

2417 Q. In the course of your duties, do you have occasion to analyze reports of organizations such as Dun & Bradstreet and other economic organizations which make reports on the condition of business in the United States?

A. We do.

Q. Do you learn anything from your current analysis of those reports relative to the comparative mortality in the service station business as compared with other businesses?

A. Yes. The service station business could not be classified as the most profitable independent business man type of operation. On the other hand, it usually falls in the upper one-half of the more profitable classifications of independent business operation.

Q. That fact could not persist, could it, Mr. Boatwright, unless service station operators, generally speaking, were able to and did sell their produce or their merchandise in some amount in excess of their cost of operating their business?

A. That condition could not exist unless that condition that you just described prevailed.

Q. Yesterday there were introduced some exhibits in relation to the effect of the Sunny Service, Puritan, and Charles E. Austin gasolines, on the competitive situation in Detroit.

2418 Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I would like to have a document marked for identification at this time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document Respondent's Exhibit 30, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 30.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I hand you now what has been marked Respondent's Exhibit 30, for identification, and will ask you what it represents, if you know.

A. The data represented on Respondent's Exhibit 30, represents the taxed gallonage of the Sunny Service, Puritan, and Charles E. Austin Companies, separately and in toto, by years, from 1935 through 1940. The only exception being that the 1940 annual amount is estimated upon the basis of the accomplishments during the first eleven months of the year.

Q. And from what source did you secure these figures, Mr. Boatwright?

A. From the State of Michigan tax reports.

Q. And do you understand that those are the same tax reports that were offered and received in evidence by the Government?

A. I do.

Mr. Hanley: We offer Exhibit No. 30 in evidence.

2419 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any objection?

Mr. Austin: I object to it on the ground it is irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I request counsel to state for the record the purpose of the exhibit.

Mr. Hanley: The purpose, your Honor, is simply to support further the factual proof that is indicated on the exhibits that were offered and received yesterday, namely, as to the extent of the business that was being done by these operators named in the City of Detroit, and the ratio or proportion of the total business that they do.

2420 Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I would like to ask—the exhibits yesterday don't show the percentage of the Standard Oil Company, and this shows the total gallonage of these companies; is the percentage of both the Standard Oil and these shown anywhere, or is the total volume of both shown anywhere?

Mr. Hanley: I may say this, your Honor, it is perhaps true what counsel says, I don't remember the exhibit well enough to be sure in my own mind, but I can assure your Honor this: That we propose to offer exhibits which will show the gallonage of each of these various types of operators, the total gallonage and the percentage of gallonage, so that the thing will all tie together in the final record in the case.

I just can't offer them all at once.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection is overruled and Respondent's Exhibit No. 30 for identification is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 30", was received in evidence.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, have you any knowledge relative to the amount of production and consumption of gasoline in the State of Michigan for the years 1937, 1938, and 2421 1940? If so, please state just what your information is.

A. That information is made available in the Minerals Year Book of the Department of Commerce. It has been made available for the years enumerated, and I think, as I stated yesterday, I could only recall one figure, namely the production in Michigan during the year of 1939, the last year that this information is available, the 1940 Minerals Year Book not as yet being in my hand. The production of gasoline in Michigan in 1939—

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I object to the witness stating what he has read out of some book. I don't know whether it is material, but if this is an official compilation I think it ought to be introduced.

Mr. Hanley: Let us find out what it is. I will ask the witness what the publication is.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If counsel for the Commission insists upon it, I think it will be necessary for you, Judge, to produce the document.

Mr. Hanley: Perhaps that is true. But I would like to learn what it is.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. What is this publication?

A. The Minerals Year Book is an annual publication prepared by the Department of Commerce on various mineral activities as reflected by production, consump-
2422 tion, product movement, and so forth. The petroleum economics division of the Department of the Interior secures monthly reports from various petroleum producers, refiners, and marketers, which enter into the reports of the Minerals Year Book of the United States.

Q. Is it a publication which comes currently to your office?

A. Yes, I get a copy each year.

Q. And do you regard it as reliable, and do you rely upon it for the information disclosed in it?

A. It is, perhaps, the most reliable source of data that we have on the petroleum industry. The reports as summarized in the Mineral Year Book and the reports as published by the petroleum economics division of the United States Bureau of Mines are generally regarded as the most dependable data that we have to work with of a public nature on the petroleum industry.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I have just learned that the publication under discussion is available in this building, and I have just sent for it. And we will try to overcome the technical objection of counsel for the Commission.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

2423 By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Do you in the course of routine of your office receive reports relative to various business indices, Mr. Boatwright, and if so what are they?

A. Oh, my, they are infinite; we receive so many that are used currently in connection with our forecasting activities in the preparation of the budget. There are hundreds and hunderds of various economic series secured.

Q. Let me direct your attention particularly to what I think are commonly understood by economists to be bank debits, an index known as bank debits. Do you receive that?

A. We do. We receive the regular publication of the Federal Reserve Bank showing bank debits by reporting banks in different areas throughout the United States.
2424 They frequently report by municipalities, thus the Detroit area will show bank debits, and then for other sections throughout the State of Michigan, they would show bank debits for other communities, and then they will show bank debits by reserve bank districts, and then bank debits for the total country.

Q. Now, have you made any analysis of that particular index with a view to determining the general business condition in the City of Detroit in 1938 as compared with 1936, '37, '39, and '40?

A. Yes, we prepared an analysis of the bank debits for the City of Detroit, the State of Michigan, and the rest of the United States, excluding greater New York City. The object being to evaluate the representativeness of economic conditions in the Detroit area during the year 1938, the year in which Professor Taggart collected, assimilated, and analyzed data on service station operation.

Q. Were you able to arrive at any conclusion?

A. I did. Using the bank debits for these particular three series, Detroit, the State of Michigan, the rest of the United States, excluding New York, we arrived at the conclusion that if we use 1936 bank debits as a base of 100%, expressing subsequent years as a proportion of the bank debit volume in the past year of 1936, conditions in 1937 in Detroit were better than they were in the rest of the 2425 State of Michigan, but during 1938 the bank debit index indicated that Detroit was lower,—substantially, than the rest of the State of Michigan, and Michigan, in turn, was lower than the rest of the United States.

Q. In your judgment as an economist, what effect, if any, does that have on the Taggart study?

A. It tends to show that the data secured for only one month of a year in which economic conditions were abnormally low, that is not truly representative of any long time cost of operation.

Q. I am not sure whether I asked you or whether I didn't, Mr. Boatwright, whether or not as an economist, you would have checked the results of a cost study, such as Dr. Taggart was undertaking to make, against the results that may have been found by other students of the question?

A. You did so ask, and I testified as to several different checks that I would have made, before presenting the results of the analysis.

Q. I wonder if I asked you about your knowledge, if you have any, of a report of a study, the results of which were published in the "National Petroleum News" for June 1st, 1938?

A. You did not ask. However, I enumerated that as being one of the various published studies that I would have checked my results against, had I made the studies 2426 Professor Taggart did.

Q. Did you state the results of that study, do you recall?

A. I did not.

Q. Do you have in mind that study?

A. Yes. The "National Petroleum News" during the year 1938 was establishing various cost and profits standards for different phases of the distribution of the petroleum industry. They had a series of bulk plants; they had a series of terminals; they had a series of service station operation, and other phases of the distribution problem of petroleum. In particular, I recall one statement made in their profit standards established for service station operation. It was to the effect that the ordinary service station in a neighborhood community, performing greasing, washing, selling gasoline, motor oil, tires, tubes, batteries, accessories, and so forth, should have an aggregate cost which, when divided by its volume of gasoline only, did not exceed 4.75¢ per gallon.

Q. Now, on the basis of that, Mr. Boatwright, what have you to say as to whether or not the results arrived at by Dr. Taggart are too high or too low?

A. Well, that indicates that Dr. Taggart's analysis resulted in a cost figure that was too high.

Q. Did you hear Mr. Marshall's testimony, Mr. Boatwright?

A. Not entirely.

2427 Q. There was a long discussion in the cross-examination of Mr. Marshall relative to the relation between quantity of any commodity sold and the method of delivery and the sale of that commodity." Tell us, if you can, what your view is as to whether or not, first, there is such a relation?

A. Your question is, is there a relation between quantity and price?

Q. That's right.

A. Normally, there is.

Q. Now, explain for us, please, what that relationship is. Now, I am referring, Mr. Boatwright, not merely to gasoline, when referring to commodities generally.

A. Well, in your field of commodities generally, the relationship is that as your quantity increases, your net price to the buyer tends to decline.

Mr. Hanley: At this time, if your Honor please, the Respondent offers in evidence an opinion rendered by the Honorable Homer Cummings, Attorney General of the United States, on the Robinson-Patman Act, which opinion was dated December 28, 1936, and had particular reference to Government contracts for supplies, but which opinion is offered here for the reason that it discusses the general question and is based upon the conclusions of the Attorney General as to the relationship between quantity and price, and I would now request the privilege of reading the 2428 opinion into the record rather than offering it as an exhibit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Before you proceed, Judge, let counsel for the Commission examine it.

Mr. Hanley: I will, but may I state that the reason for that is that the physical thing that I have in my hand is included in a publication of the Federal Trade Commission, and it just isn't in form to offer as an exhibit, physically (handing document to counsel for the Commission).

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Are you familiar with the document, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: No, I am not familiar with it. I am familiar with this whole document, yes.

Well, your Honor, this has to do with the question of prices on Government business, and I can't see, by any stretch of the imagination, where it has any materiality here. I object to it.

Mr. Hanley: Of course, your Honor will understand that I am not trying to confuse the prices that are involved in this action with any prices that may be quoted on Government business. I am making the offer because of the language which deals with a principle and not with any particular price, either to the Government or anyone else.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: For the purpose in-2429 tended counsel may read the extract appearing in the document into the record.

(The document referred to was read into the record, as follows:

"Excerpts From The Opinion Of The Attorney General Of The United States Dated December 28, 1936, Regarding The Application Of The Robinson-Patman Act To Government Contracts For Supplies.

"The Act Of June 19, 1936, merely amended the Act of October 15, 1914, as above pointed out, and, in so far as I am aware, the latter Act has not been regarded heretofore as applicable to Government contracts. The practice in this respect indicates that it has been customary in the past for those dealing with the various agencies of the Federal Government to grant to them special prices on contracts for supplies. Such prices are often below the regular market for similar material supplied to the regular trade—due, perhaps, to an estimated lower cost of doing business with the Government because of quantity purchases and absence of credit risk, solicitation, expense, etc., although it may often be impossible to evaluate such factors with exactness.

"It has been suggested that the force which would ordinarily be attributed to this practice may be weak-2430 ened because of the probability that the prices named have seldom, if ever, violated the statute, even assuming its application. Perhaps this is true. It is also conceivable that if the past practice is maintained the prices hereafter named to the Government will seldom, if ever, violate the amended statute, likewise assuming its application; and this would seem to supply another reason for avoiding a construction that would make the statute applicable to the Government in such matters, in the absence of any clear indication that it intended to depart from that policy in this instance.

"It is therefore my opinion that the Act of October 15, 1914, as amended by the Act of June 19, 1936, is not applicable to Government contracts for supplies.

"Respectfully,

"(Signed) Homer Cummings,

"Attorney General."

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, Mr. Boatwright, in the course of your duties during the years 1936 to 1941, inclusive, did you keep track of the automobile production in the United States?

A. We do.

2431 Q. I hand you what has already been marked as Respondent's Exhibit No. 3, for identification, and which was exhibited to Mr. Taggart on his examination. I will ask you if you prepared that chart?

A. I did.

Q. What does it represent?

A. It tends to show the automobile production index seasonally adjusted, as reported by the Federal Reserve Bank.

Q. What, if anything, in your judgment, does it have to do with the Taggart study?

A. Well, it clearly indicates that Detroit, being the center of automobile production, with its principal industry in a marked decline, the amount and the time period selected for the study was not representative of normal conditions in the Detroit market.

Q. Now, I hand you, Mr. Boatwright, what has been marked, for identification, as Respondent's Exhibit No. 5, which has to do with total gasoline consumption in the State of Michigan, and concerning which you have already testified. Did you prepare that exhibit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does it represent?

2432 A. This represents the total gasoline consumption in the State of Michigan by months and by years for the period 1933 through the month of November, 1940.

In addition, the actual level of gasoline consumption by months it shows in a dotted line, a 12-month moving average of the observations, which is an indication of the trend.

Q. I note that on the bottom of the chart there are a number of columns of figures. Will you please tell the Court what they represent?

A. That is the total gasoline consumption by months in the State of Michigan stated in terms of fifty gallon barrels.

Q. Directing your attention, Mr. Boatwright, to Exhibit No. 3, there appear on the lower half of the chart to be several columns of figures. Will you please explain what those represent?

A. Yes, those figures by months for the time period from 1936 through January of 1941 represent the Federal Reserve Bank adjusted index of automobile production as related to the average for the base years 1935 through 1939.

Would you like me to interpret any given figure?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes, if you please.

The Witness: As an illustration, January of 1941 the figure is 149. That means that the adjusted automobile production rate in January of 1941 was 149 per cent 2433 of the average production rate during the months of base years 1935 through 1939.

Mr. Hanley: At this time the Respondent renews its offer in evidence of the exhibits which have been marked Nos. 3 and 5 for identification.

Mr. Austin: May I ask what these figures in 5 are based upon? I didn't have this in my hand when you explained it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Referring to Respondent's Exhibit 5 for identification.

The Witness: Yes. That is based upon consumption as reported by the American Petroleum Institute for the months and years in question, which in turn are predicated upon the tax records of the State of Michigan.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I have no objection to No. 5 for identification, but I object to No. 3. I don't believe it has been shown that the witness has any knowledge of automobile production, and I am not clear on these figures or on the conclusions, and therefore I object to this or any similar evidence unless it is brought forward by the persons who compiled the information and can be cross-examined upon it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 5 for identification is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for 2434 identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 5", was received in evidence.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Can I hear from counsel for Respondent with reference to the objection by counsel of Commission?

Mr. Hanley: Your Honor, we offer No. 3 and let me hand it to your Honor so he will be familiar with what is being discussed; this, as its title indicates and as the evidence has disclosed is just a chart which purports to portray the automobile production of this whole nation during the years indicated; namely, from 1936 through 1940.

Now, this is just one of the things, if your Honor please, that comes to the desk of an economist or research man just in the routine of his work. We offer it here just to aid the Court and the Commission in determining what conditions were in 1938 when the so-called Taggart survey was made.

Technically the objection here requires that we should bring in every automobile producer in the United States for the years involved. Obviously we cannot do that. That just can't be done.

We offer this because we thing it may be of some assistance to the Commission. I apprehend that the desire of the Commission is to get information from reasonably reliable sources, and this type of information has to be com-2435 piled by someone. It can't be proved the way you prove a murder case, Judge; it just can't be done. And if your Honor excludes this exhibit it just estops us, we can't go any further. We can't bring in all of the automobile makers in the country, and we won't even try. We just have to forego whatever benefits may exist in the fact that production in May, 1938, was at the nadir of the line.

Mr. Austin: Are you through, Judge?

Mr. Hanley: I may say this, your Honor, I just can't conceive of counsel for the Commission taking the position that there is any unreliability in this, or that there is anything erroneous about the evidence. We didn't make it; we took it out of reports that came from organizations whose business it is to make these reports, and we offer it for whatever assistance it may be to the Commission.

2436 Trial Examiner Ballinger: This was compiled from reports, was it?

Mr. Hanley: That is right, Judge. I think I have established that Mr. Boatwright currently in his office receives reports from Dun & Bradstreet, and many other commercial and economic reporting institutions whose business it is to advise industry and commerce about the indices of business in the country.

It is like offering your Honor a business index as might be published in the New York Times on the stock market. We couldn't prove that individually. But certainly it is a reliable source for this type of testimony if the Commission is interested at all, and we think the Commission ought to be.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, Judge, if it is material to the case, all opportunity of cross-examination is denied to counsel for the Commission as to the authenticity of the data from which it is made up.

Mr. Hanley: Well, your Honor, I recognize that. That is quite true, but to advert to the Taggart survey itself, in which this is offered, and only offered in connection with the Taggart survey, and Professor Taggart testified that he took questionnaires from, I think, 487 or 489 service station men, and, Judge, we were denied the opportunity even to look at the questionnaires, much less 2437 cross-examine the individuals who made those questionnaires. And I say to your Honor that thing has been presented in courts in Michigan many times and not once in the State of Michigan has any Court ever received the Taggart study as competent evidence.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, my information is directly contrary to what Judge Hanley has just said, and it is that the Taggart report has been received and acted upon in criminal convictions in the State of Michigan, and has never been declared unconstitutional.

Mr. Hanley: I won't argue that. I will prove it.

Mr. Austin: You won't be able to. But my information is absolutely the contrary, since yours is on the record; I have been told by reliable sources here that the contrary is the fact. Now, I am not intimating for a minute that the Judge doesn't believe what he says.

Mr. Hanley: We may be wrong in arguing whether the Taggart survey has been received in Michigan or not, but you asked on the hearsay question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is immaterial in this proceeding whether the law under which that survey was made has been declared unconstitutional or constitutional.

Mr. Hanley: But to directly answer your Honor's query, and I take it that is all your Honor is interested in, you have suggested that there is no opportunity on 2438 on the part of the Commission to examine the people who might have the basic source of information which goes into this chart. I concede that is true, your Honor, but we are offering this evidence as having an influence upon the Taggart study, and we assert this: that we, the Respondent, were deprived of any opportunity to examine the sources on which the Taggart study was based.

Now it just seems to me, your Honor, that it makes good sense and is good law that if the hearsay rule is applicable against the Respondent now, it should have been applicable against the Government on the Government's case.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you care to be heard further, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: Yes. It seems to me that the proper way to handle a thing of this kind, if it has any materiality is to put in some recognized report, like Ward's Automotive Reports, or some recognized report which states the automobile production, if that is what is to be proved. That is all that is necessary to put in evidence. And a recognized report of that kind, I think, could be properly offered just as similarly referred to by Judge Hanley, if you want to prove stock exchange prices on a certain day, you probably put in a copy of the commercial chronicle, perhaps the Wall Street Journal. There are recognized reports; Ward's is one for automobile production. Now, if 2439 there is to be a graph made of it, and it is to be contended that the national production was an indication of the Detroit production, those things are more or less argumentative, and I think they find a more proper place in briefs and arguments than they do in evidence. The only real evidence here is the figures for automobile production. And if that is material, that can be introduced through recognized reports which set forth those figures, and from which, undoubtedly, the witness got the material which he has here.

Mr. Hanley: May I ask the witness one more question?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Tell us, Mr. Boatwright, please, just where you got the information you have reflected on the Exhibit No. 3.

A. The index, as reflected by Exhibit 3, is predicated upon the reports of the Federal Reserve Bank regular publication.

Mr. Austin: May I ask what the witness means by "predicated upon"?

Mr. Hanley: Surely.

The Witness: Taken direct from. These figures are reported by the Federal Reserve Bank as reflecting the index of automobile production.

2440 Mr. Austin: Then, your Honor, I suggest that those figures which are desired to be used, that the Federal Reserve Bank reports should be offered in evidence, and this sort of thing can be attached to Respondent's brief if they want to use it.

Mr. Hanley: Well, Judge, we just don't have here—I have got one book which I was fortunately able to obtain in the building—I just don't have those reports, and I just have some difficulty in understanding the type of objection that is confronting us here. We didn't make this chart out of the air. If we can have the opportunity, if there is no objection to the reports themselves, we will make them a part of the record later.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do I understand that these figures portrayed on Respondent's Exhibit 3, for identification, were taken from the official publications of the Federal Reserve?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: I am not even familiar with such publications, and I don't believe your Honor knows what the nature of them is, and I don't know what these figures mean, and I wouldn't know unless I saw those reports.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Could you designate the particular reports you have in mind?

The Witness: I receive so many, Judge, I am sorry

2441 I can't tell you the exact name. I will tell you where you can get a—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, you have them in your office?

The Witness: I have them in the office, yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In Chicago?

The Witness: In Chicago, yes.

2442 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Will you transmit those to counsel for the Commission for examination and check on this exhibit?

Mr. Hanley: Surely we will do that, Judge.

The Witness: Sure.

Mr. Hanley: Anything you want.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Affording counsel for the Commission full opportunity to check the exhibit and verify it; the objection is overruled and Respondent's Exhibit No. 3 is admitted in evidence, subject, however, to the check indicated.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I will refuse that check and will have to stand upon the objection. I believe this is absolutely inadmissible under any rules of evidence, and

I entirely submit to the ruling, but I will not request any check, because I don't believe that will cure it. So I am just stating on the record that it will be unnecessary for you to submit any figures.

Mr. Hanley: Irrespective of the statement of counsel, counsel for the Respondent stands ready to do exactly what the Examiner indicates we should do.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you concede that if the reports of the Federal Reserve portray the figures as stated on the chart Respondent's Exhibit 3, that they would be admissible in evidence if presented here?

2443 Mr. Austin: I do not.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On what ground—

Mr. Austin: I admit—perhaps I didn't understand your Honor. I admit, and would not object to the figures, that is to the report itself, this Federal Reserve report, assuming that it states figures for national production for automobiles. I would not object to the introduction of those figures. But even if those figures were introduced, I would still object to the introduction of this exhibit based upon those figures. I think the figures are proper evidence, but I think that this is used to submit a conclusion upon those figures and for argumentative purposes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection is overruled.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 3", was received in evidence.)

2444 Mr. Hanley: May I go off the record a moment, your Honor. I don't remember what this book relates to.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record. We will take a recess for five minutes.

(A short recess was had.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, you were asked a few minutes ago your opinion or knowledge as to the relative production and consumption of gasoline in the State of Michigan as between the year 1938, on the one hand, and 1937 and 1939, on the other hand, and it was suggested that the source of your information, namely, "The Minerals Yearbook" should be produced. I now hand you "The Minerals Yearbook" for the State of Michigan, and ask you if you can now give your opinion or your knowledge in response to the question?

A. "The Minerals Yearbook" is for the entire country. It is a publication of the United States Department of Interior, Bureau of Mines, prepared under the direction of R. R. Sayers of the Bureau of Mines, while the entire compilation is under the direction of H. Herbert Hughes.

I read from a table on page 1005, the State of Michigan production, all quantities are stated in terms of thousands of 42-gallon barrels. 2445

Mr. Austin: What is that, crude oil?

The Witness: Gasoline.

A. For the year 1937: production, 5,672; consumption, 26,443.

The year 1938: production, 6,822; consumption, 25,094.

In 1939: production, 7,932; consumption, 27,455.

Q. Now, Mr. Boatwright, in your judgment as an economist, what do those figures mean, in relation to the survey made by Professor Taggart?

A. Well, the outstanding thing about the figures is the indicated decline during the year in which he gathered his data. His study, likewise, points out that costs tend to fluctuate or to vary with gallonage. His conclusion in that respect is confirmed by many of the analyses we have conducted. Therefore, if consumption declines and if your costs tend to vary with gallonage during this period of low consumption; low gallonage, high costs result.

Q. So you may be advised, Mr. Boatwright, I am going into the question of costs now. I will leave Dr. Taggart.

A. All right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Hanley:

2446 Q. Mr. Boatwright, are you familiar with the fact that there came a time in 1936, about September, when Ned's Auto Supply Company was put on a basis of purchasing gasoline at ½c below the then prevailing tank wagon price?

A. I am familiar with that.

Q. Have you made any survey and analysis of the costs of the Standard Oil Company in relation to serving Ned's Auto Supply Company, on the one hand, as distinguished from serving regular tank wagon customers, on the other hand?

A. I have.

Q. When did you do that?

A. Within the past two months. The exact date, I don't recall.

Q. Were you assisted in that survey by anyone, and, if so, whom?

A. I was assisted by various members of my own department, as well as having reviewed the processes and the findings with the head of the sales accounting department, Mr. F. L. King; the head of the sales operating department, Mr. W. H. Tell; the assistant comptroller of the general office, Mr. O. M. Perrenot. In addition to that assistance or counsel, the processes and the work was done largely by cost accountants in my own department, with the assistance of accounting men in the Detroit sales accounting department.

2447 Q. Did you review all of the procedure and conclusions that went into the results which you ultimately found to exist?

A. I did.

Q. And do you personally have knowledge of both the procedure and the results?

A. I do.

Mr. Hanley: I hand the witness a paper entitled: "Differences in Certain Marketing Expense Items Incurred by Distributing through Regular Reseller Outlets Versus Distributing through Ned's Auto Supply Company, 1937." The paper is also designated as "Schedule A," and I ask to have it marked Respondent's Exhibit 31-A for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will so mark the paper.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 31-A.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, there appear on Respondent's Exhibit 31-A, on the left hand side, certain items by name and then there appear three columns of figures. Will you explain what those mean?

A. Yes. The name of the items are the marketing expense items according to either individual items or 2448 classifications of items of a similar nature going into our general marketing cost statement.

The first column of figures is the resultant per gallon cost for each of these items individually and in total for serving our regular reseller business.

The second column of figures are the marketing costs of serving Ned's Auto Supply Company by tank wagon for these particular marketing expense items.

The third column shows the difference of marketing costs between those costs incurred on our regular reseller business, and costs incurred in supplying Ned's Auto Supply. They are shown, as I say, by individual items, classifications of items, and . total.

2449 Q. Does Exhibit 31-A reflect your conclusion as to the difference in the cost of sale, delivery, and market of gasoline to Ned's, as contrasted with the regular reseller outlet?

A. It reflects my conclusion as based upon marketing expense items that could be calculated separately by customers.

In addition to the conclusion as shown on schedule A there is a long list of marketing expense items which will be shown later that could not be segregated among customers but which, from my experience, tend to make the conclusions as shown by schedule A an understatement of the true cost difference.

Mr. Hanley: Now, if your Honor please, I propose to go into some detail with the witness in relation to the supporting data that he has used to arrive at these conclusions. I don't know just how your Honor may think it may be most helpful for me to do that. I am perfectly willing to introduce the documents in evidence right now or I can go into it orally and then introduce them later. I will do it anyway that seems to be most desirable to Court and counsel. I intend to offer them, anyway, I can assure your Honor of that, now.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Has counsel for the Commission any suggestion?

2450 Mr. Austin: Well, do I understand you are going into an analysis of each one of these items?

Mr. Hanley: That's right, Mr. Austin; each one of them; in detail.

2451 Mr. Austin: Are you going to offer the basic figures in evidence?

Mr. Hanley: I am going to offer Exhibit 31-A in evidence, but I propose to support it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner would suggest that you have the papers identified and then proceed with your examination, so that we may follow. Identify the papers.

Mr. Hanley: Very well, I will be glad to do that, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document handed in by counsel for the Respondent as Respondent's Exhibits 31-B to 31-Q, for identification.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 31-B to 31-Q.")

Mr. Hanley: At this time, it appearing that the Respondent is unable to furnish complete copies of the Exhibits marked, for identification, it is requested that we may adjourn, and the Respondent be afforded the opportunity to make typewritten copies of the proffered Exhibits for the use of Court and counsel during the examination of the witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

The motion is granted, and now, at 11:45 A. M., the 2452 hearing stands in recess until 1:30 P. M.

(Thereupon, at 11:45 o'clock A. M., an adjournment was taken to reconvene at 1:30 P. M.)

2453 Afternoon Session.

1:30 P. M.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

Mr. Hanley: On the record, if you please.

I am now able to supply Court and counsel with copies of the exhibits that were marked, for identification, this morning.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 31-A to 31-Q, both inclusive.

Mr. Hanley: Yes, your Honor.

And, for the information of Court and counsel, I would like to say, now, that in this examination on these exhibits, and in relation to the cost analysis of the Respondent, the Respondent stands on no ceremony at all in reference to whether it is direct examination or cross examination, and invites—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Or voir dire.

Mr. Hanley: Right. Anything at all. We invite any inquiry by Court and counsel at any time that will aid either Court or counsel in understanding the witness; without reference to any technical rules of procedure at all.

JOHN W. BOATWRIGHT, thereupon resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, this morning you were asked to identify the exhibit now marked as Respondent's Exhibit 31-A for identification.

A. That is correct.

Q. In your own words, I wish you would please explain just how you have arrived at each of the figures that appear on Exhibit 31-A, and in so doing you may refer to Exhibits 31-B to 31-Q, inclusive, or any other memoranda which you may have.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Please make particular reference to the exhibit to which you refer.

The Witness: I shall.

A. As we go through this explanation, I shall explain the various forms, and if the explanation is not detailed enough, if you will stop me, I shall be glad to elaborate.

The first attempt was to determine the difference in cost for labor for delivery to Ned's Auto Supply units as contrasted with the labor cost of the delivery for serving our own reseller outlets.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Let me ask you, Mr. Boatwright, if in contemplation of this chart and at my request, your department made a detailed analysis in Detroit and in Chicago of this 2455 question of cost of delivering and selling to Ned's as contrasted with selling to other reseller buyers?

A. At your request we did make the detailed analysis in Detroit and Chicago.

Q. Please proceed.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You are now dealing with the first item on Respondent's Exhibit 31-A under the heading "Salaries—Drivers"?

The Witness: That is correct.

A. (Continued.) We maintain in our warehouses an efficiency record upon truck operation. Each time that a delivery truck pulls into our warehouse yard there is an indicated time in, there is a loading time marked for the subsequent load, and then upon the return there is a time back to the yard. We refer to this form as form 018, which shows on the record the size of the dump or delivery, and the time involved in making that delivery. When a truck is in operation a salaried driver is likewise in operation. The salaried rate for drivers in the Detroit area averages 95.2¢ per hour.

We selected two trucks that had been used to deliver nothing but gasoline. Frequently our other trucks deliver gasoline in the summer, make fuel oil deliveries in the winter, or other products. We felt that it would be a better representation of our gasoline delivery costs to limit 2456 our inquiry to trucks used exclusively for that purpose. We likewise selected two trucks which were of average tank capacity, and of average age and about average maintenance cost, so we would have as accurately as possible the true reflection.

Now, from these form 018 tickets, we studied the time consumed when this truck was making full dump deliveries, or when this truck was making multiple dump deliveries operating on a route.

The Ned's Auto Supply, as a type of outlet, would take full dump deliveries. The rank and file of our reseller outlets are what we call multiple dump deliveries, and the truck operates on a route.

We segregate the 018 tickets according to whether the truck, upon leaving the yard, was destined for a full dump delivery. From the two trucks, we took 94 tickets for truck No. 34,270, and 200 tickets for truck No. 29,525.

These tickets were studied by segments that I could insure that we had reached a stability of accomplishment. Is that clear; just exactly what I mean?

Then we took the number of gallons as represented by these respective tickets, and the time involved, according to the actual record, of the accomplishments of the trucks; reduced it to a gallon per hour and extended the gallonage per hour by the hourly salary rate of the driver which, when divided by the output, gave the cost per gallon 2457 averaging for the two trucks .074. Calculations thus far are prior to the 3% Federal insurance and unemployment tax which, during 1937, were at the rate of 3%, which was then added to the .074, giving an average delivery cost on a full capacity basis of .076 per gallon.

Q. Now, Mr. Boatwright, is that figure .076 reflected anywhere on Exhibit 31-A? If so, please point it out.

A. It is, sir. It is reflected in the second column of figures under Ned's Auto Supply Company, "Costs, cents per gallon basis, No. 1-A; Salaries, Drivers, .076c."

Q. You have been discussing, if I correctly understand your testimony, the material which is reflected on Respondent's Exhibit 31-B; am I correct about that?

A. That is correct.

Q. Please proceed, Mr. Boatwright.

Mr. Austin: May I ask a question?

Mr. Hanley: Surely.

Mr. Austin: I believe you said we might interrupt occasionally.

Perhaps you explained it, but if you did, I didn't catch it, as to why it was 94 of these 018 used for one of these trucks, and 200 for another.

The Witness: Yes. The 94 tickets are those we could clearly get the time without interruption for the noon hour.

In other words, there were 94 tickets that there would 2458 be a dump without any challenge of authenticity of the time record.

Mr. Austin: How about the 200?

The Witness: Serving different types of reseller outlets and routes. There merely happened to be more of them, of one truck than another.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. That is to say, if I understand right, Mr. Boatwright, that you eliminated the possibility of any time influence by reason of the truck driver taking time out for lunch, or anything of that sort?

A. Yes. Frequently the truck would pull out of the yard, say, at 11:30 in the morning, and he might check back in the yard at 2:30 in the afternoon. During that time period he has had a lunch period which, according to the normal procedure, is usually one hour, but he may have taken 55 minutes or 45 minutes and quit five or ten minutes earlier that evening, so all tickets of that nature were not included in the analysis. These tickets are only those where we have an exact time for the truck in the yard, out, and back in the yard with the empty truck.

Now, for comparison purposes—and here I am referring to what I think is Respondent's Exhibit 31-C—I did not have my sheets marked in accordance with the exhibit, but I shall attempt to refer to them.

2459 Q. You go right ahead and I will fix one up for you.

A. All right. For comparative purposes we wanted the costs per gallon of delivery for salaries to drivers for the rank and file of reseller outlets.

We maintain, in our bulk plants, a truck efficiency report wherein we have recorded by individual trucks every hour of operation and every gallon of product distributed. That report will indicate the exact hours of a truck's utilization for gasoline and the through put during those exact hours.

The four Ned's outlets being served during the year 1937 were served respectively out of our Scotten Avenue plant, Lacaste plant, and North Detroit plant. Now, the actual hours of operation are recorded in our marketing expense item, 1006 or 2006. Therefore, the hourly cost of 95.2 was extended times the number of hours that drivers were operating for delivery of gasoline, to secure a total salary cost during this particular time period for these three plants. Below that is shown the gallons delivered out of those three plants, and the cost per hour on an average basis prior to Federal Insurance and Unemployment Tax. The average cost out of Scotten Avenue plant was .110¢ per gallon. Out-of Lacaste plant, .113¢ per gallon, and out of the North Detroit plant, .111¢ per gallon, or averaging, for the three plants, .111¢.

2460 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Why were those three plants selected?

The Witness: They were the three plants which were serving the four outlets, Ned's Auto Supply.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, please explain to the Court what the fact is as to whether or not you and members of your staff came to Detroit and actually looked at these tickets and made these calculations from the tickets themselves?

A. The entire calculation, as explained to date was made by one of my assistants and myself, assisted by one member of the sales accounting department in Detroit. When we add the 3% Federal Insurance and Unemployment tax to the average cost per gallon for salaried drivers of .003¢, we secure an average overall cost for serving our reseller—our rank and file of reseller—gallonage for truck driver's salary only of .114.

Q. May I ask, Mr. Boatwright, if that figure is reflected anywhere on the summary, Exhibit 31-A, and if so, where?

A. That figure is then transposed to the summary under No. 1 "Delivery Costs", subdivision (a) "Salaries - Drivers", and is under the column "Regular Reseller Business".

Q. Now, to clarify this, does that mean that it cost .114, according to your survey to deliver to the ordinary reseller outlet as distinguished from a cost delivered 2461 to Ned's Auto Supply Company, .076¢?

A. That is exactly the differentiation.

Mr. Austin: You don't exactly mean that, do you, Judge? You mean to put that in the past tense and refer it back to the cost in 1937?

Mr. Hanley: Well, this survey covers 1937, so it must necessarily relate to 1937.

Mr. Austin: These two tables don't cover '37. They are tests made in 1939 and 1940, and it is true, is it, Mr. Boatwright, that none of the deliveries which were used here were deliveries to Ned's Auto Supply? In other words, this is a test made of conditions in 1939 and 1940 for the purpose of determining something that happened in 1937; is that right?

The Witness: Yes. We do not maintain the form

018 tickets beyond one year at our bulk plant. My statement that it is the difference in cost is that I have taken a type of delivery which corresponds with the type of delivery made to Ned's on the one hand—

Mr. Austin: That was made?

The Witness: That was made to Ned's, and compared that with a different type of delivery that was continuous in '36, '37, '38, '39, '40, and is still continuing; the rank and file. If there is any challenge of this particular figure, it is an understatement, because we have intro-2462 duced increased efficiencies of truck operation between the time period. The actual union agreement and the per hour cost of labor was reached between the company and the union during the early part of 1937, so that the hourly rate is the same as prevails during this time study.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, just to be very sure we are right about this, Mr. Boatwright, as I understand it, you didn't use 1937 figures, because they weren't available?

A. That is correct.

Q. You did use 1939 and 1940 figures because they were available?

A. That is the full year 1940.

Q. I see.

A. Except as indicated in the exhibits where we may have taken four monthly periods rather than doing an intricate amount of detail work.

Q. Now, are you able to say from your knowledge and experience the figures that you have used are typical of the figures that would exist in the year 1937?

A. I am able to say from my knowledge and experience, based on a study of a similar nature conducted by my department in 1936, that the differential in cost thus established is narrower than the differential in cost of a similar nature established in adjacent fields in a 2463 special study we made on this problem in 1936, in connection with our leasing of service stations.

Q. Frankly, I don't know just what that means. I think, perhaps, if you develop the figure at the bottom of page, Exhibit 31-C, on the basis of the difference of marketing costs; that we can get at the question in my mind. Will you please explain that?

A. Surely. Having established in per gallon cost of delivery on a full dump basis as being .076, and having established a cost for salaried delivery on a multiple dump basis of .114, there is a savings which accrues to the company of .038 per gallon, when we compare full load deliveries with multiple load deliveries. My answer, as previously given, was that in a similar analysis made during the year 1936, we secured and established a wider differential than .038.

Q. I see. I think that answers my question.

Now, I think you have testified about three figures in the first line of your Exhibit 31-A—I mean I think you have transposed those three figures to the first line of 31-A. Will you please now go to the subject of 1(b), "Equipment," and explain how you arrive at the figures disclosed on Exhibit 31-A in relation to equipment.

A. Our equipment cost differences is explained starting on Exhibit 31-D. The source of our information is 2464 the maintenance costs of records obtained from our machine shops in Detroit.

The depreciation rates used in this calculation are those established by the company and approved by the Department of Internal Revenue for tax purposes.

The goods used were included on a cost basis representing manufacturing costs plus transportation plus state and federal taxes.

Our procedure was to take the operating and maintenance costs on these same two trucks, Nos. 34,270 and 29,525.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, I think it is clear, but I want to emphasize it, if it isn't. Those are two actual trucks that were operating in Detroit?

A. Yes, sir.

2465 Q. Is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Go ahead.

A. When we secured the annual costs—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You haven't finished your statement there with reference to operating.

A. (Continuing) The operating and maintenance cost of these same two truck numbers as given—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Compiled from what?

A. (Continuing) Were compiled from the above sources for the full year of 1940.

The annual costs when divided by the hours of operation gave an equipment cost per hour. The per hour cost of operation was divided by the hourly outputs to obtain the per gallon cost on a full dump basis, and the per gallon cost on a multiple dump basis when serving the rank and file of all reseller accounts. Our investment in each of these trucks, the chassis thereof is shown. The investment in the tank mounted on this chassis is shown.

Q. Now, are you referring to Exhibit 31-D?

A. That is correct.

Q. Go ahead.

A. The depreciation on the chassis of trucks is at a 12 per cent rate, while the depreciation on the tank mounted on that chassis is on a 5 per cent rate. The goods 2466 used were costed as I explained, and are shown for each of these two trucks for the year 1940.

Q. What do you mean by goods used?

A. The gasoline and the motor oil, grease consumed by the operation of these two vehicles for effecting deliveries during the year 1940.

2467 Q. And how did you cost that?

A. That is costed on a manufacturing cost basis, plus actual transportation costs, plus state and federal taxes. That is the actual cost to our company. There is no profit margin nor no marketing margin included in that figure.

Q. Are there any excise taxes included in it anywhere?

A. There are excise taxes, because the gasoline and motor oil is consumed on public highways, and the excise tax is paid.

Q. So we have to pay that?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that is a cost to the company; is that correct?

A. That is correct. Then we took the licenses on the trucks, the casing, the tube, and battery repairs, then the machine shop repairs, mechanical adjustments, miscellaneous mechanical work, and so on plus miscellaneous expense, amounting to the figure $20.46 for truck No. 34,270, and $39.73 for truck No. 29,525. The sum total of these items gives the annual operating cost of these two trucks for effecting gasoline deliveries to reseller accounts in the Detroit area for the full year 1940.

Referring now to Respondent's Exhibit 31-E:

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Where is that reflected on Respondent's Exhibit 31-A?

2468 The Witness: It will be necessary to continue the explanation, because there is no figure shown on Respondent's Exhibit 31-D that is reflected on the subject as yet.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. In other words, Mr. Boatwright, that is just a part of the computation on this equipment cost which continues on Exhibit 31-E?

A. That is correct.

Q. Will you please continue with your explanation?

A. Now, from our analysis of form 018, it was indicated that the time per ticket for truck No. 34270 was 64.3 minutes when that truck was working on a full dump basis, and 87.8 minutes when that truck was operating on a multiple dump basis following a route.

Comparable time consumed by truck No. 29525 in making full dump deliveries was 74.6 minutes, and on a multiple dump basis 107.8 minutes. The calculations were as follows: The number of tickets, by truck, is shown on Respondent's Exhibit 31-E as being 94 for truck No. 34270, and 200 for 29525.

Q. Let me ask you again, Mr. Boatwright, did you or members of your staff or both of them actually examine those physical tickets in the City of Detroit?

A. Yes, sir.

2469 Q. And are those tickets kept as a matter of regular routine in the bookkeeping of the Standard Oil Company?

A. They are.

Q. Are they available now, if the Government wants to look at them?

A. They are.

Q. You may proceed.

A. The time consumed on the 94 tickets for truck No. 34,270 was 6,043 minutes, while the time consumed on truck 29,525 was 14,925 minutes, making the average time per minute, as indicated in the testimony just preceding. A similar computation and a similar measurement of time was made on these same two trucks when operating upon a multiple dump basis.

The results of that calculation have just been placed in the record in the testimony, likewise, just preceding.

Q. And that appears on Respondent's Exhibit 31-E.

A. That is correct.

We then took the total number of tickets for each of these two trucks made during the entire year 1940 wherein the delivery was of a full capacity dump: that is, single stop.

Likewise we took the number of tickets that were written when these trucks were making multiple dump as they operated on routes serving the rank and file of our reseller outlets. The result of addition of time de-2470 voted to single dumps and time devoted to multiple dumps gave the total minutes of operation and, hence, the total hours of operation of these two trucks during the year 1940, aggregating as is shown in the last figure on Respondent's Exhibit 31E, a total hours of operation of 4,254 hours for the two trucks.

Continuing to Respondent's Exhibit 31-F. The cost of operating each of these two trucks on an annual basis, as was explained in detail on Respondent's Exhibit 31-D, was divided by the total hours of operation to secure an equipment cost per hour of operation. For truck No. 34270 the equipment cost per hour was 49.04¢.

2471 Q. That is, per hour?

A. That is per hour, sir.

The total equipment cost for operating truck No. 29525 averaged 48.8¢ per hour, giving an average for the two of 48.52¢ per hour.

The average equipment cost per hour on the above trucks was then divided by the average hourly output for single dump deliveries as determined from our above analysis, which resulted in a cost per gallon as follows: The average hourly cost of 48.52¢ per hour was divided by the average hourly output of 1,292.4 gallons, giving an average cost per gallon of .038¢, when operating your equipment making full dump deliveries.

This figure is transposed to Respondent's Exhibit 31-A, being a summary of this calculation and is shown under item 1, subpoint (b), "equipment" in the second column.

To secure the equipment cost per gallon for delivery to the rank and file of retail outlets, the annual cost of the two trucks was divided by the total annual output. The total annual cost of the two trucks was $2,063.89, putting out a total annual volume of 4,228,839 gallons, dividing total gallonage into total cost we have a cost per gallon, when serving the rank and file of reseller outlets, for equipment only, of .049¢. This figure was likewise 2472 transposed to Respondent's Exhibit 31-A, being a summary of these calculations and is shown under "1. Delivery cost, (b) equipment," the first column being "Regular Reseller Business Cost per Gallon."

The difference between the .049 representing our cost of delivery to the regular reseller outlets and the cost of .038 representing cost of delivery on a full dump basis, is .011¢ per gallon saving when full truckloads are made in contrast with when the truck makes multiple dumps to empty its capacity.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, in every instance does Column 3 on Respondent's Exhibit 31-A represent the difference between Column 1 and Column 2? I am now referring by numbers to the columns that have figures in, without reference to the item.

A. Column 3 is the difference between Column 1 and Column 2.

2473 Q. You have now testified to item No. 1, an arithmetical number, having to do with "salaries—drivers," and "equipment," and will you tell us do we correctly understand that the difference between the cost of that service to regular reseller outlets, on the one hand, and Ned's Auto Supply Company, on the other hand, is represented by column 3 on Exhibit 31-A?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Hanley: Now, if your Honor please, I would like to request, on behalf of the witness, that we take a short recess. He contracted a cold last night and he says he is perfectly willing to go on but—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The request is granted. We will take a five minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I think, Mr. Boatwright, you had concluded your remark relative to item No. 1, "delivery cost," on Exhibit 31-A through Exhibit 31-F. Would you please now explain the items under No. 2 on Exhibit 31-A?

A. Item No. 2 is indicated as being "Marketing Expense Items Not Influenced By Ned's Auto Supply Company" volume.

Subpoint "a" under that is "Sales Promotion". I refer you to Respondent's Exhibit 31-G, as to the explana-2474 tion of this particular item.

Our business association with Ned's Auto Supply Company was such that the Standard Oil Company assumed no responsibility for sales promotion activity.

Accordingly, the following expense items, which are allocated to our various channels of marketing upon a distribution of time basis were taken from form 189 titled "Comparative Statement of Expense," for the year 1939 and divided by tank wagon reseller gallonage, excluding volume sold to Ned's Auto Supply Company, to secure the marketing cost saving on a per gallon basis.

Trial Examiner Balfinger: Will you permit an interruption? What is form 189?

The Witness: That is the Standard Oil Company's form showing a breakdown of our marketing expense items (showing document to Examiner).

Enumerating the individual items included under this caption, they would be as follows: Account No. 1002—

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Just to clarify the exhibit, Mr. Boatwright, these account numbers which appear on Exhibit 31-G, and elsewhere through these exhibits, what do they represent?
2475 A. They are the numbers assigned to various accounts in which we classify our various marketing expense items as per the code of accounts of the sales accounting department of the Standard Oil Company.

Q. Are those routine per books accounts of the Standard Oil Company?

A. They are.

Q. Do they have any reference whatsoever to this lawsuit?

A. They do not.

Q. Has that been the accounting procedure of the Standard Oil Company for many years last past?

A. It has.

Q. Is it the accounting procedure of the Standard Oil Company now?

A. It is.

Q. You may proceed.

A. I think I had given you account No. 1002, being titled: "Salaries—Sales Promotion."

The expenditure for that particular item was $6,597.25.

Account No. 1003—

Mr. Austin: Pardon me. Can't the witness make a little statement of explanation of what those are as he goes along?

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

Mr. Austin: What kind of salaries and what kind 2476 of services or what is included there? I mean for what.

The Witness: I should be happy to do that.

Mr. Hanley: I thought it would be better if we put in a blank form 189 that the witness has referred to.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It occurred to me at the time.

Mr. Hanley: I will ask the witness that.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Boatwright, if you have with you a blank copy of what has been referred to as form 189.

A. I have a blank copy, and on this blank copy I have written from our code of accounts the principal expense items entering into each classification.

Q. Will you please produce that?

Mr. Hanley: I think, if your Honor please, this will be helpful not only on this, but also on the cent and a half classification that we hope to make later.

Will you mark this, please?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the paper—

Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Bal[illegible]: On the record.

The reporter will mark the document handed him by counsel for Respondent, Respondent's Exhibit 32, for 2477 identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 32.")

Mr. Hanley: Now, if your Honor please, in order to keep the record straight, I ask the privilege on behalf of the Respondent to substitute for what has now been marked Respondent's Exhibit 32, for identification, a blank form identified in the company nomenclature as form 189, for the reason that there appear on this particular document certain pencil notations made by Mr. Boatwright for his own information as to what the accounts include.

I wish to say now that so far as these pencil notations are concerned, and so far as the fact is concerned, as to what the several accounts include, we will be glad to supply any information that either counsel or Court may desire, either through Mr. Boatwright or through any other source that we have.

Mr. Austin: Of course, I am not asking for those particular pencil notations, but—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without objection, counsel may substitute a form without the pencil notations, and withdraw the one now marked for identification; substitute one to be marked Respondent's Exhibit 32, for identification.

Mr. Hanley: We will have that within a day or two.

2478 The Witness: Counsel for the Commission, as I recall, asked the question prior to the discussion as to what items of expense are included in subaccount 1002 entitled "Salaries—Sales Promotion." In each of our division offices we maintain a sales manager, wholesale sales; a sales manager, reseller sales; the sales manager, wholesale, has charge of the sales promotional function to the tank wagon consuming market; the sales manager, reseller, has charge of the sales promotional function through the reseller channel of our distribution.

Each of these gentlemen has an assistant whose salaries are likewise included under the caption. This item represents the salaries of the sales manager, reseller; and the assistant sales manager, reseller, in the Detroit area.

Mr. Austin: That is Mr. Raupagh's office here in Detroit?

The Witness: That is correct.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Well, that applies to each of the divisional offices of the Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes, each of our 28 divisions have exactly the same set up in that respect.

Subaccount 1003, being entitled "Salaries—Sales Promotion—Others" represents the income to the clerical assistants, the stenographers, and the office boys who 2479 work in the sales promotion departments, representing the sum total of the clerical assistants to the sales manager and the assistant sales manager, as I have previously explained.

Mr. Austin: Only for the reseller?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: Sales manager and assistant sales manager?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: Don't some of the employees work for both, and has there been an allocation for that?

The Witness: There is an allocation wherever there is an individual who works, let us say, as an office boy for the two, his time and expenses—may I clarify the record? His expenses are allocated on a time split basis according to the manner in which he devotes his time first to the reseller function, as distinct from the consumer function.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, Mr. Boatwright, to clarify this thing, so far as Exhibit 31-G is concerned, has there been an allocation to the reseller channel in these figures of all of the items that have been incorporated in the several accounts which appear on 31-G?

A. There has been a distribution, and, as stated, 2480 this distribution is predicated upon a break-down of time, the ratios of time of employment being applied to the total to get an assessed expense against individual channels.

(Continuing.) These two items being entirely salary items upon which a Federal Insurance and Unemployment Tax of 3% was paid, there is included in our total payments of insurance in items 1243 and 1244, 3% of the two sums mentioned, namely, $6,597.23.

Q. 25¢.

A. 25¢, yes. Plus $3,294.42. Applying the 3%, there is a tax assessment against these two items of $296.75.

The next item is our subaccount 1031, which represents the traveling expense of the sales promoter and the assistant sales promoter as he works about among the various salesmen, the various reseller outlets, and so forth. He incurs miscellaneous expenditures. The item is small, being for the year 1937 $235.92. The sum total of this item is allocated along channels on the same time split basis as is any of the other sales promotional items.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Do we understand from that, properly, Mr. Boatwright, the figure you have included on Exhibit 31-G is an allocation to the gasoline reseller channels exclusive of wholesale operations or any other kind of operations?

2481 A. That is correct. That is a reseller cost.

Q. I see. All right.

A. Continuing. The next item being 1046, represents the operation and maintenance cost of cars furnished to the sales manager and the assistant sales manager. This item being $161.41 for the year 1937, represents the cost that is assignable to reseller gallonage.

Item 1101 is the depreciation expense of the vehicles or automobiles furnished to the sales manager and the assistant sales manager, in this case representing $80 for the year. The sum total of these various sales promotional expenses is $10,665.75.

The total reseller gallonage of the Standard Oil Company, excluding the volume of Ned's Auto Supply in the Detroit area, was 66,588,527 gallons. Dividing the $10,665.75 by this gallonage results in a per gallon sales promotional expense of .016¢ per gallon.

2482 Now, is that figure reflected anywhere on Exhibit 31-A, Mr. Boatwright?

A. That figure is reflected on Exhibit 31-A under two (a) entitled "Sales Promotion."

Q. And under the column "Regular Reseller Business"; is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. You have indicated, Mr. Boatwright, both on the Exhibit 31-A and in your testimony that this is an item of expense not influenced by Ned's Auto Supply Company. I wish you would now please explain to the Court just why you think that none of this expense was applicable to Ned's Auto Supply Company in 1937?

A. Our business association with Ned's Auto Supply was to the effect that we had no responsibility and had been asked not to assume any responsibility for the driveway training in merchandising procedure of employees of Ned's Auto Supply. They did, and did undertake, to train their own driveway salesmen according to their own patterns, rather than expecting or requesting the Standard Oil Company to do the training in that respect. Hence we did not have the sales promotional obligation with that customer that we have with our regular reseller accounts.

2483 Now, that particular item amounts to .016 of a cent, as I understand your figure, Mr. Boatwright?

A. That is correct.

Q. You have another item, parenthetical subdivision (b) under No. 2 on Exhibit 31-A. Will you please explain how you arrive at that figure?

A. Yes. I refer you to the explanation on Exhibit 31-H, which is under the title "Other," or other expenses not influenced by Ned's Auto Supply. In addition to the sales promotional item of expense, there are certain other marketing expense items of an overhead nature that are not influenced by Ned's Auto Supply business. These are as follows:

Account 1004, entitled "Salaries—Supervision—Others."

Mr. Austin: Mr. Boatwright, are these also items which appear upon that form 189?

The Witness: They do.

A. (Continuing) This particular item is made up of a secretary to the manager, clerk, draftsman in the construction department, and the stenographer in the construction department.

The next item—

Mr. Austin: Pardon me just a moment. Anticipating, perhaps, what you are going to ask him later in line
2484 with the question you have just asked him about why the items on 31-G were not allocable in any part to Ned's, would it be better, since there is a miscellaneous list, to have him explain as to each one of these as he goes along?

Mr. Hanley: You mean as to what appears on 31-H, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: Yes. In view of th[illegible]ct that they are miscellaneous items.

Mr. Hanley: You mean it in relation to Ned's?

Mr. Austin: As to why they are not allocable to Ned's.

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Will you please do that, as you explain what these items are, please tell us as you go along, why you do not think they are properly applicable to Ned's in 1937?

A. Certainly.

Mr. Hanley: That is what you meant, isn't it?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

A. Certainly a draftsman in our construction department who works on designs and lay-outs of proposed remodeling of company-owned stations, or of remodeling of other plant facilities, having done nothing of that 2485 nature in connection with Ned's Auto Supply, couldn't be logically charged as any cost incurred because of the Ned's business, nor would the clerk or stenographer in the construction department be regarded as cost against doing business, to Ned's Auto Supply.

The manager's stenographer, representing the salary of the stenographer of one individual working for Mr. Raupagh, is not a marketing expense item that could be influenced by the acquisition or the loss of any such account as Ned's Auto Supply. That has remained constant except as may have been influenced by increases because of service for a period of years.

Mr. Austin: Did I understand you to refer to a stenographer for Mr. Raupagh?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: Does that have some special allocation to construction? I am not quite clear whether everything in this 1001 relates to the construction department.

The Witness: No. And may I point out here that I have taken these pencilled memorandum from our code of accounts, and these items represent our particular charges under these particular classifications, although there may be cases where you have an account which you may classify as an open and account that it would be impossible, 2486 without reprinting the entire code of account, to give you every minute detail, but, in this particular item, it represents the manager's stenographer, clerk, draftsman, or stenographer in the construction department.

Mr. Austin: You mean the manager of the construction department? You said the manager's stenographer or something.

The Witness: Manager's stenographer. Mr. Raupagh's stenographer.

Mr. Austin: I don't want to get into any argument or cross examination here now. I am just trying to get this explained.

Mr. Hanley: I think I perceive your difficulty, Mr. Austin. There are certain individuals whose salaries are included in this particular account, and I am afraid it is not quite clear, Mr. Boatwright, just who those individuals are.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Will you just state them again, please?

A. Yes. The field manager's stenographer.

Mr. Austin: Who is the field manager?

The Witness: Mr. Raupagh. The clerk, the draftsman—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Isn't he also superintendent of this entire district: in charge of this entire 2487 district?

The Witness: We refer to him as the sales field manager. He is in charge of the Detroit division.

Mr. Austin: Wouldn't some portion of the expense of his office be allocable to Ned's?

Mr. Hanley: There is; and that appears.

The Witness: That does appear.

Mr. Hanley: That will appear, Judge, as we go along.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

The Witness: Do we have further question on that?

Mr. Austin: You just said field manager's stenographer. Will you go on and include the other stenographers included in 1001?

The Witness: Yes. A clerk in the construction department, or a stenographer or draftsman in that department. Generally speaking, any item included in this particular classification does not fall into the regular classifications, such as promotion, warehouse, and so forth. They are miscellaneous-type salaries included in the field division office.

Mr. Hanley: Does that clarify that particular account in your mind?

Mr. Austin: Yes. Just to be sure on one point: you mentioned construction, not as anything referring par-2488 ticularly to 1001, but, rather, as only an example of a number of things. Do I understand your last statement to be that that is miscellaneous salaries in Mr. Raupagh's office? In other words, this isn't particularly a construction division item, is it, this 1001?

The Witness: Not necessarily, although it so happens that the principal component parts of this expense item are incurred in the construction department.

Mr. Austin: But, in general, is the item supposed to be miscellaneous salaries—well, you go ahead. I think I have it now.

Mr. Hanley: I would be very glad to have it cleared up now, Judge, if there is any question about it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes. Clear it up.

Mr. Hanley: I don't know, myself, what is meant. I would be glad to have it clarified.

Mr. Austin: Mr. Boatwright, 1002, which we dealt with on the sheet marked 31-G, had to do with salaries for sales promotion, reseller, and those are salaries in Mr. Raupagh's office. Now, does this item 1001 on 31-H cover all other salaries in Mr. Raupagh's office except—well, I suppose, for instance, the direct consumer sales promotion isn't there, but—

The Witness: No, the direct consumer sales promotion is not there.

2489 Mr. Austin: Is everything else in there except sales promotion?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Austin: Is Mr. Raupagh's salary there, or any part of it?

The Witness: No. Mr. Raupagh's salary and the assistant manager's is in 1000, being salaries—supervision.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. That appears where, here, Mr. Boatwright?

A. I have placed that item on page 16, being a listing of the items that are not incurred to as great an extent on Ned's volume as on regular reseller business.

Q. So we will discuss that later, as we go through these exhibits?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: Let us then get back to where we were, here. Did you start to give an all-inclusive statement of this item 1001? You mentioned Mr. Raupagh's stenographer. You mentioned construction department, clerks, stenographers, draftsmen, is there anything else?

The Witness: I don't think of anything else. I would be glad to consult the code of accounts to ascertain that and advise tomorrow. In other words, I have here enumerated the principal items making up this account. I could testify that in this particular field there might 2490 not be some mail boy working in the construction department, or something like that, that would enter into that account.

Mr. Austin: Then you simply took this figure off the 1001 rather than deciding that certain salaries should go in and then deciding what they were?

The Witness: I took this figure directly from the marketing expense statement 189.

Mr. Austin: Because, if you first set down certain expenses to go in here, then you would be able to tell me.

now, what they were, so I assume, therefore, these were taken from an account, and you are not now sure of all the items that may be in that account number?

The Witness: In this particular field.

Mr. Austin: Yes.

The Witness: That is correct.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Form 189 of the Standard Oil Company; is that or is it not a regular form of accounting that has been adopted by the company and is in current use by the company?

A. It is a regular form and is in current use.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And has been in use for a number of years?

The Witness: For a number of years.

By Mr. Hanley:

2491 Q. Tell us where the figures come from that go into form 189.

A. It is a compilation, a classification of all expenses incurred in the field, coming directly from the vouchers for payment. The number of records on which the 189 is predicated, Judge, is tremendous.

Q. Yes, I know that. Just very briefly, if you will, please, Mr. Boatwright, try and give the Court some conception of just what a mass of accounting detail underlies form 189.

2492 A. Perhaps I could best do that by explaining that the code of accounts, which is written and furnished from the general office for the accountants at each sales field to follow, to insure our accounting procedure is identical, encompasses, in total, four loose leaf notebooks of at least 2½ inches in thickness. Perhaps that is the best explanation of the magnitude of the items entering into the 189 and the 189 is merely a summation, also, of all of these instructions and all of these forms and all of these expense items allocated and set down according to this uniform code of accounts applicable in all sales divisions.

Q. Now, Mr. Boatwright, form 189 is made up on the basis of all of the accounting records of the company, is it not, and has been made up from year to year without any reference at all to the fact that the Standard Oil Company was in this particular lawsuit?

A. Oh, certainly.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think that is very clear on the face of the record, now.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I would like to ask this one further question, Judge: Is it or is it not true, that the particular figures which appear in this series of exhibits 31-A through 31-Q are drawn from the records of the company and are not developed on the basis of any build-up in reference to this 2493 particular lawsuit?

A. That is true, except as it pertains to certain items, such as salaries for delivery or equipment items, where we had to make the time study that I described in the testimony this morning.

Q. I will ask you if it is not true that you did point your answers to this particular lawsuit in respect of those items where you were requested to determine the cost as to selling and delivering Ned's, on the one hand, as distinguished from regular resellers, on the other?

A. That is true.

Q. But in doing so, Mr. Boatwright, is it or is it not true that you used the regular routine, ordinary and customary company records?

A.. That is correct.

Should we go to the next item?

Mr. Hanley: If Mr. Austin has concluded?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes, if Mr. Austin is satisfied with the explanation.

Mr. Hanley: I inquired and he said he was.

2494 A. The next item is account No. 1215, being entitled "Expense—Salaries—Others."

This particular item of marketing expenditure is made up of salaries paid to the employees in the real estate and tax department; the supervision of those departments; the clerical help; the stenographic help, and others who are employed on real estate and tax work.

Again we have two pure salary items, one 1001, and the other 1215, to which the Federal Insurance and Unemployment Insurance taxes of 3% applicable in 1937 was applied, giving a total tax for these items of $403.87.

The next item—

Mr. Austin: Just a moment, please, Mr. Boatwright. Now, you referred to the real estate and tax department. Is that two departments or one? Is there a real estate department, and a tax department, or do you call it the real estate and tax department?

The Witness: That varies among the different fields. In our larger sales divisions—

Mr. Austin: Well, we are only talking about Detroit now, aren't we?

The Witness: That is true, but you asked a question, and I am answering according to the books of the company. In some fields they are consolidated. In the Detroit 2495 division I don't know whether they are consolidated or handled separately, in this particular division.

Mr. Austin: These figures are solely Detroit figures, aren't they?

The Witness: Certainly they are solely Detroit figures, but I don't know whether they are handled here by the same men or different men.

Mr. Austin: I don't know that that is so important.

Mr. Hanley: Will it answer the question, Mr. Austin, if the witness can tell us whether the figures are consolidated as to the departments?

Mr. Austin: They are at least consolidated here, because they are all added together; isn't that right?

The Witness: Yes, these are all taken from the books.

Mr. Austin: As to whether it is one or two departments in the Detroit office, at least it is real estate and tax. What other items are included in this item opposite 1215?

The Witness: I have enumerated the items in that classification.

Mr. Austin: I thought you enumerated real estate and tax, and I didn't think you enumerated anything further.

The Witness: May I repeat?

2496 Mr. Austin: Yes.

The Witness: Employees in the real estate or tax department encompassing supervision, clerical, and stenographic salaries of individuals employed in the real estate and tax work in this particular area.

Mr. Austin: Then that is only real estate and tax?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: That is what I wanted to find out.

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Austin: Whether it went beyond that, and just for the purpose of finding out what was included.

The Witness: I see.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Before you proceed to the next item, we will take a recess for five minutes.

Mr. Hanley: Thank you, on behalf of the witness.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, I think you had just completed an explanation of account Nos. 1243 and 1244 on Exhibit 31-H. Will you please continue with an explanation of the following items on that exhibit?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, I think you are one item too far.

Mr. Hanley: Am I?

2497 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Had you offered an explanation of 1243 and 1244?

2498 The Witness: I think the record is clear on that; that that is merely the application of 3 per cent Federal insurance and unemployment taxes on the above items.

Mr. Austin: I don't think Mr. Boatwright had told us why the items opposite account No. 1215 are not in any part allocated to Ned's.

The Witness: I shall be glad to do so. The tax and real estate activities as conducted by employees of the Standard Oil Company were not in any way involved in the tax and real estate problems of the Ned's Auto Supply who own all of their own outlets and who took care of all of their tax problems. We had nothing to do with their real estate and tax problems.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Was the Standard Oil Company involved in any expense at all in relation to the tax or real estate problems of Ned's Auto Supply Company?

A. It was not.

Q. Did that company, so far as you know, take care of all of their own expense in that direction?

A. Within the limits of my knowledge that is a correct statement.

Q. At least is it or is it not true that our company had nothing to do with it?

A. That is correct.

2499 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The next item will be 1054.

A. (Continuing.) Subaccount 1054 is the "Operation and Maintenance of Vehicles—all other (other than office)" amounting in total to $208.89.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. $280.

A. $280.89, yes. This particular item is the expenses incurred in operating a vehicle from time to time—a vehicle or vehicles from time to time—by the following members: Auto mechanic, construction man, electrician or painter other than employed by the machine shop; passenger cars only.

You will notice that the cars or car operated by these individuals was not involved in any way, nor were our expenses increased in any way by the volume of business moving through Ned's Auto Supply, inasmuch as our construction man did not work on that account, our automobile mechanic did not work on the cars for that account except as it will be brought out under the car used by salesmen contacting the account, for which a due charge is subsequently made, and except as it involves a delivery truck, for which an expense item has already been duly made.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Austin, are you interested in a detailed statement of those items appearing 2500 on Respondent's Exhibit 31-H where the aggregate amount is less than $375?

Mr. Austin: No. Not at this time, anyway.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then you will proceed with the four items, four remaining items where the aggregate of each is more than $375.

Mr. Austin: Well, if your Honor please, I perhaps didn't understand you. I would like to have the witness go down the list and make an explanation on each of them; but I don't intend to—I don't require now a particular statement as to each one of those smaller items you mentioned about allocation to Ned's and so forth, but I would like to know what is in them.

2501 Mr. Hanley: May I suggest, Mr. Boatwright—

Mr. Austin: I probably wouldn't stop him or ask him.

By ~~Mr.~~ Hanley:

Q. May I suggest, Mr. Boatwright, where there is a large item that you explain in some detail what is included. Where there is a small item, that you cover it just as briefly as you can, and if counsel wants to know anything more about it, he can ask you.

Mr. Austin: I would like to interrupt, if I may, Judge, to ask another question just now.

Mr. Hanley: ~~Any time. Sure~~.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

Mr. Austin: There are three brands of gasoline, Stanolind, Red Crown, and the Ethyl sold through the Detroit Office both to the Ned's and to the other tank wagon purchasers; and taking these statements as a whole, how has that been handled, or has there been any segregation or allocation?

The Witness: We do not segregate our marketing expense items among the different brands of gasoline. These expense items are the items of expense incurred upon our three motor gasolines, irrespective of brand.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, would such an allocation be a 2502 practical thing?

A. No. It would be extremely difficult to allocate our costs among brands. To illustrate, assume you attempted to allocate your delivery cost among brands, your five compartment tank truck may pull out of the yard having one compartment filled with Solite, and one with Stanolind, and three compartments filled with Standard Red Crown; what part of your marketing cost is chargeable to Solite, what part to Stanolind, and what part to Red Crown—it is a division, the expenses of which, if we attempted to segregate it, would be so great that we would get no value out of it, commensurate with the expenses incurred in its accumulation.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I think you are now down to item 1066, Mr. Boatwright, which is a large one: "Miscellaneous Expense"; please explain that.

Mr. Austin: I would like to ask one more question about those gasolines, and this is a matter which I would like to have my recollection refreshed on as to whether or not it appears in the record as to the price differential, if any, which Ned's received during 1937 and parts of 1936, and '38, over other tank wagon purchasers in Detroit as to Stanolind, and Ethyl. Now, it has been referred to here today that there is a half a cent on Red Crown.

2502 A. Is there a statement in the record—there may be in Mr. Raupagh's testimony?

Mr. Hanley: It is my recollection that Ned's doesn't handle Stanolind at all, and has not done so. Just a moment, and I will try to find out if he handles Solite.

(There was a slight delay at this point.)

Mr. Hanley: I don't know whether it appears in the record yet or not, your Honor, but we will make it appear. It seems to be the fact that there was just the same ~~differential on Solite as there was on Red Crown, namely~~ ½c off of tank wagon price. And he did not ~~and does not~~ handle the ~~third grade, Stanolind~~.

The Witness: I shall proceed with expense item 1066, being titled "Miscellaneous Operating Expense," aggregating $40,142.68. This is the type of an item which I referred to a moment ago as being an open end account, and if a particular expense is incurred, which is not subject to the usual code of account classifications, it will be found in this particular item.

This item of $40,142.68 is for the reseller channel for Detroit only. Wherever it is possible, such expenses are charged direct to the channel; where expenses are incurred which it is impossible to charge direct to that channel, they are allocated upon an all gallonage basis. That 2503 is why, as we shall see later, I used a different divisor on this particular classification than I did on the preceding classification of expense items.

2504 It would be well if I read the principal items entering into this particular account. Room rent for dealers' meetings, salesmen's meetings, refreshments served at dealer meetings, moving expense for reseller salesman, wrapping paper, postage on coupon books, the notary fees. Wherever evidence is gathered on competitive subnormal prices to provide us with bona fide evidence for meeting competition. Sales awards in sales contests in the reseller channel. Window shades placed at various dealer outlets.

Mr. Austin: Have you any dollar amounts for those various things you are reading?

The Witness: It would be impossible without going through all of the vouchers.

Mr. Austin: You see what I am getting at, this is a forty thousand dollar item, and I was wondering if you could tell us among the things you are reading where the principal part of this forty thousand dollar part comes from.

The Witness: I am reading the principal items making up this expense.

Mr. Austin: I see. But not in the order necessarily of their weight?

The Witness: Not necessarily. Although I think that was the natural tendency on the part of my accountant when I asked him to give me the items of importance making up this total. I think it is natural that he would 2505 put down the large items first, although I could not testify that this is in accordance with the magnitude of the items.

Should I continue reading?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Austin: Would that detail be here or in Chicago or where would it be?

The Witness: To get this detail for the year 1937 would involve pulling your expense vouchers and spreading the sum total of your expense vouchers according to the spreading among channels and among different expense classifications as was done when the books of the company were made up. In other words, it would practically mean a recalculation of our marketing expense for the Detroit division for the year 1937 from the original expense vouchers. It would take months.

Mr. Austin: Well, will you continue to read the principal items.

The Witness: Surely.

A. (Continuing) Then we placed Standard product signs in reseller outlets; in other words, signs other than advertising signs, warning signs, and things of that nature are included in this particular itemization. We have a transportation cost of Stanolind Records. That is the official house organ of the company, and we incur certain postage on that, as we send this out to the different dealers.
2506 Cost is incurred because of errors of shipment or returns to our warehouses.

Those are the principal items.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, the next item is one of some consequence, well in excess of a thousand dollars, having to do with the safety expense. What does that mean?

A. The item 1084 "Station Safety Expense—Salaries and All Other Expenses," of $1,343.24, is made up of safety signs, salary of our safety representative, traveling expense of the safety representative, his car expense, and if he has any clerical assistants in the safety department, it is found in this item. In other words, he may dictate certain letters which will be written or typed by the stenographic department, and they assign to his department this cost in terms of time of that particular assignment.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understood you to enumerate the signs as part of expense of miscellaneous operating expense?

The Witness: No. Our sign cost will be found almost entirely under the heading of "Advertising," under the heading of "Safety," or under the classification enumerated in 1066. There is no overlapping, but at times, especially when we have outside greasing pits rather than the hoist, it is necessary to post a warning sign at that pit to comply with certain rules and regulations in 2507 which municipality we were operating. That would be distinctly a safety sign.

Does that answer your question?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, is it a matter of classification as to where you charge these sign costs?

A. The classification is in accordance with the function performed for which the sign is intended.

Q. That is right. And you get that cost in one of these three accounts that you have referred to?

A. I think those are the only three accounts.

Q. And you say you don't get any overlapping?

A. There is no overlapping.

Mr. Austin: Which three are those? Those two right here, 1066 and 1084; and what is the other one?

The Witness: We shall come to advertising.

Mr. Austin: I assume that is the third?

The Witness: That is right. That is your big classification.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, in line with the suggestion of the Court as to those amounts of lesser importance, I will ask you to drop down to account No. 1220, which is in excess of $2,000, and unless counsel desires to inquire 2508 about the others, I will pass them. Just explain what is involved in that item.

A. Account 1220, entitled "Expenses—Employment Department—Salaries and all Other Expenses," amounting to $2,231.16, is made up of the total cost, including salaries, traveling, and car expense, of the personnel supervisor, and expenses incurred in conducting the personnel department.

2509 Now, you will notice—

Mr. Austin: Is that in Detroit?

The Witness: That is in Detroit, yes, sir.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. These figures are all Detroit, aren't they?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: We haven't come to anything that is an allocation of anything in the Chicago office, have we?

Mr. Hanley: Not yet.

The Witness: Not yet. I shall, for your convenience, if I come to such an item, I shall explain the allocation as made in the Chicago office.

A. (Continuing) In particular with reference to subaccount 1084 "Safety" which, as I stated, included salaries, and subaccount 1220 "Employment Department" which are largely salaries, we did not include any tax item of 3 per cent on these two items, because they are not purely salaries, but you include in addition certain automobile and other expenses incident to performing of their jobs. We thought it would be better not to apply the 3 per cent on that sum total item because of some small quantity not represented by salaries.

Now, the sum total of this list of expense items is $59,186.15.

2510 Mr. Austin: Mr. Boatwright, on item 1804 did you explain why that is only allocated to reseller customers other than Ned's? Or why it is not allocated in any part to Ned's?

Mr. Hanley: May I suggest, Mr. Austin, that this whole list has been classified by Mr. Boatwright as marketing expense not influenced by Ned's, and I am going to ask him that general question.

Mr. Austin: I thought we agreed before we started on this list, since it was a varied list that it would be better for him to tell us as to each main item.

Mr. Hanley: Maybe you are right. That is all right. I will withdraw my remarks if you prefer to have it individually.

The Witness: Yes. Our safety man did not deal with safety problems at Ned's outlets as he dealt with safety problems at stations owned or leased or under sales contract with the company. Ned's ran their business as a separate and complete entity as distinct from the performance of the safety function on the part of our representative and our various and sundry resale outlets.

Mr. Austin: In that respect, Mr. Boatwright, I assume you are relying—and I am not intimating that you are improperly relying—upon information received by you from Mr. Raupagh or other officials of the company?

2511 The Witness: I think it would be a fairer statement to say that no one of these expense items were accepted in this classification without full discussion and consultation with parties having to do with the marketing through Ned's outlets during the time involved. You are quite correct that I did discuss it with Mr. Raupagh. I discussed it with his assistant managers; I discussed it with the sales promoters, and I discussed it with the safety men in the Detroit division, as well as with the employment man, real estate men, and so forth. I asked them "Did you have anything to do with this contract?" Naturally such inquiry is a means of determining the classification that I have to give an expense as an economist.

Mr. Austin: Well, were you informed or did you make any inquiry to determine whether there were any other stations besides Ned's where, for instance, there was no safety expense or no selling expense?

The Witness: I was informed that there were other stations besides Ned's that required substantial time on the part of the safety man. I did not ask of these four hundred odd stations that we may have in the Detroit area "Was there any one station in 1937 at which you had no time devoted?" I couldn't answer that. I doubt if the ~~safety man could answer that. But I asked him.—~~

2512 Mr. Austin: Because it would seem to me that on the theory of eliminating Ned's from these expenses, that maybe there should be some other stations that should also be eliminated. I didn't want to go any further than to ask you whether you made an inquiry.

The Witness: I would differ from your position on that, for this reason. We have here a class of outlets which we have been describing as our regular reseller outlets. They are composed of stations that were owned and built by the company but are operated by lessees, plus stations that we leased, and, in turn, sublet to lessees and what we regard as 461 contract accounts, where it is merely a sales contract. Now, a safety man, in the course of his regular duties, will not work at every one of those outlets during the period of a year. His work, of necessity, is rotated from year to year among the different outlets and whereas he may not actually have called on a particular outlet in 1937, he may have called on that outlet in December of 1936.

It is like a painting program, if you understand what I mean. We don't paint each station each year, but if we take our work on a flow basis, attempting to maintain expenses approximately uniform as we go, from year to year to year, we scatter our painting work among the different outlets over a period of time rather than doing all of 2513 the jobs, in every case, one year, and none of them the subsequent year.

Mr. Austin: You are referring to a case where, perhaps, there was none of this expense going to a particular station, more or less by accident, during 1937, whereas at Ned's you say it is not by accident, but due to your particular business relationship with them; is that right?

The Witness: That's right. They attended to their safety problems, entirely.

Mr. Austin: So what I was getting at, whether there were any other stations, as a rule, that were known to do such things?

The Witness: There were no such stations that were known, in the discussion with the safety representative, that he called to my attention, sir. I would not anticipate that there would be any.

Mr. Austin: That's all.

~~Now, is there any particular explanation to be made on~~ item opposite account No. 1220: "Expenses—Employment Department—" Oh, I was going to ask you there: what are the duties of the employment department?

The Witness: Well, there are quite a list of them, sir. One of the principal time-consuming parts of his work is interviewing applicants for jobs; filling out and main-2514 taining personnel records on these individuals; maintaining personnel records on the individuals in the various branches of our business in conformity of different rules and regulations of municipalities or different Government agencies, under which we work. That, largely, is their function.

In addition, there are personnel supervisors in some fields who make detailed studies of the characteristics of individuals most adapted to particular types of work.

To illustrate: a personnel director in one of the fields with which I am acquainted has made a complete tabulation of the experience of all lessees prior to becoming a leasee, so that he will be able to advise his management the type of experience prior to work on the driveway that results in the best accomplishments. He has isolated the various factors of health, as it affects sales. He has isolated the various trades or professions of individuals. All of that work of that nature is performed by the personnel director in a given field.

Mr. Austin: The Standard Oil doesn't employ anyone who works at these retail stations supplied by it, does it?

The Witness: No, we do not employ them.

Mr. Austin: Is the work of this employment department partially, or in a substantial part, devoted to 2515 interviewing and employing and taking care of personnel problems in connection with employees of the company itself; that is, in the Detroit office, or working out of the Detroit office, such as truck drivers and such as employees at the bulk plants, and such as employees at Mr. Raupagh's office?

The Witness: It does.

Mr. Austin: Now, has there been an allocation of that expense of the employment department so that part of that expense is allocated to consumers and jobbers and other elements as to which the persons employed by it might be, in part, devoted?

The Witness: There has been an allocation of the total cost of the personnel department among the different sales channels. I think that is the direct answer to your question.

Mr. Austin: In other words, this opposite 1220: does that include the entire expense of the employment department for 1937, or only part of it?

The Witness: It is only a part of it. It is the reseller portion.

Mr. Austin: That's sufficient.

The Witness: All right.

Mr. Austin: That is a complete answer.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

2516 Mr. Austin: If that is the case.

The Witness: Now, I have enumerated in the testimony, as we were going through these different items, one or two places where we have to make an allocation on the basis of gallonage where such items cannot be charged direct. Accordingly, instead of dividing by the reseller gallonage, excluding Ned's Auto Supply, we divide by the sum total of the gallonage, which includes Ned's and all others, of 70,629,027 gallons.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You are now referring to Respondent's Exhibit 31-I?

The Witness: That is correct.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. The upper part of that page?

A. The upper part of that page.

We know that the divisor we have used results in a cost which is slightly below our actual cost, if it were possible to break down all of the expense vouchers, according to two different gallonage factors. This was an impossibility. Recapitulating this explanation, the sum total of other marketing expense items not influenced by Ned's Auto Supply Company volume, amounted to .084c per gallon, which, again, was carried forward to Respondent's Exhibit 31-A and is shown under point "2" subdivision "b", .084.

2517 Q. Now, let me ask you some general questions in the matter of summarizing, Mr. Boatwright.

Is it or is it not true that all of the items on Exhibit 31-H and carried over to your computation on the top part of 31-I, are allocations made to reseller channels of gasoline in the City of Detroit?

A. That is correct. All items and all amounts indicated on this analysis are reseller amounts, only.

Q. Now, you have been asked in respect of certain individual items on Exhibit 31-H, as to why you excluded them as a cost item applicable to Ned's. The fact is, as I understand you, you have excluded all of the items on 31-H as applicable to Ned's. Please give us a general statement of your reasons why you think they are not properly costs applicable to Ned's.

A. As a general statement, a complete examination of the component parts of the various marketing costs entering into these amounts—these items, as I have enumerated.

lead us to the conclusion that they were items not properly chargeable to Ned's Auto Supply Company, but items solely chargeable to our regular reseller business.

Q. Now, taking those items in their entirety, are we correct in understanding that they amount to .084 of a cent per gallon?

A. That is correct.

2518 Q. Now, will you please pass on, Mr. Boatwright, to item No. 3 which appears on Exhibit 31-A? I think it is entitled "Semi-Direct Expense Items Not Incurred in Handling the Volume of Ned's Auto Supply Company."

A. Yes.

Referring now to Respondent's Exhibit 31-I, subdivision 3, entitled as given, there are certain marketing expense items of a semi-direct nature tending to vary with gallonage, which are not influenced by sales of Ned's Auto Supply Company.

2519 These expense items are charged direct, wherever possible.

However, in the case of subaccount 1087, 1088, and 1204, some portion is, of necessity, handled on a pro rata basis. For this reason we have again used as our divisor, in determining the per gallon cost, the sum total gallonage of our reseller channel of distribution, including Ned's Auto Supply volume, for a total of 70,629.027. Referring to the individual items making up this classification of marketing expense I would refer you first to 1087 entitled "General Supplies Used," amounting to $1,258.94.

Q. What does that include and why doesn't it apply to Ned's?

A. It is made up of drinking water in bottles; rope, brooms, towels, soap, first-aid kits, flashlights, labor in handling mailing items, and so forth; defying classification of the usual expense items.

Again this item, as I have enumerated it, is the reseller expense only and it is allocated to that channel when we take the sum total of these items, it is allocated to the reseller channel on the basis of tank wagon gallonage.

Q. Referring to the next item, 1088: "Station Operating Tools and Equipment." What does that involve?

A. The principal items entering into that account are buckets, wrenches, ash cans, chains, chairs, ladders, cuspidors, electric fans, barrel faucets, funnels, pump 2520 nozzles, locks, pails, pipe wrenches, radiator covers, brakes, ice scrapers, water coolers—

Mr. Austin: What do you mean by stating "operating?" The Standard Oil Company didn't operate any stations in 1937, Mr. Boatwright.

The Witness: No. This is a title which has been on our statement for some years.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It embraces what?

The Witness: It embraces the classification of expenses that I have enumerated, whether those be incurred at our division office, if they have to buy a rake or ice scraper for our division office, whether it be at one of our bulk plants and irrespective of the location of one of this miscellaneous type tools, it is thrown under this general classification: "Station Operating Tools and Equipment."

Mr. Austin: "Station," there, doesn't mean, then, service station?

The Witness: It does not mean that.

Mr. Austin: Does it mean operated in part by the company?

The Witness: It could mean that, in part.

To illustrate: With the leasing of our company-operated station the tools that were necessary in conjunction with the operation of that outlet were likewise leased to the tenant. We maintain tools subject to the normal wear 2521 and obsolescence, I presume would be the term, under the condition of the lease.

Mr. Hanley: I am impressed, your Honor, with a thought that it may seem a little unimportant with the idea of rakes and hose nozzles but it does appear that our company in Detroit spent, this year, $13,453.67 in that kind of item, so there is a considerable cost.

The Witness: There should be added to your statement—

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Yes. I would like to ask you about that, now. What do you mean by "Office Expense Exchange?"

A. Account 1204 entitled "Office Expense Exchange" is, in reality, the sum total of the cost of performing the banking function, which is incurred in conjunction with the distribution of gasoline. Thus our driver may deliver gasoline to a reseller outlet. That reseller may have cashed several checks for his customers and, in turn, in payment of his account to our driver, or to the company, he endorses those checks.

Those checks then are handled individually through our account and proceed with any clearance or fee incident thereto being charged.

2522 In addition, there is included in that item the transmission of funds from any station outside of the main metropolitan area of Detroit to our Detroit central deposit banks.

Q. Now, you have arrived, Mr. Boatwright, on Exhibit 31-I, at a gallonage figure of .019c. Is that reflected on Exhibit 31-A any place?

A. Not direct, because from Exhibit 31-I we continue to Exhibit 31-J, which reflects a negative figure rather than reflecting the .019.

Q. Will you please continue and explain the upper portion of Exhibit 31-J?

A. Now, on the conduct of our normal reseller business, we incur certain credit costs.

The following items, also of a semi-direct nature, are charged direct to the various sales channels, no one of which would be influenced in its magnitude by volume sold to Ned's Auto Supply. Our divisor in this case, therefore, should be the volume through the reseller channel, excluding sales to Ned's Auto Supply.

These items are subaccounts 1510 titled "Losses by Bad Debts," aggregating $2,782.73.

Item 1511, "Expense Collecting Bad Debts—Current Year," $139.69:

2523 Subaccount 1512, "Expense Collecting Bad Debts—Prior Years," $437.31, against which we have shown account 1400, being "Bad Debts Collected—Written Off in Prior Years," as a receipt of $4,900.75, giving a cost for the credit function, which would represent an increase to the company of $1,541 for the year of 1937.

Q. The net effect of that, Mr. Boatwright, is a credit, is it not, against the cost which you have set up over "III," on Exhibit 31-I?

A. That is correct. Any time that you take a segment of time limited to 12 months, when your bad debts are charged off on the basis of 12 months, or more, past due, you may take any one year and have a net income, according to your system of keeping books, and, in this case, it does result to a credit of .002 of a cent.

Q. Do these figures refer to any specific year, and, if so, what year?

A. These figures refer specifically to the year 1937; Detroit.

Q. Might that figure be greater or less than some other year?

A. Oh, yes. In some years, where the bad debts is charged off, it may be charged off in prior years as to total a net expense. In this particular year it totals a credit.

2524 Q. Now, adverting to III on Exhibit 31-I, is it your judgment and opinion that none of those items are properly allocable to Ned's Auto Supply Company as an expense?.

A. That is my judgment and opinion.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, the first figure there, "Losses by Bad Debts," on page 9 here opposite account No. 1510.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that "Losses by Bad Debts" on sales made during 1937 or is that bad debts written off during 1937?

A. Bad debts written off during 1937. You can't determine whether sales made during 1937 will become bad debts until the subsequent period.

Q. Now, I would like to have, perhaps, a little further explanation as to why this 70,000,000 gallon figure was used on schedule 3 here, page 8. I guess it is 31-I, and over on 31-J, under the same schedule, and 66,000,000 gallons a year was used for the volume..

A. Certainly.

The 70,629,027 gallons was used in the first part of that, because, as I think the testimony will reveal, wherever possible, these expense items are charged direct. However, there are certain items that cannot be charged direct and are allocated on a gallonage basis among the different sales channels.

2525 Q. Are all of these three items; 1087, 1088, and 1204; are they the kind of items that you have just said could not be directly charged?

A. Some parts could not be charged direct and, therefore, inasmuch as a part of the sum total is allocated on a gallonage basis, it seemed the conservative thing to do to use your largest divisor against the totals of these three items.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Just let me interrupt. Doing that, Mr. Boatwright, gives you a lesser cost per gallon, does it not?

A. Yes.

Q. Than if you had used a divisor exclusive of Ned's gallonage?

A. Well, it is a choice that anyone has to exercise in a compilation of this kind. I will state that by using the larger gallonage we have arrived at the lower or more conservative cost. It is a physical impossibility to draw out each of these expense items on pails and ropes and chains and things, for the year 1937. It would take us a year. Therefore, wherever there is any part of an expense allocated on a gallonage basis, I have used the maximum gallonage, preferring to understate rather than overstate the cost.

Q. Now to follow through: Where you arrived at a credit on Exhibit 31-J, why did you use the lower divisor there?

A. Because we had no bad debt losses. We had no 2526 expenses of collecting bad debts prior years, or no credit cost function involved on Ned's account. Therefore, the credit function in the reseller channel was incurred on reseller accounts other than Ned's. Therefore, I should use the gallonage excluding Ned's.

Q. Now giving consideration to the entire item of III as reflected in 31-I and 31-J, it amounts to a cost, apparently, of .017 of a cent. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now is that figure reflected anywhere on Exhibit 31-A?

A. Yes. The net of III of .017 of a cent is shown under 3. "Semi-Direct Expense Items Not Incurred in Handling The Volume of Ned's Auto Supply Company," column 1, Respondent's Exhibit 31-A.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, perhaps I have asked you this: If so, I will stand corrected if the Court will correct me. Have you explained why, in your judgment, you think no part of this expense is fairly applicable to Ned's Service Station?

A. I think I have explained.

Mr. Hanley: I am just in doubt, Judge. If I have asked that, I will withdraw the question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Whether the witness has given all the explanation he desires, or not, I do not know.

He has certainly made an explanation.

2527 Mr. Hanley: I don't want to repeat the question. If I have put the question, I don't want to repeat it.

The Witness: Yes, your question was asked and I responded in view of the sum total of items entering into these—

Mr. Hanley: Very well. That is sufficient.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, may I direct your attention, please, to item No. IV, "Selling Cost", on Exhibit 31-J and as it appears on Exhibit 34-A. Will you please explain that item, Mr. Boatwright?

A. Yes. Referring, now, to the lower part of Respondent's Exhibit 31-J entitled "Selling Cost."

In order to determine the savings in selling expense incurred in serving Ned's Auto Supply outlets, information was obtained from the Detroit division covering the salesmen calling on Ned's Auto Supply during the year 1937, together with the expense incurred. The names of the salesmen, together with salary and traveling expense incurred while on the territory covering Ned's outlets, were obtained from the Detroit office; that is, the payroll records. Where it refers to salary or machine shop records; where it refers to maintenance or the salesmen's expense accounts; where it refers to their expenses.

Q. In what you have just said, are you referring 2528 to the usual routine and ordinary accounting records of the company?

A. I am.

2529 Q. That are kept without any reference at all to the lawsuit; is that true?

A. That is correct.

The source of salary, as I have just stated, is the payroll record.

During the year 1937 it happened that the sales territory which encompassed the Ned's Auto Supply outlets was served by three different salesmen: Mr. L. L. Robinson covered this territory for the first three and a half months of the year; Mr. T. G. Meulenberg covered the territory for four months, while Mr. Paul Coutchie covered it the remaining four and a half months. Their salaries, including the 3% Federal Insurance and Unemployment Tax, were obtained and are enumerated on Respondent's Exhibit 31-K.

Their traveling ~~expense was taken direct from their expense accounts, as submitted to the company.~~

The sum total of the salesmen's cost of working this territory for the year 1937, for these two items was $3,144.42. This total was added to car expense, which was obtained in the following manner:

The investment in salesmen's cars in the Detroit division for the year 1937, according to the company investment records—

Q. Those are the records of the routine investment records?

2530 A. That is correct. The investment in salesmen's cars in Detroit for the year 1937, according to the company investment records, was $43,085.

The number of salesmen in the Detroit area, according to Mr. W. H. Tell's records—

Q. Perhaps you had better explain Mr. W. H. Tell, in relation to this exhibit.

A. Mr. W. H. Tell is assistant to the vice president in charge of sales, in charge of operations. Maintains records and costs and all equipment, number of units, and so forth. The number of salesmen was 69. Each of those men having a car, have an average investment of $624.42, according to our books, per vehicle.

The total, subaccount 1047—which, for your sake, is the "Maintenance Cost,"—was taken from the Detroit 189 for the year 1937 on those vehicles and represents $24,525.71. This maintenance cost was incurred on a total number of cars having an actual investment of $43,085, and dividing our sum total of our maintenance cost by our investment record gives a maintenance cost per dollar of investment and equipment. This amounted to 56.92 cents per dollar for the maintenance of the vehicles.

Our depreciation rate on salesmen's cars equals 20%, computed according to the company depreciation rate.

Therefore, the maintenance cost of each car is equal 2531 to 20% of the average investment per car of $624.42, or $124.88 depreciation plus the maintenance cost which, as we have it above, indicated was placed on a per dollar of investment to equalize the expense among different units of 56.92 per dollar investment of $624.42, giving an operation and maintenance cost of $355.42 per salesmen's car, totalling the operating cost per vehicle of $480.30.

Referring next to Respondent's Exhibit 31-L, and continuing: the operating cost per salesman's car was estimated by the proportion of the time that each salesman served on the territory. Therefore, we figure in that manner an operation and maintenance cost per vehicle to add to the salary plus 3% insurance and unemployment tax and the traveling expense as was reported on the top part of Respondent's Exhibit 31-K. This gives a total cost of serving the territory in which the volume of Ned's Auto Supply Company was located, of $3,624.72.

However, not all the time of these individuals was spent on calling on Ned's accounts. It was estimated by Mr. Raupagh and Mr. Blough that Robinson spent 35% of his time at Ned's, of which 7% was on gasoline; Meulenberg spent 25%, of which 5% was on gasoline; Contchie spent 25%, of which 5% was on gasoline. Using these percentage figures against the above expense for each of the individual salesmen's expense, show a cost of selling gasoline to 2532 Ned's Auto Supply for the year 1937 of $200.41.

Dividing this selling cost by Ned's gallonage of 4,240,500 gallons results in a selling cost incident to the Ned's outlets amounting to .005c per gallon.

2533 Q. Now let us stop there a moment, Mr. Boatwright, and referring to Exhibit 31-A, this .005. Does that figure of .005 of a cent appear on Exhibit 31-A and, if so, where?

A. The figure of .005, representing selling costs of serving Ned's Auto Supply outlets is reflected on Respondent's Exhibit 31-A under item 4, titled "Selling Cost," column 2, headed Ned's Auto Supply Company.

Q. Now does that item of .005 of a cent, as a selling cost relating to Ned's have any relation to any comparable figure having a relation to the regular reseller business of the company?

A. I have here a calculation of our selling cost of doing business through the regular reseller channel.

Q. I know you have. I just want you to give us the foundation for that, now. To what figure do you refer?

A. I am referring, now, to Respondent's Exhibit 31-A, item 4, "Selling Cost," shown under the column headed "Regular Reseller Business", of .079c per gallon.

Q. Now have you developed that beginning on the bottom of Exhibit 31-L, and continuing on Exhibit 31-M?

A. I have.

Q. How have you arrived at that figure?

Mr. Austin: May I ask a question, please?

Mr. Hanley: Surely.

Mr. Austin: On page 11 of this report, the part 2534 you have just been over—

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: It is stated there that the percentage of these salesmen's time spent at Ned's, and the percentage on gasoline, was estimated by Mr. Raupagh and Mr. Blough. Is that entirely their estimate?

The Witness: In the discussion which resulted in these figures, they called into consultation the sales manager and his assistant in the reseller division of our company. In other words, men who at that time in 1937 were supervising the function of reseller selling effort.

Mr. Austin: Did you talk to any of these three men themselves, these salesmen, or ask them about it?

The Witness: I did not.

Mr. Austin: Are they still in the employ of the company?

The Witness: I couldn't tell you. However, the estimate of time of a salesman is reported quarterly to the accounting department, and is used as one of the determinates of our allocating costs both as to channels and where necessary as to products. We have, therefore, a pretty good index as to whether or not the estimate of time as given is reasonable.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. As a result of your studies, Mr. Boatwright, and without respect to any particular individual sales-2535 man, do you or do you not know what the usual percentage of time is that is spent by a salesman on the various allocations of his duties?

A. That is an important part of our regular annual studies of profit by product, by channels, by fields, and the result of this analysis results in the sales promotion department frequently re-directing their selling efforts according to the variation of profits; thus, we may find an individual or individuals who are on the payroll as salesmen that are devoting themselves primarily to some function which could be better performed by an office boy or something like that, and not devoting their time and attention to the job of selling merchandise. Therefore these analyses bring out annually the different ratio of effort in different fields by channels; yes, sir.

2536 Mr. Austin: Are these figures as to percentages of time and percentage on different products, are they based on any salesman's reports or time sheets turned in by these salesmen themselves?

The Witness: They are in keeping with reports submitted by salesmen in the Detroit division of time devoted to different products.

Now, as to whether this particular percentage, for instance, of Mr. Robinson, 35 per cent on Ned's outlets is shown on his report, I would say it is not likely. He makes his split of time according to different products.

Does that answer your question?

Mr. Austin: Well, there are two things—different products and different places where he was?

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Austin: Do you know whether the salesman makes a daily report on either one or both of those matters?

The Witness: They make a daily report on where they were.

Mr. Austin: And the amount of time they spent at each place?

The Witness: Yes, sir. They are supposed to.

Mr. Austin: Well, are these percentages of time spent at Ned's based upon any reports of those salesmen or are they based upon your general estimates?

2537 The Witness: They are based upon the general information of the men who were supervising their actions and their functions.

Mr. Austin: Well, how about, for instance, Robinson, who is estimated to have spent 7 per cent on gasoline and 7 per cent of his time while he was at Ned's? Is that based upon any report of the salesman or is that purely an estimate?

The Witness: That is an estimate arrived at by men supervising the salesmen's functions during the year in question?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Who were those men and what positions did they hold?

The Witness: The manager of the division—

Mr. Hanley: Name them if you can.

The Witness. Mr. P. A. Raupagh; Mr. Blough, assistant manager, in 1937 in charge of reseller salesmen and reseller sales; Mr. Bill Lock, sales manager, reseller sales; and his assistant—I am sorry I can't tell you that man's name; I know both the assistant manager, resale, and the assistant manager, wholesale, but I don't know which is which.

2538 Q. Did Mr. Hammer have anything to do with this?

A. No; Mr. Hammer was at that time in the Chicago office.

Mr. Hanley: I will state to your Honor and to the record that these men are all available right here in Detroit if there is any desire on the part of the Government to call them. I will be glad to produce any of them without subpoena if the Government desires to interrogate them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What records did they have to be allocated?

The Witness: Time is allocated among products by the salesmen themselves each quarter of the year, and we use their estimate of time on those products to allocate their costs among products. We do not make an allocation of expense among outlets served by these people. That, I am sure, you will conceive to be an infinitely detailed task. In this particular case these salesmen each had a territory which encompassed approximately 40 reseller outlets, four of which were Ned's. The first reaction I got to the question was that it was too small to find; therefore, they have a feeling that they were over-estimating rather than under.

Mr. Hanley: Of course, your Honor, probably it is of some merit to direct attention to the fact that whatever the allocation is and however it was arrived at it amounts to only .005 of a cent a gallon of gasoline, and it is 2539 very largely unimportant one way or the other, and I think it may be taken as a practical matter that we just didn't have much selling expense with Ned's. We are charged here with having obtained him because we gave him a preferential price. Now, we just didn't have to go around and sell him every week; he was our customer; so we just didn't have this selling expense, that is all there was to it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let's pass on to the next item.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I am not through with this yet, if you please.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: All right. We will continue on this item, then.

Mr. Austin: The very importance of this is because it is so small. Maybe it ought to be larger. This is the Ned's portion. And it is the small ones that do have the importance when they are in that column.

Now, I am not clear yet, Mr. Boatwright, what this 35% of time at Ned's as related to Mr. Robinson is based upon, and if it is not based upon any of the records of the salesman himself, is it based upon the number of stations he had in his territory or the amount of gallonage sold at Ned's and the others, or is it based upon anything of that sort that could be put down in figures?

The Witness: Well, I think I explained in the 2540 testimony that in the discussion of this particular item I asked for the opinions of individuals who were supervising these salesmen at the time this account was being served under this basis. Those individuals have been named. It is predicated upon their judgment upon the number of accounts that were assigned to that salesman, his total territory; and it is predicated also upon their knowledge of the normal split of salesmen's efforts by products as reported in the time split analysis to the accounting department on a quarterly basis.

Mr. Austin: And who makes that report?

The Witness: The salesmen make that report.

Mr. Austin: Is that the salesman's estimate of the time he spends, the portion of his time he spends on each of the various products that he sells during the period?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: Are those reports still available for this period?

The Witness: He makes his estimate of time split on the basis of different products for his total division. He does not attempt a series of perhaps 40 different estimates of time split for 40 different accounts. That report is made and it is recapped quarterly by our accounting department, and is used as a basis for allocating the 2541 expenses referred to by our accounting department, and I do not know whether that particular report is still available for the year 1937, as some of those records we maintained for a six months period, some for a year, some for time immemorial; and whether this particular one is one which we may have on a five-year schedule, I couldn't tell you. I would have to examine the records.

2542 Mr. Austin: You just stated that each one of these salesmen covered a territory with approximately forty accounts in it.

The Witness: That is the normal assignment to this area, yes.

Mr. Austin: Isn't there only one salesman shown here rather than three? In other words one of these men here it says three and a half months, another one four months, and another one four and a half months, so I assumed that those salesmen were salesmen who replaced each other; rather the second replaced the first, and the third replaced the second in the same territory, so that the three of them covered one salesman's territory for a year?

The Witness: That is correct. Except the number of outlets and the volume within a salesman's territory does not remain constant throughout a year, you see.

Mr. Austin: But this is really—in total it is one salesman, isn't it, in one sales territory?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: Now, Ned's had four outlets located in various parts of the city, and that puzzled me a little here about why there is really only salesman's activity for a year shown.

The Witness: Instead of, perhaps, three salesmen you mean?

2543 Mr. Austin: Three or four, yes.

The Witness: No, that I don't think would be at all a practical matter to have three different men running in to one account. I think you will concede that as an ordinary merchandising principle, if you try to cover your individual accounts by one salesman rather than have three different men running into that account. Therefore, even though there were four accounts scattered over the city, it would be much better—

Mr. Hanley: You mean four outlets of the same account?

The Witness: Four outlets of the same account, yes. The salesman calling on Ned's business would be the one in which—in whose territory the headquarters were located, and he would call on Ned's. You will recall that I have stated in the testimony that we did no driveway training, we did no training in merchandising effort on the driveway; the only selling function that was involved was dropping into the headquarters of Ned's Auto Supply on the part of one salesman.

Mr. Austin: Is this schedule made up on that theory that the only selling cost, as selling cost is included here, was in connection with calls at Ned's main office?

The Witness: The items of expense included in this 2544 so-called selling cost, as you are referring to it, are enumerated as being the salaries, the tax, and insurance, the traveling expense, and the car expense incurred by this individual serving this account. In the comparative figure which we shall discuss next I limit the selling costs to the same classification of items.

Does that answer your question, sir?

Mr. Austin: Well, I don't quite get the last statement, but I was only asking here whether or not you were in this territorial analysis with these three salesmen simply referring to the single salesman who had the territory in which Ned's main office is located? Of course, there are three salesmen here, but they were operating at three different times during the year?

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Austin: I see. Now—

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, apropos to the line of questioning that counsel has just now indulged in, I submit it is just a purely practical common sense proposition that none of these salesmen who were doing labor work around Detroit in 1937 sold Ned's a gallon of gasoline on behalf of the Standard Oil Company; this is a bookkeeping figure purely in an effort to try and make a fair allocation of cost. Mr. Raupagh and Mr. Gershenson figured out the business relations between these companies. What 2545 these salesmen may have done from time to time in calling on Ned's has nothing at all to do with the fact whether Ned's were sold gasoline or not. We are just trying to find a time allocation that makes a fair approximation of costs in doing business.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This examination was in response to your invitation?

Mr. Hanley: Absolutely it is. And my remarks were directed merely to the weight of the evidence, whatever the evidence is.

Mr. Austin: Mr. Boatwright, I assume you are proceeding on the next item here in explanation—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Austin, before we proceed, it is now 5:00 o'clock, the witness has been testifying now for more than an hour, and I think we will take an adjournment.

Mr. Austin: I will gladly postpone that question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: At 5:00 p. m. the hearing stands adjourned to be reconvened April 30, 1941, at the hour of 10:00 a. m. in room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(Whereupon, at 5:00 p. m., April 29, 1941, the hearing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned, to reconvene on April 30, 1941, at 10:00 a. m.)

2546 Room 859 Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan,
April 30, 1941.

Met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10 A. M.

Before:

Webster Ballinger, Trial Examiner.

Appearances:

Cyrus B. Austin, Esq., Attorney for the Federal Trade Commission.

Harold R. Hanley, Esq., 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and

Arthur J. Abbott, Esq., of the firm of Abbott, Mac Mahon, and Roberts, 2230 Buhl Building, Detroit Michigan, on behalf of the Respondent.

2547 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

This is a reconvening at 10 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, April 30, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, of Docket 4389 in the case entitled Standard Oil Company.

The last hearing was held in Detroit, April 29, 1941.

The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

You may proceed.

JOHN W. BOATWRIGHT, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Cont'd) by Mr. Hanley.

Q. I think we were discussing, Mr. Boatwright, yesterday, Exhibits 31-L and 31-M, which related to the figure transposed to 31-A under No. 4, "Selling Costs." I think you had explained the .005 of a cent.

A. That is correct.

Q. I think you were engaged in a discussion of the other figures under that item.

A. That is correct.

Q. Will you please continue that discussion?

2548 Mr. Austin: I was about to ask a question last night. Perhaps, before we get onto that next point, there are a couple of things I would like to ask the witness, if I may.

Mr. Hanley: Very well.

Mr. Austin: All right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Before we proceed, may I ask a question? What territory does this survey include?

The Witness: This includes the Detroit area encompassing the boundaries as given by Mr. Raupagh in his testimony. It includes Lansing, Ann Arbor, I think south of Pontiac. The exact dimensions I could not give from memory, but it is the Detroit vicinity.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. It includes a territory, does it not, Mr. Boatwright, that is a division used in keeping the regular routine records of the company?

A. That is correct.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think it is—or, I assume it is the district described by Mr. Raupagh.

Mr. Hanley: That is right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I merely desired to make that inquiry for the record.

Mr. Austin: I might suggest it would be a good idea if we had a map showing that territory or a more 2549 definite description. I don't think Mr. Raupagh's testimony showed the territory beyond saying that it went north of Pontiac and included Ann Arbor and Lansing, and I think he said it went down to the Ohio line. If I had to know where it went or show where it went on the map I don't believe I could do it.

Mr. Hanley: May we dispose of it this way: that we will show it by Mr. Raupagh in detail? He is going on the stand, and he will show it.

Mr. Austin: Well, that can be brought out either by testimony or a map.

Mr. Hanley: If you want a map, we will have a map, but we will show it.

The Witness: We have maps of the territory.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

Mr. Austin: Mr. Boatwright, this item of selling cost that you are on now, in comparing that or referring back to the item of sales promotion, which was No. 2(a) on Respondent's Exhibit 31-A, for identification, in the previous item, that is 2(a), sales promotion, are there any salesmen's salaries or salesmen's time included in that item?

The Witness: In the sales promotional item itself?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

The Witness: No, sir.

Mr. Austin: I wasn't sure of that.

2550 The Witness: There is not.

Mr. Austin: In other words, any selling time or sales promotion of the salesmen is included down here under No. 4, "Selling Costs"?

The Witness: The salary of the salesmen is included only in item 4.

Mr. Austin: Now, one more question on this question of salesmen here. Mr. Robinson and Mr. Meulenberg and Mr. Coutchie, who, according to this outline under subheading 6 IV, served or called upon Ned's Auto Supply Company in 1937. Did those three salesmen call on Ned's Auto Supply Company as a special assignment, that is, were they especially assigned to Ned's or did they call on Ned's as a part of their routine work in selling in a certain territory?

A. In our sales structure, each salesman is definitely responsible for the sales of our company in a given specified area. The Ned's Auto Supply outlets, or, in particular the head or home office of that organization was located in the territory of these men. Any leg work incident to a contract would have been performed by one of these men.

Q. Did you ascertain whether there were any other salesmen assigned to that territory during this period?

A. I did. There was no other salesman other than 2551 these indicated.

Q. And is there a statement here of the territory which those men covered at that time?

A. No, there is not. You mean as a geographical unit?

Q. Yes.

A. There is no such statement. It is merely one of our salesmen's territories in the City of Detroit.

Mr. Austin: I suppose that that information is available in the Detroit office?

Mr. Hanley: If you wish it.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I just suppose, Mr. Boatwright, that is just a limited area within the metropolitan area here in the City of Detroit itself?

A. It is a limited area within the city.

Now, these sales territories are changed from time to time and whereas I think it would be entirely possible to get the territory covered by these men in 1937, I cannot assure that records prevail as to the exact territory and the accounts covered by these men, now, four years ago. At least, we could give a very close approximation of the territorial limitations.

Mr. Austin: You stated yesterday, I think, there were about 40 stations in the territory.

The Witness: That's right.
2552 Our reseller salesmen normally carry a load of about 40 reseller accounts.

Mr. Austin: Well, Judge Hanley, if it is convenient, and you say Mr. Raupagh is going to be on the stand, you might ask him at that time, if you will, to try and give me a statement of the territories in which Ned's—I guess it is the Grand River Store, their head office, is located. It is the territory covered by these three salesmen in 1937 and the stations which they served.

Mr. Hanley: Well, we will do it two ways. If we have the records that show it exactly, we will produce those records, and if we don't have those records, we will develop it from the recollection of Mr. Raupagh as best we can, of course.

Mr. Austin: You have whatever records, I suppose, were available—

Mr. Hanley: We have whatever information Mr. Boatwright used in making this compilation, and we will develop that.

Mr. Austin: I don't know how important it is, but I thought while we were on the subject, I would ask you for it now, and at the time Mr. Raupagh is on the stand he would have it, and not have to go back to the office and have it prepared.

Mr. Hanley: Well, we will do that.

2553 Mr. Austin: That's all I have now. Thank you, Judge.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now can you go ahead, Mr. Boatwright, and explain, I think it is the figure .0079 that has to do with exhibits 31-L and 31-M?

A. Yes.

Referring to Respondent's Exhibit 31-L, starting on the lower part of that page under the caption: "Selling Expense Incurred on Reseller Gallonage Other Than Ned's."

The source of this information is the regular marketing expense sheet from 189 for Detroit for the year 1937.

The salesmen's salaries, including the 3% Federal and Unemployment Insurance Tax, under account No. 1004, as paid in the Detroit division in 1937, amounted to $42,115.74.

The sum total of the traveling expense of these salesmen, as indicated by our subaccount No. 1032 titled: "Traveling Expense—Salesmen," amounted to $3,988.70.

Subaccount 1047 being the operation and maintenance of the vehicles of these salesmen, amounted, in total to $4,740.65, while subaccount 11020, being the depreciation expense on the vehicles used by the salesmen, amounted to $1,646, giving a total of $52,491.09.

2554 Now, we have previously allocated $200.41 of this total for the identical items to the Ned's Auto Supply outlets, so we deducted $200.41 from the above-mentioned total, which leaves us a cost of $52,290.68.

2555 This amount was then divided by tank wagon seller gallonage other than Ned's, amounting to 68,388,527 gallons, which resulted in a per gallon cost of .079c.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Per gallon?

The Witness: Per gallon cost. That is correct.

A. .079 per gallon cost for selling to our regular reseller business was then carried forward to the Respondent's Exhibit 31-A and is shown under item 4, "Selling Cost," first column, "Regular Reseller Business."

Deducting the selling cost assignable to Ned's Auto Supply of .005 of a cent from the selling cost of the regular reseller accounts of .079 of a cent, gives a difference of .074¢ per gallon as representing the difference in our selling costs of our regular reseller business in contrast with Ned's Auto Supply Company.

2556. Q. Will you please proceed, Mr. Boatwright, to the next item which appears on Exhibit 31-A under item 5: "Dispensing Equipment Loaned"; and which appears to be discussed on Exhibit 31-M.

Mr. Austin: Before you do that, Dr. Boatwright, will you tell me how many salesmen there were here whose salaries were included in this computation?

The Witness: All salesmen classified as reseller salesmen.

Mr. Austin: Do you know how many there were?

Mr. Hanley: That appears on Exhibit 31-K.

The Witness: I think not. 31-K includes lubricating salesmen also having cars. You see, only the salesmen serving reseller accounts—it does not appear on any of these exhibits, nor do I have the exact number with me.

Mr. Austin: Well, K only refers to—I see, 69.

The Witness: 69 of the total salesmen, each of whom would have a car, while all salesmen in the calculation that we have just explained is limited entirely to the classification of men which we refer to as reseller salesmen.

Mr. Austin: You don't know how many reseller salesmen there are?

The Witness: I do not have the exact figure.

Mr. Austin: How about this 3% that you have told us what that is several times in other connections, Fed-2557 eral Insurance and Unemployment Insurance Taxes?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: Was that the correct amount in 1937? I was under the impression, without having looked it up, that it hadn't reached that point yet as the employer's contribution, at least.

The Witness: Employer's contribution in 1937 was 3% in the State of Michigan.

Mr. Austin: I see. That is partly Michigan and partly Federal Tax?

The Witness: That is correct, yes.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Was that an item that was actually an out-of-pocket cost paid by the Standard Oil Company?

A. Definitely, yes.

Mr. Austin: Is there any limitation or maximum as to the application of those taxes? For instance, if a man makes a salary over a certain amount, does that tax have to be paid?

The Witness: I think the limitation applies to salaries of $3,000. In other words, the 3% applies to the first $3,000 of income.

Mr. Austin: Weren't any of these men making over $3,000?

The Witness: In the reseller salesman classification?

2558 Mr. Austin: Yes.

The Witness: I don't think so. I would have to check it.

Mr. Austin: If they were, then you wouldn't have the same tax on the excess; is that correct?

The Witness: Quite likely you would not. But for reseller salesmen, the top salary of $250 a month would be a high salary, sir.

Mr. Austin: Is that so?

The Witness: The average salary in the Detroit area would come more close to $220 than it would to $250.

Mr. Austin: Now, in computing the selling expenses for Ned's here on 31-L, it appears that those three salesmen named there only spent part of their time on gasoline. Now, why is it that on 31-M that there is no division made as to time spent on gasoline and time spent on other things to service stations?

The Witness: We make an allocation of the salary that is assignable to the different products and channels, as I explained yesterday, on a time split basis; thus a salesman at the end of each quarter prepares for the accounting department an estimate of the allocation of his time. Let us assume that he spends $10 of his time on Atlas merchandise; that 10% will be applied to his total salary and will be allocated to the Atlas costs as would be shown 2559 on our 189. Let us assume that he spent 30% of his time on motor oil; that would be allocated to the "Other Methods" channel. Our process of allocating among the different channels of distribution meets your objection, because that allocation has already been made. This is not the total salary paid these men, it is merely that portion which is allocated in our regular course of accounting to the reseller business.

Mr. Austin: Of gasoline?

The Witness: Gasolines. There may be a few gallons of kerosene in there, because sometimes a service station will have a barrel in the back or something in there, and our delivery man may make a delivery of 50 gallons of kerosene. But it is truly gasoline representative marketing cost.

Mr. Austin: Now, on 31-L, where the column here refers to the salaries for a certain period of Robinson, Meulenberg, and Coutchie, is that their total salary for that period?

The Witness: Yes. That is the total salary, because you see we apply below the various percentages.

Mr. Austin: Well, then, in other words, you use on 31-M salaries, an allocation has been made thereunder account No. 1004, an allocation has been made to reseller, to sales of gasoline to reseller customers, and that is only 2560 that portion of the salaries of these salesmen?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: Whereas on 31-L the total salary is shown and then an allocation is made in this computation?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: That is all.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I think maybe some explanation will be helpful, Mr. Boatwright, on the subject that Mr. Austin has just been developing. I think you have said that as a matter of routine account, this allocation is made as between the different channels as to gasoline, for instance, and Atlas lines, and so on, which is reflected in account 1004 as shown on 21-M; that is right, isn't it?

A. That is correct.

2561 Q. Now, in making this study where you segregated out of the reseller group one station, specifically Ned's, it is true, is it not, that you had to make an allocation specifically to that one station, which was not reflected on the books?

A. That is right.

Q. And is that not the reason why you show a percentage allocation on Exhibit 31-L and just show a general per book account on No. 31-M?

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor, it is a leading question. I certainly don't think Mr. Boatwright ought to have suggested to him the reasons why he did anything by counsel. And I move that—well, I object to the question.

Mr. Hanley: Well, he knows a great deal more about it than I do, Judge. I just thought that was the fact. If it isn't, I request the witness to put us right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I am going to overrule the objection.

Mr. Austin: Mr. Boatwright has shown a great facility, and ability, I should say, which I sincerely mean, in answering these things, that I would much prefer to have him state his answers, and I am sure he would prefer it.

2562 The Witness: Your Honor, the testimony already given clearly indicates the answer to the question. I did state that on Respondent's Exhibit 31-M the allocation had already been made. While when we attempt to get the cost for an individual account it was necessary that we make an allocation of total to secure the selling cost of that particular account.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner understood the questions asked by Judge Hanley were in the nature of a recapitulation.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. May we proceed to this item No. 5 "Dispensing Equipment Loaned" on Exhibit 31-A, and also on 31-M?

A. Taking next the item of "Dispensing Equipment Loaned" I refer you to Respondent's Exhibit 31-M in the lower part of the page, which is in explanation of the sources of the information and the calculations made.

Q. That is designated by Roman numeral V?

A. Roman numeral V, the sources are designated by Arabic numeral 1, while the procedure follows immediately thereafter.

Q. Will you please explain how you arrive at these several figures under item 5 on Exhibit 31-A?

A. Yes. We obtain from our Detroit office form 16, an itemization of all equipment installed at the Ned's 2563 Auto Supply outlets during 1936, which was owned by the Standard Oil Company. The sum total value of that equipment, as shown by our books, as to the original investment, was $2,878.60. The depreciation rate applicable to this class of capital outlay is established at 4%, giving a depreciation factor chargeable against this equipment of $115.14.

Q. Now, let me ask you if that is the regular and ordinary depreciation rate used on that particular item?

A. It is a regular and ordinary depreciation rate used in calculation of income tax for the Internal Revenue Department.

It is not a true reflection of costs absolutely incurred, because obsolescence on this type is far greater than would be indicated by the rate of 4%.

The next item was the Detroit personal property tax. That tax has a rate of $3.0146 per $100 of investment, giving a personal property tax payment on that particular equipment for the year of $86.76.

Now, in order to obtain the maintenance cost per dollar of investment, the depreciation rate shown on the equipment loan agreements for the Detroit field form 189, amounted to $4,305.86, was expended to 100% to represent the investment in equipment loan agreement, dispensing equipment loaned, which amounted to a total of $107,646.50.

On this investment, the Detroit division spent a total 2564 of $17,144.69 for maintenance, repairs, and so forth, during the year 1937.

Taking our total capital outlay for the Detroit division during that period, and our total maintenance and repair cost, dividing, we find that we spent 15.09¢ per dollar of investment for maintenance and repairs. Ned's investment amounting to $2,876.60 was extended by this maintenance rate to determine a maintenance cost for Ned's particular outlets equalling $457.70 during 1937. Adding these three items, namely, the depreciation on equipment, the personal property tax rate, and the maintenance of the equipment at Ned's Auto Supply outlets, equals a total cost to the Standard Oil of $659.62. This was divided by the gallonage sold to Ned's of 4,240,500, giving a cost per gallon of .016¢. For comparative purpose a similar calculation was made to determine the cost per gallon of dispensing equipment loaned to other reseller outlets.

Q. Are you now referring to Exhibit 31-N?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: Did the witness state what he means by "Loaned" in connection with equipment? I would like to know what kind of a transaction you are talking about when you talk about a loan.

By Mr. Hanley:

2565 Q. Explain it, please, Mr. Boatwright.

A. In a regular operation of a reseller outlet, there is certain equipment owned by the company and is installed at that reseller outlet and we indicate that on our records as being equipment loaned to the reseller outlet. It may be a pump, it may be a tank, it may be a loopster—do you understand what I mean by a loopster?

Mr. Austin: No.

The Witness: A loopster is a tank that comes in two sizes, either in 15-gallons or, I think, it is about 50 gallons. They have a pump at the top and they are used for storing motor oil, and the pump at the top throws one quart at a pump so that we can fill these bottles, you see. This equipment that is placed at these outlets is owned by the company. They are in there for the purpose of providing property inventory facilities to insure that our merchandise, when it reaches a customer's tank, has quality and the true characteristics that we intend our merchandise should have.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. How about the loopster? If that is only oil, it would not be included here, would it?

A. It would not: I was illustrating a type of equipment on gasoline. It might be the pump, it might be the 2566 gasoline storage tank under the ground, and so forth.

Q. Do you know what sort of equipment supplied at Ned's station is included here in this item of $2,787?

A. I know it is identically the same type of equipment entering into that expense.

Q. Was it tanks or pumps, do you know?

A. Do I know whether there were any tanks or pumps?

Q. Yes.

A. I am sure that there were. I am sure that there were pumps.

Q. Isn't that—the loaning or supplying of equipment, the loaning or supplying of equipment common or engaged in to a greater extent on leased stations than it is with station operators who either own their own property or lease it from some other source?

Mr. Hanley: Just a minute, Mr. Boatwright.

I don't know whether, your Honor, that has any materiality at all in this case. I don't think it has, but, certainly, it doesn't have any materiality on cross examination of this witness. He has undertaken to determine the cost by reason of actual equipment and investment in that equipment at Ned's Auto Supply service stations as contrasted with all the investment in similar equipment loaned to all of the rest of the reseller group, irrespective of whether they are lessees or what we call the 451 contract or who they are.

2567 This is a question of cost, not a question of taxes or propriety in practice or loaning equipment.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do I understand there is an objection?

Mr. Hanley: Yes, I do object on the ground it is not proper cross examination. It is not applicable to the subject under consideration, at all.

Mr. Austin: I am only trying to ask at this time, anyway, just certain questions to help obtain a clear understanding of this. I am not attempting to go into any cross examination, really; at least, not at any length.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner thinks it is outside the scope of the direct examination.

Mr. Austin: No, your Honor. I would ask your Honor to reconsider that before you make a ruling because I will have dozens of questions that will be farther removed on cross examination and I would just get nowhere on cross examination at all if your Honor should say this sort of question was too far removed from direct. I really want to say, now, I hope to have great latitude on cross examination and will require it with this witness, to complete the examination.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The examination will be confined to the question of costs.

2568 Mr. Austin: I consider this is very relevant on the question of costs and anything that goes into the nature of these items.

Mr. Hanley: Your Honor, I don't want counsel limited and if the witness knows and can answer this question and it will be of any help to counsel, I am willing he answer it. I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. Austin: I will withdraw the question, Judge. That will make it simpler, now. I would much rather do that than to have a ruling on it now because I don't think it is particularly important at this time but I would be rather alarmed if the objection were sustained on the ground it is not proper cross examination, so I would rather withdraw it and not pursue the subject, if that is agreeable with your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The question is withdrawn.

Mr. Hanley: Have you finished, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Will you go ahead, Mr. Boatwright? I don't know where you were.

A. I think I had just completed the explanation of the per gallon cost of dispensing equipment loaned to Ned's Auto Supply and gave a summary figure of .016¢ per gallon.

This figure is transposed to Respondent's Exhibit 2569 31-A and is shown under item 5, under the second column, being headed "Ned's Auto Supply Company."

Q. Now please explain, Mr. Boatwright, how you have arrived at the other figures appearing on Exhibit 31-A, under item 5, and indicate whether or not in your explanation your are referring to Exhibit 31-N?

A. Referring to Respondent's Exhibit 31-N you will find an explanation of the procedure followed in calculating the cost for dispensing equipment loaned for regular reseller type of accounts. Again the source is taken from form 189 for the Detroit division for the year 1937.

The total charge for subaccount 1070 which we designate as E.L.A. expense, being equipment loaned expense, amounting to $17,144.69.

The depreciation expense on equipment loaned, as indicated by subaccount 1111, was $4,305.86.

Subaccount 1513, entitled "Losses by Dismantling—Out of Pocket Expense—Equipment Loan Agreement," is $672.31 while the personal property taxes on it, $107,646.50 at the prevailing rate in the Detroit area at this time, resulted in a cost of $3,245.11, giving a total equipment loan agreement cost of $25,367.97, from which we deduct the similar items which were allocated to Ned's Auto Supply Company, totaling $659.62, giving us a residual charge incurred against other reseller costs of $24,708.35.

2570 Now this expense was incurred on accounts signed on our agreements numbered 461 and 385.

May I explain those for you, your Honor?

Q. I think you had better. You are going to be asked, eventually, anyhow.

A. Any reseller accounts signed on either of these contracts are purely sales contracts. They are not stations owned and leased to lessees nor are they stations leased outright and then sublet. These are the accounts having a sales contract with our company.

Q. And just one step further: Such an agreement may be had with a purchaser of Respondent's gasoline who owns his own garage or service station or outlet; whatever it may be?

A. Oh, yes.

2571 Q. Indeed, that is where they are used, is it not, Mr. Boatwright?

A. Yes.

Q. Primarily?

A. Primarily this type of an account is a garage, the curbstone account, the small stores, and accounts of that nature.

Q. In the property of which the Respondent has no interest at all?

A. We have no interest in the property.

Mr. Austin: Is that 461 or 385 you are referring to?

Mr. Hanley: That is my understanding of 461.

The Witness: That is the 461.

Mr. Austin: What is the 385?

The Witness: I shall have to get a copy of the contract. I don't recall the particular account the 385 applies to.

Mr. Austin: What is the difference between 461 and 385?

The Witness: That is my response. I would have to review the contracts. I don't recall. We have about six different reseller contracts, and I don't recall the terms of each of them.

A. (Continuing.). The gallonage distributed by these outlets was secured by deducting the volume sold by 2572 Ned's Auto Supply Company, company owned service stations—leased, and privately owned service stations—leased from the total tank wagon sales through the reseller channel. The residual volume was 26,987,052 gallons.

Therefore, dividing the cost of $24,708.35 by the 26,987,052 results in a cost per gallon for dispensing equipment loaned of .092.

This amount is carried forward again in Respondent's Exhibit 31-A and shown under item 5, first column, titled "Regular Reseller Business."

The difference between the dispensing equipment loaned cost for our regular reseller business of .092, a similar cost incurred at Ned's of .016, gives a difference of our marketing cost on a per gallon basis of .076.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, will you proceed, please, Mr. Boatwright, to item 6, appearing on 31-A titled "Advertising Cost."

Mr. Austin: I have a couple of questions, if you please, I am going to ask you on this point we have just been on to try to clear up this explanation on—rather, to amplify the explanation on page 31-A. That gallonage figure, Mr. Boatwright.

Examination on ~~Voir~~ Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. When you referred to the 26,000,000 gallons, it 2573 says: "—secured by deducting the volume sold by Ned's Auto Supply Company, company-owned service stations—leased," Now, that means, where the company owned the property and leased the stations?

A. That's right.

Q. "Privately owned service stations—leased." What are privately owned service stations—leased?

A. Just as the name indicates. Our reseller business is divided largely to these various classifications mentioned. We may own outright the property and lease the property to an operator-individual called, in this case, the lessee.

Let us assume that some individual having a desirable corner location decides it would be a good capital investment for him to build his own gasoline retail outlet. Frequently, in the construction of such an outlet, the property owner will attempt to make a lease of that property outright to some petroleum company, and in this case, we may be the original lessor of the property. Not being in the retail business, we, in turn, sublet that property. According to our classification, that becomes a privately owned service station—leased.

Q. That is, you have leased it from the owner and subleased it to the operator?

A. That is correct.

2574 Q. Well, I take it from these schedules that the company doesn't receive any rental on this equipment from tanks or anything that is supplied to this type of station.

A. Oh, no.

Q. You are positive of that, are you?

A. Quite positive.

Q. Is that why the leased stations are not included here?

A. Yes. It would not have been a true calculation had I included the leased stations.

Q. Because of the rental?

A. Because we get an income on those. I had to limit it to this particular class of distributing outlets.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. To clarify that, Mr. Boatwright: when a station is leased, it is leased with the equipment; is that not true?

A. That's right.

Q. And the lessee pays a rent for the whole ball of wax, so to say?

A. That's it.

Q. The pumps, the tanks, and everything that is there?

A. He re-leases a retail outlet, which is an entire unit. It would not have been a true calculation had I included this type of outlet in that classification.

Mr. Austin: Thank you.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a recess for five minutes.

(A short recess was taken.)

2575 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I think, Mr. Boatwright, we had reached item No. 6 Exhibit 31-A entitled "Advertising Cost," which is also dealt with on Exhibit 31-O; will you please explain how you arrived at the figures which appear on Exhibit 31-A under that denomination?

A. Yes. Referring to Respondent's Exhibit 31 we took the following expense items from our marketing expense statement 189 for the tank wagon reseller channel which were divided by the tank wagon reseller gallonage for the year 1937. Advertising costs incurred at Ned's, together with the gallonage sold at these outlets, were deducted from both the cost and the volume figures. The results were as follows:

Our account No. 1005, being "Salaries—Advertising" in the Detroit field, of $3,637.34, to which was added 3 per cent Federal, Old Age, Unemployment Insurance tax, giving a total of $3,746.46.

The traveling expense incurred by the advertising representative is shown in our account No. 1035 to the extent of $246.61.

The operation and maintenance of vehicles used, it would be a passenger car or an advertising truck, shown in our account 1048, amounted to $360.16.

2576 Depreciation expense on vehicles used in advertising, as shown in our subaccount 1103, amounted to $107.90.

These four items total $4,461.13. To this was added our advertising account 1075, being the total advertising costs of an "All Other" nature, other than the ones enumerated.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do the words "Including ELA" mean?

The Witness: In particular, that refers to jewel globes placed on equipment at Equipment Loaned Agreement accounts. We classify the jewel globes at the top of our pumps as being an advertising expenditure.

The sum total of this account 1075 is $154,635.04, which gives a total advertising cost, tank wagon reseller charge, Detroit area, of $159,096.17. From this we deduct the advertising cost incurred at Ned's Auto Supply outlets totalling $1,065.42, giving a net cost of advertising of $158,030.75. When we divide this amount by the tank wagon reseller gallonage of 66,388,527, we secure an advertising cost per gallon of .238¢.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Will you explain the term used by you "Detroit area"?

The Witness: Again I am referring to the Detroit sales division. Wherever I mention Detroit, I am referring to the territory as explained in Mr. Raupagh's 2577 testimony, the limitations of the Detroit field, which is the Detroit metropolitan area and a surrounding zone, which is our regular sales division, and our books are established on that basis.

Now, to continue the explanation on 31-O of the advertising expense incurred at Ned's outlets, our procedure here was to get a list of all dealer signs or any other advertising material, which was obtained from the records of the advertising representative in the Detroit division. Our advertising representative in any given field is charged with the responsibility of maintaining records on every piece of advertising equipment that is in existence in the area. Thus he has a list at any given time of every sign, where that sign is installed, and so forth. It was considered that all of the expense occasioned by equipment installed or placed at the Ned's Auto Supply outlets was chargeable to gasoline except the 28 x 44 frames, and to some extent; therefore, our figures are overstated due to the fact that some of the expense should have been chargeable to other products.

2578 By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Let us understand that, Mr. Boatwright. Does that mean that you have overcharged, in your judgment, gasoline to some extent and allocated a higher figure to Ned's cost than perhaps would be justified if a more detailed allocation were attempted?

A. Yes. To illustrate: In the calculation on advertising costs of Ned's Auto Supply we charged the sum total of all of the signs installed at these outlets, with the single exception that I mentioned the 28 by 44 signs, to gasoline, and in addition we charged them off on the basis of one year. A Standard-service sign, which you gentlemen have probably seen at the outlets is installed—it has a normal life on the average of seven years—it is a sign which advertises Standard service and represents not only gasoline but motor oils, and other products that we have available at our outlets. You could not in this case have allocated with any degree of accuracy four or five signs between different products. Therefore we charged all of it against advertising.

Now, the cost of these items was obtained from our advertising department in Chicago. The computation was as follows:

We had four Standard service signs at $75 per sign installed; we had one Standard service sign at $50

2579 installed; during the course of the year '37 we had furnished two thousand maps per outlet, at a cost of .179c per map, for a total map cost of $143.20.

In the year 1937 we had certain "Point of Sale" advertising material, which according to our advertising department was allocated to the different fields on an outlet basis. This "Point of Sale" advertising material for our total company was represented by the items of banners, games, and displays—

Q. Now, that "Point of Sale", Mr. Boatwright, tell the Court please just what you mean by that term.

2580 A. It is a name which we give to a certain type of advertising expenditure. To illustrate: I think in the City of Detroit at the present time, are canvas banners suspended between posts on the driveway urging the spring change-over from the winter motor oils to the summer or lighter grade oils. Any of these signs of this nature we merely classify them as "Point of Sale Advertising"; they are distributed purely on an outlet basis; gallonage, in other words, has nothing to do with that distribution.

Does that explain that, sir?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

A. (Continuing) Taking this total of "Point of Sale Advertising" of $143,393.52—

Mr. Austin: Will you explain to us the other items, games and displays, while you are at that point?

The Witness: Yes. During 1937 we had, oh, certain give-away games. I don't recall the exact games that we had that particular year, but they were games that could be given to children of customers on the driveway, or it might have been a kite, as a display item, or it might have been a little paper hat to give to youngsters, or something of that type.

Mr. Austin: Were those distributed to all stations in Detroit? Is that same thing included back here on page 31-O in "Advertising Costs"?

2581 The Witness: Yes, that would be included in account 1075 on the preceding page.

Mr. Austin: All right.

A. (Continuing) As I stated, these items are distributed and allocated to the various fields on an outlet basis. Therefore, this figure was divided by the total outlets by the company, which equalled a figure of $6.23 per outlet.

Mr. Austin: Will you tell us what displays are, Mr. Boatwright? You told us about banners and games.

The Witness: Yes. I am trying to think of any displays that may have been in existence that particular year; I am sorry I can't give you exact illustrations, but if you have a card cut out which you place in the window of a retail outlet, or if your have, as we do have from time to time, some display which you place on the pump or on the globe of the pump, it would be in this particular expense item.

Mr. Austin: Is it of a permanent nature or is it something that is used for a short time? I mean as distinguished from globes and signs, I want to find out what are the displays.

The Witness: No. As a rule, these displays are only used for particular campaigns. Let us say you are having a spring campaign. Now, at the present time we 2582 have the Ten Star spring tune-up campaign at our particular outlets. Now, that might involve, first, a banner across the drives; secondly, it might involve certain cut-outs for display purposes. In this particular campaign we are not giving away any games, but in others, in '37, we did have some games which were given out too at that time. All of this is advertising which will be associated with a campaign that might be in progress at any time.

Does that meet your question?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

2583 A. (Continuing) Now, there were four Ned's Auto Supply outlets, so our cost per outlet of $6.33 was extended by the number of outlets of Ned's Auto Supply, giving us a cost of $25.32 for "Point of Sale" advertising at Ned's outlets during 1937.

There was one sign of $750 cost of the company, which was written off in a 19-months period, and 12/19s of that cost is included as the advertising, amounting to $473.68.

We had three pumps at three of the outlets requiring nine jewel globes, and five pumps at the fourth outlet requiring five jewel globes. The average cost per jewel globe is approximately $5.23. The reason I say it is approximately is that the Solite globe is less than $5.23. That is the only exception. Giving us a total cost for jewel globes of $73.22, or a total advertising expense incurred at Ned's of $1,065.42. When this amount is divided by Ned's gallonage of 4,240,500, it equals a cost per gallon of .025c. This figure likewise was carried forward to the summary in Respondent's Exhibit 31-A, and is shown under item 6 "Advertising Cost" second column headed "Ned's Auto Supply Company." Deducting the advertising cost incurred at Ned's of .025 from the advertising cost for our regular reseller business of .238 leaves a difference of marketing cost assignable to this item of .213. Recapitulated the third column showing "Differences of Marketing Costs" adds to a total of .529.

2584 By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, Mr. Boatwright, you have explained a number of costs which you have indicated you gave consideration in connection with the regular reseller business of our company in Detroit and also gave consideration in connection with Ned's Auto Supply Company in Detroit. Are there any costs of which you have knowledge that were sustained by the Standard Oil Company which are not reflected in the various figures which you have discussed and which are summarized on Exhibit 31-A?

A. May I explain that Respondent's Exhibit 31-A recapitulates the differences in marketing costs on only certain selected costs incurred by this company?

In addition to those costs which find their recapitulation on Exhibit 31-A, there are certain other reseller costs which could not be allocated on an accurate basis, and, in addition to those which could not be allocated on an accurate basis, there are certain other items of marketing expense that just don't seem to be influenced in any way, shape, or form, or have no bearing on this cost comparison.

Q. Well, do those other items to which you now refer apply to the Respondent's costs of marketing gasoline in Detroit?

A. They are definitely a part of our costs.

2585 Q. Now, do you have any exhibit which specifically refers to those excluded items of cost?

A. I have an exhibit which has been indicated as Respondent's Exhibit 31-Q, which is an itemization of various marketing expense items in the tank wagon reseller channel, only which have not been split between cost incurred in doing business through Ned's and in our regular tank wagon reseller channels.

Q. Are those costs, that are indicated on Exhibit 31-Q, excluded from the figures appearing on Exhibit 31-A, applicable to both regular reseller business and Ned's?

A. They are.

Q. So, do we correctly understand that they just weren't considered at all, so far as making up these figures that you have testified to are concerned?

A. They are not considered at all.

Q. Now, before I ask you to explain the several items that appear on Exhibit 31-Q, I will ask you what is your opinion as to whether or not a substantial part of that cost might fairly be allocated to the reseller business other than Ned's?

Mr. Hanley: Perhaps that is badly framed. I think I will withdraw that question.

2586 By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Regarding the matter on a gallonage basis, on a unit gallon basis, Mr. Boatwright, in your judgment and opinion, if this cost on Exhibit 31-Q could be allocated to individual gallons, what is your opinion as to whether gallons other than Ned's would have a higher or a lower allocation of cost than Ned's?

A. Basing my answer purely upon my experience and knowledge of the items entering into these accounts, the gallonage sold through the regular reseller accounts would carry a substantially greater proportion of these charges than would gallonage sold to the Ned's Auto Supply outlets.

Q. Then what is the fact, Mr. Boatwright, assuming that you had been able to allocate the expense indicated on 31Q; what would have been the result as to whether or not it would have increased or decreased the regular reseller costs that you have shown on Exhibit 31-A?

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor. There has been no allocation made of these items and if they weren't allocated, or couldn't be allocated, then I submit it is immaterial to state what would have happened if something had been done which could not be done. No allocation was made and I submit either it should be made or the items should be abandoned.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If there is no sufficient 2587 basis for allocation, what basis could this witness have for his answer to your question?

Mr. Hanley: Well, if the Court please, we could have made an allocation. I submit that this just demonstrates that the witness has been extremely conservative in his allocation of costs. These costs which I will ask him in a moment to explain in detail are a cost of marketing gasoline. Now they are a cost of marketing gasoline to everybody in Detroit to whom gasoline is sold. It is the witness' opinion that a greater proportion of those costs per gallon is allocable to gallons sold to others, than to Ned's.

Now he says he hasn't undertaken to make that allocation in dollars and cents because these things are overall costs and it is difficult to break them down but just as a matter of demonstrating the conservativeness of his figures, we think we are entitled to ask him this question. He may not know exactly in dollars and cents what the allocation should be but I understand he does have an opinion as to which type of gallonage would be most heavily freighted with this cost. We are not advancing it in terms of dollars and cents but we do say that if he has left out a cost in this calculation which is heavy on gallonage other than Ned's, that it demonstrates the utmost conservatism in the calculation and that we are entitled to show it for that reason.

2588 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The statement that he gives would be so indefinite as to amount, that it would serve no useful purpose, would it?

Mr. Hanley: Maybe I am asking the question a little bit prematurely. I will ask him now to explain the several items that appear on Exhibit 31-Q, and then I think it will become apparent to the Court.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Your question at this time, then, is withdrawn?

Mr. Hanley: I will withdraw that question.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Will you please go ahead and explain those items, Mr. Boatwright?

A. Surely.

Mr. Austin: I would like to make an objection to the record of even going ahead and making an explanation of these items, because this 31-Q states, in the very first sentence: "No exact allocation of these items can be made." Now, if no allocation can be made, then I can't see that an explanation of the items or a statement of them in the record would, in any way, help the Respondent's case, the Respondent having the burden on cost justification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The statement is that no exact allocation can be made.

The Witness: May I speak to this general question, your Honor? 2589

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes, you may make a statement.

The Witness: The reason that statement of "No exact allocation of these items can be made" was put in the exhibit, was because this pertains to the time period of 1937.

We do not, in our regular bookkeeping requirements, have the necessary time study based on the year 1937 to accurately break these figures down. This is time passed and experience passed, and we do not have any records upon which we could break these down and defend them, as we have all the other items enumerated.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will overrule the objection and reserve the right to counsel to move to strike.

The Witness: Should I continue?

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. You may go ahead and explain Exhibit 31-Q, Mr. Boatwright.

A. The Exhibit 31-Q, under Roman numeral VII, offers a schedule of marketing expense items which are incurred on both Ned's Auto Supply volume and regular reseller channel, but to a lesser extent on Ned's volume than on regular tank wagon reseller business.

2590 As previously indicated in the testimony, an exact allocation of these items cannot be made. It is our opinion, based on knowledge of the functions for which these items of expenditure were incurred, that our regular reseller business is responsible for a greater portion of this cost than would be represented by the proportion of gallonage done through these regular outlets. They are enumerated separately to show the conservative nature of the cost comparison set forth in Exhibit A, indicated as Respondent's Exhibit 31-A.

2591 Q. Now referring you to the first column entitled "Account Number," on Exhibit 31-Q. Does that refer to regular, routine and current accounts that are kept by the Standard Oil Company and were kept in 1937?

A. It does.

Q. In respect of this entire group of exhibits, 31-A through and inclusive of 31-Q, is it true that all of these figures relate to the gasoline reseller channel of distribution in Detroit?

A. It does. It relates to the tank wagon reseller gasoline sales channel.

Q. And have you, in these computations, excluded costs incurred in connection with the distribution of other products?

A. Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You say it relates to tank wagon. Does that also include the tank car deliveries?

The Witness: No. This is the tank wagon reseller channel marketing cost.

Mr. Austin: Which item are you referring to, now, Mr. Boatwright?

The Witness: All items that we have given numbers of various expense accounts.

Mr. Austin: All the way clear through the thing?

The Witness: All the way through.

2592 Mr. Austin: I thought you were on 31-Q?

The Witness: I am, sir; and any account number therein indicated. I have taken as the dollar amounts only that portion which is indicated on our marketing expense statement under the tank wagon reseller channel only.

Mr. Austin: Nothing for tires, or anything else of that sort?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Austin: Or oil?

The Witness: No. That is excluded.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now haven't you done that throughout all of these figurations appearing on Exhibit 31-A all through and inclusive of 31-Q?

A. I have.

Q. So there are no figures here, if I understand you rightly, Mr. Boatwright, that deal with the costs of the sale of products other than gasoline in Detroit.

A. With the single exception that was mentioned previously in the testimony: That in some cases where our reseller outlets do carry refined oil.

Q. That is, kerosene?

A. Kerosene, and do have a barrel at their outlet and do receive shipments, maybe of 50-gallon quantities, it is 2593 impossible to segregate the cost on that particular small quantity. I did state, I think, in the testimony, that these were truly gasoline marketing costs. They are truly representative of the gasoline marketing costs.

Q. That kerosene thing: What is the fact as to whether or not that is so trivial that if you could segregate it, it wouldn't have any effect on these figures?

A. That is the reason for my answer as given. It is so trivial that in all true senses of the word, the costs that I have indicated are the truly representative costs for the distribution of gasoline.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, as a result of your study of this situation in Detroit, and the business done by the Standard Oil Company with Ned's and with other resellers in Detroit, were you able to, and did you arrive at any opinion as to whether or not the type of business that the Respondent was doing with Ned's was more, or less, profitable to the Respondent by reason of lesser costs, than was the type of business being done by the Respondent with other resellers in Detroit?

A. I did so reach a conclusion.

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor—

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Will you state your conclusion?

Mr. Austin: —I object to the last question as 2594 irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

Mr. Hanley: I think that question was answered, Judge.

The Witness: I merely answered to the effect that I had reached a conclusion.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. That you had formed an opinion.

A. I had formed an opinion.

Mr. Hanley: Then I asked him to state his conclusion?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will hear from counsel on that.

Mr. Austin: Well, I don't see that it makes any difference on the question of cost justification whether or not the Respondent made a profit or didn't by giving Ned's a half a cent better price. That is a question which goes to the price charged for gasoline, as well as to the cost of sale and what the Respondent's reasons were for giving Ned's a half a cent differential is entirely immaterial and whether it found it was a profitable deal or whether they found it was not.

Mr. Hanley: I didn't ask him whether we made a profit, or not. I didn't ask him that, your Honor. I don't 2595 know whether we made a profit, or not. I don't know whether he knows. I asked him if it was not more profitable for the Respondent to do this type of business because of a lesser cost, than doing business with other resellers. I don't know whether we made a profit or not and I didn't ask him that and I don't intend to ask him that.

I am asking him to put it in his simplest terms: Whether or not, in the judgment of this witness, that he found as a result of this study, that our company could sell a gallon of gasoline to Ned's at less cost to our company, at less selling cost to our company, than we could sell a gallon of gasoline to other resellers in Detroit. That certainly goes right to the issue that is involved in this lawsuit, it seems to me.

2596 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

A. I stated that I had reached a conclusion. With the selling costs incurred in doing business with Ned's, as compared with selling costs of doing business with our regular reseller outlets, business done with the Ned's in the year 1937 was more profitable to the Standard Oil than business done through our regular reseller outlets.

Mr. Hanley: At this time, if your Honor please, the Respondent offers in evidence the Exhibits which have been marked, for identification, as Respondent's Exhibits 31-A, B, C, D, E, F, G, H, I, J, K, L, M, N, O, P, and Q.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any objection?

Mr. Austin: I have a couple more questions to ask here, that I didn't get in as we went over the latter part of this, along the line of the previous questions.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Turning to page 31-Q, Dr. Boatwright, that first item there, under account 1000.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you state some of the salaries, or can you tell me one of the salaries that is included in that list?

A. I can tell you the positions, but I cannot tell you the salary of a single man entering into that make-up.

2597 Q. Well, the position, then.

A. Surely. Under the classification included in our subaccount 1000 we find salaries of superintendents of construction; superintendents of equipment; superintendents of maintenance; plant supervisors; managers and assistant managers of the individual fields.

Q. Would "manager" be Mr. Raupagh?

A. It would.

Q. Take Mr. Raupagh's salary, for example. How is that salary divided and allocated as between reseller gasoline costs and other gasoline costs, and costs of sale of other materials?

A. It is allocated on an all-gallonage basis.

Q. As to gasoline?

A. As to gasoline and refined oils and tractor fuels. You see, when we get into the consuming channel, it becomes, there, a sum total of your gasolines, your tractor fuels, of rural sales of refined oils, and things of that sort. Therefore, his salary is allocated upon an all-gallonage basis of the petroleum products.

Q. Doesn't the company sell other things besides gasoline and oil here in Detroit?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. How would the allocation be made of those?

A. It is made only on the all-gallonage basis.

2598 Q. Gallonage refers to liquids.

A. That is correct.

Q. How about other things: accessories, tires?

A. Greases, of course, are translated into gallons. Accessories and tires were introduced by our company long after we were in the petroleum business and of this particular item there is no charge made against the accessory line of merchandise for Mr. Raupagh's salary. To that extent, it is regarded as an increment of business.

Q. An increment of business?

A. Yes. The accessory line is regarded, as I say, as far as Mr. Raupagh's salary and the other gentlemen I have enumerated here, as far as their salaries are concerned; they were incurred prior to the introduction of this line, and their cost is still spread among the different channels on that basis today.

Q. You mean in 1937 you didn't sell batteries and tires?

A. I do not. I mean we did. I mean, in spreading our cost, we still spread their particular cost on a gallonage basis.

Under Mr. Raupagh's supervision there is a tire man who works entirely on the promotion of the Atlas line of merchandise. His salaries and expenses and his costs are in one of these items we have charged. It is charged wholly and purely to the Atlas line of merchandise.

2599 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Now, at 12:10 P. M., the hearing stands in recess until 1:30 P. M.

(Thereupon at 12:10 a recess was taken, to reconvene at 1:30 o'clock P. M.)

2600 Afternoon Session.

1:30 P. M.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

Mr. Hanley: I am not sure what is the last thing on the record.

(The last question and answer were read.)

Mr. Hanley: Have you any further questions, Mr. Austin?

Examination on Voir Dire (Cont'd.) by Mr. Austin.

Q. Dr. Boatwright, will you turn to page P, or 31-P, in the middle of the page there is an item for $750 for a sign for a period of 19 months; why was that amortized over a period of 19 months? Doesn't it have a longer life than that?

A. That sign was sold to the Ned's Auto Supply Company at the end of 19 months. We had our investment in it only for a period of 19 months. Therefore, 12/19 of our cost was amortized in the year 1937.

Q. On the top of that same page is four Standard service signs at $75 each, and one Standard service sign of $50. Now, am I correct in assuming that signs of that same character and also jewel globes, which are mentioned on the same page, that such signs and globes are also included opposite account 1075 on 31-O, for service stations other than Ned's?

2601 A. That is correct.

Q. Why are those signs and globes charged at cost value as an expense rather than being charged as an item of maintenance and depreciation? Instead of being capitalized and an amount charged for depreciation and maintenance, as was done in the case of the loaned equipment?

A. The life and the tenure of the signs is not equal to the life and tenure of a pump, as an illustration. You see, those globes may not actually be broken for a period of quite a number of years, but a jewel globe becomes dim, it has to be taken down. It has to be sent back to the factory, and it has to be replaced. To reconstruct a globe is about the same cost as to buy a new globe. It is not quite as great. These items in total that you have enumerated are items of such a small nature that it is not logical to capitalize them and to charge depreciation rates as we have the other equipment.

Q. Would that statement you have just made apply to signs? I notice these are $75 cash; at least the four specified here?

A. Yes. There is, with the signs—the $75 includes the cost of installation. You are acquainted with the sign. It is the large bracket that stands out on the curb before an outlet. That sets in a concrete base. It is wired. Part of the $75 is the labor of installation.

2602 Nextly, the sign face is enameled. They may become chipped or dim with the passage of a few years, and we have to replace the face of that. It isn't an item, I believe, which normally would be capitalized in any business.

Q. Am I correct, then, in stating that those Standard service signs are charged as an expense at the time when they are installed, or if there is a replacement, at the time they are replaced?

A. We do so charge them as a marketing expense item.

Q. In your opinion, is such an expense a direct expense which could be charged directly against the service station where they are installed? That's what was done here, as to Ned's, wasn't it, as to these four?

A. Absolutely. Yes, I think that is the logical direct charge against the outlet.

Q. I should think so, and I just wondered whether you were making any distinction in that respect as to these signs for Ned's and any other signs that might be installed some place else?

A. No, we do not. If we have a large, spectacular sign, as we do at a service station in St. Louis, I would say no, but signs of this nature are a direct charge to this outlet.

Q. How about this $750 sign?

A. That is a Neon sign. We have several of those 2603 in the Detroit area. We have different sized signs and different types of signs. It is merely a different size and different type of installation.

Q. Do you know where any of the other Neon signs are located in the Detroit area?

A. I couldn't name them, but I have seen them since I have been in Detroit here. I have seen them on the streets. You probably have seen them at several stations.

Q. Matters such as these games and displays and maps. I see there were 2,000 maps here. That is the number that was actually turned over to Ned's by the Standard Oil Company during the year 1937, is it, Mr. Boatwright?

A. That on maps is the estimate of the advertising representative in the Detroit division who had charge of the distribution. We do not keep a record for four years on the exact number of maps per outlet, no.

Q. Who is the representative who has charge of that distribution?

A. I don't know his name.

Q. Is he the same man that has charge of the distribution of games and displays and other advertising material of that sort?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said that that was his estimate; this 2,000.

A. That's right.

2604 Q. How did you get that estimate?

A. I discussed it with him.

Q. Oh, you know who he is, but you don't remember his name?

A. That is correct. I don't recall his name. I discussed it with him and I asked him if he would review his 1937 records.

Q. Maybe as long as I am asking that question, if it is agreeable with the Examiner, Mr. Raupagh might supply that name.

Mr. Hanley: Who is it, the advertising representative?

The Witness: The advertising representative.

Mr. Hanley: Who is it, Mr. Raupagh?

Mr. Raupagh: James Quick.

The Witness: James Quick, is the name.

Examination on Voir Dire (Cont'd) by Mr. Austin.

Q. Do you know, or did Mr. Quick tell you what the basis for distribution of such material is, between the stations? How does he determine what banners or how many maps to give to a particular station?

A. Well, there is no problem involved, of course, on banners, because that is merely according to the number of outlets or dealers. That is purely a driveway problem. A service station has a driveway. Therefore, 2605 the number of banners automatically takes care of it self. He knew the number of banners that we furnished that year. That is apparent in our advertising records.

Q. Does every service station get a banner?

2606 A. Oh, yes. Every driveway of every drive-in service station all have them.

The number of maps is allocated, in a field, on a gallonage basis. Two thousand maps for this one outlet is an unusual volume of maps and it is because of the large gallonage it is as large a figure as it is.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Is it or is it not a fact Mr. Boatwright, Ned's may have gotten many less than two thousand maps?

A. It is.

Q. And that two thousand is determined upon the basis of their gallonage and not upon the basis of how many maps they may actually have gotten?

A. That is correct.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: May he not have received more than two thousand?

The Witness: It is a possibility. However, I raised that question with Mr. Quick, in discussing this, and he said he was satisfied that he had placed the estimate high enough so it would not be an understatement of our supplies in that respect.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Turning to page 31-O, there is an item there opposite account No. 1075 of $154,635.04; would it be pos-

2607 sible for you to prepare and submit a breakdown of that item setting forth all of the items of cost which—or all of the items, rather, which went into that total—both as to amount and as to the character of the item?

A. That would be perfectly possible. It could not be done from Detroit records. It would have to done from the general office records in Chicago.

Q. Have you any idea of the total number of items entering into that figure?

A. It would be a rank guess. I would prefer not to guess on the witness stand.

Q. I wondered if you could do it within—

A. I prefer not to guess, because this is a classification of expenses. And it would be purely a guess. I don't know how many newspapers we use in the area, as an illustration, and yet each newspaper would be a separate billing.

2608 Q. Well, Dr. Boatwright, that item, as you know, is about 97% of the total cost charged there against service station advertising in Detroit, and the other 3% is explained, but the 97% has no explanation on this list, and it would probably be of considerable help to the Commission in analyzing this—it certainly would to be—to have a breakdown of that statement. Certainly, at least, into major items. You referred to newspapers. Of course, you could put in one item for newspaper advertising. I would want to know where at least. If it was advertising in different cities, I would want to know that. I assume it is Detroit.

Mr. Hanley: First, that question is objected to on the ground that it assumes a percentage which has not been testified to by the witness. There is no objection to the question on that ground if the witness is willing to accept the percentage. I just don't know.

Mr. Austin: I haven't asked any question.

Mr. Hanley: Just a moment, please.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understand there is no question pending.

Mr. Hanley: Secondly, it is objected to—.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: There is no question pending.

Mr. Hanley: There is a question.

2609 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question, then.

(The following was read by the reporter:

"Question: Well, Dr. Boatwright, that item, as you know, is about 97% of the total cost charged there against service station advertising in Detroit, and the other 3% is explained, but the 97% has no explanation on this list, and it would probably be of considerable help to the Commission in analyzing this—it certainly would to me—to have a break-down of that statement. Certainly, at least, into major items. You referred to newspapers. Of course, you could put in one item for newspaper advertising. I would want to know where at least. If it was advertising in different cities, I would want to know that. I assume it is Detroit.")

Mr. Hanley: I assume that is a question. If it isn't, I move it be stricken as just an argument.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner concludes it is in the form of a question.

Mr. Hanley: Then, I would like to continue with my objection.

Mr. Austin: I deny it is a question. I don't think there is any question pending.

Mr. Hanley: Then I move it be stricken as an argument and statement volunteered by counsel, and has 2610 no purpose in the record.

Mr. Austin: The purpose of the statement is simply telling the witness what I want. Awhile ago I asked him if he could give me a complete break-down of this item. And I was simply going into, to some extent, the reasons for asking it, and the latter part of it was directed to what we wanted.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion to strike is overruled.

Mr. Hanley: Then I would like to continue with the objection.

Secondly, the witness has testified he is not prepared to make the break-down which is suggested by counsel in his statement or question, whatever it may be. But the Respondent at this time offers to open its books to the Commission for examination as to this item or any item which may have been included in or discussed in respect of any of the exhibits heretofore offered, including 31-A to 31-Q.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner will ask the witness a question.

With reference to item No. 1075: "Advertising Costs—Other Costs (including ELA)", can you furnish a break-down of that item?

The Witness: I cannot furnish that from Detroit. I would have to break down that particular item in our 2611 office in Chicago.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But that could be done?

The Witness: It can be done.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: How much effort will it require?

The Witness: I couldn't answer that question, Judge, without reviewing the records.

May I ask how detailed a break-down would be required on that?

Mr. Austin: Could Mr. Warmack answer that, or could we go off the record on that point?

Mr. Hanley: Let's answer it on the record, but we have no objection to Mr. Warmack making the answer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Warmack: I should think that this item of advertising appearing on Respondent's Exhibit 31-O and the item amounting to $154,635.04 should be broken down to the extent that the major items included in that amount, that is, items of advertising, would be shown separately, but maybe not to the extent of going down to every cent. In making that analysis, I rather think that it would be well to picture this advertising—this particular cost of advertising—as it applies to the Detroit area, or district, in total, which would probably be much more than $154,000, and then make the separation or let the separation be shown 2612 as between gasoline and other products supported by information with respect to how that separation was made. Then, picking up the question that is applicable to the gasoline products, that portion which has been applied to resellers. If we have that information, we certainly can appraise the situation properly, I think.

Mr. Hanley: Well, if your Honor please, do I understand that this is a request of the Respondent that we furnish additional figures on this thing? If it is, we will furnish them, but we want to know if it is a request for figures. Of course, we have to know what figures are desired.

2613 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Has Mr. Warmack sufficiently indicated what he desires?

Mr. Hanley: I don't know. I will ask the witness.

Do you understand that request, Mr. Boatwright?

The Witness: The figure as requested—the information as requested would not be a true reflection of our advertising cost in this area. To take one simple illustration: If we advertise in the Detroit Free Press, it would be an unfair charge to charge the total of that advertising cost to gasoline business in the Detroit area. Our process of allocating is to allocate the costs of these large metropolitan areas on a circulation basis by counties. Thus if the Detroit Free Press extends over into our sales division in Saginaw or in Grand Rapids, it would be a loading of the cost to charge that entire amount to the Detroit area.

If you would enumerate rather than the method in which you have stated, that you would like some such a breakdown as newspapers, wherein we have made what we regard as the most logical and practical allocation we can among the different sales fields, outdoor, radio, stamps, signs; in that manner specify types of expenses incurred, I think we would be much more nearly able to comply with your request.

2614 Mr. Warmack: Of course, you understand, Dr. Boatwright, that I could only know in a general way what is included in this advertising from what experience I have had in the handling of similar items of cost. And we might say this, that all we would like and what we need in the Commission in order to appraise the situation properly and give it all the consideration that it merits is just a true picture of the situation as it exists.

Mr. Hanley: Judge, I wonder if this would be helpful: that if the Commission prefers, that they make their request of us as to just what figures they want? If they will do that, we will furnish those figures, or, in the alternative, if the Commission prefers, our books are open for their inspection, and cannot that be done at some later time?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That may be done, but, Judge, I apprehend that the Commission may desire time for cross-examination, and that probably should be done before the cross-examination is commenced.

Mr. Hanley: I would assume so, your Honor, and I think it would be helpful if they are going to request figures rather than an examination of the books, that they let us know promptly what figures they want. If they want us to furnish the figures, we will do it. If they would rather look at the books themselves, that is all right, too, 2615 but I would like to have it done so Mr. Boatwright can be cross-examined and released just as early as possible. I don't know just what they want; what kind of a breakdown they want. We will give them anything we have available, if we know what it is.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: May we inquire, Mr. Austin, when you can advise counsel definitely as to what is required or what course you elect to pursue, some time tomorrow morning?

Mr. Austin: I would like to go ahead right now, for a moment.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Austin: See how far we get.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Boatwright, let me ask you with regard to this item of $154,000, account 1075: Have all of the advertising costs and other costs included in that total, other than those which are in whole, in your opinion, allocable to gasoline, or, I should say, perhaps, those which have been in whole allocated to gasoline on the books of the company; have all the other items included there been allocated as between gasoline and other products and as between reseller gasoline and other types?

A. Your question is quite broad. There are so 2616 many items entering into this particular cost.

To illustrate: if we run an advertisement in a farm paper in the State of Michigan, no part of that cost would be in this particular item. If, on the other hand, we run an advertisement in one of the Detroit metropolitan papers, in our judgment, and I think rightly, that is primarily an advertisement to consumers buying from resellers, and is, therefore, a reseller advertisement cost. Now—

Q. Just at that moment are you referring only to a gasoline advertisement?

A. Well, I will continue. If we run a motor oil ad, the advertising on motor oil will not be found in this particular channel of tank wagon reseller ads, but will be found on our marketing expense statement under "Other Methods."

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Let's get that clear, Mr. Boatwright. In your item here on Exhibit 31 O, you have not charged against the reseller channel any advertising that Standard Oil Company bought, except advertising of gasoline. Am I correct in that?

A. That is correct.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Well, that item there "Other Costs." Does 2617 that in any part include advertising of other oils or other products?

A. Sometimes when we send out these 28 x 44 faces—are you acquainted with what I mean?

Q. No.

Mr. Hanley: I don't think the Court knows, either. Will you explain?

A. The 28 x 44 is merely a steel frame sign which stands in front of our various service stations that has a display face, front and back. It has no permanent display, but we insert in this frame, paper or cardboard displays from time to time to catch the passing motorist's eyes.

Now, frequently, in sending out the respective faces to be placed, there will be a postage charge or a transport item incurred. When you get to things of that kind, it is allocated among the different products on the best basis we know how. That is a small part, but such an item would be included under the "Other Costs" feature of advertising; postage, barrel containers where they have those long tube-like containers in which you have to ship this material, all cost, and they would be in it.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Is the only portion of such cost included here, the cost of portion which is allocated to gasoline?

A. To the very best of our ability to allocate cost.

2618 Q. And to resellers?

A. That is correct.

Q. Then is it true that a large part of the cost items going into this total of one hundred fifty-four thousand odd dollars are items resulting from an allocation of a particular cost item as between gasoline and other products and as between different types of gasoline business?

A. I am not sure I understand your question.

Mr. Austin: Will you read it again? I am sure you will bear with me if some of my questions are not properly phrased.

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

A. Any newspaper insertion results in an allocation problem. To illustrate, we may run an advertisement having to do with a ten star spring tune-up.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What does that mean?

The Witness: That means that is our current campaign having to do with the ten leading services the resellers offer to perform for the motorist.

Now, obviously, a part of that is gasoline.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Boatwright, isn't that the name of an advertising campaign?

A. That's right; in the Detroit area.

Q. Which is being currently used by the Standard
2619 Oil Company?

A. Yes.

Part of that advertisement has to do with gasolines, part of it with motor oils, and part of it has to do with other services rendered at the outlet.

You automatically encounter a problem in products in such a case as that. In almost any item of advertising insertion that you make, even if you run an advertisement primarily on Isoviz, you still have a problem of allocation because there will be some block or some plug in that newspaper insertion which will be a plug for Quaker State or Polarine or Stanolind, other motor oils; or you might have a plug in there to do with gasolines. That is as nearly as I can answer your question.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. What I was trying to ask you, Mr. Boatwright, is this: Where such a problem—wherever that problem arises, or wherever there should be an allocation, has such an allocation been made?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is the only portion of that advertising cost included here, the portion that was allocated to the retail reseller gasoline business?

A. Yes, sir.

2620 Q. That was really the question that I intended to ask.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. To bring out the fact that in arriving at the various—and I assume numerous cost items go into this $154,000—that in a great many instances it was necessary to make such an allocation as you have just described.

A. You are quite correct and the only item I have used is that item which has been allocated to the tank wagon reseller gallonage on gasoline.

2621 Q. Now, getting back to the question of summation of a break-down of this item.

I believe you suggested that you might be able to give a break-down and an itemization by character of cost items; if that's a fair description.

A. I stated I think we could do that more easily and probably give you better results than we could if we took the total expenditures and then attempted to break out certain of those totals that didn't apply because of the manner in which we were allocating our newspaper advertising.

Q. Then could you give us a break-down of that kind by character of advertising or by character of item? That is, in other words, describing the type of advertising, and I assume that that would show, at least make it pretty clear, what sort of an expenditure it was; whether you referred to newspaper advertising or radio advertising or maybe it is maps, maybe those various things of that kind.

A. Signs.

Q. Yes. You could do that, and you could also—this is getting back to my question of a minute ago—you could also give us a statement appended to that list, could you not, of the methods of allocation you used? That is, it would be possible to give a general statement or any indication of how the allocation was made of items that 2622 are the result of allocation as between gasoline and other products and between different types of gasoline business?

A. I think that would be possible. I think it will be quite a volume.

Q. Well, I am exploring here now to a certain extent.

A. I think that would be entirely possible. That could not be done in a short time, your Honor. We couldn't have such information as that before,—because merely the problem of typing these figures, these various expense items, would be a detailed problem—

Q. I suppose we should be satisfied as to method of allocation, if that has to be a separate description of method, of different items—it might be restricted to large items, but wouldn't one method of allocation be used for a number of items, so that one descriptive method used in allocating would apply to a good part of the list, or would that vary?

A. That, frankly, varies. Sometimes you allocate between products on a measurement of your ad basis. Thus, if you have a motor oil ad and a plug in that ad having to do with gasoline, you will measure your ad and allocate a certain portion, maybe 5% or 10%. That is done on a basis of relative weights assigned by experienced people in the advertising department.

Q. Exploring a little further along that line; instead of attempting to give the description of the method used 2623 for allocation, would it be possible, opposite every item which has resulted in allocation, to give the percentage allocated to the reseller gasoline business? That is, if an item is a hundred dollars and the total expense of that character was $200, why, then, the figure would be 50%. That wouldn't tell us how it was done, but, at least, it would show the result, which might be more important.

A. We might be able to do it on that basis.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Would that require some time?

The Witness: All of this which has been requested would require some time. You see, our records for 1937 have now been transferred from the active files to the warehouse files in our main station plant.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When you say, "some time," could you give me some approximate idea of within weeks?

The Witness: Any estimate of time would have to be a guess, your Honor, without seeing the records, but I should think it would be at least a week, as a minimum to dig that information out and to prepare it.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. And while we are on this subject, I would like to say, now, that I want to make the same request as 2624 to the item on 31-H, account No. 1066, "Miscellaneous Operating Expenses," $40,142.68.

2625 The Witness: Your Honor, I explained yesterday in my testimony the only way that expense item can be broken down in detail is to go to the original vouchers of expenditure on the part of the company, which would be a reconstruction of expense statements for the Standard Oil of Indiana, the Detroit division for 1937, and would involve months.

Mr. Austin: I had, perhaps, forgotten that statement.

The Witness: It would take at least three months and quite a staff of men to reconstruct that figure.

Mr. Hanley: I might suggest, your Honor, while we are perfectly willing to furnish all these figures, their results amount to just a matter of a few hundredths of a per cent. They aren't very important.

Mr. Austin: These two are the most important. They are the ones that make up a large part of this cost difference.

Mr. Hanley: I fully concede the right of the Commission to examine into them, irrespective of how much they amount to, and we are perfectly willing to cooperate in any way we can but, Judge, after all, some day we have to get through with this lawsuit.

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

2626 Q. Well, will you refresh my recollection, Mr. Boatwright, on this item I just referred to here?

A. Item 1066?

Q. Yes; as to where that came from. Now, obviously, the source of that, as you got it, is available now without going through this long research?

A. Yes, it is available on our marketing expense statement for the Detroit field.

Q. Is it broken down—you didn't lift this 40,000 as one item off of the books, did you?

A. I did lift this from the tank wagon reseller expense off of the books, but I did not include other miscellaneous expense incident to the distribution of the Atlas line, I didn't include other miscellaneous expense incident to the motor oil, I didn't include other miscellaneous expense incident to the tank wagon consumer. This is purely tank wagon reseller miscellaneous expense.

Q. But when you say you lifted it off the books, it didn't come off as an item of over $40,142. Wasn't it taken off as a number of different things and added up to make this total?

A. No, sir, it was taken off the form 189; the marketing expense statement, which is a recapitulation of those various items of expenditure that I have previously enumerated and wherever it is possible, as I stated in my testi-2627 mony yesterday, any item of expense that can be charged direct, is charged direct.

Items of expense which cannot be charged direct are allocated upon a gallonage basis and, for that reason, I used the highest possible divisor, including all gallonage, so I would not overstate the cost. If anything, I have understated the cost on that item.

Q. But do I understand you have no readily available breakdown of the particular expenses which go to make up that item No. 1066?

A. I have a breakdown of 1066 among different channels of distribution.

Q. What do you mean by different channels of distribution?

A. As I have explained it before.

Q. You mean resellers, and so forth?

A. Reseller, consumer, other methods to which we allocate costs; distribution of motor oils, industrial lubricants, and things of that kind, and the Atlas line, tires, tubes, batteries, accessories, and so forth.

Mr. Hanley: May I again direct the attention of the Court to the fact that the item now being discussed, the forty thousand odd dollars, is an item in a total of fifty-nine thousand odd dollars, which item of fifty-nine thousand odd dollars results in the reflection of approximately .08 of a cent in the total cost?

2628 Mr. Austin: Yes, and that .08 of a cent is approximately 15 or 16 per cent of the total difference in marketing costs, here, that is claimed to exist as between Ned's and the other stations. In other words, it is one of the chief items.

2629 Mr. Hanley: Well, Judge, may we not shorten this, please? We are willing to give the information. We will open our books. We will respond to any specific request. We will do anything in the world the Commission wants, to get the facts.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: May I have the attention of counsel?

With reference to the item opposite Respondent's No. 1075, "Advertising Costs," appearing on Respondent's Exhibit 31-Q, amounting to $154,635.04, I understand Respondent has agreed, or has offered to furnish all the available information that it has and can assemble without unusual and extraordinary effort. Is the offer of the present witness acceptable to counsel?

Mr. Austin: Well, does the witness understand what I mean on this—what is it, 1075?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Hanley: I don't know whether the witness understands or not, your Honor, but I will make it on the record, and I will make it so specific that nobody can misunderstand it. It doesn't matter whether I understand the request or not, whenever it is satisfactory to the witness who is going to have to do the work or order accountants to do the work, that will suit me. But I want one or two things.

2630 First, a specific request that the accountants are going to understand. We can't go back and say to our accountants, "Give us a figure," without telling them what figure we want. Nothing else makes sense. Now, that is one thing we will do.

Or, if the Commission desires it, we will throw our books open and they can send their accountants in and look at the books. I don't care which. We will do either one, or both.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner suggests to counsel that he confers with the witness and see if they can't reach an understanding and announce the understanding at the reconvening of the hearing tomorrow morning.

Mr. Austin: To do that, your Honor, I would like to confer with Mr. Warmack, and perhaps we can prepare a written request, and then discuss—or, perhaps we can discuss it with the witness either before or after, or both.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, with reference to item 1066, "Miscellaneous Operating Expense", $40,142.68, appearing on Respondent's Exhibit 31-H, I understand the witness to say that is taken from the books, and that you have—he has already given you the break-down as clearly as he can. Now, if you can't reach an agreement as to any further data to be furnished with reference to that, then the Examiner suggests that you accept the offer of 2631 counsel and make an inspection of the books and records.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, it occurs to me that this item 1066 is not broken down here. It is a substantial item. It involves apparently a number of joint costs. The burden of proving justification in this case being upon the Respondent, my opinion is—of course, while they can rely upon whatever they wish to, that the Commission cannot consider figures of this kind that are not substantiated much more than this figure has been substantiated here. Consequently, if nothing further is submitted on it by the Respondent, why, I just wish to say upon the record that I am not, on behalf of the Commission, assuming any responsibility or any burden of going and examining the books for the purpose of determining it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is only, then, a question as to whether or not the item has been sufficiently proven?

Mr. Austin: That is right. It would be upon final argument, and that is a matter, of course, which Respondent's counsel and economists can determine for themselves. Of course, we may or may not—we may look at the books and we may want to do it on a number of things; we may want to look at the books in connection with advertising, even if we get such a statement as has been discussed. But what I am trying to say is that I am not accepting any 2632 obligation to either look at the books or accept this item. I assume that I may do as I choose upon that.

2633 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Counsel for the Respondent has tendered to you the services of his company in furnishing any additional data in connection with any one of these items that you may desire, if you will only indicate it with such precision that he may understand what you desire.

Mr. Hanley: Exactly right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And that offer is open.

Mr. Hanley: We will answer the question if we know what the question is.

Mr. Austin: That is appreciated and undoubtedly will be availed of, but without any acceptance of any obligation upon the Commission's part to fulfill any burden of proof in so doing.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may proceed.

Mr. Hanley: I think, your Honor, that there is still on the record an offer on the part of the Respondent of all of this series of 31 numbered exhibits which were not ruled upon because counsel for the Commission wanted to ask some questions. They were offered in evidence. I don't know whether an objection was made or not. I don't recall it if there was one.

Mr. Austin: Would I be out of order—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Before I would like to 2634 hear from counsel for the Commission, I desire to call counsel's attention to the computation at the bottom of Respondent's Exhibit 31-Q, figures $295,831.14 over the figures 70,629,027 gallons—42¢ per gallon.

Mr. Hanley: .42.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes; .42 of a cent per gallon. The Examiner doesn't understand that there was any testimony with reference to that, and the Examiner doesn't understand how that becomes important.

2635 By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, referring to the calculation on the bottom of Exhibit 31-Q, which results in a gallonage charge of .42 of a cent a gallon, and then referring to Respondent's Exhibit 31-A, state what the fact is as to whether or not that .42 of a cent a gallon would be added to either one or both of the costs, on the one hand, resellers other than Ned's, and, on the other hand, Ned's, if you had undertaken to give these costs consideration in your preparation of Exhibit 31-A?

A. The sum total of .42 of a cent a gallon was not added to the individual marketing expense items recapitulated on Exhibit 31-A under the cost items for regular reseller business, nor was it included as a part of the cost of doing business through Ned's Auto Supply outlets. This amount in total on a per gallonage basis as represented on Respondent's Exhibit 3-Q represents expenses, which I stated in my testimony this morning, could not be allocated accurately at the present time, although my knowledge of the functions for which these expense items were incurred, led me to the conclusion that were it possible to allocate these particular items, the entry under our "Regular Reseller Business" on a per gallon basis would be greater than any corresponding entry of the proportion of the expenses thus incurred for the volume of 2636 business moving through "Ned's Auto Supply Outlets."

Trial Examiner Ballinger: These items couldn't all be allocated to the sale of gas?

The Witness: They are allocated to the sale of gas in the tank wagon reseller channel purely and simply.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But they also include the sale, do they not, of tires and all kinds of accessories?

The Witness: Yes, sir, your Honor, but each of these items have been allocated either on the basis of an estimate of time split, or they have been allocated on some gallonage basis or some principle of cost allocation among, first, the different channels and different products.

Mr. Hanley: I think I understand what the trouble is, Mr. Examiner. It troubled me, as a matter of fact, for a while.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I confess I don't understand it.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Let us take, for example, Mr. Boatwright, account No. 1000, which is the first item on Exhibit 31-Q; now, that item shows as "Salaries—Supervision," $33,760.06. As a matter of fact, is it not true that item in toto, so far as the company is concerned, is considerably in excess of the amount of money that you have shown?

2637 A. I have the record here. Would you like the exact figure on that?

Q. You might do that.

A. Prior to allocation that figure was $56,592.11.

Q. Now, that includes all of the efforts of that particular group of individuals?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, what have you done on Exhibit 31-Q to reduce that item of fifty-odd thousand dollars to thirty-three odd thousand dollars?

A. That item is allocated on the basis of the total tank wagon gallons; thus, gallonage moving through the different channels of distribution each assume a weight of equal importance in the allocation of the supervision function of our marketing cost.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understand both from your statement and from your testimony that there is no way by which you could make an exact allocation? I take it that is at best an approximation?

The Witness: My testimony was to the effect that I couldn't allocate among particular customers within a channel, as you recall, for instance, Ned's Auto Supply was one customer out of perhaps 400 within the tank reseller channels, I can't allocate that, but we could do, and our books are set up to allocate among all reseller business as distinct from all tank wagon consumer business.
2638 But I can't isolate the particular time factor and the particular cost factor involved in handling one customer of a particular classification.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. To proceed with Exhibit 31-Q, you have indicated that there is allocable, as I now understand you, to gasoline only an additional amount of .42 of a cent a gallon which the Standard Oil Company sustains as an expense, and did sustain in 1937; is that right?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, had you given those figures consideration without any reference to your opinion as to which gallon should be weighted the heaviest, would it not have simply resulted in adding .42 of a cent a gallon to columns 1 and 2 on Exhibit 31-A, without making any difference at all in the difference as disclosed by column 3 on Exhibit 31-A?

A. That statement is correct.

Mr. Austin: I suggest a five minute recess.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let us take a five minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, we still await a ruling on the offer of the Respondent of this Exhibit 31 series.

2639 Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will hear from counsel for the Commission.

Mr. Austin: Well, I am not prepared to permit these to go in without objection, your Honor, but I would like to request that the ruling on them be withheld until after I have had an opportunity to cross-examine the witness upon these exhibits, and I think that will require some study before I am prepared to go ahead with that. And it may also be—although I can't say definitely that this will be true—but it may be that we will want to receive the figures which we are preparing to ask the witness to get upon account 1075—I think that is the number.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I am not very much concerned about what method of procedure we use to get along here, but it does seem to me that the objection now of counsel should be made to the exhibits if he has an objection. He has his right of cross-examination. And indeed, under what I think was a liberal offer on the part of the Respondent, he has been entitled to, and has cross-examined at length during the course of the direct examination. We have now proved these exhibits. We have established that they are our cost justification on the one-half cent feature of this case. Counsel will have a right to cross-examine concerning them. He may be able to do something about the weight of the exhibits, but we think we are entitled to have them on the record.

2640 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is prepared to rule.

Mr. Hanley: Very well. I am sorry, Judge.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled, and Respondent's Exhibits 31-A to and including 31-Q are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 31-A to 31-Q, inclusive," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, whether it is necessary to put this on the record or not, or maybe it is unnecessary for me to ask it, but I assume that I may move to strike all or any part of these at any later time in the case, if I may desire to make such a motion?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Such a motion will be considered when presented.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I now ask the permission of the Court to have the reporter mark another series of exhibits with the next number and by letter as in the case of the last series.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the documents handed him by counsel for the Respondent Respondent's Exhibits 33-A through E.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 33-A through 33-E.")

2641 Mr. Hanley: At this time, your Honor, may I inquire what status the record is in with relation to Exhibit 32, which is the blank form of the Respondent, known as 189.

Has that been admitted in evidence?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What was your request?

Mr. Hanley: I was wondering if this blank form 189 of Respondent which has been marked Exhibit 32 has been admitted in evidence? I am told by Mr. Austin it has been.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: My record does not show it has been, I think, though—off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Mr. Hanley: May the record now show that Respondent's Exhibit 32, for identification, is offered and received in evidence?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The record will so show.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 32," was received in evidence.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, I hand you what has now been marked as Respondent's Exhibits 33-A, B, C, D, and E, for identification, and will ask you if you prepared those exhibits?

A. I did.

2642 Q. As a matter of easy identification for Court and Counsel, have you designated this series of exhibits as Schedule B?

A. I have.

Q. And does it have to do with a discussion of the Respondent's cost justification of the 1½¢ differential in price granted to jobbers off the tank wagon price to reseller customers?

A. It does.

Q. Now, did there come a time within your knowledge, Mr. Boatwright, when Ned's Auto Supply Company went off the pricing plan which we have been discussing here for nearly two days, namely, ½¢ off the tank wagon price?

2643 A. There did come such a time when they went on the tank car basis of purchase.

Q. Do you recall about when that was?

A. March, 1939, I think it was.

Q. Now, within your knowledge, has anyone of these four customers, except Ned's Auto Supply Company, had a price basis such as has been discussed here in the last day of your testimony; namely, ½¢ off the tank wagon price?

A. They have not.

Q. Is that the only instance that is involved in this proceeding where that particular price basis was used?

A. That is my understanding.

Q. Now a moment ago you said you thought that that price basis was abandoned in March, 1939. I will ask you if it is not true that it was abandoned in March, 1938?

A. That is true. I gave the wrong year.

Q. Since March, 1938, has Ned's, or any other customer of the Standard Oil Company in Detroit, been on the price basis of ½¢ off the reseller tank wagon price?

A. There has not been.

Q. Do you have it within your knowledge, Mr. Boatwright, as to whether or not there was a period in March, 1938, after this price basis was abandoned, and before

Ned's went on to the tank car basis, when Ned's was back on the regular tank wagon price?

2644 A. I do not know.

Q. Do you know whether Ned's did go on the tank car price sometime around March, 1938?

A. I do.

Q. And do you have it within your knowledge that the other three jobbers involved in this action had been on the tank car price for some years prior to that?

A. I do.

Q. Now referring you, Mr. Boatwright, to Exhibit 33-A: I call your attention to item No. 1, entitled "Tank Wagon Reseller Marketing Cost," which is followed by two columns, one entitled "1940," under which appear the figures "1.72¢" and a second column entitled "1939," under which appear the figures "1.81¢" per gallon. Will you please explain what those figures mean and how you arrived at them?

A. Certainly.

This schedule is based directly upon our form 189 marketing cost statement, limited to the tank wagon reseller channel for the years 1939 and 1940. It represents the distribution costs incurred in the entire Detroit field at salaried and commission points.

The tank wagon reseller marketing cost for the year 1940 is indicated as 1.72 per gallon. This is taken directly from the form 189 for the Detroit field and from form 439 for the year 1940.

2645 Mr. Austin: May I interrupt?

Mr. Hanley: Surely.

Mr. Austin: I would like to ask you what you mean by "Salaried and Commission Points."

The Witness: Certainly. Some of our stations in the Detroit vicinity, for instance, the City of Detroit, is served by salaried tank wagon drivers.

The area of Dearborn is served by a driver or agent who works on a commission basis. It is our different means of compensating the truck drivers.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. What is the fact, Mr. Boatwright, as to whether or not it makes any difference whether a man driving a truck is on a salary or on a commission basis, so far as the company is concerned, relative to the necessity of paying the truck driver?

A. Why, there is no difference. They have to be paid, in either case.

Q. Is it not true that it is just a different method of arriving at how much money the company has to pay the individual who renders the service?

A. That is correct.

Q. Will you please go ahead, Mr. Boatwright?

A. Now, the procedure:

The total tank wagon reseller expense for the 2646 year 1940 amounted to $1,145,399.13.

To this amount the direct leased service station expense applicable to tank wagon reseller business was added. This expense was obtained as follows: the total leased service station gallonage of 54,255,291. The leased service station tank wagon gallons includes motor oil and grease. Therefore, we had to split these particular products out of our calculation by the gallonage figures as are shown on our form 439. Splitting it out so that it would come back to a gasoline volume of 53,406,269, or 98.44% of the total petroleum products volume moving through this channel, was gasolines.

The leased service station expense for the year 1940 amounted to $48,506.44. We apply 98.44% to that amount, giving us a charge of $47,749.74, expense applicable to tank wagon reseller channel.

Adding that to our tank wagon reseller cost of $1,149,399.13, gives us a total distribution cost through the entire reseller channel of $1,193,148.87.

This amount was divided by the total reseller tank wagon gallons of 69,301,586 gallons, resulting in a cost per gallon of 1.72¢.

Q. Now, where does that figure appear on Exhibit 33-A, if it does appear?

A. That figure appears on Respondent's Exhibit 2647 33-A under item No. 1, under the column headed "1940".

The identical procedure, the identical source and the identical forms were used in preparing the figure shown on Respondent's Exhibit 33-A under item No. 1, under column "1939" being 1.81¢ per gallon.

Q. Now, there appears to be a difference between the Respondent's cost in 1940 and in 1939, Mr. Boatwright. What, if any, explanation do you have for that difference?

A. The explanation is primarily one of gallonage. You see, our expense in the tank wagon reseller channel in the year 1940 amounted, as I have read, to $1,145,399.13. The divisor was given as 69,301,586 gallons. For the preceding year the tank wagon reseller expense was almost the same figure, varying only by a few hundred dollars, being $1,145,879.56. In that year, however, our divisor was 66,141,604 gallons, which, as you will note, is approximately 3,000,000 fewer gallons of gasoline.

2648 Q. Now to simplify it for us, Mr. Boatwright, is it or is it not true that the unit cost of the Respondent in the year 1939 and the year 1940 was substantially the same?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor. The figures speak for themselves.

Mr. Hanley: I will withdraw it. I am just trying to get this thing explained.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Let me ask you this, Mr. Boatwright: If it didn't cost the Respondent, the Standard Oil Company, approximately as much in total to market gasoline in Detroit in 1939 as it cost in 1940?

Mr. Austin: Same objection.

A. It did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled. The figures are here and they speak for themselves.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Is the unit cost that you have disclosed on Respondent's Exhibit 33-A for the year 1940 and 1939, wherein there is a difference in the unit cost per gallon, accounted for, as you have explained, just by the gallonage; the divisor that was used in those respective years?

A. The difference in the unit cost is almost entirely due to the use of a larger divisor in 1940, which resulted from the increase in sales that took place in this area.

2649 Q. Are these figures which you have disclosed in item 1, Exhibit 33-A, the per books figures of the Standard Oil Company?

A. They are.

Q. Have they anything at all to do with this lawsuit?

A. They do not.

Q. I mean by that, are they not the routine, regular ordinary accounting entries?

A. They are.

Q. Made without reference to any lawsuit?

A. They are.

Q. Will you please pass to item No. 2, Exhibit 33-A, entitled "Jobber Marketing Costs," and please explain each of the figures that are disclosed under that item?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: May I interrupt, Judge?

Mr. Hanley: Surely.

Mr. Austin: I have some questions at this point.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. On Exhibit 33-B, will you please explain, Dr. Boatwright, what you mean by "Total Reseller's Tank Wagon Expense," as distinguished from "Direct Leased Service Station Expense?"

A. Yes, in our bookkeeping practice we maintain, on certain items of marketing expense, a separation be-2650 tween the reseller, on the one hand, and the company owned service stations leased, on another.

Q. For the purpose of terminology isn't a company owned and leased service station a reseller?

A. It is, but on our particular books—you see, we maintain an allocation on certain items of expense where we follow those separately, and it was necessary on a comparison of this type that those columns be united and that is all that I did.

Q. Going back to the various sheets under Respondent's Exhibit 31: We had, many times, there, or you did, occasion to make reference to retail reseller expense on gasoline. Weren't we there, or weren't you referring—weren't you, there, in using that term, referring to leased stations, as well as to the contract stations?

A. You will recall that, in the discussion of the exhibit referred to, we dealt with particular items of expense. Now if our taxes, maintenance and depreciation on retail outlets owned and leased by the company, as compared with the rent income on those stations did not result in a net income or a net deficit, it wasn't necessary that we bring that expense item into it at all. We limited our discussion to only certain expense items. We did not discuss the full range of all expense items; all reseller business.

In that particular calculation we limited our discus-2651 sion to particular items of expense that we could differentiate between, in the year 1937.

Now our work is what does it cost to do business through the sum total of all the different types of reseller outlets, tank wagon, as contrasted with doing business on a jobber basis.

2652 Accordingly, if there is a net rent deficit, as compared with maintenance, depreciation, taxes, on this particular group of stations we own, that becomes a cost of doing business through all reseller outlets.

Q. Does this only apply to such a deficit?

A. I don't know whether there is or is not a deficit in Detroit, but it applies to any of these expense items which are incurred jointly.

To illustrate: a salesman's salary, a reseller salesman will have under his supervision some company-owned stations leased; some private owned service stations leased; some 461 and some 385 type contracts.

Now, to allocate that man's cost among those different types of contracts would be difficult, as well as impractical. Therefore, any item of expense which, for our particular records, it is necessary that we segregate between the tank wagon reseller of the ordinary type, as distinct from this particular classification of company-owned and leased stations, I am now throwing those two together to give you a total tank wagon picture.

Q. Well, again referring to the cost items we discussed under Exhibit 31. There, there was an effort to show the cost of serving Ned's Auto Supply Company, I believe, as distinguished from the cost generally of serving what you called retail resellers; is that correct?

2653 A. That is correct.

Q. And in making that classification as to Ned's, on the one hand, and the cost to retail resellers, on the other, on the per gallon cost, did you not, except where you specifically stated to the contrary, include company-owned and leased stations as well as the independently operated stations in your figures?

A. I did.

If it would be of any convenience to you, I will read the particular items which we carry separately between the company-owned service stations leased, on the one hand, and the other items. Would that help you in your thinking?

Q. Yes, it would; at least, in so far as those items appear anywhere in Exhibit 31, or in this exhibit, either.

A. There is no conflict with Exhibit 31 on any of the items carried separately.

Q. Well, my recollection is that on loaned equipment, that you eliminated leased service stations at that point, and that is the only place that they were eliminated.

A. Yes, because, as was brought out in the record, the equipment installed at one of the company-owned outlets leased, when the tenant signs the contract for the lease, he rents the entire retail outlet.

Q. I understood the reason for it, but—

A. There is no conflict in this at all between Ex-
2654 hibit 31 and 33-A. There is no overlapping or conflict of the expense items dealt with.

Q. Now, then, turn back to Exhibit 33-B. The item "Total Reseller Tank Wagon Expense," which amounts to $1,145,399.13. Does that include any expense in connection with the sale or delivery of gasoline to lessee stations?

A. Why, certainly. It includes most of the marketing expense of lessee stations, except items of expense that have to do with a property type of cost.

2655 Q. All right. Now, that being true, then, it seems to me that we should have a little fuller explanation of what is included here, as in the item "Leased Service Station Expense."

A. I should be glad to enumerate those items for you. Is that what you wish?

Q. Yes, and will you read the amount opposite the item, as you read them?

A. Yes.

I shall read them direct from the marketing expense statement.

Subaccount 060A is plant maintenance on service station properties owned; $48,864.99.

060B is plant maintenance on service station properties where the building is owned but located on leased ground; $1,372.60.

060C is plant maintenance on privately owned service stations leased, where the property are leased out to individuals; $5,448.68.

061B is the rental expense on leased ground used for owned service station buildings; $15,738.89.

061C is rental expense on privately owned service station properties leased out; $91,224.41.

065A, rent revenue service station properties owned; this is an income figure of $321,905.45.

2656 065B, rent revenue service station owned; buildings on leased ground; a net income of $9,880.18.

065C, rent revenue, privately owned service stations leased, $82,155.34.

Items 066A, miscellaneous operating expense, service stations owned properties complete $45,917.77.

066B, miscellaneous operating expense, service stations owned; buildings on leased ground, $1,016.33.

066C, miscellaneous operating expense, privately owned service stations leased. Properties leased out, $3,500.35.

088A, station operating tools and equipment; service stations owned properties complete, $9,555.19.

2657 088B, Station operating tools and equipment; service stations owned buildings on leased grounds, $152.59.

088C, Station operating tools and equipment; privately owned service stations properties leased out, $1,806.93.

Account No. 110A, Depreciation expense—plant; buildings, machinery, and equipment, furniture and fixtures, service station owned properties complete, $87,396.51.

110B, Depreciation expense—plant; buildings, machinery and equipment, furniture and fixtures, service station owned buildings on leased grounds, $2,210.94.

110C, Depreciation expense—plant; buildings, machinery and equipment, furniture and fixtures, privately owned service stations, properties, leased out, $3,615.68.

112A, Depreciation expense—real estate improvements (service station owned properties complete), $43,121.63.

086A, Taxes; service station owned properties complete, $100,178.64.

086B, Taxes; service station owned buildings on leased grounds, $1087.56.

086C, Taxes; private owned service stations, leased, properties leased out, $237.72.

The grand total expense for this column, recognizing both income and outlay, leaves a net cost of $48,506.46, which is the figure I read to you previously.

Q. Now, perhaps I didn't follow all of that. The record may show what I am going to ask you. I know the 2658 total of all the items you read is a greater amount than $48,000. Where is the offset?

A. Rent revenue. The rent revenue is the income.

Q. Is that shown?

A. Yes, it is. All of these rent items are property items, and we have certain expense and we have certain income.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, certain of the objections and many of the questions of counsel indicate in my mind that there is some confusion in counsel's mind and it may exist in the mind of the Court, as to the different classifications referred to in this cost testimony.

Now, the first group of costs dealt with in the series of exhibits 31-A and so forth, had to do with the segregation of the cost of doing business with Ned's Auto Supply Company when Ned's Auto Supply Company was on the basis of receiving deliveries by tank wagon.

Now, we classify, in our company, that group which includes those purchasers who take delivery by tank wagon. That may include persons who own their own property and run a service station. It may include persons who have built their own service station and leased it to our company, and we, in turn, have leased it to somebody else, or it may include instances where our company owns the service station property and has leased it to an operator. We 2659 regard that all as one group of tank wagon reseller business of which Ned's, when he was on this half cent price, was a component part, and in this series of Exhibit 31, and so forth, we were undertaking to segregate him out of that picture.

2660 Now we are on an entirely different proposition. We are now seeking to distinguish between the tank wagon reseller group, on the one hand, and the jobber or tank car buyer, on the other hand, and there isn't any particular legerdemain or mystery about a leased out station and, so far as these cost figures are concerned, they are just part of this tank wagon reseller group, in our account.

Mr. Austin: I think the witness has explained what I wanted to find out.

Mr. Hanley: I know the witness understands it but I was just afraid you didn't, from the questions you have been asking.

Mr. Austin: I understand, now, part of the costs on leased stations are included in the large figure and the smaller figures are certain costs applying to those stations in particular, and the nature of which the witness has stated, is that correct?

The Witness: That is correct, and constitute a part of our over-all reseller marketing cost for this area.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I would like to ask another question, if I may, now: Did Exhibit 31, including the last page, 31-Q, portray all of the marketing costs which the Standard Oil Company treats as applicable to the reseller gasoline business in Detroit? 2661

A. It did not.

Q. I was under the impression that when you added on the 31-Q, that that included everything that was not in the others?

A. Oh, no. There are still items of expense which we incur which, as I pointed out, and I think is covered in the testimony, that just weren't affected at all, and we made no effort to allocate them at all.

Q. I think you did say that.

A. Yes.

Q. Well, are some of those expenses which could not be allocated or which you did not attempt to allocate as between Ned's, a tank wagon buyer at that time, and other tank wagon buyers, are some of those costs included in 33 here where your distinction is now between tank car and tank wagon?

A. Yes, sir, 33 is the sum total of our marketing cost, tank wagon reseller channel Detroit area, for the years in question.

Q. That I assume is the reason your figure here is 1.72¢ a gallon for 1940, whereas the total on 31 I believe was a little over 1.1¢ even if you added on all of 31-Q?

A. That is correct.

Mr. Austin: All right, Judge.

2662 By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I had asked you, Mr. Boatwright, to advert to item No. 2 on Exhibit 33-A, denominated "Jobber Marketing Costs" and explain how you arrive at those figures. Will you please do that?

A. I refer you to Respondent's Exhibit 33-C for the detailed explanation of the procedure. At the termination of the year 1939 the sales research department was given an assignment by the management of our company to determine the profitabilty of jobber operations, such jobbers being located in the State of Oklahoma, as a component part of our Kansas City or Wichita field. To the best of our knowledge there has been no other detailed time study or a complete cost analysis of jobber business made other than this particular analysis.

2663 Our accounting, our selling, and our marketing procedures in the Kansas City and Wichita and Detroit fields are exactly the same. They work under the same code of accounts, and there is no reason why costs of handling tickets, recording of information, and so forth in those two respective areas would not be duplicated to the same extent in the Detroit area. This entire study was upon an actual time basis spent with the various jobbers on the part of the managers, assistant managers, any special representative that may have contacted them, any other members of the supervisory staff, and their expenses, as are reported on the regular expense form 028. The accounting costs were determined on the basis of estimates of various accounting departments of the time required in handling the total sales tickets represented by this volume. An actual count of the tickets was made and the departments, upon a sampling basis, determined the time of accounting department personnel in handling them.

I come to subdivision A, entitled: "Accounting Cost." The total accounting cost of the Kansas City and Wichita fields, for the year 1939, according to a separate analysis of sales tickets, time estimates by department heads, equal $2,226.32. This expense was divided by 2,166,168 gallons, the volume moving through these accounts, resulting 2664 in an accounting cost per gallon of .1 of a cent per gallon.

Q. Now, those figures that you have just given refer to your survey in the Kansas City and Wichita fields. What have you to say as to the effect of whether or not that figure applies to the accounting costs of these four jobbers in Detroit? I mean Respondent's accounting costs in relation to the four jobbers in Detroit.

A. The fields work under the identical code of accounts, every ticket handled by the Kansas City office would be handled in the identical manner by our Detroit office. Therefore, the accounting costs incurred in handling these tickets should be entirely comparable with or identical costs incurred in the handling of the same code of accounts in other fields.

Q. Well, do you say it is the same?

A. It is the same.

Q. You may proceed.

A. Credit cost, subdivision B. Credit cost was handled in much the same manner. The actual cost of securing credit reports from the various accounts, the time spent by the credit department in analyzing the credit risks of the various jobbers, collection costs, and so forth, were totaled for jobbers served out of both Kansas City and Wichita fields, and for the year 1939 these costs amounted to $604.45. This amount was again divided by the 2665 volume of 2,166,168 gallons for a resultant cost per gallon of .03¢.

Subdivision C: "Supervision and Selling Cost." The actual time expended by the management, expenses, is shown on form. 028, plus salesmen's salaries, car and traveling expenses were secured from the records in the respective fields. This total expense was allocated according to the field's estimate of time devoted to each product, to secure the cost of this marketing function. The total product cost for gasoline and refined oil was then divided by these gallons sold, to obtain a cost per gallon. Calculations are shown on Respondent's Exhibit 33-D. The 2666 two fields combined incurred a total cost of supervision and selling of gasoline and refined oil of $2,601.60. The volume of the gasoline and refined oil combined was 4,206,686 gallons. Divided by the combined gallonage of gasoline and refined oil the dollar amount of $2,601.60 results in a cost per gallon of .06 of a cent.

Subdivision D, "General Office Expense"—

Mr. Austin: Mr. Boatwright, what is the difference in this gallonage figure of 4,206,686 and the one used above of 2,166,168?

The Witness: The supervision time and the managers' salaries, and so forth, expenses in serving these accounts is allocated on our books on an all gallonage basis. Therefore the same practice of allocation of cost is followed here as is followed on our regular books.

Mr. Austin: Well, by that are you referring to this 4 million figure?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Austin: What is the two million figure?

The Witness: The two million figure is the figure for gasoline; the four million figure is the amount of total gallonage of gasolines, refined oils, and so forth.

Mr. Austin: Is the difference between the figure under your subdivision C, which is four million, and the figure of two million, under subdivision B and A, is the dif-2667 ference between those two figures the amount for refined oil, or what is it?

The Witness: Refined oils, tractor fuels, fuel oils, motor oils, greases, and so forth.

2668 A. (Continuing.) Turning next to subdivision B. On this type of business we incur a certain amount of general office expense. We maintained in our office at that time a tank car sales department for refined oil and gasoline. The cost of maintaining that department for the first six months of 1939 was used on a monthly basis, because that department in 1939, July 1st, was consolidated with the price department, therefore, we took the cost for the first six months, and extended it to a full year's basis on that identical function. The cost for the first six months was $9,223.08. The cost for the full year on that basis would have been $18,446.16. The volume in gallons of gasoline and refined oil moving through this department for that year was 190,845,750 gallons. Dividing the annual cost of the department by the annual through put of gasoline and refined oil, results in a general-office cost of .01¢ per gallon.

Subdivision E "Point of Sale Advertising." An itemization of all advertising signs, jewel globes, and maps used was supplied by the General Office and the fields' advertising departments. The calculations are shown on Respondent's Exhibit 33-E, the lower part of the page. The signs, jewel globes, and so forth, for the two fields for these particular accounts, total $1,434.50. Maps used for 2669 the two fields for these accounts total $576.42. For a total cost of $2,010.92.

In this particular expense item we used the larger divisor of the total sales of gasoline and refined oil of 4,206,686 gallons, resulting in a cost per gallon of .05¢.

These summary figures were transposed and are shown on the Respondent's Exhibit 33-A under item 2 subdivisions A, B, C, D, and E, totaling for the five subdivisions .25 of a cent per gallon. A deduction of the summary of item 2 is made from item 1 for the years both '39 and '40, showing a differential cost in the two types of doing business for 1940 of 1.47¢, and for 1939 of 1.56¢.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, when you made the Oklahoma jobber cost survey which you have been testifying to, was that made for the information of the Standard Oil Company and its management?

A. It was.

Q. Had it anything to do with this lawsuit or any other lawsuit?

A. It did not.

Q. If you know, please state whether or not it was made for the guidance of the management in determining facts as to what they should do in connection with management affairs of the Standard Oil Company?

A. It was made solely for that purpose.

2670 Q. Do all of the figures under item 2 on Respondent's Exhibit 33-A, in your judgment, apply to the respective items of cost relative to jobber marketing costs in Detroit?

A. They do. There is one conservative feature about these particular cost tabulations.

Q. Just explain that.

2671 A. In the matter of car and traveling expense these jobbers were located at longer distances, so that the salesmen did more driving between points than would be necessary or required in one metropolitan area. Likewise the sales of the individual units. And accordingly the divisor is slightly smaller than would be the case in the Detroit area.

Q. Well, giving consideration to the thing you have just now referred to, Mr. Boatwright, would that have the effect of raising or lowering the item of the cost of jobber marketing?

A. It would have the influence of lowering the jobber cost.

Q. And would that in turn have the effect of making greater the differential between the cost of jobber marketing and the cost of tank wagon reseller marketing?

A. It would have the influence of increasing the differential as shown by Respondent's Exhibit 33-A.

Q. You have shown on Exhibit 33-A the two years 1939 and 1940 in detail. I will now ask you if the cost figures in respect of tank wagon reseller marketing costs and jobber marketing costs, with particular reference to Detroit, are substantially relative from year to year?

A. They are.

Mr. Hanley: At this time, if your Honor please, the Respondent offers in evidence what have been marked 2672 Respondent's Exhibits for identification No. 33-A, B, C, D and E.

Mr. Austin: May I ask a question or two?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Examination On Voir Dire.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, in connection with Exhibit 33-C, you refer there to a time and cost analysis of jobber operation in the State of Oklahoma?

A. That is correct.

Q. Then a little further down you talk about the Kansas City and Wichita fields, and I would assume that was either Missouri or Kansas or both. What is the relation between that and the Oklahoma study?

A. Our only operation in the State of Oklahoma is through jobbers. The jobbers are serviced and sold and handled out of our Kansas City office, or our Wichita office. You see, we have two sales divisions covering the southern part of the State of Kansas; one of them headquartering at Kansas City, and one of them headquartering at Wichita. Therefore, merely for convenience of serving or contacting these accounts the jobbers in Oklahoma are assigned to those respective offices.

2673 Well, did this time and cost study cover the entire territory served from the Kansas City and Wichita offices?

A. No; it covered only the jobber costs.

Q. Well, all the jobbers in the territory of those two offices?

A. No, sir. It covered these particular jobber costs of the jobbers located in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. Hanley: You might state, Mr. Boatwright, how many jobbers there were involved.

The Witness: I think the figure was 12.

Mr. Austin: Only the ones located in Oklahoma?

The Witness: That is correct.

Mr. Hanley: As distinguished from four in Detroit?

The Witness: Yes.

Examination on Voir Dire.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. And it did not cover any jobbers located in the State —in the City of Kansas or in the City of Wichita?

A. I don't think we have a jobber in Wichita. It did not cover a jobber in Kansas City. In the City of Kansas City.

Q. What other cities, if any, are covered by this survey?

A. You mean the individual location of the jobbers?

Q. Yes, if there was any city.

2674 A. Oklahoma City, Tulsa, McAllister. I am sorry I can't give you a complete listing at this time.

Q. Do the Kansas City and Wichita divisions cover the entire State of Oklahoma?

A. No, we don't market in the entire state of Oklahoma.

Q. Well, they do cover the State of Oklahoma in so far as you market there?

A. That is correct, except for one small portion, I think, that the St. Louis division has one station or one or two stations in the Ozark section, clear down in one section of the state of Oklahoma.

Q. Were those covered in this time and cost study?

A. There is no jobber operation in the St. Louis division in the State of Oklahoma.

Q. Those totals, then, given on Exhibit 33-D for identification, there is a dollar figure given opposite the words "Kansas City" and another one opposite the word "Wichita", and my understanding is—from the testimony you have just given—that those refer to the Kansas City and Wichita fields and only to the Oklahoma part of those fields.

Or, if that isn't correct, will you please explain it?

A. Those figures represent the actual costs incurred in these respective fields for doing the business of the Oklahoma jobbers indicated on this exhibit.

Well, did those costs involve an allocation of joint 2675 costs? That is, those totals there refer back to the statement regarding salesmen's salaries, car and traveling expenses, and actual time expended by management. How was that segregated to the 12 jobbers in Oklahoma?

A. Well, I think that is both in the testimony and on the exhibit. The exact number of days that the manager or any of the supervision spent in that area on these jobber accounts was taken from their exact records. Their expenses were taken from their reports. I think it is 028 expense report. The salesman who covered these accounts, we used his car, traveling expense, and his salary, and we allocated it on a gasoline and refined oil basis as is shown in the lower part of that report.

Q. Well, I suppose the management item involved an allocation as between the other parts of the territory and these jobbers?

A. This is limited purely to the time when the management left their respective division offices and went down into Oklahoma to deal with these jobber problems, irrespective. It is an actual measurement of their time according to their reports.

Q. Is that time and cost analysis which you have referred to here in the Kansas City and Wichita fields available?

A. The entire study of the profitability of operation which involves all of the phases of supplying products
2676 through Oklahoma jobbers is in our Chicago office.
It is not limited to a market phase. We dealt with only, in this analysis, that part of costs having to do with marketing.

Q. But I assume that you call that a survey or time and cost study? What do you call it?

A. It is one of these 105 studies that I testified earlier that our department had made.

Q. I assume that is available for inspection, and that that will show in some detail the method at which these figures were arrived at?

A. All of the work sheets on that study are available. There are infinite number of work sheets that have nothing to do with this lawsuit in conjunction with that study, however.

Q. We are not interested in any of the rest of it.

Mr. Hanley: Again, if your Honor please, we make the offer that any of the basic material that goes into these figures is available for the inspection of the Commission.

Mr. Austin: I believe there is an offer pending, isn't there, Judge Hanley?

Mr. Hanley: There is. And before I renew the offer, I would like to ask the witness one more question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

By Mr. Hanley:

2677 Q. Mr. Boatwright, please tell us in terms of man hours or man days or weeks of work, or any way you can, how much work and effort and time went into collecting the data and collate that is reflected in this Oklahoma jobber survey?

A. Why, I had one man assigned to this study for a period of three months. During the processes of calculations he was assisted by varying numbers. I think it would be about two clerical assistants throughout the three month period. Now, that, in addition to the time taken in the counting of tickets in the field office and so forth.

Q. Somebody from your department did go down to those fields and make a study of those fields?

A. Yes, one of my cost accountants lived in these two field office division points in counting the tickets, in analyzing personally the expense statements, in going over every detail entering into this calculation.

2678 Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, the Respondent now renews the offer in evidence of Exhibits 33-A, B, C, D, and E.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any objection?

Mr. Austin: Yes, your Honor, I object to the admission of these proposed exhibits upon the ground that to put these in evidence amounts to a little more than a statement of the expert opinion of the witness as to what the difference of cost of sale and delivery is to the two types of customers here in Detroit; and that the figures stated here are upon their face insufficient to form the basis for even an expert opinion; and that they are not supported by sufficient figures to substantiate them or to permit the Commission to reach a conclusion as to whether or not they do prove or do satisfy the purpose for which they are offered; and, therefore, I submit that they should be excluded, unless supported by figures upon which the conclusions reached can be justified.

Mr. Hanley: I would like to ask the witness a question which I may have overlooked. Perhaps I should ask it.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Boatwright, referring to Exhibit 33-A, item 1 "Tank Wagon Reseller Marketing Cost" under column 1940 there appears the figure 1.72¢; does that mean 2679 that the Standard Oil Company actually sustained a money cost in 1940 in selling each gallon of gasoline in Detroit through the tank wagon reseller channel?

Mr. Austin: Will you pardon me. I would like to know just what figure you are referring to there?

Mr. Hanley: 1.72, under 1940.

A. It does.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Is the same true with reference to the figure 1.81¢ per gallon under column 1939?

A. It is.

2680 Mr. Hanley: We renew our offer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection is overruled; Respondent's Exhibits 33-A, B, C, D, and E are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 33-A, B, C, D, and E," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Hanley: Now, if your Honor please, I am prepared to release the witness for cross-examination with the suggestion that there may be a question or two that I have overlooked that I would like to ask on direct examination. But so far as I know, you may take the witness.

Mr. Austin: I am not ready to cross-examine the witness at this time, and will request that time be allowed for study of these exhibits and for determination as to what, if any, additional figures we may wish to ask for in connection with Exhibits 33-A, to E, as well as these which we have already indicated our desire in connection with on Exhibit 31.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Reasonable time will be allowed counsel for the Commission.

Mr. Hanley: Judge, I don't think we are in position to proceed. I don't know. I didn't anticipate that counsel would want to excuse this witness.

Did your Honor have it in mind that we should, in view of this request, go forward with our testimony?

2681 Trial Examiner Ballinger: If you are not prepared to do so, we will take an adjournment.

Mr. Hanley: I don't know if we are or not.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let us take a recess for five minutes and find out.

A short recess was taken.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

Counsel for Commission not being prepared to proceed with cross-examination of the witness, the hearing is adjourned at 4:20 P. M. to be reconvened May 1, 1941, at the hour of 10 A. M., in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(Thereupon, at 4:20 o'clock P. M., April 30, 1941, an adjournment was taken, to reconvene May 1, 1941, at 10 o'clock A. M.)

2682 Room 859 Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan,
May 1, 1941.

Met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10 A. M.

Before: Webster Ballinger, Trial Examiner.

Appearances:

Cyrus B. Austin, Esq., Attorney for the Federal Trade Commission.

Harold R. Hanley, Esq., 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and

Arthur J. Abbott, Esq., of the firm of Abbott, MacMahon, and Roberts, 2230 Buhl Building, Detroit, Michigan, on behalf of the Respondent.

2683 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

This is a reconvening at 10 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, May 1, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, of Docket 4389 in the case entitled Standard Oil Company.

The last hearing was held in Detroit, April 30, 1941.

The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

You may proceed.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I would like to request that we may have two exhibits marked for identification on the direct examination of Mr. Boatwright.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark one of the documents Respondent's Exhibits 34-A and 34-B, and the other document Respondent's Exhibit 35.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 34-A and B and 35.")

Mr. Hanley: Now I offer these exhibits in evidence, your Honor.

Exhibits 34-A and 34-B is what is referred to in Mr. Boatwright's testimony and in the exhibits already in evidence as Form 018, being the form used by the Respondent in connection with the operation of trucks, de-2684 livery trucks out of bulk stations, and it is on the basis of these tickets that much of the cost information was developed that was testified to by Mr. Boatwright.

Mr. Austin: No objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 34-A and 34-B are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 34-A and 34-B," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Hanley: The other exhibit, Respondent's Exhibit 35, for identification, is Respondent's form 028, which was likewise referred to in the testimony of Mr. Boatwright, and which is an expense account form from which he gleaned some of the information that he testified about. I would like to offer that in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any objection?

Mr. Austin: It says 028-247A.

Mr. Hanley: I suppose that is the full form number, but it was referred to in the testimony as form 028.

Mr. Austin: Who uses this form?

Mr. Hanley: That form is used by everyone who has an expense account. It is a break-down of the expense account of salesmen and various people who are working for the company and have occasion to charge up expense in the course of their duties. I offer these merely for the 2685 assistance of the Government. They are blank forms. I don't regard them as important on our case. I just thought they would be helpful.

Mr. Austin: I have no objection to it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without objection, Respondent's Exhibit 35 is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 35," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Hanley: Now, I am not entirely sure, your Honor, that the record is as clear as it should be in respect of the offer which was made by the Respondent relative to the willingness of the Respondent to develop any figures or offer any opportunity to the Commission to develop any figures that may be desired. I just don't want to be trapped into any technical situation about that, and some specific, as well as general objections, were made to certain of the figures and exhibits offered in Mr. Boatwright's testimony, and I want the record to be very clear, indeed, and I want Court and counsel to understand it very clearly, that all of the facilities of the accounting department of the Respondent are available to the Commission to get any answers at all that the Commission wants with respect of any of these figures.

It has now been decided by the Court that the Com-2686 mission may have a matter of two weeks or more in which to prepare the cross-examination of Mr. Boatwright, and during that time we will be glad to develop any figures that the Commission may desire.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The time allowed will be determined after conference now going on between Dr. Boatwright and a representative of the Commission.

Mr. Austin: Well, I understood Dr. Boatwright wanted to go on a two-weeks vacation. My plan had been simply to ask for a day's recess or a day or two recess some time or other here when convenient to you, and then to go ahead with the cross-examination. But I am perfectly agreeable to waiting until after you finish your case in such time as it is convenient to him. It wasn't entirely a request for time on our part. That is, for two weeks or more time.

Mr. Hanley: I make no point of that at all. The time exists now, and I suggest that there is that period of time in which we are glad to aid the Commission in developing any figures out of our accounting department that they may want.

I understand this morning the cost accountant for the Commission, Mr. Warmack, is consulting with Mr. Boatwright, and I am hopeful they will arrive at some plan of procedure. But I just want the record absolutely clear 2687 that any supporting figures that the Commission may want or may think ought to be added here we will add.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It may be understood unless the cross-examination of Dr. Boatwright can be conducted within the next day or two, that it will be deferred for at least two weeks.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I believe the conference which you referred to between Mr. Warmack and Dr. Boatwright has to do with ironing out and making more definite the request for additional information in connection with Exhibits 31-A to Q of the Respondent. Whether or not any information is being formally requested in connection with Respondent's Exhibit 33, I don't know. The only request I talked over with Mr. Warmack before putting it in definite form was the one we discussed here yesterday in regard to Respondent's Exhibit 31.

Now, on 33, which covers retail reseller and jobber costs in Detroit for the years 1939 and 1940, there are here just five pages and the retail reseller cost is referred to, I believe, only on one page, and there is one item here of $1,405,000 that is not broken down at all.

As I think I stated yesterday, in objecting when these were offered, that the Respondent has the burden of proof on this phase of the case, and it is not my opinion that any such offer as this will satisfy that burden of proof. That may be a matter which the Commission will have to decide and, in spite of the willingness of the Respondent to open its books and permit the Commission to get any information it may want, it may be up to the Commission itself to decide what information it does want, or the Commission may simply leave it to the Respondent to submit such information as it chooses.

Certainly, as counsel for the Commission, I am not at this time going to assume any responsibility for outlining to the Respondent or telling it what I think is necessary to prove its case on costs, so if the Respondent desires to rest on this, I may or may not ask for further information, but, at the present time, I cannot, on a mere over-night glance at these figures, make any request as to what further information the Respondent should furnish, and, as I say, it may be up to the Respondent to determine or itself whether or not it desires to furnish more information.

I just want to say I appreciate the offer of Judge Hanley to make available to the Commission the Respondent's books and to supply anything that is desired, but I also want to make it clear that I do not understand that we have any burden or responsibility for taking advantage of that offer or, in the alternative, accepting what has been submitted.

2689 Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, that is exactly the objection that I am trying to meet and trying to avoid. Now it is true that there is an item of a million odd dollars in this exhibit and counsel suggests that there may be a burden of the Respondent to break that down, just as a burden on the defendant in its main case. We might break it down into five hundred dollar items and still those five hundred dollar items would be made up of fifty dollar items. I don't know how far the rule requires us to go. I think we have proved it but I don't know and I don't just want to be trapped, as I said a moment ago, into a technical situation, because we will, if your Honor will designate or the Commission will designate the extent of our burden, we will meet it. We can meet it. We have the books and it is just a question of how much of it you want in this record and I just don't want to get into any unfair technical situation here.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner has admitted the documents in evidence.

The items referred to by counsel for the Commission, as has been testified to, are made up of thousands of items.

Now is it the contention of the Commission that it is necessary for the Respondent to bring in all of these thousands of items and that we are to sit here and 2690 examine each one and then make a computation or make a record from which a computation can be made? I would like to get the views of counsel for the Commission.

Mr. Austin: Well, your Honor, I am not going to say very much more about this, right now. I think the Respondent has the right to put in what it chooses and the question is then whether the Commission will consider that the Respondent has met the burden of proof. I can't decide it. The Examiner can't decide it. I only want to make myself clear now, as to attempting to do what Judge Hanley says he wants to avoid, and that is to get into some technical situation, because while I realize that Respondent is willing to give the Commission what information they have, I don't want to be in a position, in the event I don't ask for anything, of leading Judge Hanley to believe that we are accepting as a sufficient proof what he has presented. Now I think that what we both said makes our respective positions clear and on the question of what the Respondent's burden of proof is, I don't care to express myself further at this time because I think that is a matter to be argued before the Commission.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think it is clear on the record that the Respondent has offered to throw open its books and records to representatives of the Commission for examination.

2691 That it has also offered to furnish the Commission breakdowns to some reasonable extent of the various items set forth in the exhibits which have been admitted in evidence.

Now if the Commission should conclude that the testimony given in connection with the exhibits should be inquired into further, it appears to the Examiner that the Commission should accept the tender made by counsel fo. the Respondent.

2692 Mr. Hanley: Judge, I think that is a complete answer to the query I had in my mind. That is to say if the Commission now or later thinks that we haven't discharged our full burden then we wouldn't want to have the case decided against us on that technical situation. We would like the opportunity to meet the burdens that the Commission thinks are obligatory upon us. And that will satisfy us completely. That is all I have in mind.

Mr. Austin: Well, I would like to say also, to perhaps make myself a little more clear. I think—at least I, in my own mind, have no doubt but what it is necessary to have a great deal more information put into the record upon this question of retail reseller costs. It is just a question of how it is done. If we went to the Commission on the record as it stands now and the Commission decided that you had made a prima facie case, I think they would direct me or our accountants to go ahead and ask you, as you are now suggesting, for such information as we might want, and proceed to develop the case. In other words, you would have a sort of situation where, at the end of Plaintiff's case in the Court, the Defendant moves to dismiss the complaint, and the Court denies it, then he has to go ahead with the defense, and that is the position we would be in now. On the other hand, if the Commission should decide that there has not been sufficient put 2693 in to sustain your burden of proof, then they might simply direct you to go ahead and submit more evidence. I suppose in either case it would be an indication as to what was wanted. So I don't know but what we might reach approximately the same result in either case. But I am not prepared right now, Judge, to take the position either way on it. And the only reason I said anything at all this morning is that in view of your offer, I didn't want in any way to make you feel if I don't ask you for something else on this point in the next day or two that I am accepting what has been put in. And as long as I am clear on that, why, I really—it is impossible for me to go any further than that with just an overnight perusal of these figures.

Mr. Hanley: I think I understand your position on that, Mr. Austin. If, in your judgment, the Commission felt we hadn't discharged our burden, whether you request anything specifically or not, if we still have the opportunity to present any supporting information—

Mr. Austin: Sure. You would then have the alternative.

Mr. Hanley: Then, that will satisfy me. I think you must perceive my difficulty. I don't want to be technically convicted in this case, because we haven't guessed right on the quantity of proof. We have got the records, 2694 and we will use them, but I just want to be sure we have the opportunity.

Mr. Austin: Well, I can't speak for the Commission, but I am pretty certain, Judge, that if the Commission decided that—that is, if this case went to the Commission on this point, as the record stands now, and the Commission decided you had not put in sufficient to enable it to determine whether or not there was cost justification, then you would have the choice of standing on that and going to court with it, or going back and putting on more; whereas, if the Commission held in your favor on that point, they, no doubt, would direct its own staff to go ahead and put in more testimony.

Mr. Hanley: I think that solves the problem that is troubling me.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may proceed.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Bradshaw.

HAROLD E. BRADSHAW was thereupon called as a witness by and on behalf of the Respondent, and, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. State your full name.
A. Harold E. Bradshaw.
2695 Q. Where do you reside?
A. Flint.
Q. And are you an officer of the State of Michigan?
A. Yes.
Q. What capacity?
A. Director of gasoline tax department of the Department of State.
Q. And as such do you have general charge of the collection of the State Gallonage Tax on gasoline?
A. Yes.
Q. Will you state in the record, Mr. Bradshaw, if you have the figures, the amount of the collections on the State Gallonage Tax for the years 1934 to 1940, inclusive, if you have those figures available?
A. 1934, $21,913,193.04; 1935, $24,007,863.17; 1936, $26,882,277.21; 1937, $30,723,953.47; 1938, $28,980,487.72; 1939, $31,367,888.94; 1940, $34,042,930.99.
Q. All the figures you have given are in dollars, are they not?
A. That is correct.
Q. And are these the figures for the entire State of Michigan?
A. That is correct.
Q. Are they, in your opinion, Mr. Bradshaw, an index of the gasoline tax collections and gasoline consump-2696 tion in the Detroit area also? I mean on the same ratio?
A. Approximately the same ratio would apply in any particular locality in the State.
Q. The figures you have mentioned show that there was a decrease in the gasoline tax collections in the year 1938 as compared with 1937. What is the approximate amount of decrease as between those two years?
A. Approximately $1,800,000.
Q. And as between 1938 and 1939, was there an increase over 1938 in the year 1939 in the collections?

A. There was.

Q. Approximately what amount?

A. $2,000,000. I would like you to understand that I am not making these subtractions—

Q. Not arithmetically?

A. Yes.

Q. Approximately $2,500,000; is it not?

A. Yes, that would be a better approximation.

2697 Q. Are you familiar, Mr. Bradshaw, as the Director of Gasoline Tax Administration, with the methods of wholesale and retail gasoline distribution in Michigan and the Detroit area?

A. Yes.

Q. One question I want to ask you which I omitted to ask you is this: Were you subpoenaed to appear here for this hearing?

A. Yes.

Mr. Abbott: Will you mark this, please.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Reporter will mark the document Respondent's Exhibit 36 for identification.

Mr. Abbott: Off the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Abbott: On the record, again. Exhibit 36 for identification on page 62—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Wait a minute. Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Abbott: Respondent's Exhibit 36 for identification is a list of the registered wholesale distributors of gasoline as of February 1, 1941, by counties, and I understand that the attorney for the Commission is willing that 2698 only pages 62, 63, and 64, comprising the list of such registered wholesale distributors for Wayne County may be admitted in evidence, or may be considered as the exhibit; the reason for that is we don't want to encumber the record with the rest of this book.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What is the identification—official publication?

Mr. Abbott: I will ask the witness that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Doesn't it show on its face?

Mr. Abbott: It shows on its face to be the official publication of the State of Michigan.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read what it says.

Mr. Abbott: (Reading) State of Michigan, Department of State, List of Registered Wholesale Distributors of Gasoline as of February 1, 1941, issued by authority of Harry F. Kelly, Secretary of State, Harold E. Bradshaw, Director of Gasoline Tax Department.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And that is an official publication by the State, is it?

The Witness: Yes, your Honor.

2699 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document Respondent's Exhibit 36-A and the respective pages, numbers 62, 63, and 64, Respondent's Exhibits 36-B, 36-C, and 36-D.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 36-A, B, C, D.")

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The document so marked, without objection, the document and respective pages are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 36-A, B, C, D," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Abbott: Will you mark this as Exhibit 37-A, 37-B, 37-C, and 37-D?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document handed in by counsel Respondent's Exhibits 37-A to 37-D, for identification.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 37-A, B, C, D.")

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, Mr. Bradshaw, I show you Respondent's Exhibits 37-A, 37-B, 37-C and 37-D, for identification, and ask you to identify that. State what it represents.

A. A list of present Wayne County wholesale distributors of gasoline as of February 1, 1941, by firm name 2700 and date of first registration as a licensed wholesaler in the State of Michigan.

Q. I will ask you whether that is the same as appears in Exhibit 36-A, 36-B, 36-C, and 36-D, which is the list in the printed list of registered wholesale distributors of gasoline just now introduced and admitted in evidence? Is the list the same as appears in Exhibits 36-A, 36-B, 36-C, and 36-D?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What additional information is contained in Exhibits 37-A, 37-B, 37-C, and 37-D, which is not in Exhibits 36-A, 36-B, 36-C, and 36-D, Mr. Bradshaw?

A. The date of first registration of record of all present Wayne County gasoline wholesalers.

Q. And is that information, as contained in the second column of Exhibits 37-A, 37-B, 37-C, and 37-D, taken from your records as Commissioner of the State Gasoline Tax Department?

A. It is.

Mr. Abbott: I offer Respondent's Exhibits 37-A, 2701 37-B, 37-C, and 37-D, in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any objection?

Mr. Austin: No objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 37-A, 37-B, 37-C, and 37-D, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 37-A, B, C, and D," were received in evidence.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, Mr. Bradshaw, there was certain other information which you were asked to bring with you from Lansing. I understand you have Mr. Griswold, your deputy, and it is desired Mr. Griswold be used in order to introduce those matters in evidence.

A. He is the office manager.

Q. He is the office manager.

A. Yes.

Mr. Abbott: That's all. You may take the witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Abbott: It appears on Exhibit 36-B that Washtenaw County appears on the upper part of that page, and it is not the intention of Respondent to include Wash-2702 tenaw County in the exhibit, and it may, therefore, be not considered in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That portion of Respondent's Exhibit 37-B which includes Washtenaw County will be excluded from the exhibit, and the exhibit confined exclusively to Wayne County.

Mr. Austin: No cross-examination.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Abbott: I will call Mr. Griswold.

FREDERICK W. GRISWOLD was thereupon called by and on behalf of the Respondent, and, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Will you state your full name?

A. Frederick W. Griswold.

Q. And where do you live, Mr. Griswold?

A. I live on a farm northeast of Lansing. I don't know whether you want the business address or my home address.

Q. No. That is sufficient. What is your occupation?

A. I am the office manager of the Gasoline Tax Department.

Q. And were you subpoenaed to appear here at this time?

A. I was.

2703 Q. And were you asked to bring with you certain records in connection with the registered wholesale distributors of gasoline in Wayne County?

A. I was.

Q. And have you produced those records?

A. I have.

Mr. Abbott: Please mark this Exhibit 38-A to 38-E.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the documents handed in by counsel for the Respondent as Respondent's Exhibits 38-A, 38-B, 38-C, 38-D, and 38-E, for identification.

Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, Mr. Griswold, I show you Exhibits 38-A, 38-B, 38-C, 38-D, and 38-E, for identification, and ask you to identify that, and state what it is. You may read the head ing on it, and otherwise state what the document consists of.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 38-A, 38-B, 38-C, 38-D, 38-E.")

2704 A. "Information as to 42 Wayne County Gasoline Wholesale Distributors, compiled from records of Gasoline Tax Department of the State of Michigan for the year 1941 (as to retail stations and bulk plants) and for month of March, 1941 (as to gasoline suppliers.)"

Q. What does the first vertical column of that exhibit consist of?

A. Give the name of the distributor.

Q. And those consist of 42 Wayne County Gasoline Wholesale Distributors? Is that correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does column two consist of and represent?

A. It shows the number of retail stations which these distributors operate.

Q. In some instances is it or is it not a fact that it is shown that they do not operate any retail stations?

A. In some instances, yes, sir.

Q. And in the instances where they do so operate, the number of retail stations is given, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. What does vertical column three of exhibits 38-A, 38-B, 38-C, 38-D, and 38-E represent?

A. It shows whether or not they operate a bulk plant.

Q. And in cases it is shown that they do, is the number of bulk plants operated shown?

2705 A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does vertical column four of Exhibits 38-A, 38-B, 38-C, 38-D, and 38-E show?

A. It shows the names of the wholesale distributors from whom the companies on the first column purchase their gasoline.

Q. Do you mean it shows the name of the wholesale distributor from whom they purchase?

A. Supplying the gasoline to the name of the distributor in the first column.

Q. Do [illegible]u mean to limit the column four to designating them as wholesale distributors?

A. Yes, sir. They are wholesale distributors.

2706 Q. What does column 5 of Exhibits 38-A, 38-B, 38-C, 38-D, and 38-E, inclusive, represent?

A. It shows by what method of delivery the gasoline is made.

Q. Column 5 and Column 6, I believe, shows that information?

A. Column 5 shows the deliveries by truck and Column 6, by tank car.

Q. And is that shown in Columns 5 and 6 as to all of the wholesale distributors mentioned in Column one of the exhibit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is this information which appears on Exhibits 38-A to 38-E, inclusive—does that reflect the information which is contained in the official records of your office which you were asked to produce here?

A. Yes, sir; they were taken from the records.

Q. And are the records themselves in the court room?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you brought them with you to substantiate the exhibit, did you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what particular records do you have here from your office from which this data has been compiled, which is expressed in Exhibits 38-A to 38-E, inclusive?

A. The applications for wholesale distributor's license.

2707 Q. And for what year?

A. For the year 1941.

Q. What part of the information which appears on Respondent's Exhibits 38-A to 38-E, inclusive, was taken from the 1941 application for wholesale distributor's license?

A. The name of the distributor and the number of retail stations which they operate.

Q. Now, what other official record of your office was used in compiling Exhibits 38-A to 38-E, inclusive?

A. The monthly tax report of these distributors.

Q. And for what month?

A. For the month of March, 1941.

Q. And was that monthly tax report furnished as to each of the wholesale distributors which appear in Column 1 of this exhibit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What information appears on this Exhibit 38-A to 38-E, inclusive, which was taken from the monthly report of these various distributors for the month that you have stated?

A. The information in Columns 4, 5, and 6.

Q. And what information is that?

A. That is the information showing the companies that furnish the gasoline to the distributors on Column 1.

2708 Q. And, also—

A. And also the method in which it is delivered; either by truck or tank car.

Q. Where did you get the information on Exhibits 38-A to 38-E, inclusive, as to whether they operate a bulk plant?

A. That is from the application for license.

Q. The 1941 license?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, state whether it is a fact, or not, as to whether this information is from statements made by the wholesalers themselves, which are a part of the records and files of your office?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are those reports and applications required by you to be filed by all of the wholesale distributors whose names appear in this exhibit?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Abbott: I offer the exhibit in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This relates to the year 1941, does it?

The Witness: Yes, sir—well, partly—on the wholesale distributors, on their application for license for the year 1941, and then the information in regard to the suppliers of gasoline is taken from the month of March, 1941, tax reports.

2709 Trial Examiner Ballinger: When were those applications submitted?

The Witness: The most of them are submitted prior to January 1, 1941.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Are they required by law to submit their application for license prior to January 1, 1941?

A. Yes, they are, although sometimes there are cases we don't get them in until a little after January 1.

Q. Then, as I understand it, these Exhibits 38-A to 38-E, inclusive, reflect the information which appears on there as of the year 1941, as of what month?

A. March, 1941.

Q. Now, there is one thing I want to ask you before

Mr. Austin asks you any questions, and that is as to the Speedway Petroleum Corporation, which appears on Exhibit 38-D of the Exhibit. Is there a correction you wish to make with reference to that corporation?

A. There is some correction there. On the Speedway Petroleum Corporation we show there 12 retail stations. The Speedway Petroleum Corporation is controlled by people by the name of Sucher Brothers, and the Sucher Brothers are organized under another corporation.

Q. What is the name of that corporation, if you know?

A. I think that is just Sucher Brothers.

2710 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The corporation name is Sucher Brothers?

The Witness: The Sucher Brothers Oil Company. I am not sure.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. It uses the name Sucher, does it?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there anything you want to correct about this exhibit in that respect?

A. The only thing is, it is claimed by the Speedway Petroleum Corporation that Sucher Brothers Corporation operate the 12 retail stations.

Q. And not the Speedway Petroleum?

A. And not the Speedway Petroleum.

Mr. Abbott: I make the offer with that correction of the exhibit.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Do I understand you to say that these stations are or are not operated by Speedway Petroleum Corporation?

A. The Speedway Petroleum—I suppose when I made up the tabulation that they were operated by the Speedway Petroleum.

Q. You mean they so reported?

A. Well, they reported on their application that they did ~~not~~ operate these stations,

2711 Q. Yes?

A. But we understood up at our office that the Speedway Corporation took over the Sucher Brothers' operation, and in making up this tabulation, I put on the number of stations that were operated by Sucher Brothers, thinking that Speedway was operating those stations, and then I found out afterward that through some business expediency or something or other, that Sucher Brothers were operating the stations, retail stations, but were being furnished the gas by Speedway Corporation.

Q. Then, you didn't make this report entirely from your records, did you, Mr. Griswold?

A. Well, with the exception of that one. In making up that, I thought that they had made an error, that the Speedway people had made an error in making that report, and I put that in there.

Q. Did you think anybody else had made any errors?

A. Well, no, I didn't know that they did on there, because I took those and the rest of it from the record.

Q. Everything else is taken from your original records?

A. Yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you wish to have this exhibit corrected so as to show instead of 12 stations operated at retail, none operated?

A. None, according to the application of Speedway Petroleum Corporation. 2712

Q. And I understand, Mr. Griswold, that you personally prepared this tabulation, Exhibit 38-A to E, inclusive?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Abbott: Go ahead.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. The information on the first three columns here, rather, in the second and third columns, Mr. Griswold, you said that was contained in the license application for 1941?

A. That's right.

Q. Wouldn't that information be information for 1940, then?

A. No. It would be for 1941. They are making the application for their 1941 license.

Q. Yes. But when was the application filed?

A. Well, I would have to look back. A part of their were filed prior to December 31, 1940, and some of them were filed after January 1, 1941.

Q. Well, those applications, then, couldn't very well tell you how many retail service stations they 2713 operated in 1941, could they?

A. Well, it had shown they had that many or proposed to operate that many retail stations during the year of 1941.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That was merely an application for authority to operate a certain number of stations during the year 1941, was it not?

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Austin: I would certainly object, then, to that column, your Honor, because this shows what they intended to do in the future, and they were merely obtaining licenses to operate a certain amount of retail service stations, and, apparently, according to the witness' statement, it isn't based on any fact as to how many stations they operated in 1940 or any other time.

Mr. Abbott: On that, your Honor—are you through?

Mr. Austin: No.

Mr. Abbott: I think the application, as the witness has stated—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let him finish his examination.

Mr. Abbott: He made an objection, and I want to make a statement. But I will wait until he finishes the examination.

2714 Examination on Voir Dire (Cont'd) by Mr. Austin.

Q. Now, Mr. Griswold, does this list purport—strike that.

In the first place, let me ask you whether the names of distributors which appear in the first column on this exhibit Respondent's Exhibit 38-A to E inclusive, do those names all represent registered wholesale distributors of gasoline? And by that I mean do they represent persons or corporations who have been licensed as distributors of gasoline in Michigan?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do the names of all of them appear in this 1941 list?

A. I want to make one correction to that. The name of Charles E. Austin, Incorporated, is not on that book there (indicating).

Mr. Abbott: When you say that book you mean Exhibit 36-A to D inclusive?

The Witness: That is right. The reason the license has not been granted is it is held in abeyance on account of a court case that we have against the Austin Company.

Examination on Voir Dire (Cont'd) by Mr. Austin.

2715 Q. That who has?

A. The State of Michigan.

Q. Well, has Charles E. Austin been granted a license as a registered wholesale distributor, or has he not?

A. Not for the year of 1941. Not yet.

Q. Was he granted a license in 1940?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. But as I understand it this information here has been taken from an application for 1941 which has not been granted; is that correct?

A. It is taken—that's right. It is taken from the application. But the license has not yet been issued.

Q. Is there any other name on this list that doesn't appear in the Department of State list?

A. No, sir.

Q. You have a column here, Mr. Griswold, the second column on this Exhibit 38 which refers to the number of retail gasoline stations operated by each of these distributors.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the same column we were discussing a moment ago?

A. That's right.

Q. Is there anything in this compilation, again referring to Exhibit 38, which indicates whether any of these concerns named as distributors sell gasoline at wholesale?

2716 A. You mean the distributors in column one?

Q. Yes. Is there anything on this report that shows whether they sell any gasoline to retail dealers; or if so how many?

A. There is nothing on this report that shows it, no.

Q. Now, turning to the fourth column on the report, which is entitled "Gasoline Supplied By" will you tell me again what that is taken from?

A. That is taken from the monthly tax reports of these—

Q. You said it was March—something that related to March?

A. Of the tax report for March, 1941.

Q. And do those tax reports state for each person filing a report the sources from which they buy their gasoline?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything in this report here which you have prepared to indicate whether any of these suppliers sell gasoline directly to any retail gasoline service stations?

A. Nothing in these reports, no, sir.

Q. This is not a complete list in column one of all of the licensed distributors in Wayne County, is it, Mr. Griswold?

A. No; that is only 42.

Q. Why did you pick out these 42?

A. They were picked out at the request of the Standard Oil Company.

2717 Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I object to this; it is not a complete—I think it is immaterial and irrelevant, because it doesn't—this information here by itself doesn't prove anything; but aside from that it appears now that this is a list of names picked out of the licensed wholesale distributors list by the Standard Oil Company including one name which does not even have a license, and—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I didn't get your last statement.

Mr. Austin: I said it appears that this is some information regarding a list of names picked out by the Standard Oil Company from the wholesale distributors list from Michigan, and it includes even one name that hasn't even been given a license, although the information is supposed to be regarding licensed distributors. And it is not a complete list. And there has been no showing as to what probative value this could have. It is only a statement which is based upon some applications for licenses and state tax returns made by a selected group of distributors in Wayne County. And I submit if it is going to be offered at all, the information should be offered for all of the distributors in Wayne County, and that since it is made from records it would have been just as easy to have made a complete list. But as it stands I am not clear as to the purpose for which it is offered. But 2718 it seems to me that as a whole it is incomplete; it has not been accurately compiled. At least in a couple of cases. And the second column "Retail Stations Operated" is now admitted to be only the number of retail stations contained in a license application and not a statement of fact as to what has been done in the past.

2719 Mr. Abbott: I want to ask the witness one or two other questions before I reply to the objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Before you get into that. This has no relation to anything that transpired prior to January 1, 1941, has it?

Mr. Abbott: That is what I was going to ask him. With reference to the number of retail stations operated, I wanted to clear that up.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Griswold, on the application for license of the wholesale distributor of gasoline for the year 1941, would you be able to get your file that you have of those applications in order to answer one or two questions that I would like to ask you?

A. I will, sir.

Q. Now, I would like to ask you what the questionnaire contains on the application from which you got the information on Exhibit 38 as to the number of retail stations operated?

Mr. Abbott: I think, possibly, this ought to be marked for identification, this application, because we are going to talk about it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

2720 By Mr. Abbott:

Q. State, then, Mr. Griswold, what the questionnaire contains as to the matter of retail stations operated. That is No. 11 on the application.

A. Shall I answer that question?

Q. Yes.

A. On Line 11 of the application there is a question: "Do you own and operate retail gasoline service stations?"

Q. And underneath the line?

A. The answer is: "Yes." "And if so, how many?" And the answer is: "24."

Q. You are talking now about the Charles E. Austin?

A. Charles E. Austin, Incorporated, application, yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Where does that appear?

(The witness indicated to the Examiner.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. And do I understand you, then, that on the applications, as they appeared in your office, the questionnaire asks in line 11: "Do you own and operate retail gasoline service stations? And if so, how many?" Is that correct?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, on Exhibit 36, which is the book containing the wholesale licensed distributors in Wayne County, does that list include the four Standard Oil jobbers involved in this case, namely, Ned's Auto Supply Company, Citrin-2721 Kolb Oil, Stikeman Oil Company, and Wayne Oil Company?

A. I will have to look at the record there, but I am pretty sure that it does.

Q. Taking them in order, alphabetical order, first, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Next, Ned's Auto Supply?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Next, Stikeman Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And next, Wayne Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it also includes all the other licensed wholesale distributors in Wayne County?

A. Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let's go off the record for a few moments.

(Discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a five minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

2722 Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order. Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Hanley: It appears, your Honor, that Mr. Boatwright, for the Respondent, and Mr. Warmack, for the Commission, have had a conference relative to certain requests that the Commission desires to make in connection with the accounting figures and procedure testified to by Mr. Boatwright, and those requests have been reduced to written form and supplied to Mr. Boatwright, with a copy to counsel for the Commission. It is understood that the Respondent will make the answers and supply the material that are outlined in the memorandum, and I shall send those answers to the Commission for the attention of Messrs. Austin and Warmack.

If there are additional requests for further information, if Mr. Austin or Mr. Warmack will communicate with me, I will develop that information and send that as promptly as our accountants can give me the answers.

Mr. Austin: The written memorandum which counsel for the Respondent has just referred to relates to the Respondent's Exhibits 31-A to 31-Q, and not to Respondent's Exhibits 33-A to 33-E.

Mr. Hanley: I understand Mr. Warmack dictated
2723 the memorandum. Am I right about that?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I would like to make a request on the record at this time to the Respondent to furnish, as soon as possible, to the Commission a statement showing the names of all of the retail reseller customers of the Respondent in the Detroit area in 1937, and their addresses, and the number of service stations operated by each in the case the customer operates more than one.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And location?

Mr. Austin: Well, yes, where there is more than one service station, the locations of the various outlets should be listed, and the total gallonage purchased by each customer. That is, gallonage of gasoline purchased by each customer during the year 1937. That is intended to cover—if I said Detroit area, I meant the Detroit division—covering Mr. Raupagh's division. I assume those records are available here in the Detroit office.

Mr. Hanley: I don't understand the request, Mr. Austin. Do you want the whole Detroit division or just this territory that we have been discussing in this case? Namely, Detroit, Hamtramck, Highland Park, and Dearborn?

2724 Mr. Austin: No. Because this request is in relation to Respondent's Exhibit 31, which has been stated covers the entire Detroit Division.

Mr. Hanley: I see. Well, you want an itemized list of the individual tank wagon reseller buyers?

Mr. Austin: That's right.

Mr. Hanley: Their location, and the amount of their 1937 gallonage?

Mr. Austin: That's right.

Mr. Hanley: For the entire Detroit division?

Mr. Austin: Yes. And if one of those customers operates a chain of stations, then I want the number of stations and the various locations. If he only operates one station, why, of course, then the address of the customer would presumably be the address of that service station.

Mr. Hanley: I think those records are surely available, your Honor, and we will get them up. Of course, you understand, there are a good many hundreds of them, and it takes a little while to dig out the records. But we can get them.

Mr. Austin: Well, I don't know exactly how many hundreds there are.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner understands the information will be furnished.

Mr. Hanley: We will get it as soon as we can.

2725 Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may proceed.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Griswold, the question was asked you by counsel for the Commission as to why on Exhibit 38-A to E inclusive only 41 names of wholesale distributors were included, whereas on Exhibit 36-A to D there are over 200 of such distributors included; is it not a fact, that Exhibit 36 contains the names of many factories in Detroit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In fact, isn't it a fact that most of the names on that exhibit are factories?

A. Factories and individuals purchasing gasoline for their own use.

Q. For their own consumption?

A. For their own consumption, yes, sir.

Mr. Abbott: Now, if the Court please, I wish to state that the primary purpose of the tabulation which is identified as Exhibit 38-A to E inclusive is to show an absence of substantial injury to competition. We intend to tie this up with the testimony of Mr. Raupagh hereafter to be adduced to show that there are in Wayne County approximately 40 operations comparable to that which is carried on by Ned's Auto Supply, which is one of the operations complained of in this proceeding.

2726 Furthermore, it is offered to show that many wholesale jobbers even operate without a bulk plant, thereby giving them a distinct cost advantage over Standard Oil jobbers, and particularly Ned's Auto Supply Company.

Third, to show that many wholesale jobbers use the bulk plants of their supplier and receive tank wagon deliveries. And we intend to tie this up with testimony to show that such deliveries, although made by tank wagon and tank truck, are made at tank car prices.

Fourth, to show that many major oil companies except the Standard Oil Company and some others, supply branded gasoline to wholesalers in the Detroit area and Wayne County. And Fifth, to show that there is no discrimination in this case which even remotely injures competition by such testimony.

And this testimony which is now offered in Exhibit 38-A to E, inclusive, is necessary as a basis for other testimony which will be offered in evidence in the Respondent's case in which we propose to tie up with the information given on Exhibit 38-A to E, inclusive, the matters which I have just referred to, which are necessary to the defense of the Respondent as bearing upon the claim that there has been substantial injury to competition by the operations complained of.

2727 Trial Examiner Ballinger: You have now stated your reasons for the purpose for which the exhibit is offered. Will you now address your remarks to the objections made by counsel for the Commission?

Mr. Abbott: Yes. Now, the first of the objections, as I understand it—

Mr. Austin: I have further objection, too, your Honor. I don't want to interrupt further now, but I wish just to state that I have some further objections to make.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If counsel has further objections, I am going to request counsel for the Respondent to suspend, and let's get in all of the objections at this point.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

Mr. Austin: May I ask the witness some further questions?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Q. Mr. Griswold, does this report, Exhibit 38-A to E for identification, show the price at which any of the distributors purchased their gasoline?

A. No, sir.

2728 Q. Do you know, in any case, whether the distributor purchased at a tank car price or at a tank wagon price?

A. Our records don't show anything about the price.

Q. Column 5 here and 6, refer, as I understand it, to statements on their tax reports as to whether they purchase by truck or by tank car.

A. That's right; on the last two columns.

Q. Do you know, or do those reports show whether the distributors who purchase by truck, pay a tank car price or a tank truck price?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is there anything on this report which indicates whether or not the gasoline supplied to these distributors by the suppliers in Column 4 is branded gasoline or unbranded gasoline?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, turning to Column 2: you stated that that refers to the license application and was in answer to a question on the application as to whether or not the applicant operates retail stations?

A. Yes, sir. That's right.

Q. Did the answers on the applications state the number of retail stations operated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that where this list came from?

A. Yes, sir.

2729 Q. Now, turning to Exhibit 38-B. Do you have any knowledge, other than the figure on the application, as to whether the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company operates 16 retail stations?

A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether the Highland Oil Company operates 29 retail stations?

A. Only what is shown on the application.

Mr. Austin: That's all, Mr. Griswold.

Now, if your Honor please, if this is offered to prove the number of retail stations operated by these named distributors, it is purely hearsay. It would not be hearsay if it is offered to prove the number of stations reported by them on these reports, but I submit that the number of service stations reported to the Secretary of State is entirely immaterial and irrelevant.

If there is any relevancy in this, it would go to the actual fact as to how many retail stations they operated and as to that fact, this witness has nothing but hearsay, and, as I say, if the purpose it to prove only to prove what these people reported to the Secretary of State, I claim that is entirely irrelevant and immaterial.

2730 Furthermore, I think the answers which the witness has given, show conclusively that this report does not in any way prove the things that Mr. Abbott said it was offered for; either as to price or as to branded gasoline or as to whether or not these buyers participate in bulk plant facilities of their suppliers. There is absolutely nothing here that shows that.

Mr. Abbott: It is, of course, admitted that there is nothing on the exhibits 38-A to 38-E which bears on this question of price.

As I stated, that was merely foundational and the matter of price will be offered in subsequent testimony.

This Exhibit 38-A to 38-E includes only factual matters which appear on the State records and the tabulation is merely to enable the evidence to be included in this record without encumbering it with the original document which, of course, for another reason, cannot be admitted because it is a State record.

With reference to the claim of hearsay, your Honor, it would of course, be possible to issue subpoenaes for each one of these wholesale distributors and put their testimony in the record but I contend—and I think it is true—that this is a positive statement and evidence as to the number of retail stations that they operate and, also, as to the number of bulk plants which they operate, because 2731 on the back of the application for license they asked the question: "Bulk stations owned or operated by applicant."

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is that in the record?

Mr. Abbott: Well, I will ask the witness if that is not the fact.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Griswold, on the back of the application for license as a wholesale distributor of gasoline, I will ask you to state what question is asked as to the operation of bulk stations. State the exact phraseology as to the question which is answered by the applicant; upon which you based—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Will you hand the Examiner a copy of the form of application?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, your Honor (handing document to Examiner.)

2732 Mr. Abbott: The first page, line 11.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The applications are filled out and then sworn to and acknowledged by a notary public?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please—

Mr. Abbott: There was a question pending, Mr. Austin.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I want you to state in the record the phraseology used in connection with bulk stations on the back page of the application.

A. We have a section of the report headed "Bulk Stations," and then "Owned or Operated by Applicant," with columns there for listing the bulk stations and the city and the capacity of the bulk station.

Mr. Abbott: Now, Mr. Austin.

Mr. Austin: I just wanted to say, in further explanation of my objection, that there are certain things like gallonage reported for tax purposes that I think one could very properly get off of State reports. A man pays tax on gasoline and it is pretty certain he sold at least that much, but when you get into this question of operation of retail service stations, that question might be answered in a lot of ways, and I don't know—for instance, when it 2733 talks about some of these companies like Highland Oil operating 29 stations, and Firestone operating 16, and various other figures on here, while I don't know very much of Detroit, I never heard of any such chain of stations being operated by Firestone, to make one specific example, and it seems to me that this certainly is not the best evidence, and if the Respondent is permitted to prove or to put into the record, for the purpose of proving, the number of retail stations operated, simply by Secretary of State reports, or a report based on them, why, that simply is what this man told the Secretary of State as to how many stations he operated, and what his business dealings were with those stations, and whether he actually operated them or only supplied them as a wholesaler, I have no chance of cross examination on that point at all, and I think, for the purpose for which this is offered, it is purely a hearsay proposition.

I am not objecting to it because they don't bring the original secretary of State's reports here. I would object to them, on the same ground.

Mr. Abbott: The question as to operation of retail gasoline stations is covered by the phraseology as testified to by the witness: "Do you own and operate retail gasoline service stations?". That is on subdivision 11 of page 1.

2734 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, does the answer to that appear in Column 2?

Mr. Abbott: That's right. And that's the exact phraseology: "operate retail station."

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And that related to the period about the month of December, 1940, did it?

Mr. Abbott: January 1, 1941. The witness has testified to that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The applications had to be filed before the 1st day of January, 1941, as I understand it?

Mr. Abbott: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: So that the application must have been made prior thereto.

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The same thing is true with reference to Column 3, is it not?

Mr. Abbott: That is correct, excepting as to Column 3 the month of March, 1941, is applicable, as stated in the heading on the exhibit, because that was supplied on their March, 1941, report. That information is contained in the March, 1941, report.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Are we referring to the same column? Are you referring to the column with the heading: "Operate Bulk Plant"?

2735 Mr. Abbott: No; that information is supplied from the application for license which was filed, as the witness has stated, in December, 1940.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The fourth column, as the Examiner understands, relates to the operations done during what month?

Mr. Abbott: March, 1941, as stated in the caption.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And as shown by the official reports?

Mr. Abbott: That's right. And also the information as to whether gasoline is delivered by trucks or by tank car: that is also from the same month, March of 1941.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Have you concluded?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is now 12:30 P. M. The Examiner will reserve his ruling until we reconvene at 2 P. M., and now, at 12:30 P. M., the hearing stands in recess until 2 P. M.

(Thereupon at 12:30 o'clock P. M., a recess was taken to reconvene at 2 o'clock P. M.)

2736 Afternoon Session.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order, reconvene.

Mr. Abbott: I think there is a motion pending, your Honor, as to the offering of Exhibit 38-A, B, C, D, and E.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, before you rule, may I ask the witness one or two more questions?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Now, these names of distributors that are in the first column—have you a copy of this exhibit?

A. I have it right here.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Referring to Respondent's Exhibit 38-A to E, inclusive.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Are all of those persons or corporations named in that column persons or corporations who filed applications for distributors' licenses and gave their address as Wayne County?

Let me ask you in another way: I believe you said that all of those names appear under the Wayne County list in this Exhibit 36?

2737 A. That's right.

Q. What is the basis for listing them under Wayne County?

A. We list them according , we have in that book a listed also an alphabetical list, and then we list them by counties in order to check them up quicker.

Q. How do you know what county to list them under?

A. How do we know?

Q. Yes.

A. We take that from the application as it comes in.

Q. Was that the address given on the applications?

A. Yes, Wayne County.

Q. In other words, if the address is in Wayne County, you list them under Wayne County?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, going to the second and third columns referring to retail stations and bulk plants, is there any statement in the application as to where those retail stations or bulk plants are located?

A. In quite a good many of them they are asked to list them, and they do list them. Some of them do not.

Q. You say they are asked for a list of them?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you mean by that?

A. Well, on the wholesale distributions, we issue a unit license to their different outlets that they have; that 2738 is, we issue a unit license bearing their wholesale distributor's number instead of a retail license.

Q. You mean where they operate a retail service station?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, what I am trying to find out is, Mr. Griswold, do the applications or forms from which this report was made state the addresses of the retail service stations and bulk plant?

A. Some of them do. The bulk plants most all of them are stated. When they list them on the report—or on the application, and usually the larger distributors, where they have a good many of their stations, they list the stations, and where they are located.

Q. Do you know, in a case of these figures in columns 2 and 3, here, whether those figures represent service stations and bulk plants located in Wayne County?

A. No, I presume some of them are not located in Wayne County.

Q. Have you made any record of the locations of the ones that are listed here?

A. Not any separate record, no, except what is on the state records.

Q. Well, might not some of these retail stations be located in other counties?

A. Yes.

2739 Q. The same is true with bulk plants, isn't it?

A. Yes. It might be true of the bulk plants.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I would like to add to my ground of objection the fact that it doesn't appear that if introduced in evidence that this proposed exhibit would form any basis of comparison with a situation in the Detroit area.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, we are not concerned in this study as to the territorial distribution either of retail stations or bulk plants. This is not a cost analysis restricted to a particular area. We are only concerned here with the principle as to whether wholesale distributors who register from Wayne County, operate retail stations, either as a part of their operation or exclusively.

We are interested in the matter of operation of bulk plant, not from the standpoint of where the plant is located, but from the standpoint that a great many of these wholesale distributors conduct their business without any bulk plant at all, as shown by the exhibit. That is the thing we are primarily interested in, and the question as to where either the retail station of the bulk plant is located is wholly immaterial for the purpose of this exhibit.

Now, of course, the only thing that could be tabu-2740 lated from the original record was the answer of the wholesale distributor to the question on the questionnaire which related to the operation of retail stations as to January 1st, 1941, and as to the operation of bulk plants as of that time, because the questionnaire said: "Do you operate retail stations?" and "If so, how many?" And then, on the back of the same blank, it asks the question as to the operation of the bulk plants, "How many are operated, if any?" And, as I say, we are primarily interested there in ascertaining whether they operate any bulk plant at all; from the standpoint of showing that a great many of the wholesale distributors operate their business without any bulk plants whatsoever.

Now, whether the bulk plant is located in the Detroit area or outside the Detroit area is wholly immaterial. I submit that the objections which are here raised by the attorney for the Commission are, upon the testimony of this witness and upon the exhibit as submitted not well taken and that the exhibit should not be admitted in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner rules that the Exhibits 38-A to and including 38-E do not furnish the best evidence.

He further rules that the exhibits and testimony of the witness furnish no basis for cross-examination.

2741 Accordingly Respondent's Exhibits 38-A to 38-E, inclusive, are excluded.

Mr. Hanley: The Respondent at this time moves, upon the basis of the objection of counsel for the Commission and upon the basis of the ruling of the Examiner, that the so-called Taggart survey, Exhibits 75-A, 75-B, 75-C, and Exhibit 76, and the entire testimony of the witness Taggart be stricken from the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion is denied.

Mr. Abbott: For the record, is this ruling based upon the ground that the information is hearsay; upon which the tabulation is based?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is not the best evidence. The best evidence—and if this is material to your case—can be obtained from these dealers, and that would afford an opportunity of cross-examination.

Mr. Abbott: Of course, we can subpoena each one of these 42 wholesalers—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is impossible for counsel for the Commission to, by cross-examination, test the accuracy of any statement appearing on these exhibits.

Mr. Abbott: Well, by the same token it was impossible for the attorney for the Respondent to test the accuracy of the questionnaire submitted by the station operators as the basis for the Taggart survey.

2742 Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is a matter of water passed over the dam. The Examiner has ruled on it, and it is not open for further discussion.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I want to ask you this, Mr. Griswold: of your own personal knowledge, as the office manager of the Gasoline Tax Department, is it or is it not the general marketing practice of wholesale distributors, so-called, both in the Detroit area and throughout Michigan, to market gasoline at retail direct to the public?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say it is?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you, of your own personal knowledge, is it or is it not the general marketing practice of wholesale distributors both in the Detroit area and throughout Michigan to operate retail gasoline stations in some cases exclusively?

Mr. Austin: Of course, this question is asked of the witness of his own personal knowledge, it doesn't call for an opinion, so I have no objection to it.

Mr. Abbott: That is what I am asking the witness.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Whether of your own personal knowledge, you know it is the practice of wholesale distributors both in 2743 Detroit and throughout Michigan to operate retail stations exclusively?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The question is to be answered of your own personal knowledge, and not what you gained from either reading or from hearsay.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you have personal knowledge of that, Mr. Griswold?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what is your answer?

A. My answer is that they do.

Q. That they do?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Griswold, your answer having been in the affirmative, how long, to your knowledge, has that practice continued, both of operating retail stations in whole or in part, on the part of wholesale distributors, both in Wayne County and throughout the State of Michigan?

A. For as long as I have been with the gasoline tax division, which has been for about ten years.

Q. Of your own personal knowledge, I will ask you what is the fact as to whether Wayne County wholesale gasoline distributors, and wholesale gasoline distributors throughout the State of Michigan, do their business without operating a bulk plant? And I ask you that, also of your own personal knowledge.

A. Yes, sir, there is quite a lot of them.

2744 Q. Your answer is that they do?

A. That they operate without a bulk plant, yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you mean by that? Explain your statement, please.

The Witness: What do I mean by it?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

2745 The Witness: I mean they don't have any bulk plants. Quite a lot of distributors are licensed in the book there that do not have a bulk plant; they buy gasoline in a tank truck and operate right from the tank truck.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What bulk plant, if any, do they use in that operation?

A. Well, they don't use any. They go—a lot of them go to the refinery and buy the gasoline and sell it right from the refinery.

Q. You mean in cases where they buy it from the refinery?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, of your own personal knowledge is it or is it not a fact that many wholesale distributors, instead of having a bulk plant of their own use the bulk plant of the supplier, which furnishes them with gasoline? Do you know what the situation is with reference to that, of your own knowledge?

A. Well, I wouldn't say as to that, Mr. Abbott.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Griswold, you are testifying here with reference to your own personal knowledge; do you know of your own personal knowledge that these jobbers obtain their supply direct from the bulk plant of the refinery?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You have seen that?

2746 The Witness: I have come in contact with it. That is, in our work up there, we know they do.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And you know that was their regular source of supply?

The Witness: Sure, because we get their report from them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, now, are you dealing or basing your statement upon their report, or what you know?

The Witness: I am basing it on both.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You have personal knowledge of it?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Abbott: Is your Honor through?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: You may take the witness.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Griswold, I believe you stated that it is the practice for wholesalers in the State of Michigan to sell entirely at retail—or, will you repeat what you said in regard to that? I think you were asked whether you know that these wholesale distributors or some of them sell entirely at retail?

A. Yes, sir.

2747. Q. Will you name some that do that?

A. I probably could by going down through the list.

Q. Go down through what?

A. Down through the list of wholesale distributors.

Mr. Austin: I have no objection to the witness referring to this—

Mr. Abbott: Exhibit 38-A to E inclusive.

2748 Mr. Austin: No. 36.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I hand the witness the document excluded from evidence, Respondent's Exhibit 38-A to E.

Mr. Austin: I prefer to hand him 36. If your Honor please, I would prefer to hand him 36. That is what I intended to do.

Mr. Abbott: If the Court please, 36 contains the names of a great many factories and consumers of gasoline; 38-A to E is much more representative.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This is cross-examination and counsel may elect as to which document to use.

Mr. Hanley: It is submitted at this time that the witness is entitled to answer the question that has been asked him from any memorandum that he has, or from his own memory. He tried to give the answer to this particular question by referring to Exhibit 38 which lists the individual organization which market the gasoline.

Now, the witness, I submit, is entitled to refer to anything he wants to refer to in answering the question.

Mr. Austin: I also state on the record that the witness didn't actually refer to the document, but it was offered to him by counsel for the Respondent without any request of the witness that he see it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It was offered to him 2749 by the Examiner.

Mr. Abbott: It was offered to him by the Examiner.

Mr. Austin: Well—at least, he didn't ask for it.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Go ahead, Mr. Griswold.

A. There is one right on the first page: J. J. Bright & Son. They are just retailers. They aren't wholesalers.

There is another one on the second page, Sam Hartman. They don't sell any wholesale.

Zieve Oil Company, they are just retailers.

Q. I didn't understand that.

A. Zieve Oil; on the last page.

Q. Do you know of any others that do business only at retail?

A. National Garages. They sell at retail.

Q. Who is that?

A. National Garages.

Q. Only at retail?

A. I don't know of any wholesaling that they ever did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you have any knowledge as to whether or not they engage in wholesale and retail?

The Witness: We would have the knowledge if they did, because it would come in on the report.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then your answer 2750 would be based solely on the report?

The Witness: No, on both, because we have been down and we have investigated the National Garages quite a number of times.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. When you say "we" who do you refer to?

A. Our investigators and myself. On the National Garages, I have been down in Detroit.

Mr. Austin: I can't hear the answers of the witness.

The Witness: I say, on the National Garages I have been down in Detroit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the answer.

(The last answer was read.)

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Do you know of any others?

A. Charles Austin sells all of his at Retail.

Q. Now, are you acquainted with the suppliers of Charles E. Austin, Incorporated?

A. One or two of them, I am.

Q. Do you know anything about their business other than supplying Austin?

A. The Midwest Refineries, and Roosevelt, I know them. The others are outside the state.

Q. Who else do they supply besides Austin?

2751 A. They supply quite a number of others in Detroit.

Q. Do they supply anyone besides jobbers?

A. You mean, do they supply retail stations?

Q. Yes.

A. They might. I wouldn't know, no. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether they do or not?

A. I wouldn't know, no; because we wouldn't get any report of that at all.

Q. Do you know whether the Argo Oil Corporation supplies any retail stations other than James J. Bright?

A. I couldn't tell, because we don't get that report. We would, if they were wholesale distributors. If they were, we would know. If they were not, why, we wouldn't.

Q. Well, you don't know, do you?

A. No.

Q. Do you know whether the Theisen-Clements Company supplies any retail service stations in Detroit other than those operated by National Garages, Incorporated?

A. Not if they are just retail stations.

Q. Now, you referred to some distributors that you say obtain their gasoline direct from their suppliers' bulk plant in tank trucks; is that correct?

A. I don't know what you mean. I know that there are wholesale distributors that operate just a tank truck and go to the refiners and these other places and get their 2752 gasoline and distribute it.

Q. What do they do with it, after they get it?

A. They sell it to retail stations and to farmers. They retail it and wholesale it, too.

Q. What does their retailing operation consist of? Do they operate retail stations?

A. Some of them do and some of them don't. Some of them just have a tank truck and sell mostly to farmers.

Q. Can you name an instance of any distributor who obtains his gasoline that way and operates retail stations?

A. And operates retail stations?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know as I can in this list here in Wayne County but outside of Wayne County, probably.

Q. The only ones you know of are outside of Wayne County?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: That's all I have.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Which ones do you recollect are outside of Wayne County, of your own knowledge?

A. I would have to look down through the list.

Q. Could you remember it by looking at Exhibit 36?

Mr. Abbott: May I hand the witness Exhibit 36 which has been introduced in evidence?

2753 Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Austin. I suggest it is immaterial—well, I will withdraw that. It has been stated that this line of testimony is to show some general practice.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record. Read the last question.

(The record was read as follows: "Question: Which ones do you recollect are outside of Wayne County, of your own knowledge?

"Answer: I would have to look down through the list.

"Mr. Abbott: May I hand the witness Exhibit 36, which has been introduced in evidence?")

A. There is a concern in Gratiot County that sells all their stuff at retail. That is the Farmers' Gas and Oil Company.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Where are they located?

A. They are located at Ithaca.

Q. You say they operate retail stations only?

A. That's all.

Q. Do you have any other information as to who their supplier is?

A. Well, they buy mostly wherever they can buy 2754 it the cheapest, I guess. They have quite a number of suppliers.

Q. Do they take delivery by tank car or by truck, do you know?

A. Mostly altogether by truck.

Q. Do they have any bulk plant, do you know?

A. Well, they have quite a good sized storage up there.

Q. But they distribute entirely at retail?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Abbott: Are you through with the witness?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Taking Exhibit 38-A to 38-E, inclusive, again, which I understand the Examiner stated you might use for refreshing your recollection, I will ask you, referring to page 2 of the exhibit, whether A. W. Collins Oil Company, Wayne County Wholesale distributor, to your knowledge, operates retail stations?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor—

A. I couldn't say that.

Mr. Austin: —I am not sure about what is proper on these things, and I don't want to try to limit it too much, but I asked the witness a question and the witness certainly has a right to refer to something to refresh his recollection but I don't believe it is correct for counsel to refer the witness to a particular place to a particular 2755 document for that purpose. I think the witness should know whether his recollection needs refreshing.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness should state from his own recollection. If his recollection is incomplete, he may then refresh his recollection with reference to some paper or memorandum.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Griswold, whether you are acquainted with the operation of the Duro Oil Corporation of Detroit, of your own knowledge?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner will instruct the witness to close up that exhibit and to answer the question, if he can, from his own knowledge.

A. No, I can't say from my own knowledge on the Duro Oil. The only way is to get it from the report.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I will ask you from your own knowledge, if you are acquainted with the operation of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company which operates—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner has instructed you not to examine that paper until you have first answered these questions.

Mr. Hanley: Let the record show, please, that the witness has been deprived of memorandum that he has made from the official records of his office of the State of 2756 Michigan. I would suggest, for the record, that the witness physically lay the document where he cannot reach it, in view of the instruction of the Court.

Mr. Abbott: Now, read the last question.

(The last question was read.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. (Continuing) —retail stations, as you have already stated, in the State of Michigan?

A. Well, only so far as the Tax report shows that they do not do any wholesaling business.

2757 Q. Do you know of your own knowledge—well, state—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The latter portion of the witness' answer is clearly improper.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. State the fact whether Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, of your own knowledge, operates exclusively at retail in its distribution in the State of Michigan? That question, of course, pertains to gasoline.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I think the record will show that I asked the witness to give a full list of stations that he knew of that operated solely at retail. He answered my question, and I gave him an opportunity twice to state any others. Now, I think the record shows that the witness has already given what he himself stated were all of the distributors that he knew of his own knowledge that operated exclusively at retail.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is true, but counsel may refresh his recollection, if he has any.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What was your answer as to the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company?

A. My answer is that the reports—their tax reports do not show that they do any wholesaling.

Q. Now, what do you know of your own knowledge with reference to Jeffers & Company, as to whether they 2758 operate exclusively at retail?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may answer that yes or no.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. (Continuing) In the distribution of gasoline?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But do not refer to your tax records.

A. I do not know.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What do you know of your own knowledge as to the fact whether Meurer Brothers Incorporated of Detroit in their distribution of gasoline operate exclusively at retail?

A. I couldn't tell you without referring to the report.

Q. What do you know of your own knowledge as to the fact whether or not Montgomery Ward & Company, in the distribution of gasoline, wholesale distributors, operate exclusively at retail?

A. Now, your Honor, I don't know how to answer that. The only way I can answer that is being familiar with the report.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then your only information comes from the report?.

The Witness: That is all, as far as Montgomery Ward.

2759 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then your answer is no you don't know.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Have you investigated that, Mr. Griswold, so as to answer that question of your own personal knowledge exclusive of the report?

A. No.

Q. Based on your own personal knowledge state the fact as to whether Premier Tank Car stations of Detroit, Wayne County wholesale distributors, distribute gasoline exclusively at retail?

A. Well, my answer would have to be the same on that.

Q. You have no independent knowledge?

A. Not personal knowledge except what comes from the report.

Q. Based on your personal knowledge state the fact as to whether Puritan Stations Incorporated, Wayne County wholesale distributor, distributes gasoline exclusively at retail?

A. I couldn't tell you that; that is, from going to it personally.

Q. In other words, you say you have no personal knowledge as to that wholesale distributor?

A. No.

Mr. Abbott: Now, your Honor, I wish to reoffer Exhibit 35-A to E inclusive upon the ground that the attorney for the Commission has gone into that exhibit in 2760 such a way further to qualify it with this witness, and I move that it be received in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What exhibit did you offer?

Mr. Abbott: 38-A to E inclusive.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think you stated 35.

Mr. Abbott: Well, I meant to say 38, and I amend the record to that effect.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The offer is again rejected for the same reason.

Mr. Abbott: That is all, Mr. Griswold.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Hanley: Mr. Suffert.

DANIEL W. SUFFERT was thereupon called as a witness for the Respondent and, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Hanley.

Q. Mr. Suffert, will you please state your name and residence to the Court?

A. Daniel W. Suffert, S-u-f-f-e-r-t.

Q. And you reside where?

A. My residence is 7300 South Shore Drive, Chicago, Illinois.

2761 Q. What is your occupation, Mr. Suffert?

A. I am with the Texas Oil Company as superintendent: that includes sale and operating matters.

2762 Q. Well, how long have you been connected in any capacity with the oil industry?

A. Eighteen years, in round figures.

Q. With whom did you begin?

A. I began with the Standard Oil Company.

Q. Standard of Indiana?

A. Standard of Indiana.

Q. And in what capacity?

A. As a service station operator.

Q. And how long did you work for that company?

A. Slightly in excess of four years. I'd say about four years and two months.

Q. During all that time as a station operator?

A. No. I started as a service station operator and was later promoted to what was known as a service station instructor in a supervisory capacity over a group of stations.

Q. Was that during a period of time when the Standard Oil Company was operating service stations directly, Mr. Suffert?

A. They were operating them exclusively on that basis.

Q. After your four years of service or thereabouts with the Standard Oil Company, what did you next do?

A. There was an interval of about four months when I worked in a parking lot in Chicago who also handled Standard Oil products. 2762

Q. And following that what did you do?

A. Following that I went to work for the Texas Oil Company. The Texas Company.

Q. Have you been engaged in some capacity with the Texas Oil Company until the present time?

A. With the exception of one year my total service with the Texas Company was in a supervisory capacity with direct relation to retail marketing.

Q. So all of your work has been to do with the marketing end of the business?

A. All but the one year I spoke of.

Q. What was that one year?

A. That was the first year I went to work for the Texas Company.

Q. What did you do that year?

A. During that year I worked in the office; I was a clerk-cashier.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What calendar year was that?

The Witness: That was the last half of 1929 and the first half of 1930.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. How long have you occupied your present position with the Texas Company?

2764 A. It will be four years next July.

Q. Is there some particular territory that you supervise, Mr. Suffert; and if so, please state what it is.

A. The Lower Peninsula of Michigan entirely, and the northwest corner of the State of Indiana, comprising those towns and the country immediately surrounding them, of Elkhart, Mishawaka, South Bend, LaPorte, Valparaiso, and Crown Point.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Lower Peninsula may be very definitely known to people up here, but for the purpose of this record, I would like to have a better description.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Does the Lower Peninsula of Michigan include Detroit, Mr. Suffert?

A. It does.

Q. Indeed, so far as those who live in it are concerned, it includes the entire state, doesn't it?

A. It seems to be the opinion, yes.

Q. It is the greater portion of the State of Michigan, is it not?

A. That's right; if not in area, then in population.

Q. Had you concluded your answer as to the geographical territory that was covered in your duties or supervision?

A. I think so. I meant to conclude it with the naming of the towns in the northwest corner of Indiana. 2765

Q. Is the Texas Company a national marketer of gasoline?

A. They are.

Q. In your capacity as marketer for that company, have you had a general experience and observation of methods used by the Texas Company and other oil companies in the United States in the marketing of gasoline?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you been familiar with the methods used by your company and by other oil companies generally in their methods of marketing gasoline in the Detroit vicinity over the last several years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you familiar with those conditions at the present time?

A. Yes.

Q. State generally what your duties are in your present position with the Texas Company?

A. I am the contact man in the field with the local zone managers, local zone supervisors, in the area I stated before. That is comprised of six sales zones; each one of these zones has a zone manager in it. I act in a supervisory capacity under the district manager at Chicago as a member of his staff.

Q. Is there specifically included in your territory
2766 the Detroit area in Michigan?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the fact, within your judgment, and based on your experience, Mr. Suffert, as to whether or not oil companies, generally, in the United States, market both through the medium of the tank wagon sales to resellers and also by tank car sales to jobbers at a differential in price as between tank wagon sales and tank car sales?

A. I would say that that was a general industry practice.

Q. What is the fact in relation to the area of Detroit, Michigan?

A. I would say that that includes Detroit.

Q. Is it true that that operation, which I will refer to as a dual operation, is indulged in by some companies some places through the United States, generally? Do you understand that question?

A. I think so.

Q. I mean, does any one company engage in the dual practice in a single territory?

A. No; that is a general industry practice. There are certain spots in markets that I am familiar with where one marketer may not employ the practice in one town that he may use in another town maybe a hundred miles away.

Q. Just for example, Mr. Suffert, are you familiar with the fact as to whether or not the Standard Oil 2767 Company, the Respondent in this action, markets in Detroit by selling both tank wagon to resellers and by selling tank car to jobbers at a differential in price?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. You know that?

A. Yes.

2768 Q. Does your company do that in Detroit, as a general practice?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. Does your company do that in Chicago?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. From your knowledge and experience in the oil industry, what is the fact as to whether or not jobbers who purchase on a tank car basis, generally speaking, operate both retail outlets themselves, as well as serving other resellers?

A. I believe that is a general practice.

Q. When you say "a general practice," do you mean throughout the industry, throughout the country?

A. Well, I am familiar with a portion of Illinois—not recently; not within the last six years—but I would say that that practice does prevail in Chicago, with which I am familiar. I live there and I am familiar with that market to a certain extent and that practice does exist in Michigan.

Q. And in Detroit?

A. And in Detroit.

Q. Is there ordinarily a differential between tank wagon price and the tank car price?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. And is the tank car price the lower price, Mr. Suffert?

2769 A. Yes, it is.

Q. Is that a general industry practice and condition?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Is there anything unusual or extraordinary or unique about Detroit, as compared with the rest of the country, in reference to the industry practices prevalent in Detroit; so far as you know?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, this witness has confined his knowledge to a limited area.

Mr. Hanley: I am asking him as an expert.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If he has knowledge of the situation that obtains all over the country, he may so state.

Mr. Hanley: I am asking him as an expert. I have qualified him, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I appreciate that.

Mr. Hanley: And I am asking him his opinion, as his opinion based on his knowledge and experience in the oil industry.

Mr. Austin: Well, without questioning the qualifications, I would just like to observe that whether a man has been qualified as an expert for the purpose of giving an opinion, when he testifies as to facts, the question of knowledge is just as important: I think you must draw the distinction between what is opinion and what 2770 is fact. I understand these recent questions have been directed to what is fact and what is opinion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, I don't understand any foundation has been laid here for an answer to the question.

Mr. Hanley: Is it the view of the Court that this witness is not qualified as an expert in the gasoline marketing industry?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Certainly; within the areas within which he is familiar, or about which he has knowledge.

Mr. Hanley: He has testified that he is generally familiar with those conditions throughout the country. That his company markets nationally.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, the Examiner may be in error, but he understood the witness, in answer to your questions, to qualify his answer and limit it to certain localities.

2771 Mr. Hanley: Wherever the witness does that, he may do so, of course. It is the witness that is doing the testifying.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. What is your opinion, Mr. Suffert, based on your experience as a marketer of gasoline, as to the fact of whether or not throughout the United States it is a general industry practice for suppliers of gasoline to sell at a tank wagon price, and also at a tank car price, which is lower than the tank wagon price?

A. I have definite knowledge that in the entire United States that is true. That marketing practice is engaged in the United States.

Q. And is it engaged in the same geographical territory by the same company frequently?

A. I am afraid I would have to qualify that answer by saying that the same companies do not operate generally. In other words, I might say for example, that the Standard Oil Company of Indiana might not operate in an area with which I am familiar, recently, on the Pacific Coast, where major competition may be some company who is unknown in the Detroit market, but it is a general industry practice to sell by both methods.

Q. And when that is done, what is your knowledge and opinion, based upon your experience as to whether or 2772 not the jobbers who receive gasoline on the tank car basis then resell that gasoline both at retail and at wholesale?

Mr. Austin: I object to the form of the question on the ground that it was asked for the witness' knowledge and opinion. I think that it should appear whether the witness is giving his knowledge or as to territories with which he is personally familiar, or whether he is giving his opinion based upon the general familiarity with the industry.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I will re-form the question, eliminating from it the words "and opinion" and I wish it to appear on the record that counsel for the Respondent is entirely unenlightened as to the studied continuance and apparent effort of counsel for the Commission to try and keep this record and the Commission in ignorance of universally known customs in the oil industry.

Now, do you understand that question, Mr. Suffert? I am asking you for your knowledge now, Mr. Suffert.

A. Will you please repeat the question?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The question was read as follows: "Question: And when that is done, what is your knowledge or opinion, based upon your experience as to whether or not the jobbers who receive gasoline on the tank car basis then 2773 resell that gasoline both at retail and at wholesale?"

A. May I qualify that answer a little bit?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Just state the fact. Whatever you understand the fact to be.

A. In three years in business, for business reasons as well as for vacation and touring purposes, I have been in 39 states and probably, like all oil men, we talk shop wherever we go, and I have discussed local markets in those areas when and as I came in contact with other members of my own company who were in similar capacities to mine with the company.

I can state that in each case they informed me that the problems which I recited relative to marketing practices in the area in which I work, were directly parallel to their marketing practices in their respective areas, in each case. They stated that their jobber or tank car purchaser resold to other service stations and, in the majority of cases, did own or control stations which they serviced.

Mr. Hanley: You may take the witness.

Mr. Austin: I move the last answer be stricken as not responsive to the question as either stating the wit-
2774 ness'—all he asked for was knowledge. I think the answer states certain matters that he was told by other people in other parts of the country, and I believe if the question and answer were read it would be found the answer is not responsive to the question. It does not constitute the statement of the witness' knowledge, for which he was asked. It was a fair answer as far as the witness was concerned, but I don't believe it was responsive to the question nor admissible as an answer to the question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will hear from counsel for the Respondent.

Mr. Hanley: I don't care to argue that, your Honor. We offer this witness as an expert. One of the means of getting his knowledge is talking to other people in the industry and comparing their problems with his own. He has said he found problems in 39 states comparable to those which he personally handles in his own territory. We submit that that is competent testimony, and should stay in the record.

2775 Mr. Austin: I would just like to have the question read.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is unnecessary to read the question. The motion is granted and the answer is stricken. Hearsay.

Cross-Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Suffert, where is your office: here, or in Chicago?

A. My office is in Chicago.

Q. Does the Chicago office cover this Detroit area?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you familiar with the fact that the Federal Trade Commission has a Complaint pending against the Texas Company?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And do you know whether that Complaint does not involve, substantially, the same charges that are involved against the Standard Oil Company in this case?

Mr. Hanley: That is objected to as a conclusion of the witness. The lawyers for the Respondent can't even find out what issues are involved in this case.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness may answer.

A. If I answer that, sir, it would be hearsay, again. I don't know, from positive personal knowledge, what the charges are.

2776 Q. Do you know whether that Complaint against the Texas Company involves certain practices alleged in the Complaint to have taken place in the Detroit area?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Have you any knowledge as to the contents of the Complaint?

The Witness: No, I don't.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Have you ever seen it?

A. No, I haven't. Just gossip, as to its nature, is all.

Q. Just what?

A. Just gossip, as to its nature, is all. That's all I know of it.

Mr. Austin: That's all. No further questions.

Mr. Hanley: That's all. Thank you, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You are excused.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, may I suggest we take a recess at this time before we put on another witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a five-minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

2777 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

Mr. Abbott: All right, Mr. Biber, will you resume the stand?

MAX BIBER, a witness called by and on behalf of the Respondent, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand and testified further as follows:

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Biber, you have previously been sworn?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Abbott: We come back now to Exhibit 18 to 18-z-51, and I believe at the time that Mr. Biber was on the stand before we gave Mr. Austin, attorney for the Commission, this exhibit, and he was going to look it over and indicate on the record to what extent he was willing to concede that it might be received in evidence.

Is that correct, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: Do you wish to ask any questions of the witness with reference to the exhibit?

Mr. Austin: I understood you had some more direct. Do you want me to go ahead and cross examine on this?

Mr. Abbott: I want to ask him one or two more questions.

2778 Direct Examination (Resumed) by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Mr. Biber, with reference to Exhibit 18 to 18-z-51, as to all these stations which are portrayed in that exhibit, do you have personal knowledge from inspection of the service stations portrayed by the photographs in this exhibit so that you can say that you are familiar from that knowledge that these photographs accurately portray the stations which they purport to represent, together with the postings that appear in the photograph?

A. Yes, I have that knowledge.

Q. I understand from your previous testimony that you either took the picture yourself, the pictures, I will say, which are in this exhibit, or that you had them taken by a commercial photographer, and that at the time of the taking by the commercial photographer, you personally inspected the subject of the photograph; is that right?

A. On the same day, yes.

Q. Now, with reference to the purchases which are portrayed in this exhibit, and identified as Exhibits 18-B to 18-R, in so far as these exhibits refer to purchases and advertisements made by the stations which they pertain to, have you personal knowledge with reference to the purchases? First, did you take them yourself?

A. That is 18-B to—

Q. 18-B to 18-R, inclusive.

2779 A. Will you tell me what pages those are?

Q. They are from pages 1 to 14, as you have numbered them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You propose to offer them in block?

Mr. Abbott: I am going to offer the whole thing as a block, because they are all one exhibit under the number 18.

A. I believe in that group there was one purchase, and that was made by myself.

Q. And the rest of them refer to advertisements by the station which is referred to in the exhibit; is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. What knowledge have you with reference to those advertisements?

A. Those advertisements came to me through dealers who brought them to my attention. The dealers either got them in the mail or told me they got them in the mail or picked them up or they were passed out to them at their places of business and turned over to me.

Q. And have you been, over some period past, making a survey and collection of such advertisements?

A. Yes, I had been and did at the time.

Q. And you kept them, did you?

2780 A. Yes.

Q. Were they kept with reference to this proceeding?

A. No. I have a lot of other information—

Q. I mean, did you make the collection of these advertisements in order to make any build-up for this proceeding?

A. No, this started long before this proceeding started.

Q. Now, there are attached to Exhibit 18-z-6 some loose leaves which have been identified as Exhibits 18-z-2, 18-z-3, 18-z-4, and 18-z-5. Possibly I ought to ask you some questions with reference to these.

I show you Exhibit 18-z-2 and ask you what that is.

A. That is a card inviting patronage to a Gulf Service Station at 17501 Livernois, offering a free gift to each customer on certain dates. The gift being a box of chocolates.

Q. And that is near what station which is either operated or supplied by Cit[illegible]-Kolb Oil Company?

A. It is near the station at Livernois and Lynden and also at Linwood and Detroit Terminal Railroad.

Mr. Abbott: The Examiner wishes to see that.

(The document was handed to the Examiner.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I refer you next to Exhibit 18-z-3, and ask you to identify that.

A. That is a cash receipt for the purchase of 7 gallons at the Chicago-Dexter Service on January 9, 2781 1941, and this purchase was made by myself.

Q. Now, with reference to the station which was complained of in the Commission's case, located at the corner of Dexter and West Chicago, is it not?

A. That is correct.

Q. And where is the station which is represented by that exhibit, with reference to the station at the corner of Dexter and West Chicago Boulevard?

A. Directly across the street.

Q. What was the reason why you felt it necessary to make a buy at that station?

A. At this time the station at Chicago and Dexter, being Cities Service Station, had posted a new sign setting a price of 8 for $1.30, which is the regular posted consumer price for gasoline—

Q. Or was at that time?

A. Was at that time. On that date I took a photograph of the station and went across the street and made this buy of gasoline, because I had suspicioned that they were not selling at the regular posted price.

Q. What is known as an under-canopy discount?

A. An under-canopy discount is a discount that is given to a customer which creates a price for gasoline which is lower than the price posted at the station, or on the pumps.

2782 Q. And what is the result, as illustrated by Exhibit 18-z-3? In connection with the securing of that exhibit, what did you find was the condition which obtained at that station? Were you able to purchase gasoline at less than the posted price—

A. Yes.

Q. —on the date that that pertains to?

Mr. Austin: If the Court please, I would like to note on the record an objection to all of this line of questioning. I think it is the same objection I have made at numerous times, and that is that it is irrelevant and immaterial as to the prices charged by another service station in the City of Detroit; that is, service stations not served by the Standard Oil Company or by any of the jobbers named in the Complaint.

Mr. Abbott: The purpose of this, of course, is to show the competitive conditions and there was no substantial injury to competition under the terms of the Act.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection of counsel is reserved to him with the right to move at a later date to strike the testimony.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you want the question, Mr. Biber?

A. I think I remember that question.

2783 The result of this purchase showed that I could buy gasoline for 2.1¢ per gallon less than the posted price at the station.

2784 Q. Now I show you Exhibit 18-z-4 and ask you to identify that exhibit and state what it is.

A. This is a cash receipt for seven gallons of gasoline from a Sun station at 2304 East Vernor Highway; a purchase made on January 30, 1941.

Q. In connection with that station either operated by or supplied by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was that purchase made?

A. The station at 2700 East Vernor Highway.

Q. Is that a company-operated station; or supplied by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. Supplied by the company.

Q. And what is the reason it was necessary, deemed necessary for you to make a purchase at that station, instead of relying on the photograph?

A. Our dealer at 2700 Vernor Highway complained there was price cutting in the neighborhood and from all visual evidence there didn't seem to be any price cutting, so I undertook to make a survey of the neighborhood and found that this station, just a block and a half away, sold gasoline as shown by this purchase at 2¢ less than the price posted at the station; 2¢ per gallon.

Q. And on what date was that?

A. January 30, 1941.

Q. Did you also take a picture of that station?

2785 A. I did not,—I don't believe I did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If you will pardon the interruption.

The Examiner calls your attention to Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-2. Unless the Examiner is in error, the witness testified that this was an invitation to the public to visit the station and that all those who visited the station would receive a half-pound box of chocolate. I will ask you to look at that exhibit and see whether or not a half-pound box of chocolates was to be given to every person who visited the station, or to be limited to customers?

The Witness: To customers.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What you meant was that the exhibit invited the people who bought gasoline there to receive a premium: is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. I show you Exhibit 18-z-5 and ask you to identify that and state what it represents.

A. This is a cash receipt for a purchase of seven gallons of gasoline at the service station at Dexter Boulevard and Tuxedo, purchase made on January 29, 1941, and shows—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: By whom?

2786 The Witness: By myself.

A. (Continuing) Shows the purchase of seven gallons of gas for $1.00.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Why did you deem it necessary to make a purchase at that station instead of relying on the photograph?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I guess there have been a couple of similar questions asked before, but I submit that it is irrelevant and immaterial as to the reasons which the witness had for making the purchase. I think—I was going to say that the purchase would speak for itself, but perhaps that is beside the point; the question now is whether the reasons of the witness for making the purchase have any relevancy. I don't think they do, and I object to the question upon that ground.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will take his answer and reserve to you the right to move to strike.

A. This was a newly remodeled station at that time; I think it had been remodeled and completed about three days before this purchase.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What was the location of it?

A. Dexter and Tuxedo.

Q. Let me ask you this question: In competition with what station of your company, either operated or supplied, was it?

2787 A. Dexter and Chicago, Dexter and Cortland, Dexter and Waverly.

Q. Had you previously taken a picture of this station that this exhibit refers to?

A. I don't believe I have a photograph of this. I don't remember.

Q. Well, what does the exhibit represent?

A. It represents the cash receipt for seven gallons of gasoline for $1.00.

Q. State, if you know, whether that agreed with the posted price at that station on the day it bears the date?

A. No; it was 2½c under the posted price at that time.

Q. That is, as I understand it, what you refer to in your testimony as an under canopy discount?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, the purpose of the pictures which appear in Exhibit 18-z to 18-z-51, is to show—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Just a minute. Let him tell.

Mr. Abbott: Withdraw the question.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What is the purpose of the pictures which appear in this Exhibit from 18-z to 18-z-51?

2788 Mr. Martin: I object to that, your Honor. I don't know whose purpose. And in any event, I think the pictures speak for themselves if they have any evidentiary value.

Trial Examiner, Ballinger: The witness may answer the question.

Mr. Austin: Whose purpose? Does that mean the purpose of the witness in gathering the pictures together?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You will find out. You have reserved to you the right to move to strike.

A. Since 1935 from various cases started and various agitation, it has seemed advisable—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: To who?

The Witness: To myself and the company; myself as representative of the company; to gather what evidence and what facts we could relating to competition in the retail marketing of gasoline in and about the areas where we have stations which we either operate or serve. And this has been a collection, I believe, dating back to June of 1935.

2789 Q. And all the pictures in this were either, as I understand, taken by you or taken under your supervision?

A. That's right.

Mr. Abbott: All right, Mr. Austin, you may examine.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. What do you mean when you say the [illegible] were taken under your supervision?

A. Well, I'd say—I don't think of an exception where I passed the station or drove by the station, and if convenient, either took the picture myself or called the office and told them to send one of the men out and take that picture.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I don't propose to object to any of these photographs, because the photographer isn't called, or they are not properly authenticated as pictures of what they purport to portray upon the dates stated. However, waiving any such possible objection as that, I would like to renew my objection to the entire volume as being irrelevant and immaterial.

Now, if that objection is not granted, then I propose to take up each of those pages separately. I believe your Honor stated on the record previously that you would not pass upon a blanket objection, but I am just renewing the objection so that it will appear upon the record 2790 at this time, anticipated that it will be overruled.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

Mr. Austin: I hope Court and counsel will bear with me. I went through this whole book a week and a half ago one evening with the expectation that I would have to take it up the next morning, and these notes are pretty cold right now, and I will have to try and see if I can remember what they mean, because they are pretty much abbreviated.

Mr. Abbott: I think you will agree with us that we tried to facilitate this investigation as much as possible, and the next morning we had another witness from out of town—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It was unavoidable.

Voir Dire Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Biber, I think the record will show that I started in on the first two of these when you were here before?

A. I think you did.

Q. I haven't got the transcript with me, so will you state again as to Exhibit 18-B, page 1, how you acquired possession of the card which is pictured there?

A. This card was given to me by the operator of the station at Kercheval and St. Clair; that is a Standard Oil Company station.

Q. Is that the same station that is named in the card?

A. No. No.

Q. Well, the card refers to Lee's Grosse Pointe Service, Kercheval and St. Clair.

A. This card is of a Hi-Speed station directly across the street from the Standard station operator who collected this card.

Q. Do you know whether this card was issued by the Hi-Speed station at that address?

A. I only know what the card purports to be.

Mr. Austin: I object, then, to the admission of 18-B, for identification, on the ground that it is not properly authenticated.

Mr. Abbott: Well, your Honor, it appears to be a printed card, and I don't understand the rule to be that we have to subpoena in here the person who operated Lee's Grosse Pointe Service at Kercheval and St. Clair and have him testify to the authenticity of that card. Presumptively a card having been issued and coming to the possession of the station across the street, that emanated from the station which appears on the card.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Anybody might have had the card printed, might they not?

Mr. Abbott: I suppose that assumes a fact which by a stretch of the imagination could be conjured up.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you think the mere presumption is sufficient to carry it over?

Mr. Abbott: I think when a card is printed and distributed and comes to the hands of the public, that the law will not—especially in an investigation of that kind—will not require that we subpoena in the operator of the station which is shown on the card and have him admit that he issued the card.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Mr. Austin: My objection will be, your Honor, on all of these cards and letters, that I will require the same thing that a letter would, prove the signature, or in some way prove that it was written by or issued by the person it purports to have been issued from.

I would like to recall that on direct examination in the Commission's case, Mr. Biber was shown by me a number of cards, and I only offered in evidence those which he personally knew were issued by the Station in question, and as to at least one of those cards he said he didn't believe it was issued by the station whose name was on it. And I judged from that that he assumed the possibility that perhaps some cards were fraudulently issued.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner has 2793 ruled. Pass on to your next exhibit.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Well, the next one is 18-C, and I know that I questioned Mr. Biber about that one, and I believe you stated, did you not, Mr. Biber, before that you had no knowledge that this letter was written by Rantanen and Bicknell Oil Company, or that this signature "J. Smith" is genuine?

A. I do not know.

Q. And do you have any knowledge as to the issuance of the card portrayed at the top of the page by Rantanen and Bicknell Oil Company?

A. No, I don't.

Mr. Austin: I move to strike that one on the same ground.

Mr. Abbott: Well, the same thing would apply.

Mr. Austin: I mean by striking it, I object to it on the same ground.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Voir Dire Examination (Continued) by Mr. Austin.

Q. Exhibit 18-C portrays a letter which appears to be on stationery of James J. Bright and Son. It bears the signature "William DeWitt, manager." Are you acquainted with Mr. DeWitt's signature, Mr. Biber?

2794 A. I am not.

Q. Did you receive this letter yourself?

A. I did not.

Q. How did you receive it?

A. It was given to me by a dealer on 2nd and Seldon.

Q. Have you any knowledge of that other than the fact he turned it over to you?

A. That is the only thing I know about it.

Mr. Austin: I object to the admission of Exhibit 18-D.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection to Respondent's Exhibit 18-D is sustained and the tender rejected.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Referring to Exhibit 18-E, for identification: do you know who Mr. H. E. Stewart is?

A. I do not.

Q. Do you know whether that letter was prepared or circulated by James J. Bright and Son?

A. I do not.

Mr. Austin: It is objected to for lack of authenticity, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is sustained and the tender rejected.

2795 Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. The next, Mr. Biber, is Exhibit 18-F; that is, page 5.

The next is Exhibit 18-G, page 6.

The next is Exhibit 18-H, page 7.

The next, Exhibit 18-I, page 8.

A. Pages 8 and 9 I know about, because I got the card and made the buy.

Q. Do you have any personal knowledge about the origin of Exhibits 18 F, G, or H; page 5, 6, and 7?

A. I do not have.

Mr. Austin: An objection is made to those, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained as to the Respondent's offer of Exhibits, for identification, 18-F, 18-G, and 18-N.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Now, Exhibit 18-I appears to be a photograph of a card with the name Hoffman and Levine, Incorporated; Dexter, Corner of Tuxedo. Did you collect that card yourself, Mr. Biber?

2796 A. I did; at the station.

Q. The typing on this page says that similar cards were given out early in 1936. What part of 1936 do you refer to?

A. Oh, I would say it was about May.

Mr. Austin: I would object to the admission of Exhibit 18-I, your Honor, upon the ground that it relates to a competitive situation prior to the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act and is, therefore, irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Exhibit 18-J appears to be a photograph of a receipt for the purchase of gasoline. Did you make that purchase?

A. I did.

Q. And is this a photograph of the slip which you received?

A. That's right, it is.

Q. Incidentally, that isn't one of the slips that Mr. Abbott showed you awhile ago, is it?

A. No.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When was the purchase made?

The Witness: September 8, 1936.

By Mr. Austin:

2797 Q. In the event that your previous testimony was incorrect, Mr. Biber; you didn't collect this card, did you, on the same day you made the purchase?

A. No.

Mr. Abbott: With reference to the card, your Honor, I want to be heard on that with reference to the time of the respective dates.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Counsel hasn't up to this time objected.

Mr. Austin: As to the card, yes. Your Honor has already ruled on that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Which one is that?

Mr. Abbott: Exhibit 18-I.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then we will return to Respondent's Exhibit 18-I, for identification.

I will hear counsel for the Respondent.

Mr. Abbott: I want to go on the record as to that.

The Robinson-Patman Act became effective June 19, 1936, and it provided, with reference to discrimination:

"Where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce, or to injure, destroy, or prevent competition with any person." Now, the original Clayton Act passed in 1914, of which the Robinson-Patman 2798 Act was amendatory, provides:

"It shall be unlawful for any person engaged in commerce, in the course of such commerce either directly or indirectly to discriminate in price between different purchasers of commodities which commodities are sold for use, consumption, or resale within the United States where the effect of such discrimination may be to substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce."

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This Complaint was filed under the Clayton Act as amended by the Robinson-Patman Act so we are proceeding with the latter Act; that is, the Act as amended by the latter Act, exclusively.

Mr. Abbott: Do I understand from the Court's ruling that no competitive situations may be shown, with the idea of rebutting the claim that the practices of the Respondent had the effect of injuring, destroying, or preventing competition, unless the evidence relates to acts committed after June 19, 1936?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Or within a reasonable time before that. In the case of the Respondent, it was in business before that time. Now, within some reasonable time before the effective date of the Robinson-Patman Act, you may offer evidence.

Mr. Abbott: What would be a reasonable time,
2799 your Honor? In order that we may be guided. I wouldn't want to commit the Examiner, but I do want to know for our own information.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I wouldn't care to lay down any hard and fast rule, but a year before.

2800 Mr. Abbott: Then this exhibit relates to May, 1936; the exhibit in question.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Is that true, Mr. Biber?

A. That's right.

Mr. Abbott: Therefore, upon that basis, I submit that the objection made by counsel for the Commission was not well taken. It hasn't been testified by Mr. Biber that he personally was given that card by Hoffman & Levine Incorporated in May of 1936—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You are referring now to Respondent's Exhibit 18-I?

Mr. Abbott: 18-I; yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And that the Examiner previously sustained the objection to?

Mr. Abbott: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner reverses his previous ruling and admits in evidence Respondent's Exhibit 18-I.

Mr. Austin: Now, if your Honor please, am I precluded from having anything further to say about that card?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

2801 Mr. Austin: In the first place, on that point, I am not contending that no evidence—the issues in this case, or of any facts prior to June 18, 1936, is admissible, but this relates to competitive situations of retail stations and it seems to me it is of such doubtful relevancy and materiality, even during the period covered by the Complaint, that when it goes back before 1936, that this particular type of evidence as to prices charged by other retail stations could not be material because the Respondent could not be lowering the prices before the Act for the purpose of meeting competition. I don't care if it was one day before the Act was passed, I would make the same argument, but as long as the ruling is reopened I would like to ask the witness another question that may possibly dispose of this.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Biber, this card refers to a special consideration which is indicated by the card was available at the station. There is no mention of gasoline, unless I don't understand the meaning of all those listed products down below. The only one that I could see that might be gasoline may be "Penn Master." Is that gasoline, or oil?

A. That is oil.

Q. Do you know whether this special consideration
2802 referred to in the card was made available by that station to purchasers of gasoline at the time the card was acquired by you?

A. Yes, it was. I got the consideration at the time.

Mr. Abbott: The next exhibit refers to that.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. But you said you did not make this purchase at the time you got the card?

A. I did not, but I purchased gasoline at the time I got this card.

Q. But you haven't a copy here of the receipt on that?

A. No, I didn't get the receipt at that time. I didn't care about it. The only time I ever made a purchase of gasoline, as I did in September, was when the posted price was one thing and I suspected the sales price was another. Then I asked for a receipt, if I wanted it.

At this time there was no posted price and they were selling on a discount card basis, which was prevalent at that time.

Mr. Abbott: You have the original exhibits, haven't you?

Mr. Austin: I wanted to find out whether the card referred to gasoline. It doesn't appear so, on its face, but I am satisfied with Mr. Biber's testimony on that point, so I will restrict the objection to the one previously 2803 made, that the Respondent could not have been reducing its price to meet a competitive price prior to the passage of the Robinson-Patman Act and that, therefore, it is immaterial.

Mr. Abbott: The thing I have reference to is you will have to give the Reporter the copy, there, because I suppose each one of those will have to be marked as we go along. You will have to stamp each one separately because you are ruling out some of them and admitting others.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Austin: The Examiner having made a ruling, I don't feel—well, I didn't intend to question the ruling except I wanted to ask this second question. That, apparently, has amounted to ~~nothing, so~~ I am perfectly willing to submit to the ruling made.

Mr. Abbott: It is only a question, now, as I understand, how to handle the exhibits.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner overrules the objection to Respondent's Exhibit 18-I and admits the document in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-I", was received in evidence.)

2804 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let us proceed to Respondent's Exhibit 18-J, for identification.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Do you have personal knowledge of the supplier from whom Hoffman & Levine Incorporated buys its gasoline?

A. Yes. The Texas Company.

Q. How do you know that?

A. From seeing the trucks on the driveway.

Q. Well, this Exhibit 18-J says, at the top: "Fleet-Wing Gasoline, Supplied by Red Indian Oil Company."

A. Which page is that?

Q. Page 9 (referring to Respondent's Exhibit 18-J for identification).

A. I don't see that.

By Mr. Abbott

Q. That must have been typewriten on, Mr. Biber. You have a photostat there, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. It is the negative photostat.

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: In view of the witness' answer, I submit that the typing appearing at the top of the page on the righthand side should be physically stricken.

Mr. Abbott: It should be stricken.

Mr. Austin: If the Exhibit is offered.

2805 Mr. Abbott: That's right.

I make the offer without the appendage "Fleet-Wing Gasoline, Supplied by Red Indian Oil Company." I ask to have the Exhibit amended.

The Witness: That error occurred because it is Fleet-Wing now, but it wasn't at the time.

2806 Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Now, further referring to Exhibit 18-J, page 9, there is some typing at the bottom of the page referring to "Prevailing retail prices," and the price on this receipt, and there is a computation of the difference per gallon. What prevailing retail price is that, or how do you know that 5 gallons for 87¢ was the prevailing retail price at that time?

A. Well, the prevailing retail price indicated on this exhibit was taken from the sheet furnished the Commission showing prevailing retail prices. I believe you have that.

Mr. Abbott: It is already in evidence.

Mr. Austin: That sheet does not go back to 1936. It only goes back to 1937, so I don't believe there is any evidence as to the prevailing retail price at this date.

Mr. Abbott: I will say this: in connection with Mr. Raupagh's testimony, that will be brought out Monday, but prevailing retail price as of this date will be submitted in evidence and we will offer to connect it up in that way.

The Witness: I have the figures on the prevailing retail price available.

Mr. Austin: Those were furnished by the Standard Oil Company?

2807 The Witness: That's right, but I have the same copy and I worked from the same copy.

Mr. Austin: Now, your Honor, this question is going to arise upon a great many of these, and perhaps we should, at least, investigate as to whether a general ruling can be made. There are a number of these proposed exhibits which have a computation on them; prevailing retail price, and the prevailing retail price per gallon, and the price per receipt or, on many of these, it is the price shown on the photograph. Then the difference per gallon between the price on the photograph or the recipt and the computation. That is a computation printed on a great many of these, and if I have to go into all of those, I have to go into arithmetic and methods of computation on a lot of them which do not appear to me to be correct; on their face, or, at least, if they are correct, I don't understand them, and the question as to whether the prevailing retail price is the prevailing retail price for the gasoline shown in the picture, and I have great doubt as to whether or not that sort of a typed statement is proper, anyway. It seems to me that that is more or less argumentative, and, at most, it only shows what is to be computed from the exhibit itself.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Unless the facts were testified to, the Exhibit would not be admissible in evi-2808 dence with the statements on them.

Mr. Austin: At best, they are computations which you can make from the exhibit only after knowing what the prevailing retail price is. There are some of them I wouldn't question the accuracy of, as to the prevailing price, if it is on major brands, but a majority are not the major brands.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I will ask the witness: what is the meaning of the word "Prevailing retail price per gallon" on this exhibit, and on other exhibits in the series?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If the words "Prevailing retail price" on all the exhibits refer to the same thing.

A. They refer to the same kind of thing, yes. These photographs were taken at different dates and the date of the photograph controls the prevailing retail price. In other words, the words "Prevailing retail price" indicate the price prevailing, retail price, of major gasoline at that date. The date the picture was taken, and those figures were taken from the exhibit that is now in evidence. I believe that the only exception is this exhibit we are talking about now, which happens to be before 1937. I don't recall of any photograph in this group which was taken before January 1, 1937.

Mr. Austin: The only prevailing prices that are 2809 in the record are prevailing prices on major brands of gasoline in Detroit, and the question would arise in a great many of these cases whether you could say what the prevailing price was as to the brand of gasoline shown.

Mr. Abbott: It isn't claimed that anything but the prevailing retail price of any other gasoline excepting major brand of gasoline is referred to in these pictures.

With that understanding and qualification, I submit that the picture is admissible—that the Exhibit 18-J is admissible in evidence upon the testimony of the witness that that is the meaning of the words "Prevailing retail price."

Mr. Austin: I don't know whether I made my objection very clear, your Honor. I thought, perhaps, it was enough to point out these computations are on here, and I think they are doubtful at best, and I don't think they ought to be added to the exhibits themselves. But as long as we are talking about retail prices, if you have a picture on here of a Zip or Joy station, and then you put on this exhibit the prevailing retail price of major brand of gasoline, then they deduct the Zip or Joy price from that, and then they try to show that that particular station is selling at a certain number of cents below the prevailing retail price—that price in the picture may be the prevailing retail price for that brand of gasoline, for all I know.

2810 Mr. Abbott: Yes. The picture wouldn't mean anything if your construction were put on it.

I want to make a statement on the record which will show that the words "Prevailing retail price" which appears on this exhibit and also on other exhibits in proposed Exhibits 18 to 18-z and 18-z-51, in all cases refers to the prevailing retail price of major brand gasoline as the name has been established by evidence already in the record, and as will be established as to all dates antedating the date of January 1, 1937, by the testimony of Mr. Raupagh, who will testify and will put in evidence the prevailing retail prices as to all dates which are covered by these exhibits.

Now, with that explanation, I submit that the exhibit is admissible in evidence.

Mr. Austin: I submit it is not admissible for the same reason, and I would like to get a general ruling upon all of these computations.

Has your Honor got a copy of this?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I haven't. I don't know what it is.

(The witness handed the Examiner a copy of the exhibit in question.)

Mr. Abbott: You might show the Court Exhibit 18-J and also 18-K.

2811 I may say these have all been prepared with a great deal of care, extending over many years, and if there is any question as to any computation or the accuracy, of course, that is one thing. But unless they are found to be inaccurate, I submit that they are entitled to credibility.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Abbott: I now move we adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, Friday, May 2, 1941.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Motion of counsel for Respondent is granted, and now at 4:50 P. M., the hearing stands adjourned to be reconvened at 10 A. M., May 2, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(Thereupon at 4:50 o'clock P. M., an adjournment was taken, to reconvene May 2, 1941, at 10 o'clock A. M.)

2812
Room 859 Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan,
May 2, 1941

Met, pursuant to adjournment, at 10 A. M.

Before:

Webster Ballinger, Trial Examiner.

Appearances:

Cyrus B. Austin, Esq., Attorney for the Federal Trade Commission.

Harold R. Hanley, Esq., 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and

Arthur J. Abbott, Esq., of the firm of Abbott, MacMahon, and Roberts, 2230 Buhl Building, Detroit, Michigan, on behalf of the Respondent.

2813 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order. This is a reconvening at 10 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, May 2, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, in Docket 4389, in the case entitled Standard Oil Company.

The last hearing was held in Detroit, May 2, 1941. The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

Gentlemen, you may proceed.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, before the witness resumes, there is a matter I think I should give your Honor notice of, because it may be that something will have to be done preparatory to the eventuality.

In view of the ruling on Exhibits 38-A to 38-E, which exhibits were excluded, and which, to refresh your Honor's memory, were the tabulations prepared by the State Tax authorities, and tabulated from reported returns made by some 42 jobbers and dealers in Detroit, and your Honor having indicated his view as to how the Respondent should proceed, the Respondent viewed that as material testimony and the Respondent would like now to give notice that we propose to subpoena the 42 dealers and I assume that perhaps the Court here is not prepared to forthwith issue those subpoenas; it might need some time in 2814 order to prepare to do that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It will be necessary for the Examiner to obtain the subpoenas from Washington which he can undoubtedly do within 48 hours.

Mr. Hanley: Then we might have them ready for issuance Monday?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I believe that can be arranged.

Mr. Hanley: Now, I should like to go off the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Abbott: I wish to say with reference to the Exhibits 18-B to 18-z-51 that there seems to be an intention on the part of the Commission to require us to change the notations on these pictures to quite a considerable extent. It was suggested last evening by Mr. Austin that the words "Prevailing retail prices" should be amended to show that they are the prevailing major retail prices. And he also indicated that he would require that the amount of the differential, which is merely a matter of arithmetic, be excluded from the exhibits.

Now, we have set about to give the Commission a picture of the competitive situation on the question 2815 as to whether there is any substantial injury to competition in the Detroit area, and I had always assumed that it was the desire of the Commission to be fully informed as to all the facts relative to the situation, in the Detroit area, including such matters as are on these pictures, and in such a way that the Commission can see by a glance what the actual situation is.

I don't conceive that there is any point in excluding from these pictures the mathematical computation as to the differential. It would seem to me that if the computation is accurate, and of course we concede that if it is not accurate it should be either corrected or deleted. But if it is accurate, I see no reason why it should not be included in these exhibits.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: These photographs are being introduced in evidence to portray the actual situation existing on the day the photograph was taken.

Mr. Abbott: Correct.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The notations appearing on the photographs form no part of the photograph, and any matters or any notations on the photographs, the Examiner thinks probably are inadmissible.

The photograph will be considered in connection with the witness' testimony, and the witness will testify with reference to the facts.

2816 Mr. Abbott: That is going to make it necessary for the witness to go over every one of these exhibits and state what the facts are, at the time the photograph was taken; if the Examiner wishes to have it presented that way.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No notations should properly appear on any exhibit that are not testified to either by this or some other witness.

Mr. Abbott: We can save time if the question is asked of the witness whether the notation on the exhibit, after he examines it, is in accordance with the facts which existed at the time the picture was taken, without going into a mass of testimony to establish that; independent of the notation.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If you can reach an agreement with counsel for the Commission, it will be accepted by the Examiner, but if there is objection, the Examiner will require you to prove, by proper testimony, all the notations that appear on the exhibits.

Mr. Abbott: I may say that we are going to have some more books of these, and the same plan has been used.

We have taken a long time to collect this material in good faith because we believed it was something that the Commission ought to know and if this plan—I don't 2817 say there is any attempt to frustrate it, but I do say it is going to tend to prolixity of testimony. Mr. Biber might take a long time to testify as to each one of these photographs, I think there ought to be some way of avoiding that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the photograph and any notation on it must be proven by competent evidence, and if it is necessary for the Examiner to suggest what that is to present counsel for the Respondent—

Mr. Abbott: I understand Mr. Austin has no objection —he stated yesterday he has no objection to the receiving of these photographs in evidence. There was objection only to the memorandum as to the prevailing retail price and as to differential.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If counsel agree on what may be included in the form of notations on these Exhibits, the Examiner will admit them, if there is no objection.

Mr. Abbott: Well, I think we should come to some agreement in order to save time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you desire a recess?

Mr. Abbott: I think we ought to come to some agreement, because it might save a day of testimony.

Mr. Austin: Well, I don't think there is going to be any testimony—at least I hope not—on each one of 2818 these as to a lot of arithmetical computations. I feel very sure that none of these typed notations on here are evidence of any kind. The most that can be said for them is they may be a correct statement of something somewhere else in the record. The Examiner has already indicated that.

Now, so far as any attempt to testify to that, certainly it would be senseless for a witness in each case to take a computation and say five gallons for 87¢ is the same as 1 gallon for 17.4¢. That is a matter you could do in your briefs or argue to the Commission if you care to present it. But I don't think it has any place on any of these. And certainly, as far as I can see, there would be no point in attempting to prove it. And even if you proved it, there would still be testimony in the record that still is not on here, you have to refer to the record. You have your prevailing prices already.

Mr. Abbott: You are departing from the agreement we had yesterday as to what should go in. I understood the only thing you objected to was the designation "Prevailing retail price" and also the amount of the differential. Now each day that we take this up we come into something different.

Mr. Austin: No. I am going to object to any notations on these where I think that they may be or are 2819 misleading, and that will probably apply to all of these where there is not a major brand of gasoline. There are some where there is a major brand that I don't care very much whether the notation is taken out or not. I probably will just let those go in as they are. Although I don't think the notations are proper on these, either. But it isn't worth objecting to.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Gentlemen, it is perfectly obvious that the discussion isn't leading to a solution of the problem. Let's proceed with the exhibits.

Mr. Haniey: I wanted to suggest that I am just afraid, your Honor, that Mr. Austin is confusing his theory of the case with the rule of evidence he seeks to apply. I think we understand that Mr. Austin expects to try his case on the theory that the Standard Oil Company is in competition only with Standard major companies; that Mr. Austin reserves the right to arbitrarily designate that. Now, that is a perfectly legitimate theory for Mr. Austin to adopt if he wants to adopt it, and we can't complain about his arguing that.

The theory of the defense here, however, is that we are in competition with gasoline in the Detroit area; we proved already by Mr. Boatwright what effect on our business that competition had.

Now, it is sought here, if I understand these nota- 2820 tions, to give the Commission a quick picture in schedule form of a calculation, the basis for which is in the record. It was testified to on the Government's case what the prevailing prices were; we are now showing what these other prices were; and can there be any objection to putting that in in tabular form? Of course, we could make the calculation in brief, Judge, but that means dozens and dozens and dozens of pages of brief, and I apprehend that we are going to be confined to some reasonable limits of time and space when we argue this thing to the Commission. If we can do this by an exhibit, certainly we ought to be entitled to do it that way. It is in the record; it has been testified to.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is perfectly obvious that there is confusion between counsel for the Commission and Respondent. But it is essential that the documents introduced and admitted in evidence must not only be proved in part, but in whole, of all the notations appearing thereon.

Mr. Hanley: There is no disagreement on that. We simply say that it is proved; it is proved on the Government's case what these figures are, so far as the prevailing price is concerned. This witness establishes by the photograph what the price is at the service station indicated on the photograph. And then it is just a matter 2821 of easy calculation to show the difference right on the photograph.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If the computations are correct, it might be of assistance to both the Examiner, counsel, and the Commission.

Mr. Hanley: We thought so.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But if there is any question about it, it must be proven.

Mr. Abbott: That is what we say.

Mr. Hanley: We thoroughly agree with that. But is there any question, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: The question as to their application; and I don't care how well they are proven, I don't think they are evidence. I think it is purely argument.

Mr. Hanley: That is a different objection, Judge.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then the question arises as to whether or not they are material evidence.

Let's proceed with your exhibits, Mr. Abbott.

Mr. Abbott: We will proceed the way Mr. Austin wants us to. We may be here for quite a while.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner would like to expedite and shorten the hearing, but if it is necessary to pursue this course—

Mr. Abbott: Do you want to examine the witness yourself?

2822 Mr. Austin: I thought I was proceeding. I had gotten through nine of these yesterday, and was going to proceed. They had already been offered.

Mr. Abbott: Go ahead.

MAX BIBER, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Mr. Austin: Now, Exhibit 18-J we discussed yesterday, and I believe it was agreed that the typewriting in the upper right-hand part of the sheet might be stricken. If that will be done by the reporter, I will make no further objection to the offer of that sheet in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will physically strike the typewritten notation on the exhibit indicated.

Mr. Austin: On the upper right-hand corner.

(The reporter did as instructed.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a recess for a minute.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

With the typewritten portion, to which objection has been made stricken, from Respondent's Exhibit, Respondent's Exhibit 18-J is now admitted in evidence.

2823 (The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-J," was received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. As to 18-K, Mr. Biber: Have you a copy of that photograph there?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Now, I see right in the middle of that photograph a sign that says 6 for 96¢. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And I also see a star which, I assume, indicates that this is a Texaco station; is that right?

A. That's right, it is.

Q. Do you know it to be a Texaco station?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Is there anything on this photograph which indicates what grade of gasoline is being offered at 6 for 96¢?

A. No, I don't believe that the sign says. It just says 6 for 96¢. It doesn't say the grade.

Q. Did you make any purchases at this station at that price?

A. I did not. Except that the picture does indicate that it must either be regular or Ethyl.

Q. How does it indicate that?

2824 A. Because there are four pumps on the location. Three carry the Texaco emblem on the globe, which is the regular gas, and the white pump in front is a Ford Benzol globe.

Q. That is the one right to the left of the sign?

A. Yes, just at the sign. That is a Ford Benzol globe, and there are no pumps which carry an insignia of a third grade or premium grade gasoline.

Q. Do you know whether this station sells the Ethyl or the third grade Texas gasoline?

A. Whether they did at the time this picture was taken?

Q. Yes.

A. I would say that they did not.

Q. Now, you have got a computation up at the top of this one, Mr. Biber, and 6 into $1.08, according to my mathematics is 18¢ instead of 18.1¢.

A. The price of gasoline, the prevailing retail price of gasoline at that time was 18.1, but because the prices were given in comparable gallonage, amounts as 6 or 7 or 8, the closest full cent price was 6 for $1.08. In other words, it wasn't 6 for $1.09 and it wasn't 6 for $1.08. That was as close as they could come to it on a 6 gallon basis, and the prevailing price that went in on the Government's case was 18.1¢ per gallon. That's why both types of prices were shown, because there might be a .1¢ difference.

2825 Q. It may not be very material. I will not make any further objection to that.

Mr. Austin: I think there is a slight error when you are comparing a 6 gallon price of one with the other, but I am not going to argue about it, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without objection, Respondent's Exhibit 18-K is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-K," was received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Exhibit 18-L. Will you describe what that is, Mr. Biber.

A. 18-L is a card bearing the legend "Free Gasoline Each Week. Have this Card Punched every Week at any Hi Speed Station in Wayne County."

Q. Where did you acquire that card?

A. I acquired that card at Woodward and Spencer, Vandenberg's Service.

Q. Is that the name that seems to be stamped on the card?

A. Yes.

Q. And you obtained it there personally?

A. Yes, I did.

2826 Q. And what about the lower half of the page?

A. The lower half of the page was information that was printed on the back of the top part of the page, which are the rules and regulations of this contest.

Q. The top part looks like two sides of the same card.

A. No, it was a folder. There are actually four sides to the whole thing.

Q. When did you get the card?

A. Some time in 1939. This contest ran for six or seven months in 1939.

Mr. Abbott: The date is indicated on the exhibit, is it not, as to the contents?

Mr. Austin: That is what I am asking him. Whether he got it around that time.

Your Honor, I have no objection to this, except the general objection which I have made to all of these. I believe that is clear, that I am not consenting to any of these going in, but I understand that my general objection is overruled, so when I say I have no further objection, I make no objection in addition to the general objection to all of them, that they are irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-L for identification is admitted in evidence.

2827 (The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-L," was received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. How did you obtain the card which is marked 18-M for identification?

A. That was given to me by the operator at Jefferson and Nottingham.

Q. Do you have any personal knowledge as to whether this card was distributed to Government employees?

A. I don't have any personal knowledge as to whether it was distributed.

Mr. Austin: I object to this, your Honor, upon the ground that it is not properly authenticated. There is certain typing on here which, perhaps, it is unnecessary to object to.

Mr. Abbott: Let the record show that it consists of a printed card.

Jefferson and Nottingham is one of your Citrin-Kolb stations, it is not?

The Witness: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Voir Dire Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. Exhibit 18-N is a typewritten statement, and it 2828 is descriptive.

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: It purports to describe certain gasoline stations in Detroit. I would like to know whether counsel for Respondent contends that this is evidentiary.

Mr. Abbott: No, it is merely descriptive of other exhibits.

Mr. Austin: I object to it, because on its face—

Mr. Abbott: We concede, your Honor, that the offer should be rejected on that one.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection to the admission in evidence of Respondent's Exhibit 18-N for identification is sustained, and the document rejected.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Now, Exhibit 18-O, Mr. Biber, appears to be a picture of—well, your tell me what it is a picture of? I am not sure.

A. It is a picture of a cover of a pamphlet given to me at the Liberty Service Stores at 2790 West Grand Boulevard, which reads: "Your choice of a thousand and one—"

Q. You don't need to read it. That will show on the exhibit itself.

What are the Liberty Service Stores?

A. They are a chain of three stations—it was three 2829 at the time, I believe, and it is four now—operating in the City of Detroit super service ~~stations handling~~ Fleet-Wing gasoline.

Q. You said they were super service stations?

A. Yes.

Q. It has a date on here, "March 19, 1940." What does that represent?

A. That is the date it was collected.

Q. You say you collected it yourself?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: If counsel will agree to the elimination of this typed line at the bottom, I will make no other objection.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will physically delete the notation from the exhibit at the bottom as designated.

(The reporter did as instructed.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: With the deletion agreed upon by counsel from the exhibit, Respondent's Exhibit 18-O is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-O," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: Does counsel urge the admission of 2830 Exhibit 18-P?

Mr. Abbott: No. That is another descriptive memorandum. It may be rejected.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-P, for identification, is rejected.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Will you describe what is represented by Exhibit 18-Q for identification?

A. That was a pamphlet distributed by Fleet-Wing dealers in Detroit.

Q. Where did you acquire it?

A. I acquired this at Dexter and Longfellow; Fleet-Wing station.

Q. And when did you require it?

A. I believe the date is March 19, 1940.

Q. Is this a cover of some pamphlet or circular?

A. It is the top of a folder.

Q. What is Fleet-Wing? What kind of gasoline is that?

A. Fleet-Wing is a product of Standard Oil Company of Ohio.

Q. Who markets it?

A. Red Indian Company, Victor Oil Company, and I think, Terminal Oil Company, are the jobbers.

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor, to the type-2831 written statements at the bottom of the page. Beyond that I don't object to the photograph or the designation at the top.

Mr. Abbott. That would be the descriptive material about the pages he testified to. Therefore, it may be deleted from the exhibit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will physically delete the indicated typewritten portion agreed upon from the exhibit.

(The reporter did as requested.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: As so deleted, Respondent's Exhibit 18-Q is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-Q," was received in evidence.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Austin: I object to the admission of Exhibit 18-S for identification upon the ground that there are certain typed and printed notations on it around the margins.

Mr. Abbott: Which ones do you refer to specifically?

Mr. Austin: All of them except the date. And I
2832 would like to ask the witness whether he knows whether these stations are operated by Charles E. Austin, Incorporated?

The Witness: Yes, they are. This is one station; two photographs of one station.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. How do you know that this station is operated by him and not by a lessee selling his brand of gasoline?

A. I couldn't say that I know that, except that I know he doesn't lease out his stations.

Q. Do you have any knowledge as to whether or not Charles E. Austin, Incorporated, sells gasoline to any retail dealers?

A. I don't know of any retail dealers to whom he sells gasoline.

Q. You know the gasoline business pretty well; you are practically certain of that? I know you are a lawyer and therefore hesitate to testify to personal knowledge, but I will take your opinion as an expert.

A. I would say that he does not sell gasoline to any other dealers except his own stations.

Mr. Austin: Then my objection does not go to the words "Charles E. Austin, Incorporated," at the top nor to the date, but it goes to all the other typing in the margins.

2833. Mr. Abbott: Does it go to the location of the stations?

Mr. Austin: Not the locations or dates.

Mr. Abbott: Well, on the marginal notation, it would seem necessary for me to ask the witness some questions in order to qualify it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Austin: My objection is, your Honor, that any such notations on here, not being part of the photograph, and not being necessary to identify the photograph, are not evidentiary, and regardless of whether they are testified to or appear somewhere else in the record, that they are inadmissible.

Mr. Abbott: The testimony as to the prevailing retail prices was all put in with the Government's case. I have that before me.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner has no idea what you are talking about. Let him see the Exhibit.

Mr. Abbott: We regret that we haven't an extra book.

(Mr. Austin handed the Examiner the exhibit in question.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

2834 Direct Examination (Resumed) by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Mr. Biber, with reference to Exhibit 18-S, there is a notation on the bottom of the Exhibit to this effect: "Prevailing retail prices"; what does that refer to?

A. That refers to the amount of the prevailing retail prices for major brands of gasoline on August 31, 1939.

Q. And the rest of the notation giving the prices of the three brands of gasoline, what does that represent?

A. Those are prevailing retail prices for the three brands of major gasolines on August 31, 1939.

Q. What are they shown to be there?

A. The premium grade gasoline is shown to be 6 for $1.05, or 17.1¢ per gallon, including taxes.

Q. Do you have any recollection as to whether that memorandum is correct?

A. Yes, that memorandum was taken off of the same exhibit that is in evidence in the Government's case.

Q. All right. As to house brand?

A. House brand gasoline sold for 7 gallons for $1.10, or 15.4¢ per gallon, including tax.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do I understand there is any objection to this line of examination?

Mr. Austin: Examination?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

2835 Mr. Austin: I am not objecting to his answering these questions; as a matter of fact, it is already in the record on premium and house brand; if he is just asking him what the prevailing prices are.

Mr. Abbott: This is already in evidence, but inasmuch as it seemed necessary to put it in—

Mr. Austin: I don't think it helps the exhibit any if that is what your Honor means.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Well, the third line on the bottom of the exhibit, what does that show?

A. Shows prevailing retail prices for third grade gasoline, being 8 gallons for $1.05, or 12.9¢ per gallon, including tax.

Q. On the right-hand side of the page, there are two memorandums; the one at the top represents what?

A. Represents the difference in the price per gallon between the gasoline sold in the station on the photograph and the prevailing retail price for house brand major gasoline, which is 5.6¢.

Q. And the other memorandum opposite the lower photograph?

A. Indicates that the station displays the same price sign, and the differential is the same.

Q. Is that, as a matter of fact, the same station portrayed on Exhibit 18-S?

2836 A. Yes, they are both the same station taken from different angles.

Mr. Abbott: That is all.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: As the Examiner understands, you have merely asked him if those ~~are~~ portrayed on that exhibit, but not as to whether or not they are facts.

Mr. Abbott: Well, I asked him whether this was in accordance with the testimony which is already in the record in this case, as a part of the Commission's case, as to the prevailing retail prices. That has already been testified to in this record.

Mr. Austin: If it already is in the record, it certainly isn't material to put it in on each one of these. The only purpose here is to make some sort of argument or conclusion in the exhibit itself.

Now, I submit that the only thing here that constitutes evidence is the photograph, and that it may be proper to have certain dates on here and street locations to indentify the photograph, although even that wouldn't necessarily have to be printed here. But I think it is a reasonable thing that it should be; I am not objecting to it. But the rest of this is an attempt to combine the photograph with certain other evidence in the record and draw a conclusion from it.

2837 Mr. Abbott: Now you are amplifying your objection from what you said yesterday, because yesterday you said all you wanted to put in there was "major" after "prevailing."

Mr. Austin: I said twice this morning that I objected to these on—and would object to them—on all of these photographs, except possibly on some of the photographs of major stations, when I didn't think it was material.

Mr. Abbott: That is not what you said yesterday.

Mr. Austin: Regardless of what I said yesterday, that is the position I am taking this morning.

Mr. Abbott: Now, your Honor, what the Commission is trying to do here is to try to make it impossible for the members of the Commission, when this is presented to them, to ascertain by looking at this photograph what it represents and what differential is involved. Of course, we could point it out in brief, but just as Judge Hanley said, that will involve a great deal of unnecessary work in presenting the case to the Commission in the brief. This could all be set forth in the brief, I will grant that, everything on that memorandum could be set forth in the brief. We have the date; we have in evidence the amount of the prevailing retail price, and it is just a matter of mathematics to compute the differential. But it seems to 2838 me just an attempt to frustrate the presenting of an adequate picture, and to obscure the record in this case, to take that attitude.

Mr. Austin: Well, my objection to it is, your Honor, that it is misleading, and the inference here that this grade of gasoline is comparable with house brand, the inference down here that there is some basis for comparison between the major prevailing price and the price of these gasolines, those are matters which are seriously contested, and if it is material, if that sort of testimony is material in the case, I think it might well be misleading to anyone who knows any less about the case than we do, and it would have been misleading to me—in fact, was, when I first looked at it, because—well, regardless of whether it is misleading to me, I think it may be misleading to the Commission to go on in that form.

Mr. Abbott: Judge Hanley said this morning we are competing with gasoline in the Detroit area, and I think we have a right to show that there is a gasoline which was being sold at this station which was being sold on the date represented by this picture at 5.6¢ below the then prevailing price on house brand gasoline.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, irrespective of your theories, if the prevailing retail prices of the 2839 three brands are shown by other evidence in the record, the notations appearing in this Exhibit 18-S are not essential to the exhibit, and unless the notations are eliminated the exhibit would be rejected. If they are eliminated the exhibit will be received in evidence.

Mr. Abbott: Well, according to that ruling, then, we have no alternative.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Which alternative do you elect?

Mr. Abbott: Well, according to the ruling of the Examiner, the memorandum on the bottom and at the side of this page, which merely portrays something that is already in evidence, and which is put on the exhibit merely for the purpose of assisting the Commission in ascertaining what the situation was at the station on the day that the exhibit bears date, then we are obliged to accede to the ruling of the Examiner, although we do it under protest: we are obliged to accept the alternative of having these memoranda deleted, and having the exhibits admitted in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No, you are not required to accept the alternative. You can note an appeal or an objection to the Examiner's ruling, and when this case goes to the Commission secure a review of the Examiner's 2840 ruling by the Commission, and if the Commission concludes that that exhibit is entitled to admission with all the notations appearing thereon, the Commission will direct its inclusion in the record. So that you are not required to go to the other alternative here. You may elect as to whether or not it will be introduced in evidence with the notations eliminated, or you may note an exception which you already have automatically to the Examiner's ruling, and the exhibit will be rejected, and you may present the matter then to the Commission.

Mr. Abbott: Well, may we take a minute recess?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

Mr. Hanley: It has been in my mind, your Honor, to make a request which goes to procedure rather than to substance. It has to do with two different methods of ruling in connection with testimony and exhibits. In some instances your Honor has admitted a question or an exhibit, reserving to the other party a right to move to strike or admitting it subject to objection, or something along that line, but receiving the material in the record.

On other occasions testimony has been excluded or an exhibit rejected, as has happened more recently just during the Respondent's case.

I was wondering if there could be any reasonable 2841 objection to the adoption of the first plan which your Honor has adopted in part. It is the universal rule in trying equity cases. It is the rule always where there is a reference and a Referee takes testimony and receives evidence. Of course, it is always the rule in taking a deposition. It seems to me that the most reasonable way of getting this thing presented and the least difficult way is to have the whole thing on the record with the reservations, stated reasons for objections, if there be any, and then either party is relieved of what otherwise becomes a procedural necessity to make motions and argue them just to get a consideration of the propriety of a ruling on the exclusion or admission of evidence.

I apprehend that in the case of any exhibit, that it would be far more simple for the Commission to have that in the record, and then examination or consideration could be urged by the proponent of that evidence, and contested by the party objecting to it, if it was then desired to do so by either party. I am just very, very fearful, indeed, your Honor, that the Respondent now is in a position here where we are just actually being deprived of a fundamental right, in this: that the burdens of trial that are being placed upon us just become tantamount to a denial of trial, since we will be under a necessity, the expense of time and effort and money to continuously present procedural motions
2842 merely to get, matters before the Commission for a consideration as to whether they were properly included or excluded in evidence, and that is going to be fearfully burdensome. That is apparent now, and I can conceive of no reason why there would be any objection to the uniform adoption of the rule which your Honor has adopted in many instances during the course of this trial: simply receive the evidence subject to whatever objection or motion might be desirable on the part of the other party. In either event, of course, the Commission ultimately decides the issue and looks at the exhibit or the testimony, as the case may be, but in the one case it is a separate thing to be tried, to bring a motion, argue it, file a brief, do something in order to get the thing decided. In the other instances, the Commission would do what any Court of Equity does; they would consider the record and the objections. If there were something there that they thought they ought not to consider because of immateriality or for any reason that appears sufficient to them, they would, of course, I assume, disregard that testimony.

Now, we have a number of exhibits which are of this character which we propose to offer. They are being gone through here item by item and it is just an appalling task to get a review of this thing as a procedural matter unless these things can be included in the record 2843 This is procedural, Judge. I am not poling any of the decisions the Court has made. I am not asking for any reconsiderations of rulings, or anything of that kind. I am just seeking to get this material in the record protected in any way that the Commission wants to protect, but just so it will be there.

There has been the utmost confusion, it seems to me, on the part of the counsel for the Commission in respect of evidence or what rulings on evidence he should request, and on his theory of the trial. There, of course, should be a clear distinction. One is procedural; the other is substantive, and goes to the merits, and goes to the defense, to our defense, and ~~we are~~ entitled to make our defense.

The Commission may not agree in all instances with our views, but the insistence that we are meeting and have been meeting on the part of counsel for the Commission, for instance, that this sort of a line of exhibits is not admissible because he has the theory that it should refer to only major brands—that's just one of his objections, but it is one—that's just like saying to a man charged with a criminal homicide that he may defend on the ground that he has an alibi if he can prove one, but that he may not defend on the ground that it was excusable or justifiable or that he was temporarily insane. You are just depriv-2844 ing us of a trial here, Judge.

I urge this most earnestly and most respectfully. I urge it on the ground that our constitutional and statutory rights ought to be conserved.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Will you let the Examiner have Exhibit 18-S, for identification?

(The document referred to was handed to the Examiner.)

Mr. Austin: I don't know whether your Honor desires to hear any reply to what Judge Hanley says.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner doesn't consider it necessary.

In the view of the Examiner, there is no question of substantive right, nor is there a question of procedure involved. We have here this situation: A photograph of a service station is offered in evidence. Not the mere photograph of the station, but with notations appearing thereon.

It is claimed by counsel for the Respondent that at least a part of the notations appearing thereon are merely recapitulations of evidence introduced or to be introduced in the case.

Counsel for the Commission complains that with those notations on the document, the document may cause a wrong impression to be drawn by the Commission, or those 2845 wholly unfamiliar with the case, when they come to consider it.

The Examiner has ruled that the photograph is admissible, but that that notations, to which objection has been interposed, appearing thereon, must be eliminated. Otherwise he will reject the entire document.

Now, the Examiner has expressed his views with reference to it, and if counsel for the Respondent is not satisfied, you have a complete remedy through review of the Examiner's rulings by the Commission.

Mr. Hanley: Of course, my remarks were addressed to a procedural matter involving all exhibits and all rulings, Judge; not particularly with reference to this, you understand. As to this exhibit, the Respondent simply offers the exhibit, and we understand tha. the photograph is regarded as admissible. The other material is not regarded as admissible. We exercise no choice.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In the form of notations on the exhibit.

Mr. Hanley: In the form in which the exhibit appears, as it is offered. Now, we offer the exhibit. We exercise no choice as to deletion or elimination of any part.

Mr. Austin: I think if we would proceed with this, we could get through with it now.

Mr. Hanley: The reason, of course, for that is 2846 that we agree to no ruling of the Court that excludes the exhibit, and the Court has been requesting the reporter to physically delete certain portions of the exhibits, which we have offered. Of course, there can't be any review, if that is done.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That has been done by consent of counsel.

Mr. Hanley: We no longer consent to the mutilation of exhibits we offer. If parts are regarded as admissible and parts are regarded as inadmissible, we are entitled to have the admitted portion in now and have a review as to the portion regarded by the Examiner as inadmissible, and the thing, in its entirety must be in the record, or we can't obtain it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then do I understand that counsel for the Respondent tenders Respondent's Exhibit 18-S for identification for admission with all the notations appearing thereon?

Mr. Abbott: We have already done that on the record. Just a moment, if the Court please. May I suggest we take a recess at this time?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a five minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

2847 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

I ask counsel to step up here a moment to get this cleared up.

Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Respondent's Exhibit 18-S is a photograph of a service station. On the right-hand side of the photograph appears the notation in pen: "Amount of cut. Premium—. H. B.—5.6¢. T. G. —"

At the lower portion of the exhibit appears another photograph of apparently the same station, to the right of the photograph appears the notation in handwriting: "Same as above."

At the bottom of the exhibit appears the following notations: "Prevailing Retail Prices—Premium—6 for $1.05 (13.1 plus 4¢ taxes—17.1)

"House brand—7 for $1.10 (11.4 plus 4¢ taxes—15.4)

"Third grade—8 for $1.05 (8.9 plus 4¢ taxes—12.9)."

The notations appearing thereon are objected to by counsel, which objections are sustained, and the exhibit, as tendered, with the notations, is rejected.

Mr. Abbott: Now, your Honor, without waiving exception to the ruling of the Court in any way, we re-offer this exhibit 18-S, and also the other exhibits from 2848 18-S to Z, and also 18-Z to 18-z-51, without the inclusion of the memorandum as to prices. I think that appears on all the exhibits I mentioned, memoranda as to the prevailing retail price and also the amount of the differential as shown between the retail price and the posted price as shown by the photograph.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Will counsel delete from the exhibits the portion to which objection has been made.

Mr. Abbott: I say we offer them with that deletion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I say, will you delete from the exhibits so that when they are admitted in evidence, the objectionable matter will have been deleted from the exhibits.

Mr. Abbott: We will do so, of course, reserving our exception to the ruling of the Court, because I think that should be done on the record.

Mr. Hanley: I wonder, your Honor, if the reporter shouldn't do that either with the Court or with counsel for the Commission. We want to have no part in rubbing out any part of these exhibits.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the Examiner presumes that the deletion would occur with the approval of counsel for the Commission.

2849 Mr. Austin: I suggest, your Honor, that these things are offered in that manner, that the reporter be instructed to strike out the notations of the character which your Honor has described on Exhibit 18-S.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner doesn't care to impose that responsibility upon the reporter.

Mr. Austin: We could show him in each case what is to come off.

Mr. Abbott: Under the re-offer, we are willing to indicate the portion which is to be deleted under the new offer, without, however, agreeing or consenting to the ruling which your Honor has just made with reference to the entire exhibit. We preserve our exceptions to that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any further objection on the part of counsel for the Commission to the tender?

Mr. Austin: Not on 18-S, nor 18-T. I will have to go through these, but if it is understood that these notations as to prevailing retail prices and any computations based thereon are in each case to be stricken, it won't take long to go through. There will be a great many of them where that will be the only thing to be done.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a recess for five minutes, and during which counsel are requested to go through the exhibits and instruct the reporter as to 2850 what shall be deleted.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

Mr. Abbott: I, at this time, without waiving the exception referred to to the previous ruling of the Examiner, offer in evidence Respondent's Exhibits 18-S, 18-T, and 18-V, with the deletion of the marginal notations as to the prevailing retail prices and the computations and the statement as to the differential.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-S, 18-T, and 18-V are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-S, 18-T, and 18-V," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Abbott: On the record I want to say this: that I understand that the Examiner, with reference to pictures of major branded gasolines, has no objection to the notation on the margin. Is that correct, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: I think the quickest way to handle this is to go right through them, and I think that will be true in almost all, if not every case.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

2851 Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Austin: On Exhibit 18-W, the Commission has no objection except the general objection, which was made to all of them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled, and Respondent's Exhibit 18-W is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-W," was received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Biber, have you a copy there of Exhibit 18-X?

A. Is that page 19?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Incidentally, are those the same sort of prints that I have here? Would there be anything legible on yours that is not legible here, or vice versa? I think I had better show you these.

Mr. Abbott: They are all the same, Mr. Examiner.

Mr. Austin: Sometimes you get different prints from the same negative with different legibility, and these are the ones that are marked.

(Counsel and the witness confer.)

2852 By Mr. Austin:

Q. Now, these prints show a Cities Service Station; is that true?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. That is portrayed there?

A. Yes.

Q. And there is a sign there that says, as I read it, "Save," and then a figure "8," and then a figure "98"; now, have you knowledge of what brand of gasoline or what grade of Cities Service gasoline was offered—was referred to on that sign? I am assuming that means 8 for 98¢, although you can't see all of the words. But is there anything in this photograph which shows what sort of gasoline was offered at that price, or have you any knowledge of that?

A. Yes, I believe if you know the word ahead of time, you may be able to read it. "Save 8 for 98¢ Koolmotor." That would be "Koolmotor" at the bottom of the sign then.

Q. I believe that can be made out by very close examination.

A. I am sure it is.

Mr. Austin: With that explanation, I will make no further objection than the general objection, which I assume I won't need to mention every time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit
2853 18-X, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-X," was received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Exhibit 18-Y, Mr. Biber, has the notation at the right of the photograph, "H. B.," which I suppose means house brand, and "3.3¢," referring to the words "amount of cut"; there are several signs in that picture; which one is referred to?

A. 8 for 99.

Q. Is there anything in the photograph which shows what grade of gasoline was being offered for that price?

A. No. Fleet-Wing does not have a third grade of gasoline; that is, either house brand or premium brand.

Q. Do you know whether a Fleet-Wing station ever sells any other brand of gasoline or grade of gasoline than Fleet-Wing house brand or Fleet-Wing Ethyl?

A. I wouldn't know, but I don't believe so. I don't believe there are any split accounts.

Mr. Austin: With that explanation, I will make no further special objection to this.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-Y, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

2854 (The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-Y," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: No special objection to 18-Z, as now offered. And this refers to one where the certain notations have been stricken out in accordance with the ruling of the Examiner.

Trial Examiner Batlinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-Z, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-Z," was received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Exhibit 18-z-1, Mr. Biber, entitled "Dexter-Buena Vista Service," appears to be a picture of a coupon. How did you acquire that coupon?

A. I got that coupon from Mr. Jack Rosenthal, the proprietor of the station.

Q. When did you obtain it?

A. In March, 1940.

Q. How did he happen to give it to you?

A. I went in to the station and asked him for it.

Q. Well, did you go in as a customer, or were you known to him?

2855 A. Oh, he knows me.

Q. Do you know whether he was giving these cards to customers at that time?

A. Yes. That is the reason I went in there. I had been told that he was, and I went in and asked him if he was, and he said that he was, and he gave me a sample of the coupon.

Q. Then, I assume that the words "Sun Dealer" here reflect your own knowledge as to the brand of gasoline dealt in?

A. That's right.

Mr. Austin: I have no objection to this exhibit down through the picture of the card, but would object to the typing below the card upon the ground that it is simply a descriptive statement.

Have you any objection, Mr. Abbott, to striking that?

Mr. Abbott: This is a Sun Oil Company leased station and duplicates the memorandum at the top, so I have no objection to that going out.

I would like to ask the witness one question.

Mr. Biber, did Mr. Rosenthal advise you what the figure "1" on the coupon represents?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor; as to what Mr. Rosenthal told the witness. It is only hearsay, and if this has any evidentiary value it should show on its face what it is supposed to be.

2856 Mr. Abbott: This is Mr. Rosenthal's card, which the witness says he got from the dealer, Mr. Rosenthal being the dealer.

Mr. Austin: I don't object to that sort of testimony, Mr. Abbott. Of course, I assume if it is relevant to show offers made by service station operators, you can do it by people who receive the offer. I am only objecting to it, with any relevancy to my objection, about this typing on the exhibit. I understand this is redirect. I won't object to it, if you want to go into it.

Mr. Abbott: The exhibit is ambiguous on its face in that the letter "1" which appears on it is not explained. I think we have a right to show, if the witness knows of his own knowledge, as to what the figure "1" represents.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Apparently all he knows is what he was told.

Mr. Austin: Well, he was told by the actual operator of the station that gave him the card. I don't want to object on the ground—except that I think it is irrelevant and immaterial—which is my general objection to all of this, but my point is this: that I thought Mr. Abbott had done all the qualifying he wanted to do before these were offered.

Now, if he wants to go back and do more qualifying, 2857 after these are offered here, I don't object to that.

So perhaps I had better withdraw the objection. I thought it went to the question of the typing.

Mr. Abbott: No, that didn't go to the question of the typing. It went to the patent ambiguity in the card itself. I understand the objection is withdrawn?

Mr. Austin: Yes, but I have an objection to the typing. That's what confused the matter.

Mr. Abbott: On the typing, I am willing to concede that the typing on the bottom of the exhibit should go out.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then it may be deleted, and when deleted, it will be offered.

Mr. Abbott: I make the offer of Exhibit 18-z-1 as the same has been changed by the deletion of the typewritten material on the bottom of the exhibit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-1 for identification is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-1" was received in evidence.)

Mr. Abbott: Now, with reference to this exhibit, Mr. Biber, will you state what information you got with reference to the significance of the letter "1" on the exhibit?

The Witness: The letter "1" indicates the number 2858 of gallons of gasoline for which the coupon is credit.

Mr. Abbott: To what extent, if you know?

The Witness: Well, it represented a cent a gallon.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. What is the origin of Exhibit 18-z-2, Mr. Biber?

Mr. Abbott: He testified on those yesterday. I don't have any objection to going over them again.

Q. Where did you get that?

A. I got that at my home. The station happened to be just a half a block from my home.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When you refer to "that" you refer to Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-2?

The Witness: That's right.

Mr. Austin: Do you know whether these cards were issued by Jameson's Gulf Service Station?

The Witness: Only what the card purports to show.

Mr. Austin: I object to this, your Honor, as not being properly authenticated, and also as being immaterial upon the additional ground that it only refers to a special sale on three days.

Mr. Abbott: Let the record show that the Exhibit 18-z-2 is a printed card purportedly having been issued by Jameson's Gulf Service Station which the witness 2859 states that he received at his home.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is sustained. The exhibit is excluded.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Exhibits 18-z-3 and 18-z-4 and 5, I believe, are receipts which, I believe, you obtained personally for purchases of gasoline? Did you so state yesterday on the record?

A. Yes, those are the same ones I testified to yesterday.

Q. Were they all purchases made by you yourself?

A. They were.

Q. What brand of gasoline was covered by Exhibit 18-z-3?

A. Cities Service.

Q. What grade?

A. Koolmotor, regular.

Q. House brand?

A. That's right.

Q. And I ask you the same question as to 18-z-4.

A. That is Sun; they have only one grade.

Q. What brand of gasoline was purchased by you when you received this receipt marked 18-z-5?

A. That is Hi-Speed, regular.

Q. What was the name of the station where that was purchased?

2860 A. It is the Dexter-Tuxedo Service.

Mr. Abbott: For the record, I want to say that I examined Mr. Biber yesterday with reference to all three of these exhibits.

Mr. Austin: No further objection on those three.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 18-z-3, 4, and 5, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-z-3, 18-z-4, and 18-z-5," were received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Exhibit 18-z-6, Mr. Biber, is that not a photograph of Exhibit 18-z-3?

A. It is.

Q. Yes.

Mr. Austin: Then, your Honor, I object to that as a duplication. It is merely a picture of the original sales slip which has already been received.

Mr. Abbott: On that I would like to ask Mr. Biber a question.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Does the sales slip show the same situation as the picture shows?

2861 A. I don't believe there has been a reference to the picture, Mr. Abbott.

Q. Well, the picture—I mean the sales slip has been admitted in evidence.

Mr. Abbott: Is that the objection you made, that the picture shows the same thing?

Mr. Austin: The picture is a picture of the sales slip; it is identically the same thing.

Mr. Abbott: I see. I thought it referred to a picture.

Mr. Austin: No.

Mr. Abbott: Therefore, my remarks are not pertinent.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-6 is rejected.

Mr. Abbott: Yes, it should be, because it is the same exhibit. I was referring to z-7. I thought that was the one you were talking about.

Mr. Austin: No special objection to Exhibit 18-z-7.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-7, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-7," was received in evidence.)

2861-A Mr. Austin: I have no special objection to Exhibits 18-z-8 and 18-z-9.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 18-z-8 and 18-z-9, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-z-8 and 18-z-9," were received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. As to 18-z-10, Mr. Biber, which constitutes a photostat of two coupons and a sales slip; is that slip a receipt for the purchase of gasoline that you made personally?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Did you obtain the coupons which are here pictured at the time that you made the purchase?

A. I did.

Mr. Austin: No farther objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-10, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-10," was received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

2862 Q. Mr. Biber, can you tell me how many grades of gasoline are sold at Zip stations?

A. There have been times when they have advertised two grades. I would say in the main they have sold one grade.

Mr. Austin: I have no special objection now to the admission of Exhibits 18-z-12, 13 and 14. They have certain material on them which has been stricken.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 18-z-12, 13, and 14, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-z-12, 18-z-13, and 18-z-14," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: I have no further objection to Exhibit 18-z-15 and Exhibit 18-z-16.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 18-z-15, and 18-z-16, for identification, are admitted.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-z-15 and 18-z-16," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: The same as to z-18.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: How about 17?

Mr. Austin: That is a separation sheet in this 2863 binder.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-18, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-18," was received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Is this photostat shown on 18-z-19, Mr. Biber, a copy of a handbill or a newspaper advertisement, or what is it?

A. It is a handbill.

Q. Where did you acquire possession of it?

A. It was given to me by the dealer at Warren and Brooklyn.

Q. Warren and Brooklyn?

A. Citrin-Kolb dealer at Warren and Brooklyn.

Q. Do you know whether these handbills—do you know what service station, if any, prepared and distributed these handbills?

A. Did you say who prepared them?

Q. Prepared and distributed them.

A. I don't know who prepared them. I only know what station addresses appeared on the circular.

Q. Did you obtain such a circular from any one of the stations listed here?

2864 A. No, I did not, myself.

Mr. Austin: I object to Exhibit 18-z-19 as lacking proper authentication.

2865 Mr. Abbott: Let the record show that this exhibit is a printed handbill advertising Benz High Power Gas, the same having been handed to the witness by one of Citrin-Kolb Oil station dealers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-19 for identification is rejected.

Mr. Austin: No objection to 18-z-20, as now offered.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-20 for identification may be admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-20", was received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: No objection to Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-22.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: How about 21?

Mr. Austin: That is a tab sheet.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-22 for identification is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-22", was received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: No special objection to Exhibits 18-z-23, 18-z-24, and 18-z-25.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 2866 18-z-23, 18-z-24, and 18-z-25 for identification are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-z-23, 18-z-24, and 18-z-25," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: Exhibit 18-z-26, Mr. Biber; is that a duplication of a photograph previously offered in evidence?

The Witness: What page is that?

Mr. Austin: It is page 40. I think you will recall the same photograph, because I asked you about that 8 for 99¢?

The Witness: Yes, this is a duplication.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is the Exhibit withdrawn?

Mr. Austin: I would like to say, your Honor, that the way these were offered in this folder, they were offered as showing stations which were competitive with Citrin-Kolb Oil Company's stations. The reason that one of those, one of two of these photographs were in here more than once, is that it was contended they were competitive with a Citrin-Kolb station on one side and perhaps another one on another side, so the same photograph is shown to show competition with more than one station. I still think we shouldn't have a duplication on that because it seems 2867 to me that if one station is competitive with the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, that it is not particularly material to show that perhaps the same Fleet-Wing station, for instance, might be competitive with more than one Citrin-Kolb station. That would happen in so many instances of the way gasoline is sold, and people drive around, we would get an endless amount, so duplications, it seems to me, of this picture of one station on the same date, just one picture should be enough.

Mr. Abbott: I will withdraw that exhibit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-26 for identification is withdrawn.

Examination on Voir Dire.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Exhibit 18-z-27 shows a picture of a discount card and bears the name "Linwood Tire & Battery Service, 13542 Linwood." Did you obtain that card at that station, Mr. Biber?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And when did you obtain it?

A. In March of 1940.

Mr. Austin: Will counsel for the Respondent consent to striking out all of the typing at the top of the page?

Mr. Abbott: Yes. Everything that is shown in 2868 the typewriting appears on the card and, therefore, we agree to have the typewriting stricken.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then the portion objected to is expurgated. Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-27 for identification is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-27", was received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Exhibit 18-z-28, Mr. Biber: There is a sign, there, that has—I should say it is a photograph which appears to be of a Cities Service station and the date is January 29, 1941; is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. There is a sign, there, that has the words "Ethyl," or "Benzol," I think it says "Genuine Ethyl," or "Benzol." Then it says "7 for 98." I see nothing on the sign that indicates that that is Cities Service gasoline, or what brand of gasoline it is. Do you have any knowledge of that?

A. Yes. There are only two pumps at the station. You will notice that they both have Cities Service globes on them; clover-shaped globes.

Q. Is it your belief that the sign refers to Cities
2869 Service gasoline?

A. Yes, it does.

Mr. Austin: No special objection to Exhibits 18-z-28, 29, or 31; 30 being one of the tab separation sheets in the folder.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 18-z-28, 18-z-29, and 18-z-31 for identification are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-z-28, 18-z-29, and 18-z-31," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: Exhibit 18-z-32, which is a large full page photograph of a Fleet-Wing station, depicts a sign with the legend "Save 2¢ Gal." Does that photograph contain any indication, Mr. Biber, of what price that 2¢ is to be deducted from?

The Witness: No.

Mr. Austin: Did you make any purchase at this station at or about the date shown on the photograph?

The Witness: I don't believe I did.

Mr. Austin: In view of that testimony I submit that the typing here regarding prevailing retail price should be eliminated and, if it is eliminated, I will not object to the introduction of the photograph.

Mr. Abbott: Reserving our original exception to 2870 the ruling of the Court, the typewritten part of this Exhibit may be deleted.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Has it been deleted?

Mr. Austin: It has.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-32 for identification is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-32," was received in evidence.)

2871 Mr. Austin: No special objection to Exhibits 18-z-33, 34, 35, 36, or 37.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 18-z-33, 34, 35, 36, and 37, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-z-33, 18-z-34, 18-z-35, 18-z-36, and 18-z-37," were received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Biber, is it not true that 18-z-38 is a duplication of a photograph which has already been received in evidence? I can't, without going back through the list, find it, but I expect I might be able to in a moment.

A. Yes, it is.

Mr. Austin: I object to that on the ground it is a duplication of a previous exhibit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is the exhibit withdrawn?

Mr. Abbott: It is, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-38, for identification, is withdrawn.

Mr. Austin: No special objection to 18-z-39.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 2872 18-z-39, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-39," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: 18-z-40 is objected to as a duplication of an exhibit already received.

The Witness: Yes, we have that one.

Mr. Abbott: Very well. That is withdrawn.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-40, for identification, is withdrawn.

Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. On 18-z-41, page 54, Mr. Biber, there appears there a comparison of prevailing retail prices with prices shown or supposed to be shown in the photograph both on premium and house brand gasoline; now, I could see the sign on the house brand gasoline, but the price on the Benzol-Ethyl sign is not legible to me. It might be any place from a dollar to a dollar nine cents. Also—

Mr. Abbott: Pardon me. Have you got a magnifying glass?

Mr. Austin: I don't think the Commission ought 2873 to use a magnifying glass on these. But, I am not—

The Witness: It is 7 for $1, is what it is.

Mr. Austin: Well, perhaps we have prevailing prices on Ethyl, assuming that Hi-Speed is a major brand, and someone said it was.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Do you consider Hi-Speed a major brand, Mr. Biber?

A. Certainly.

Mr. Austin: The only objection I have to this one is the comparison on the Ethyl brand gasoline when it seems to me there is nothing in the photograph which makes the comparison one which can be easily verified by looking at the photograph, and I would—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is that a notation on the exhibit?

Mr. Austin: Well, there is one of these notations here with prevailing retail prices and amount of cut on both premium and house brand gas, and it is supposed to reflect what is in the photograph, and I was going to make the suggestion that we strike out just the reference up here, just the one line, the words "Premium 1.8¢."

Mr. Abbott: I don't think it is very material, because it shows the differential on house brand, which is indicative of the cut. So strike it out.

2874 Mr. Austin: It is a bigger differential than house brand, anyway.

That has been stricken, your Honor, and I have no further objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-41, for identification, as deleted, is now admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-41," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: No objection other than a general objection, which I am preserving, to 18-z-42, 43, and 44.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 18-z-42, 43, and 44, respectively, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-z-42, 43, and 44," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: Exhibit 18-z-45 is objected to as a duplication. It is a card which was shown previously. However, I would like to check to find out whether it is the same date.

The Witness: It is the same.

Mr. Abbott: It is withdrawn.

2875 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-45, for identification, and offered in evidence, is now withdrawn.

Mr. Austin: No objection to 18-z-46 and 47.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 18-z-46 and 47, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-z-46 and 18-z-47", were received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: I believe that Exhibit 18-z-48 is a duplication of 18-z-28.

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Mr. Austin: And that 18-z-49 is a duplication of 18-z-29.

Mr. Abbott: As to 48, it is correct, and the exhibit is withdrawn.

As to 49, I will ask Mr. Biber to make an examination.

The Witness: It is a duplication.

Mr. Abbott: 49 is withdrawn.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The offer in evidence of Respondent's Exhibits 18-z-48 and 49, for identification, are withdrawn.

Mr. Austin: I have no objection to 18-z-50, except that the price for third grade gasoline at the station shown in the photograph is not legible in the photograph, and, 2876 therefore, I object to the price comparison on third grade gas.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Biber, what do you interpret the picture showing on third grade, if anything?

A. I don't interpret it.

Mr. Abbott: Very well. Strike it out. That refers to the last line of the notation in typewriting at the bottom of the exhibit.

Mr. Austin: No objection, with that correction, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: With the elimination indicated, Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-50, for identification, is now admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 18-z-50," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: Exhibit 18-z-51 is objected to as a duplication of a previous exhibit.

Mr. Abbott: Is that true?

The Witness: Yes, it is.

Mr. Abbott: Withdrawn.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 18-z-51, for identification, and offered in evidence, the offer is now withdrawn.

2877 Mr. Abbott: Your honor, I wish to say that Exhibit 18-A to 18-Z, and 18-Z to 18-z-51, as originally offered, contains some separation sheets being Exhibits 18-A, 18-R, 18-U, 18-z-11, 18-z-17, 18-z-21, and 18-z-30, giving the addresses of Citrin-Kolb stations with which the various exhibits were claimed to have been in competition. I would like leave of the Examiner at this time to have the exhibits that have been offered and received in evidence placed in the binder at the place where they were, with reference to these separation sheets, in order that they may show the situation that is intended to be shown by this entire exhibit or series of exhibits.

Mr. Austin: I have no objection to that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The request is granted.

Mr. Austin: I believe that nothing that has been offered in evidence under Exhibit 18-A has been admitted, and I, therefore, object to the admission of Respondent's Exhibit 18-A.

The Witness: There were three exhibits under 18-A that were admitted before.

Mr. Austin: I withdraw the objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is withdraw. Now, at 1:10 P. M. the hearing stands in recess 2878 until 2:15 P. M.

(Thereupon at 1:10 o'clock P. M., a recess was taken, to reconvene at 2:15 o'clock P. M.)

2879 Afternoon Session.

2:15 P. M.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

MAX BIBER, heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Continued) by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Mr. Biber, of your own personal knowledge, state the fact as to whether or not the conditions as shown by the buys and pictures referred to in Exhibits 18-A to 18-Z and 18-z-51, insofar as they have been admitted in evidence, show conditions which have been typical of the price cutting prevalent in the Detroit area for the years 1938 to 1941, inclusive?

A. They certainly are typical of the conditions during those years.

Q. Of your own personal knowledge, state the fact as to whether those conditions, as depicted by the pictures, in Exhibits 18-A to 18-Z and 18-Z to 18-z-51, showing price cutting conditions in the Detroit area in those years, were present prior to any price cutting by the six Citrin-Kolb stations complained about in the Commission's testimony, namely, Citrin-Kolb stations at East Jefferson and 2880 Nottingham, Dexter and Chicago Boulevard, John R. and Euclid, West Warren and Brooklyn, Linwood and Pingree, and Linwood and Detroit Terminal Railroad?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And confine your answer to the photographs that have been admitted in evidence.

A. Well, I do know that the conditions shown on the photographs admitted in evidence are conditions that existed before any price cutting by any of the named stations operated or served by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.?

Q. Does that apply to all stations either operated by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company or supplied by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company during those years?

A. I wouldn't include it as to all stations.

Q. How is that?

A. I wouldn't know, as to all stations.

Q. I am limiting it to the six stations which I stated in my previous question.

A. That is true as to all those stations.

Q. State the facts, of your own personal knowledge, as to whether any of those six retail outlets either operated by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company or supplied by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company ever instigated in any way the price cutting activities in the locality in which they are situated.

A. I know of—

Mr. Austin: I object to that question as calling for a conclusion of the witness as to what is the meaning of 2881 the word "instigated"; and I think that question ought to relate to some sort of facts. I think it calls for a conclusion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained and the partial answer as given is stricken.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Biber, of your own knowledge, state the fact as to whether any of the six Citrin-Kolb outlets described as East Jefferson and Nottingham, Dexter and Chicago Boulevard, John R and Euclid, West Warren and Brooklyn, Linwood and Detroit Terminal Railroad, and Linwood and Pingree ever started any price cutting activities in the localities where they are located, before the price cutting became prevalent in those localities as shown by the pictures described in the record as Exhibits 18 to 18-Z and 18-Z to 18-z-51.

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor, because it makes an assumption that price cutting was prevalent in these localities, and I don't think that has been proved at any particular time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. State the fact, of your own knowledge, as to whether competitive activities in the Detroit area have to some extent become stabilized in the year 1941 as compared 2882 with the previous years from 1937 inclusive on? From that time up to 1941?

A. I think the market is much steadier and much cleaner since the winter of 1940 up to and including April of 1941.

Q. Of your own knowledge, if you know, state the reason for that stabilization?

Mr. Austin: Well, I object to that as of the witness' own knowledge. It calls for an opinion, and I have no objection to the witness giving his opinion upon that point.

Mr. Abbott: That is what I am asking him for.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The question is to relate now only to the witness' opinion?

Mr. Abbott: Yes. Of course his opinion is based on his knowledge of conditions.

Mr. Austin: Well, all opinions are based upon knowledge, even of experts.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may state your opinion.

A. Well, I believe the stabilization of prices is due in the main to the fact that the rise in crude oil and in refined gasoline, rise in price, has caused the so-called cut rate operators to pay more for their gasoline and raise their price so that the differential between the cut rate oper-2883 ators, such as Zip and Joy, the differential between their price and the price of major gas is much less; and consequently major gasoline service station dispensers are getting their share of the business and are not compelled to cut to meet this competition.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Taking your last answer, what, in your opinion, has been the reason for the price wars in the Detroit area for the years 1937, 1938, and 1939?

A. There is no question in my mind that the instigation or beginning of price cutting always resulted from the posting of a lower price, much lower price, by these so-called cut rate operators, and when their price became considerably lower than the major gas prices, the loss to major gas stations—it was necessary for them to cut this price to meet the competition.

Q. And when you say "cut rate operators" to whom do you refer?

A. I refer to such marketers as Zip, Joy, Duro, Benz, Speedway.

Q. Any others?

A There is Zieve Oil.

Q. How do you spell that?

A. Zieve, Z-i-e-v-e. I don't recall any others. There are, but I don't recall their names.

2884 Q. Of your own personal knowledge, state the fact as to whether those socalled cut price operators were in business previous to 1937?

A. Yes, they were.

Q. And state of your own knowledge the fact as to whether they were indulging in their cut price activities previous to 1937?

A. Yes, they were.

Q. Have you, Mr. Biber, in connection with your duties as general manager of your own company, made a study of the competitive situation in relation to attempts by other suppliers of gasoline to proselyte your own dealer outlets by offering the advantageous prices?

A. Yes, I have.

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor. I don't think that question is proper unless based upon factual testimony as to what efforts, if any, have been made by other operators—

Mr. Abbott: This is preliminary.

Mr. Abbott: —to obtain business from Citrin-Kolb stations and, in any event, I think it is immaterial and irrelevant.

Mr. Abbott: I was just going to say that that is preliminary to testimony of such activities based on facts which I now propose to ask the witness to state.

2885 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection to the question is sustained, and the answer is stricken. You may first develop the facts.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you know an individual by the name of Thomas Di Pietrello?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. In what connection did you know this individual?

A. This individual has a service station and had been solicited by our salesman for the sale of Standard products.

Q. Did you ever have his account?

A. Did we ever have it?

Q. Yes.

A. We had a contract signed for this account with Mr. Pietrello, but never delivered gasoline under that contract.

Q. What year was that?

A. I believe it was in 1940. I think I have it here.

Q. What were the circumstances—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What time of the year 1940?

The Witness: I think I have the actual date. Did I give you that contract, Mr. Abbott?

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You stated it was in 1940.

A. It was in May of 1940, but I think the contract 2886 has the actual date.

Q. That is close enough.

What were the circumstances in connection with that transaction?

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor. I don't see how it is relevant or material here as to why any particular retail operator bought or refused to buy from The Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

Mr. Abbott: Well, the purpose of this is that there has been the intent here to show on this record that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, in some of their activities made discounts from tank wagon price to some of their dealer outlets, and it becomes important to have testimony in the record to show the competitive situation which had a bearing upon the necessity of granting preferential terms to some of their dealers, by reason of the competitive conditions. This all has a bearing on the question as to whether there is any substantial injury to competition as defined by the Robinson-Patman Act.

Mr. Austin: The Citrin-Kolb Oil Company is not a respondent, and I believe there is no issue here as to whether or not Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was or was not meeting competition in connection with any price which they may have given.

2887 Mr. Abbott: There is a claim that they sold Langer and Cohen and to the station at 8501 Gratiot Avenue, Ferguson and Coury, and also to the station at the corner of West Chicago Boulevard and Dexter Boulevard, at a differential off the tank wagon price. Now, that claim has been made. In fact, it was brought out by the Commission in its testimony; it becomes, therefore, a material and a necessary part of our case to show the competitive condition, and the reason why it was necessary for them to do that in order to meet the competitive condition then existing. And I make the offer of proof upon that basis.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This was a solicitation of a new account, apparently.

Mr. Abbott: Well, would your Honor differentiate between that and a situation where they had an account which was secured away from them by competitive offers by other suppliers?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the Examiner would naturally think that if it was a competitive proposition and they had a regular customer, and it became necessary to reduce the price to that customer in order to hold the customer, that—

Mr. Abbott: Or what if they refused to reduce their price and the customer was lost to them?

2888 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Apparently this is not that kind of a case. This is solicitation for a new account.

Mr. Abbott: I am prepared to show by this testimony that they secured this account, and then the account was taken away from them by a competitive offer of another company. I make the offer of proof on that basis.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner will admit the testimony subject to a motion to strike.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I merely asked you to state the circumstances of this transaction that you referred to.

A. Di Pietrello was a Gulf operator on Gratiot in the City of Detroit, and had been solicited by our salesman for some time, and finally had signed a contract, gasoline dealers' agreement with us, with Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and Mr. DiPietrello came in to my office, and we sent the required registered cancellation notice to the Gulf Refining Company and to the Carnick Oil Company, cancelling his gasoline contract with them at the end of the contract period. The agreement being that we were to deliver gasoline on the day following the Gulf contract expiring.

After sending this registered notice, and when we were prepared to send out gasoline and globes to Mr. DiPietrello's station, Mr. DiPietrello asked me to come down to his station, because he wanted to speak to me. And he told me at that time that he would like to get his con-
2889 tract back, because after Gulf had gotten the cancellation for this, they had come and offered him an additional half cent margin, If we—

Q. Off what?

A. Off the tank wagon price. And if Citrin-Kolb were willing to meet them, he would go through with his contract. Otherwise he would be unable to do that.

Q. Did you meet it?

A. We did not.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was the contract executed by both parties?

The Witness: Yes, it was.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It was within your power to enforce it; was it not?

The Witness: It was.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And you voluntarily surrendered the contract?

The Witness: Well, it isn't a good idea to sue one dealer—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You voluntarily surrendered the contract?

The Witness: We never surrendered it. I still have it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You never enforced it?

The Witness: That is right.

2890 By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you know a company by the name of Pike Service?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Where is that located?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, the Examiner will entertain a motion to strike the witness' testimony with reference to the last transaction.

Mr. Austin: I move to strike the testimony regarding Mr. DiPietrello on the ground it is irrelevant and immaterial to any issue that is properly within the limits of the Complaint in this action.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner sustains the motion to strike the testimony.

Mr. Abbott: May I ask the Examiner if that is upon the ground that they never actually had this customer?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No. The Examiner's ruling is based upon several grounds:

First, Citrin-Kolb is not a respondent in this case. Their transactions are not in issue.

In the second place, if this transaction could be properly considered, all this witness known is that he had a contract, and that the customer told him that he would like to be released from the contract, because he could buy from someone else at a lower price. He didn't verify it. That is merely hearsay.

2891 Mr. Austin: I might say, however, if your Honor please, to clarify the record on that point, that that sort of evidence, of course, I know that your Honor recognizes—and I don't think you meant to intimate otherwise—that that type of evidence is admissible under the limitations of the Danbury Hatters case, when the issue is one of proving injury resulting from a previously proved practice. So that I assume that your Honor's ruling is, in part, based upon the ruling or the conclusion that loss of business through competitive offers to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company is not a material issue.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is correct.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I was about to ask you whether you knew a company by the name of Pike Service.

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Located where?

A. At 14445 Fenkell.

Q. Were they at one time a dealer of your company?

A. Yes, they were.

Q. What year?

A. For a year and a half, up until October of 1940.

Q. At that time what happened?

A. At that time Mr. Pike, of Pike Service, informed me that he was going to put in another gasoline.

2892 Q. What gasoline?

A. Dixie.

Q. Did he state the reason?

Mr. Austin: I object to this line of testimony upon the same ground as urged in connection with the testimony respecting the DiPietrello transaction.

Mr. Abbott: You mean in connection with the claim it is hearsay?

Mr. Austin: Upon the ground that it is immaterial and irrelevant. I am objecting to the whole line.

There may be specific objections on hearsay, but I am simply now urging my general objection to this whole line of testimony.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, as to your objection that it is irrelevant and immaterial I would like to have you elaborate on that objection.

Mr. Austin: It is based upon the ground that Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, not being a Respondent in this case, is not called upon to justify any lower price which it may have given to particular customers, and it seems to me that this testimony is directed to showing a certain loss of business by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company because it refused—or because it at least was advised its customers had competitive offers, or perhaps it goes no farther than saying they lost business because their customers asked for a lower price and they didn't give it to them, but,
2893 in any event, it is directed to showing that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company lost business because of alleged competitive offers, and I can see no purpose to it, unless it is to show that in certain cases where they did lower the price, they had to meet competition.

I am not very clear myself as to what the theory is of Respondent in offering it but I feel very clear it is not responsive to any issue in this case.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I would like to hear from counsel for the Respondent as to the theory of this offer.

Mr. Abbott: The reason this offer was made is that there was testimony adduced on the Commission's case to the effect that Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, with reference to certain of its outlets, granted preferential prices.

That was done in the case of five stations operated by Langer and Cohen, one station operated by Ferguson and Coury, 8501 Gratiot Avenue, and one station operated called Sid's Service, at the corner of Chicago Boulevard and Dexter.

Now, the purpose of this testimony is to show—we have already made an offer of proof with reference to those three stations, to justify those preferences as given to those three stations.

2894 We now wish to show the general competitive condition in the Detroit area, not to show any justification by reason of competitive offers of other gasoline suppliers to proselyte the customers of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, but to show that the preference given to Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, by giving them tank car prices, did not have any substantial tendency to injure competition, as those words are used in the Robinson-Patman Act, but showing what was the general competitive situation in the Detroit area in the years which are involved in these offers of testimony, and to show that Citrin-Kolb Oil Company was up against a continual effort on the part of other suppliers to secure the business of their outlets which they supplied with gasoline during those years.

I have a great many cases of this kind which I now propose to offer in evidence. This is one of them.

Mr. Austin: May I make a further statement?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Austin: It now appears that this testimony may have two purposes. It is not the purpose of the testimony to show why a lower price was given by Citrin-Kolb to Langer and Cohen, because Langer and Cohen—at least in the testimony so far, there has been no reference to competition with Langer and Cohen, and, in any event, your Honor ruled out such testimony on an offer of proof 2895 previously made, so there are two other purposes which might be ascribed to this testimony. One is to show that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company lost business as a result of competitive offers made to its customers, and I think that is entirely immaterial as to whether Citrin-Kolb lost business to competitors or why it lost business to competitors. It seems to me that is self-evident; that is, it is outside the issues of the case.

The only other reason I could see for this testimony would be to continue the line which was commenced by the offer of the photographs this morning and to show by this witness that certain other jobbers or suppliers were offering in Detroit low prices. Now, if that is the purpose of the testimony, then any evidence as to what some customer told this witness would be merely hearsay on that point, as your Honor pointed out a moment ago, so that it seems to me on the one ground it is entirely irrelevant and immaterial, and on the second ground, anything that has been offered so far is merely hearsay.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is sustained.

Mr. Abbott: At this time the Respondent offers to prove, in respect of this witness upon the question that Pike Service at 14445 Fenkell Avenue, that Pike Service, previous to October, 1940, was a dealer of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and that Pike Service discontinued doing 2896 business with the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company because they received an offer from Plymouth Oil to sell them gasoline at less than tank wagon price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The offer is rejected.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Biber, do you know an individual by the name of Dave Davis?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who is, or was, Dave Davis?

A. Dave Davis is a Citrin-Kolb dealer located on the corner of Brush and Baltimore.

Q. And is he still a customer of yours?

A. Yes, he is.

Q. Has he ever ceased being your customer?

A. No.

Q. Was that account, to your knowledge, solicited by the Highland Oil Company, dealers in Hi-Speed gasoline?

A. It has been.

Q. When was that?

Mr. Austin: I object to this testimony on the same ground, and suggest that if this means that the Respondent is going to start offering a number of these instances, that the offer of proof that is made might be broadened to other evidence of a similar character, or something of that sort, to save time of going through each one of these up to 2897 the point that we find what they are.

Mr. Abbott: I understand the question is objected to?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Mr. Abbott: At this time the Respondent tenders an offer of proof to show by this witness that Dave Davis, at Baltimore and Brush, a customer of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, was at several times, during the interval from 1937 to 1941, solicited by Highland Oil Company, distributors of Hi-Speed gasoline in the Detroit area, with offers to sell Hi-Speed gasoline to Dave Davis at differentials of ½ to ¾¢ off the tank wagon price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The offer is rejected.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you know an individual, Mr. Biber, by the name of Joe Cuffe?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Who is Joe Cuffe?

A. A Citrin-Kolb dealer at the corner of Woodrow Wilson and Grand.

Q. And is he a customer of your company?

A. Yes, he is.

Q. Do you know whether Joe Cuffe was attempted to be secured as a customer away from you by Highland Oil, Hi-Speed, dealers?

2898 A. Yes, I do know that.

Q. When was that?

Mr. Austin: Same objection to this line of testimony, your Honor, if it is leading to the same point. It appears to be.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may answer this question.

A. Yes. I know that he has been solicited and has been until—the last I heard, was 10 days ago.

Q. On what basis?

A. Of a half a cent off the tank wagon price on a regular contract basis, or a cent off, in the event he would assign his lease to the station to the Highland Oil Company, and allow them to sublease it back to them.

Q. Do you know an individual by the name of Herbert Pavey?

A. I do.

Q. Where is he located?

A. He is located on the corner of Six Mile Road and Connors.

Q. Is he a customer of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. Yes, he is.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is this testimony, now, along the same line as the testimony just given?

Mr. Abbott: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any objection to it?

2899 Mr. Austin: Yes, I make the same objection to this whole line. I assumed I wouldn't have to make it each time.

Mr. Abbott: The Respondent now offers to prove that Herbert Pavey, located at Six Mile Road and Connors, in the City of Detroit, a customer of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, was solicited in September, 1940, by Carnick Oil Company, selling Gulf Gasoline, and offered ½¢ off the tank wagon price if he would leave the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and become a customer of the Carnick Oil Company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The offer is rejected.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you know an individual by the name of Norman Wade?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Located at where?

A. At Harper and Raymond.

Q. And is he now a customer of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. Yes, he is.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether Norman Wade was recently solicited by Red Indian Oil Company?

A. Yes, I know that he has been.

Q. On what basis?

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

2900 Mr. Abbott: The Respondent offers to prove by this witness that Norman Wade, located at Harper and Raymond, was solicited during the past year by Red Indian Oil Company, distributors of Fleet-Wing gasoline, supplied by Standard Oil Company of Ohio, with offers to sell such gasoline to Norman Wade at 1¢ per gallon off the regular posted tank wagon price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The offer is rejected.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did Norman Wade, Mr. Biber, leave your company?

A. No, he hasn't; to date. He is still under contract.

Q. You say he is still under a contract?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Biber, have you, as general manager of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, made an audit or a survey as to the operating costs, overhead costs, and rate per gallon for sale and delivery of gasoline at wholesale for your company for the years 1936 to 1940, inclusive?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. For the year 1937, based upon that audit, what was the operating cost of selling and delivering gasoline at wholesale for the Citrin-Kolb Company?

A. $35,347.39.

Mr. Austin: Pardon me, Mr. Abbott. Will you read that previous question again, Mr. Reporter?

2901 (The last question was read.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You have stated the amount?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. You differentiate that operating cost from overhead cost?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What, for that year 1937, was the overhead cost of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company attributable to the selling and delivering of gasoline to wholesale?

A. $84,084.94. Pardon me. That is $48,084.94.

Q. What is the total for the year 1937 for operating cost and overhead cost?

A. $83,432.33.

Q. What was the number of gallons handled by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company during the year 1937? When I say "handled" I mean sold and delivered.

A. 5,435,419 gallons.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, maybe I am a little tardy here, but I move to strike out the questions and answers of the witness on the two questions preceding this last question, on the ground that he has not been shown to be qualified. He is reading into the record now certain figures which are on Respondent's Exhibit 7 and 8, for identification, which have previously been offered in 2902 evidence and to which your Honor reserved his ruling, so that any ruling upon the motion I have just made would be really a renewal—or the motion was really a renewal of the motion which we made as to these exhibits, and the objection that we made to them at the time. I don't remember whether it was an objection or motion.

Mr. Abbott: You mean on the ground of qualifications of the witness?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, upon that point I would like to be heard on the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may proceed.

Mr. Abbott: The testimony which was adduced from Mr. Biber after the offer to show the selling and delivery costs of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company for 1937 to 1940:

inclusive, was later connected up by testimony to the effect that Mr. Biber, first, has been for several years the general manager of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and as such in charge of its operations and the keeping of the books and the auditing of its accounts. The testimony also being that previous to becoming the general manager of that company he was for some years identified with it as its attorney. The testimony also shows with reference to his qualifications that he is a member of the Bar, and that previous to becoming a member of the Bar he took 2903 courses in accounting at Wayne University, the municipal university located in Detroit, where he took two courses in accounting, accounting 1 and 2; that subsequently he decided not to pursue a business course, but went to the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, where he took a general course in liberal arts, and later came back to Detroit, entered law school, and completed his law school work, and was admitted to the Bar, and has become a member of the Bar of the State of Michigan.

Now, he has also stated that in addition to his theoretical experience and training as an accountant, in Wayne University, where he took these courses, identified as accounting 1 and accounting 2, that he has had practical experience in accounting not only in general accounting, but also in cost accounting, and in analysis of costs, in connection with his company, of which he is the general manager, for several years.

Now, I don't understand it upon this record that it is necessary for a witness, in order to be qualified to state what the costs are of handling merchandise, that he be a certified public accountant, or that he shall have completed a course in accountancy, if it is sufficiently shown that he is a practical accountant, that he is the only one who is charged with the duty of keeping the accounts and running the business of this oil company, or any oil 2904 company, for that matter. I don't understand that it is necessary for those qualifications to be shown to that extent.

In fact, I think it would be ridiculous to insist that a person can be shown to be qualified purely on the basis of theoretical and scholastic training along accounting and cost accounting lines.

If there is any disposition on the part of the Court or the Examiner, I should say, to exclude the testimony, I respectfully ask that in accordance with the principles discussed by Judge Hanley this morning, that the testimony be taken in order that we may not be foreclosed on this record from having our day in court, which is, I think, very serious. I think it would be very disturbing, certainly, to the Respondent, if this testimony were to be excluded, so that we would have to cover it by an offer of proof.

I hope your Honor will not go to that extent in connection with this testimony.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will hear further from counsel for the Commission.

Mr. Austin: Well, your Honor, this testimony in these schedules are very similar—in fact, it is an identical situation with that that we had with Mr. Ledbetter. It seems to me that before the witness can put these in—these costs admittedly are no costs just lifted from books 2905 of the company, because they refer to distributing gasoline at wholesale, and the company is engaged in some retail operation, so it is obvious that joint costs are included, and some allocation has been made—and I think I should have the privilege of questioning the witness to determine his qualifications, and then your Honor can rule on that point. If he does not appear to be qualified, then, in line with the procedure that we followed with Mr. Ledbetter, I think that I should be permitted to cross-examine upon the figures themselves to show whether or not they are merely figures which are lifted from the books of the company, and whether or not they are properly in the schedules. Because I will concede that even though the witness may not be an expert accountant, why, if it is simply a matter of compiling figures upon the company's books, of course, he is better familiar with those figures than anybody else. But it is my contention that it is first necessary for him to be qualified as an accountant in order to put in a statement of operating costs and both overhead and actual operating costs, as they are described here, because of the fact that there is a question of whether or not these figures do reflect the wholesale operating costs of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company. And it is my contention that this witness at least has not been shown to be qualified to make such a conclusion.

2906 Mr. Abbott: We would be very glad to have counsel ask him any questions he wishes to with reference to his qualifications.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Counsel may examine the witness on the voir dire, and if necessary further on cross-examination.

Before you proceed, there was an exhibit offered and identified: what is the number of that?

Mr. Austin: 7 and 8. Pardon me, I think that runs—I don't know.

There are a lot more pages. Can you find out (addressing the reporter)?

(The reporter informed Mr. Austin that ruling had been reserved on Exhibits 7 through 15.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Were the answers you made in the last two questions taken from one of your exhibits marked for identification?

The Witness: Yes. Exhibit 7, for identification.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Biber, did you say you took a couple of courses in accounting in Wayne University in Detroit?

A. Yes.

2907 Q. Were those half year courses or full year courses?

A. Two half year courses.

Q. When was that?

A. I think it was in 1930. I believe it was 1930.

Q. Was that before you went to law school?

A. It was during my second or third year in law school.

Q. Well, where did you take your law work?

A. At Wayne University.

Q. And was that an accounting course given in connection with the law course?

A. It was required. It was a pre-law requisition, and I had not taken such a course during my pre-law years, and I took it at that time to make up that credit.

Q. Do you consider yourself an accountant now?

A. I do not.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I didn't get your answer.

The Witness: I do not.

Mr. Abbott: You mean by that a public accountant?

Mr. Austin: I asked him a question and the witness answered it.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Have you read any books on the subject of accounting, Mr. Biber?

A. I don't think I could say I read any books outside of text books I used at school. 2908

Q. Can you tell us what those text books were?

A. The first year was Blanchard on Accounting; and I don't remember what the second term volume was.

Q. What kind of accounting did you study?

A. It was general accounting. It amounted to, if I remember it, the carrying out of a full set of books for a hardware store, the first semester, retail hardware store, including the recording of purchases, sales, charge accounts, and going through the year and making a profit and loss statement and balance sheet.

Q. Would you like to have me ask you the meaning of certain terms used in accounting? I don't want to unless you feel you would like to try to answer it.

A. I may be able to learn the answer if I don't know them.

Q. I am afraid I would have to ask you the answer rather than give it.

Have you ever read any books or treatise on distribution cost accounting?

A. I have not.

Q. Can you state the meaning of the term "Standard Costs"?

A. No, I cannot.

Mr. Hanley: May we inquire, just out of fairness to the witness and Respondent, where counsel got the names of the terms, or whatever it is he is beginning to read?

2909 Mr. Austin: I got them in consultation with the accountant for the Commission.

Mr. Hanley: Well, is he qualified? This is in the nature of a trick, your Honor, he might read a Chinese word; there isn't any showing here that any of the terms he has read or proposes to read were necessary to the knowledge of this witness to prepare the costs which he did prepare. There has to be some relation, it seems, in this matter of qualification.

Mr. Austin: Well, I may say that I have had a brief course in accounting myself, and that I think I have so far asked the witness one definition, and I, at least, know that that is a well-known accounting term, well understood in accounting. I certainly wouldn't ask the witness any question that wasn't.

However, I don't think that it is necessary to proceed with that line of questioning, because I think the witness has sufficiently stated that he isn't familiar with the treatises on accounting and has made no study of accounting beyond a preliminary course which he took in law school, and I certainly have no desire to pursue the subject further in view of the very frank statement that the witness has made as to the extent to which he has gone.

He is a lawyer, and I am sure a good lawyer, and I don't think that he is at all embarrassed by not saying he 2910 is an accountant.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Does Citrin-Kolb Oil Company employ accountants?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. And do they work under your department?

A. They do.

Q. Or under your supervision?

A. Yes, sir, they do.

Q. When you desire any statement of costs prepared or accounting analysis, do you ask them to do it, and tell them what you want?

A. Yes, I always have.

Q. And do you rely upon their judgment as to the accounting principles used?

A. I don't know what you mean by the accounting principles.

Q. I mean do you attempt to tell them pursuant to what accounting principles any cost statement should be made, or do you ask them to do it and rely upon their accounting knowledge?

A. I tell them what figures I want, and I rely upon them to copy them out of the books and present them to me,

Q. Well, suppose there is some question other than copying out of the books, such as an allocation of 2911 joint costs; have you ever attempted to do that, or do you ask them to do it? Tell them as between what activities or expenses the costs are to be allocated?

A. If there is any instance of allocation of joint costs in these exhibits, and I don't remember one, I would do it, because I don't believe the accountants would be competent to do it. Not that they couldn't make up the figures, but they wouldn't know what process to use. All they do know is the figures that are submitted to them.

Q. Can you give me a definition of what is meant by joint costs?

A. I mean by joint costs those costs which may relate to either two different methods of marketing, two different or more than one kind of merchandise or class of merchandise, or relating to more than one activity in a particular business.

Q. What is the difference between joint costs and product costs?

A. (No response.)

Q. Pardon me. I should have said by product costs.

Mr. Hanley: That indicates the fallacy of this kind of an examination, your Honor, and we would like to renew the objection which I think was not ruled upon, in view at that time counsel having abandoned the line of questioning.

2912 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do any of the terms used by counsel for the Commission appear in any of the exhibits for identification?

Mr. Austin: Pardon me, your Honor, I didn't get that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question?

(The question by the Examiner was read.)

Mr. Austin: Well, I think they were involved in making the computations, but I will not request further—I will withdraw that last question.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It isn't necessary, then, for the Examiner to rule.

Mr. Austin: I will refer to some terms which are used in these exhibits which have been used.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Can you state the theory of the term "Depreciation"? What is meant by that term?

A. Depreciation is a rate which is either—which a business may determine, at which the cost or original price of certain property is reduced as it is used or used up or as it becomes obsolete.

Q. What is the underlying theory which allows that charge to be made?

A. I would say under the theory that any property, as it ages, is worth less than it is worth at the time of its 2913 creation, and the theory of the percentage would be the division of the value by the approximate number of years which is accounted as the life of that certain property.

Q. What is the meaning of obsolescence?

A. Obsolescence is the condition of property when it has lost all its value.

Mr. Abbott: May we have a recess at this time?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will have a five-minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, the witness has stated that he is not an accountant. On the other hand, he has supervision of the bookkeeping of his company. I don't know what the situation is at the present time.

Mr. Abbott was starting some direct questions and he was asking for figures that were on these exhibits 7 to 15, inclusive.

Now, I believe that I was the one that referred to these and not Mr. Abbott, so I don't know whether counsel for Respondent is re-offering these exhibits or whether he is going along now on another course.

Mr. Abbott: I was asking the witness questions as to his per gallonage cost of selling and delivering gasoline at wholesale.
2914 I don't know the purpose of this inquiry, because I understood that you were still engaged in examining the witness on the question of his qualifications.

Mr. Austin: Perhaps that is so. Perhaps that applied to the questions you asked as well as to the figures here.

Mr. Abbott: That's right.

Mr. Austin: So that I will renew my objection to these schedules, Respondent's Exhibits 7 to 15, inclusive, and I make the same objection to the questions which were being asked by counsel for the Respondent: First, upon the ground that the wholesale costs of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company are irrelevant and immaterial, and, secondly, upon the ground that it appears upon the face of these schedules that certain computations relative to overhead costs are involved: depreciation, obsolescence, allowance of interest on invested property, and so forth, which, if these are offered solely upon Mr. Biber's opinion, I submit he has not been shown qualified to give an opinion as to the propriety of including all of these figures in a statement of the per gallon wholesale distribution costs of his company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The exhibits, as I understand, have not yet been tendered in evidence.

The witness is testifying now with reference to sev-
2915 eral exhibits.

Mr. Austin: They were tendered in evidence, your Honor, early in the Respondent's case, some time last week.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And the Examiner reserved his ruling upon them. This witness is part owner of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company. He has charge—

Mr. Austin: He is not part owner; no, sir. He is general manager.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, he is general manager; and, as such, he has charge of the accounts.

I don't know of anyone who is better able to testify as to the income and the outgo in expenses of the company than this witness.

The only question is as to whether or not there has been a proper allocation of expense; provided only that the question of cost of distribution of this company is material in the present case, and, upon that point, I will hear from counsel further.

Mr. Austin: Well, I would like to say that it is my opinion that a showing of the wholesale distribution costs of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company cannot be a defense to the Respondent in this case, and neither can it have any tendency to show that the price which the Respondent charges
Citrin-Kolb Oil Company by tank car for gasoline is 2916 not a cause—I will have to change that and start from the other end. It can have no tendency to show that the price which Citrin-Kolb Oil Company charges to its dealers is or is not the result of the tank car price which the Respondent charges the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

Now, it has been shown on the record that as to certain stations served by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, there has been a reduction by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company of 1¢ below the posted tank wagon price of the Standard Oil Company.

Assuming that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company's differential at the time was a cent and half, that means that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company sold to those stations at ½¢ higher than the price that Citrin-Kolb Oil Company paid.

Now, it is quite obvious that if the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company had paid a half a cent more for the gas, it couldn't have sold it at that price to its sub-dealer.

On the other hand, paying the price that it did, even if its costs were a cent or two cents a gallon, that would simply make it all the more difficult rather than less difficult for it to give its price to its subdealer, and I don't see what difference it makes on that question whether the costs of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company are a half a cent or a cent and a half or two cents a gallon, because it would just mean that the bigger their costs, why, the more they were 2917 losing, assuming that they lose anything on that business.

It is a rather difficult thing to argue right here on the record, but it seems to me that it is a necessary result, and if there is any other reason for it, for the offer of this evidence, other than to try to establish the point which I have outlined, I don't know what it is, but I submit, your Honor, that the wholesale costs of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company are irrelevant and immaterial, and, as I said, I think last week several times on the record, that I conceded that the costs of any jobber involved in this case of operating a retail station would be material in so far as those costs are additional costs resulting from the fact that the jobber purchases at tank car, but there is no attempt here to limit this statement of costs to that sort of a showing. In fact, it is, of course, admitted on the face of this document that this is the entire wholesale cost of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and hasn't any relation to any costs incurred by that company in operating the bulk plant and making deliveries—of course, those costs are included, but there is no allocation here, and there is no contention that there is any allocation to overhead costs to any expenses of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company which it incurs in operating retail stations due to the fact it has to operate its own bulk plant and make its own deliveries.

2918 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is that a correct statement?

Mr. Abbott: The fact is, as I understand it, that these Exhibits 7 to 15, inclusive, cover the schedule of costs per gallon of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company for distributing gasoline at wholesale.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you mean by distributing gasoline at wholesale? Do you mean by distributing it to the retailer?

Mr. Abbott: Selling and distributing; to the retailer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And, also, the cost of distributing to their own stations; its own stations?

Mr. Abbott: No, that is allocated out. As a matter of fact, the testimony on this record is that this company only incidentally handles retail stations. That is merely an incident.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But it has, during the period covered by this complaint, handled retail stations.

Mr. Abbott: It has under emergency; when, for instance, a reseller has, for any reason, been unable to carry on and they found that they had a lease on their hands; or a station which they could not find a reseller to take over, then, as a matter of temporary expediency they 2919 have operated such stations, but the ratio of that operation to the wholesale operation is very slight, in the case of this wholesaler.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Does this show the cost, or purport to show the cost per gallon of distribution of gas by the jobber to the retailer?

Mr. Abbott: To the retailer, yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And is it your contention that the average cost shown would be the approximate cost of delivering gas to their own retail outlets, when operated?

Mr. Abbott: No, we don't claim that this is any reflection of their own retail costs, except as it might be shown that the retail stations are handled on the same basis. Of course, that is a matter that hasn't been developed in connection with this witness. I intend to ask him some more questions, if you are through with your examination, Mr. Austin. I would like to ask the witness some more questions.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, Mr. Biber, you were asked the question: Are you an accountant, and you stated that you are not. What is your occupation?

A. My occupation is general manager of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

2920 Mr. Abbott: I have a series of questions relating to the qualifications of the witness. Do I understand that your Honor is satisfied upon that question? If so, I won't pursue it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He has admitted he is not a cost accountant or an economist. Therefore, whatever knowledge he has is the application of practical sense—

Mr. Abbott: It is practical, yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: —business methods to the business he is conducting or supervising.

Mr. Abbott: I thought if your Honor is satisfied on that matter, I wouldn't pursue the matter further.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If you think you can develop any greater qualifications than those he has stated, why, proceed.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You say you instruct your auditors in your company how to do the accounting for the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in connection with the income tax reports, and the like? Do you supervise that work?

A. Yes, I work with them on the income tax work and they put down the physical figures, but I work the income tax report out.

2921 Q. Are they or are you the one who determines the matters of policies with reference to allocations in connection with income tax reports and other accounting problems that come up in connection with the administration of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. I determine the policies and the allocations.

Q. Now, in your income tax reports which you make to the Government, are you the one who dictates the matter of policy as to the depreciation to be charged or allowed on your accounts, as shown by your books, or do they do that?

A. Well, the amounts and rates of depreciation are rather determined by the Internal Revenue Bureau.

2922 Q. And are you the one who counsels with the accountant of the Internal Revenue Department if the matter of the challenging of any of those figures is presented?

A. Yes. As a matter of fact, we did have a conference on the 1940 return.

Q. And are you the one who engages in the conference with the Internal Revenue agents?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Is the same true with reference to charge-offs for obsolescence, as well as depreciation?

A. That's right. That was the question in controversy this year.

Q. Are you the one who counsels with the Internal Revenue Department as to the proper deduction for interest on money invested in the operation of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. I don't believe we ever counseled with the Income Tax Department on that.

Q. Do you include such figures in your reports to the Income Tax Department?

A. If such—

Mr. Austin: What figures are you asking about?

Mr. Abbott: Charges for interest on money invested.

A. Yes, when those questions are asked, we do in-2923 clude them to the Income Tax returns.

Q. Are you the one who determines the matter of policy with reference to those terms?

A. Yes, I would say I do.

Q. Now with reference to interest on investment in real estate, who is the one that determines the matter as to how much shall be charged off or deducted for income tax purposes attributable to interest on investment both in real estate and personal property?

A. Well, I wouldn't say I determine it. It is my job to find out how much we can deduct, and then deduct that amount.

Q. And are those deductions—have they been approved by the Income Tax Department?

A. They have.

Q. Is that after consultation, or has no question been raised by the Government on those questions?

A. There was no question raised except the question of obsolescence came up this last year, and we talked to the Department and asked how they advised we handle it.

Q. What was your answer with reference to the difference between obsolescence and depreciation?

A. Well, I understood depreciation to be the reduction in value by years or by fiscal periods of certain prop-

2924 erty during its life; and obsolescence is the final depreciation or the devaluation of the entire value of the property.

Q. Both real and personal?

A. Yes.

Q. And has there been a breakdown or allocation in your figures as you present them here in schedule 7 to 15 inclusive as to other merchandise handled by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company other than gasoline?

A. Yes, there has been.

Q. Point out where there is any breakdown as between gasoline and other merchandise sold by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

A. On the bottom of Exhibit 8.

Q. And that covers lubricating oil, does it?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: 8, you say?

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Does that cover lubricating oil or other merchandise?

The Witness: It covers everything else we sell except gasoline. It is practically all lubricating oil and greases.

Q. The question was asked by the Examiner as to whether this was any breakdown as to your wholesale as distinguished from your retail operations in gasoline. What is your answer?

2925 A. There are no retail operations in the schedules at all; no items of retail operation.

Q. Well, how do you allocate from your books the costs both overhead and operating with reference to gasoline as between retail and wholesale operations?

A. Well, retail operations are carried in different accounts entirely. They are not together in any one item. They are separate.

Q. Are you responsible for carrying them in a separate account?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And are those carried on different books entirely?

A. Some of the items may be in the same volumes, and I'd say most of them were even in separate volumes.

Q. So the expenses of your retail operations are separate and distinct in the figures as shown by these exhibits?

A. That's right, they are.

Mr. Abbott: Those are all the questions I have to ask of the witness on redirect.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let me ask a few questions. Exhibit 7 is headed Schedule of Costs Per Gallon to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company Distributing Gasoline at Wholesale; that is designed—intended to show the approximate cost of delivery from your bulk plant to the retail 2926 outlets?

A. That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I inquire of counsel how does that become material in this case?

Mr. Abbott: It is material for two reasons: First, as has already been referred to, the operation in selling and distributing gasoline from bulk plant to retail station is virtually the same, as to physical process involved, on the part of a jobber as in the case of the Respondent. Now, the cost may be different, I grant you, but I say that the cost as shown by this testimony, or as proposed to be shown by these exhibits in question, have a tendency to show the approximate cost of selling and distributing gasoline at wholesale from bulk plant to retail station.

But more important than that, and on the second ground upon which I claim that these exhibits are very material—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If you will pardon me.

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This company is not a Respondent in this case.

Mr. Abbott: Well, that is admitted.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, how does the question of the cost of distribution from its bulk plant 2927 to the retail stations it serves become material in this case?

Mr. Abbott: I was going to get to that, because this is a respect in which it is very material. Your Honor has several times adverted to the proposition that of the question of opportunity for the jobber in the event that his costs are less than the differential as between tank car and tank wagon prices, to cut prices by passing the differential on to the ultimate consumer. Now, very obviously if the cost to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company of selling and distributing gasoline at wholesale is equal to or greater than the amount of the differential which he is allowed by the Respondent between tank car and tank wagon deliveries, that opportunity does not exist. And it is very important to the Respondent in this case to show the cost to this jobber in selling and distributing gasoline at wholesale, as bearing upon the question as to whether that has any tendency to create the condition which it is claimed here by reason of that discrimination injures competition; to use the words of the Robinson-Patman Act. And upon that theory I say that it is very important to the Respondent in this case to show that that opportunity does not exist, because as shown by the figures which we offer here, the cost of selling and distributing gasoline at wholesale to this jobber is more than the differential of a cent 2928 and a half a gallon. And it is upon that theory that I respectfully urge upon the Examiner that this testimony here is admissible as a matter of law in this case.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That condition has run over a series of years?

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

What condition do you mean—the matter of the price cutting?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No; the delivery at a loss.

Mr. Abbott: Well, it is shown here by—I don't know as I am permitted to state in the record until these are—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I say, that is what it purports to show, is it?

Mr. Abbott: That is true; that on gasoline this jobber, if you give effect to salaries, which have been taken out by the partners as a part of administrative costs, these exhibits—to answer the question asked by the Examiner—show that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in some years had just about broken even on the differential, and in some years that the cost of selling and distributing gasoline has exceeded the differential.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I will hear from counsel for the Commission if he cares to make any further 2929 statement.

Mr. Austin: I don't believe that I have anything further to add, your Honor, beyond the statement I made a moment ago on the relevancy of these exhibits.

Of course, I recognize that the theory of counsel for Respondent may be somewhat different from mine. I firmly believe that they have no relevancy and are not material in proving any issue which is available or which is the subject of proof in this case. So, consequently, I make the objection upon that ground.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner rules that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company may show the cost of distribution of gasoline from its bulk plants or plant to the retail stores.

Mr. Abbott: In view of the ruling of the Examiner I now reoffer Exhibits 7 to 15 inclusive.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner, if it is desired, will withhold his ruling until after cross-examination.

Mr. Austin: Yes. I perhaps misunderstood—can we go off the record for a minute, please?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Abbott: If the Court is of the opinion that 2930 the ruling on the admissibility of Exhibits 7 to 15 inclusive should be reserved, then I wish to further examine the witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You had proceeded with the 1937 schedules, Mr. Biber, by stating the total of operating costs and overhead costs as being $83,432.33. How many gallons of gasoline were handled by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in 1937?

A. 5,435,419 gallons.

Q. And applying that gallonage to the total of your costs, both operating and overhead, what was the rate per gallon for 1937 of selling and delivering gasoline at wholesale?

A. 1.54¢ per gallon.

Q. For the year 1938 that was the operating cost of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in connection with the selling and distributing of gasoline at wholesale?

A. $48,605.08.

Q. The same figure for overhead costs?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I question filling the record up with this, when this is just reading off the figures that are on Respondent's Exhibit No. 7, which has already been offered.

Mr. Abbott: I submit this is going to be shorter 2931 than the other way. I started off this way, and I wish to continue this way.

Mr. Austin: But you have offered this. This is a duplication of what already has been offered.

Mr. Abbott: I started off this way and I don't want to mix up the method of treatment.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may proceed.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. The same figure, I said, Mr. Biber, for overhead costs for 1938.

A. $48,553.38.

Q. The total of overhead and operating costs for 1938.

A. $97,158.46.

Q. The gallonage handled in 1938?

A. 5,967,636 gallons.

Q. Applying that gallonage volume to the total of operating and overhead costs for 1938, what figure do you arrive at for the cost per gallon for selling and delivering gasoline at wholesale in 1938?

A. 1.66¢ per gallon.

2932 Q. Now, taking the figures for 1939. What was your operating cost for 1939?

A. $42,221.57.

Q. The same for overhead costs.

A. $51,887.41.

Q. The total of operating plus operating cost of selling and distributing gasoline at wholesale for 1939?

A. $94,108.98.

Q. The number of gallons handled for 1939?

A. 5,172,992.

Q. Applying the gallonage handled to the total of overhead and operating cost for 1939, what figure do you arrive at for the per gallonage cost of selling and delivering gasoline for 1939?

A. 1.82¢ per gallon.

Q. 1940: what was the operating cost in selling and distributing gasoline at wholesale?

A. $45,568.71.

Q. The overhead cost for the same operation?

A. $52,661.56.

Q. The total of the operating and overhead cost?

A. $98,230.27.

Q. What gallonage was handled by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in its wholesale operations for 1940?

A. 5,305,880 gallons.

2933 Q. Applying that gallonage to the total of operating and overhead cost for 1940, what figure do you arrive at for the per gallonage cost of selling and delivering gasoline at wholesale for 1940?

A. 1.85¢ per gallon.

Q. Now, Schedule 2 (referring to Respondent's Exhibit 8, for identification), on the subject of operating costs for 1937. What amount of operating cost is allocated to advertising?

A. $1,445.98.

Q. What amount to discounts?

Mr. Austin: Now, your Honor, having gone through 7, they are going down through these figures, and the obvious purpose of this is so that if your Honor won't permit these to go in, they will be in the record, anyway.

Mr. Abbott: I submit that is the way it should be done.

Mr. Austin: In other words, the Respondent is trying to take the determination of that away from your Honor by getting it in here now and I think your Honor should pass on it. There is page after page of these figures, and there is an effort here to read it into the record.

Mr. Abbott: I think that is the way it should be, because I think this should be presented in the record 2934 to the Commission. There is nothing in this which in any way takes advantage of any situation, because I believe under your Honor's ruling that this is a matter which should be in the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is this adding anything to the evidentiary value of the exhibit, if it should be admitted in evidence?

Mr. Abbott: Well, I think these figures should be in the record. As we stated to your Honor several times, this record is supposed to be a statement of the testimony which we wish to introduce in this case. Now, if the Court should hold, finally, that it is not admissible, what would there be to present the matter to the Commission without having the figures in the record? This is the same method of treatment that was used in the case of the witness Ledbetter, in the case of the Wayne Oil Company. Those figures are in the record, and it is now, therefore, within our power to have the Commission pass upon the question as to whether they are properly in the record. Otherwise, we have no way of testing that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is that your object now in asking the question and having the witness answer from this exhibit, so that they will these figures in the record in the event this exhibit should be rejected?

Mr. Abbott: Why, yes, your Honor. There is 2935 nothing wrong about that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I was merely inquiring as to your object.

Mr. Abbott: That is true.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If that is the case, the Examiner will exclude further direct examination and afford counsel for the Commission opportunity to cross-examine.

Mr. Abbott: Very well. When I say "very well" I don't mean to agree with the ruling of the Examiner.

Mr. Austin: If I am going to start on this now, and don't complete tonight, will I be permitted to go ahead the first thing Monday morning with it?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Biber, on direct examination you were asked what is the investment in the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and I believe you answered $250,000.

A. Approximately.

Q. What was the meaning to you of the word "investment"?

A. I believe the question was as to investment in property in the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

2936 Q. I don't recall if was put that way, but I haven't got the transcript here. But, anyway, just state what you meant when you gave the answer of $250,000.

A. I mean the investment in bulkplant properties, service station properties—I don't believe I included in that merchandise or equipment; stock.

Q. Was that or was that not used by you as synonymous with invested capital?

A. I believe I answered that question it wasn't.

Q. You also stated on direct examination that in your opinion it would cost more per gallon to deliver gasoline in 2,000 gallon tankloads than in quantities of two hundred fifty or five hundred or a thousand gallons?

A. It would cost less, in 2,000 gallons.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes; that's right.

Q. If I didn't say that, I meant to.

Was that answer a statement of your opinion, or was it based upon any facts?

A. It is based on facts; based on records we keep of truck operations.

Q. Have you kept records of the cost of delivering gasoline in different quantities?

A. Yes, we have.

Q. Can you state, then,—well, for what quantities 2937 have you kept those records?

A. We keep a sheet which records deliveries under 300 gallons, and delivery over 300 gallons, and we keep our costs on that basis.

Q. What percentage of your deliveries to retail stations are under 300 gallons?

A. I would say about 25% are 300 or under.

Q. And have you made any segregation as between amounts of delivery over 300 gallons; in keeping those records?

A. Yes, and then the others are—the balance of 75% are grouped in the record as deliveries of 300 gallons or over.

Q. Have you determined the cost, for instance, of delivering in quantities of between 1,000 and 2,000?

A. No.

Q. Or between 500 and 1000?

A. No.

Q. Over what period were those computations made?

A. Over the period of the last year, I imagine. They are still being kept.

Q. Do you know what any of those figures are now? Could you tell me what your results were for deliveries under 300 and delivery over 300?

A. I don't remember, offhand.

Q. Are those studies worked out on sheets?

2938 A. Yes, on regular form sheets.

Q. For how long a period do they show? Are they annual, or what?

A. One sheet is kept daily and they are posted from a daily sheet onto a monthly sheet, and kept on a monthly basis.

Q. Do you figure up your cost per gallon for delivery in those different quantities for each month or year, or what?

A. We figure them by the month. The only costs we were interested in determining on that basis was the actual trucking cost; the vehicle and the driver's salary.

Q. Are those sheets available for the years 1939 and 1940?

A. I am not sure whether they were kept in 1939, but they are available for 1940, and right up to the present day.

Q. Would you mind producing them on Monday?

A. Do you want them all?

Q. You say they are a separate sheet for each month.

A. There is a separate sheet for each day by driver and then they are posted onto a monthly sheet.

Q. I was only interested in monthly sheets, and if it is a fact that those sheets contain a computation, the purpose of which is to arrive at the cost per gallon of delivering gasoline.

2939 A. Yes, those sheets are available. I will be glad to bring them.

Q. Do they give that result? That is are they carried out—

A. I am not sure whether they have been carried into dollars and cents or not, or whether we have been satisfied to carry them into driver hours and truck hours. I don't remember whether the final computation is broken down by the amount of the driver's salary or not, but if it is not, it would be an easy thing to do, because if it is broken into hours, the computation of hours into the driver's rate would be a very simple computation to make.

Q. Do you have those monthly sheets in the files of your company at your office?

A. Yes.

Q. And how many sheets would that require you to produce? Suppose for the last six months of 1940?

A. That wouldn't be many sheets.

Q. Would that be just one or two sheets for each month?

A. It might be as high as five or six, depending on how many drivers there were at that time.

Q. I am still not clear, after you get all that data on the sheets, whether you have made a computation of the cost per gallon of delivering gasoline, on the one hand, as to deliveries of 300 gallons and less, and, on the other hand, over 300?

2940 A. As I say, I don't know that we have broken it down to so many dollars and cents or not, or whether we have been satisfied to bring it down to the hours or minutes it takes for deliveries, but if we haven't gone that additional step, it would be an easy thing to do, because all you would have to do would be to divide the hours by the hourly pay rate of the driver.

Q. Would that give you the result for the company, or each driver?

A. That would give you each driver's time. In other words, it was kept for several purposes. One purpose was to show which drivers are more efficient and, also, to determine whether or not small deliveries cost more than large deliveries.

Q. Where is the cost of delivering gasoline shown on these schedules; Exhibits, for identification, 8 to 15; or, if it isn't shown, where is it included?

A. It is included in all the expenses shown on Schedules 2 and 3, and subsequent. The depreciation, for instance, on trucks and equipment, is on Schedule 5.

Q. Do these sheets that you refer to contain all of the expense allocable to that delivery operation?

A. That's right, they do.

Q. We would appreciate it then, if you would bring those down with you on Monday.

2941 A. I would be glad to.

Q. Mr. Biber, I think you testified that there were three operations in loading one gasoline truck, and I think you referred to the fact that trucks have various compartments and that you sell three grades of gasoline?

A. That's right.

Q. Have you ever made a separation of your wholesale distribution costs as between the three grades of gasoline?

A. Never.

Q. If, as you say, there are three operations in loading one truck, is it not true that the cost of handling and trucking gasoline by that method would vary, as to the different grades, due to the fact that the Red Crown is handled in larger quantities than the other two?

A. No, it would not.

Q. For instance, doesn't it cost more to load 500 gallons of gasoline—cost less, rather, to load 500 gallons into the larger compartments of the truck than it costs per gallon to load quantities of, say, 100 or 200 gallons, of another grade?

A. No. The only cost involved in loading a truck is the electric current which operates the pump and the time of the man who is loading the truck. It still takes a fifth of the time to load 100 gallons of Stanolind than it does to load 500 gallons of the regular, and a fifth of the 2942 pump power, so it makes no difference in the loading what grade of gasoline there is.

Q. Isn't there more evaporation and leaking in loading and unloading smaller quantities than in loading and unloading larger quantities?

A. I don't think so. I think the evaporation is only during the period it is exposed, and if it is exposed only for 100 gallons, that's all there is.

Q. I believe I am correct in saying that Citrin-Kolb is still a partnership, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. Just for a moment I had a sort of hallucination that it was incorporated, but I was thinking of some other company.

Did the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, the partnership, file information returns with the Income Tax Department for the years 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940?

A. They did.

Q. Have you with you the records of the amount of net profit shown on those returns?

A. No.

Q. I assume that you could obtain that information?

A. Yes.

Q. I would like to ask you on Monday, I wish you would be prepared to answer the net profit shown by the 2943 Citrin-Kolb Oil Company for each of those years of the return filed by the partnership. I am referring to what is called partnership return of income, I believe,
on the form.

A. Each partner makes a return, and the partnership makes a return. Are you interested in the individual return or co-partnership return?

Q. The partnership return, because the individual return would, perhaps, include other things.

A. That's right.

Q. How many trucks does the Citrin-Kolb Company operate?

A. Six.

Q. And can you tell me how many have been operated during the period 1937 to 1940?

A. There were 5 in 1936, and 5 in 1937, and 5 in 1938, and in 1939,—1939 to 1940, there have been 6.

Q. '39, there were 6?

A. Yes.

Q. And 1940, 6?

A. Yes.

Q. How many drivers are employed for driving those trucks?

A. There are five full time drivers and one part time driver.

Q. And has that varied during the years when there were only 5 trucks?

2944 A. Yes, it has. It has even varied in the last year, depending on the volume of the business.

Q. And when there has been a variation, has there been more than 5 full time drivers, or less?

A. There has never been more than 5 full time drivers.

Q. Never more than 5?

A. That's right.

Q. And have you ever more than 1 part time driver?

A. Yes, on occasions we have had.

Q. What would you—would you say that the 5 full time and 1 part time driver—that is, the maximum number at one time during the four years?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, on Respondent's Exhibit 8, at the bottom of that page, there is a deduction from total direct operating costs, or it is called actual operating costs here of the amount $3,750 for each year, and that, apparently, is in connection with oil. It says, "Less Oil at 5¢; 75,000." What does that 75,000 mean?

A. 75,000 gallons.

Q. And how was the figure of 5¢ arrived at?

A. We were unable to make an exact deduction for the expenses involved in delivering oil, so we took our average gallonage of oil for the years 1937 through 1940, and the average was something under 75,000.

2945 We placed the round figure at 75,000 and computed it at 5¢ a gallon, which is an amount much larger than actually involved, but, inasmuch as we were unable to make an exact computation, we took the amount of $3,750 off each year, as expenses. I believe our closest computation at the time was around $2200. We added $1500 on that to be sure that it included everything other than gasoline.

Q. Then, when you say "less oil" you mean less oil and other products?

A. Yes, less oil or anything else; but our other products are insignificant.

Q. Doesn't the amount of oil that you sell every year vary?

A. It hasn't varied very much, because the amount of oil sold is comparable to the gallonage, and the gallonage has been fairly steady and the oil business has been fairly steady.

Q. Well, you just said, I believe, that you used the pronoun "we" in connection with the opinion that this was an adequate allowance for oil. Who did you refer to, other than yourself?

A. Myself, Mr. Citrin, and the Auditor.

Q. Is this figure of 5¢ a gallon for oil, or the total of $3,750, based upon any method of allocation, or is it 2946 just an arbitrary figure?

A. This $3,750 is actually an arbitrary figure; placed arbitrarily high. As I say, in our computation, as close as we could come to it, was about $2200, we thought we ought to deduct.

Q. An accurate computation of that figure would involve an allocation of the majority of these items on these various schedules, would it, to gasoline, on the one hand, and other products, on the other hand?

A. I would say it would.

Q. Then, if I understand you correctly, you didn't attempt to make any such computation, but you simply put a figure on here which, in your judgment, was a fair figure; in other words, on the greater than the lesser side, so far as you could—

A. That's right. That is, we did attempt an allocation. We found it was such a difficult allocation to make, we would rather give them some than go through another allocation.

Q. Turning again to Schedule No. 2, Respondent's Exhibit No. 8, will you describe what is included in item No. 1: "Advertising"? And by what is included, I mean the character of the advertising that resulted in these costs for which that money was expended?

A. Yes, advertising includes direct mail to the dealers.

2947 Q. Direct what?

A. Direct mail advertising to the dealers, monthly sales letters, a monthly publication which we printed and mailed to the dealers; it includes a Christmas party for the dealers; and it also includes in each year an anniversary dinner which we give on the anniversary of the founding of the company, for all the dealers. I believe those are all of the items included in advertising.

Q. Is any of it directed to consumer acceptance?

A. None of it is.

Q. All to the dealer acceptance.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, item 2 on that schedule "Discounts"; will you explain that item?

A. Yes. In discounts we carry an item which is really an exchange item. It is those items where the dealer complains of mis-delivery of a product, where he might claim that the driver poured the Ethyl into the regular tank, and so forth. And we make good for those mistakes by paying him a certain amount, whatever the difference is.

Q. Well, that is a rebate, isn't it, rather than discount?

A. You might call—

Q. Refund, perhaps?

A. You might call it a refund, yes. It is something that we pay back to him.

That is true in 1938, 1939, and 1940. And in 1937, in 2948 addition to that item, there was also included prize money which we gave to certain dealers on a cleanliness contest. That is the one year we had it. And we threw it into "discounts" at that time.

Q. What is your opinion as to whether that would properly be included in "discounts" or under "advertising"?

A. It might be advertising or discounts. We paid it out in the form of checks to the dealers, and I remember seeing the item, that we did throw it into "discounts" rather than any other item.

Q. Would you describe it as a discount?

A. I would not describe it as a discount. I don't know what happened at the time that it got into that account, but that is where it is. It could be transferred back into advertising, but we have never found it necessary.

Q. Were you here when Mr. Ledbetter was on the stand?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Do you recall that he had an item "discount" in his wholesale costs, and that he agreed that that should be— that that was not properly included as a wholesale cost, and it was eliminated from his computation?

A. Yes. But his computations, I understand, were trade discounts, amounts that were not paid out. And that is not true in our case, because gasoline is a net cash proposition. We don't have a discount. The face of the invoice is paid.

2949 Q. Well, is this item largely what you have described as refunds?

A. Refunds, yes.

Q. Well, in your opinion, isn't that properly deductible from the selling price of the gasoline, just as a true discount would be?

A. I don't believe so. I believe it is an expense item. It is actually payment for carelessness of a driver or carelessness of an employee. Just as possibly an uninsured accident that we would have to pay for. It is obvious there are no actual discounts in here, because the amounts are so small. $200 for one year.

2950 Q. Well, it is quite large for 1937, and why is that so much larger for that year?

A. That is that prize money for service station that went into that account.

Q. I see. Now, on item No. 1 again "Advertising" I want to ask you one more question about that.

Is any portion of that allocated on your books to the retail service stations operated by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. There is none of that that is allocated to that purpose.

Q. The third item is "Insurance" on schedule 2. Now, will you tell me what is insured? Does that represent premiums?

A. That is premiums. That is the public liability, property damage, fire and theft on the motor vehicles, and fire insurance, riots, civil commotion, tornado, public liability, and burglary insurance at the warehouse and offices.

Q. I was just going to ask you whether some of that is not on the buildings at the main office?

A. Yes, it is all at the buildings at the main office.

Q. It is what?

A. It is all on the buildings at the main office.

Q. Well, there is some of it for insurance, li-
2951 ability insurance that is just on—just for trucks; is it not?

A. No. There is also public liability insurance.

Q. You mean public liability, of course?

A. Yes.

Q. I was thinking of automobile insurance. Is any of that insurance upon the buildings at the service stations operated by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. No.

Q. Or upon the buildings at any of the service station properties owned and leased by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. No; this is restricted to 14445 Linwood.

Q. You mean that only insofar as it is insurance on buildings?

A. Yes.

Q. Because you stated—I assume there is insurance on trucks?

A. That is right.

Q. How about the Livernois bulk plant?

A. We could not carry insurance there as a bulk plant. We use it only intermittently, and the insurance company allows us to bind it whenever we have merchandise there. And so that premium was not included in that amount.

Q. As I recall it, what you call your warehouse is your bulk plant at Linwood?

A. That's right.

2952 Q. Isn't there service station property there too?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. You say none of this insurance listed here is insurance upon that service station property?

A. No. That is at a separate address. Covered under a separate address.

Q. The fourth item on that schedule is "Gas, Company Use"; what is that?

A. That is gasoline used by the trucks and myself.

Q. Item 5 "Interest"; do the figures opposite that—rather, on that line—indicate money actually paid out during the year by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Is that interest on borrowed money?

A. It is interest on borrowed money, and it is also interest on land contract for the property at 14445 Linwood.

Q. What do you mean land contract—mortgage?

A. No; it is purchased on land contract.

Mr. Austin: Well, I don't know whether it is material. Does your Honor understand what a land contract is? I don't. If you do, I will let you tell me some other time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If it is material, put it on the record.

By Mr. Austin:

2953 Q. Perhaps that is something you have here that we don't have in New York.

A. It is a method of conveying property.

Q. Well, all I wanted to know is if it is somewhat similar to the indebtedness that is paid on the principal of a mortgage debt.

A. That is right, it is.

Q. I take it there is no interest on investment included under that item, Mr. Biber?

A. What was that?

Q. I take it there is no interest on investment included under that item of interest on Respondent's Exhibit 8.

A. You mean in that No. 5?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any item in there for money used in reconditioning any station taken over?

The Witness: No.

Examination on Voir Dire (Continued) by Mr. Austin.

Q. On item 6 and 7 will you explain why there is only one figure given for heat, water, and electric current for 1937, whereas they are broken down for the other years; and why the figure is so much larger for 1937 than 2954 for the total of the two figures for the other years?

A. Yes. First, in 1937 we carried heat, water, and electric current in one account; just indicated it after the amount what it was. And the amount is more because in 1937 we actually operated the Livernois bulk plant, as well as the Linwood bulk plant, because the warehouse on Linwood was not entirely completed, and we had both offices going, and of course heated both places, and electric currented both places.

Q. Then do I understand that the warehouse or the bulk plant at Livernois and Lyndon has not been operated since 1937?

A. It has been operated. It has been operated in 1941, but not regularly or steadily. The warehouse has never been used, but the bulk plant facilities have been. The storage tank and pump house facilities have been.

Q. You distinguish between warehouse and bulk plant. I have noticed some reference here to warehouse at 14445 Linwood, and in several instances, I was rather wondering whether you didn't mean the Linwood bulk plant when you referred to warehouse?

A. Well, the warehouse is the enclosed part of the bulk plant. We refer to a bulk plant as the outside storage tanks and the pumping equipment.

Q. What is the warehouse? Is that just what 2955 the name implies?

A. Yes; the warehouse is the inside building.

Q. Well, when I come to warehouse here later on I can ask you again about that. But I was a little confused. Particularly as to the Livernois plant, as to whether or not it had been operated.

A. Yes, it is operated intermittently right up to now.

Q. Your statement is as to the Livernois plant that the warehouse has not been used since 1937, but that the bulk plant has been.

A. I don't believe the warehouse at Livernois has been used since 1937. I don't remember of an instance that it was.

Q. Would that account for this large increase in heat, water, and electric current?

A. In 1937?

Q. Yes.

A. We were actually paying double heat and double electric current for two locations.

Q. And you don't have any such expense if you operated the bulk plant without the warehouse?

A. Yes, we would have, and it is included in here. But it is very slight. We might operate it three months out of the year.

Q. If that is the only explanation you have of 2956 the difference I am satisfied with it, Mr. Biber.

A. Yes.

Q. Item No. 8 "License"; just what licenses are included?

A. That is the wholesale distributor's license, and the gas tax bond necessary to be furnished under that license.

Q. That doesn't include the automobile licenses for the trucks, does it?

A. In 1938 and 1939 it does; in 1940 it does not.

Q. Is that the reason why the figures for '38 and '39 are larger than those for '37 and '40?

A. That's right; in '40 we separated them.

Q. Where do they appear in 1940?

A. I believe under truck expense.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Biber, do you want a recess? You have been on quite a while.

The Witness: No.

Mr. Abbott: I don't want to interrupt.

Mr. Austin: I was going to suggest that we adjourn after we get through with this question, but I am perfectly willing to go on.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a five-minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

2957 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Reconvening.

Examination on Voire Dire (Continued) by Mr. Austin.

Q. Then, point that out to us.

A. I looked through the exhibit, Mr. Austin, and it does not appear. It appears that we left it out.

Mr. Abbott: What is that you left out?

The Witness: Truck licenses for 1940.

Examination on Voire Dire (Continued) by Mr. Austin.

Q. The same is true for 1937?

A. No; it is included in '37. In '37 we had smaller trucks and the licenses were proportionately less, and our gas tax bond was much less. They raised it in 1938. In 1937 everything was included.

Q. Item 9 is entitled "Miscellaneous", and that is a fairly large item for each one of four years. Will you describe the types of expense that have been grouped together under that heading?

A. Yes. I have here "Court Costs." This happens to be a take-off for certain months of 1940, the actual items.

Q. It happens to be what?

A. Take-off from the books. These are the actual items taken from the books of 1940.

2958 Mr. Abbott: Can you itemize them as you read them?

The Witness: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Are these for the year 1940?

The Witness: Yes, January, 1940.

Mr. Abbott: State the amount.

A. (Continuing.) Court Costs $2.60; Wrights Florist, $8.76.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Biber, this total here for 1940 is some five thousand dollars. I imagine it would take you a pretty long time to read all the items, unless a few of them are large; and will you give us only the items that are more than a hundred dollars.

A. I don't believe there are any, Mr. Austin. This one group is seven or eight pages. The only large items over one hundred dollars are Christmas gifts, which were billfolds in that year printed with the dealer's name; it was $161.

Q. What is the total of those sheets you have in your hand?

A. The total of the sheets is $5,750.60 for 1940.

Q. Well, the figure here is $5,352.27.

A. There was a deduction, I think, of $392 that 2959 we took out of this list because we thought that they should be allocated to the service station. Sometimes they were thrown in here, like a two dollar court cost, and it might have involved an account at the service station and by error gotten into this account. So we went through it carefully.

Q. By service station you mean that—operated stations or what?

A. Operated station, or even our dealers, if they have an account that wasn't paid them, I sometimes furnish my services to draw up the papers and start the case and spend two dollars for them so they could start a Common Pleas Court case. And there was—

Q. I would like, if there is no objection, to have those sheets you have there and offer it in evidence.

A. Not at all. I have two or three copies of it.

Q. May I see it?

A. Yes, sure.

Mr. Abbott: May I get the amount allocated to resale stations from your notes (addressing the Reporter)?

(The Reporter read the following figures $5,352.27 and $392.)

Mr. Austin: I don't know whether it is proper for me to make any motion with respect to this now, your Honor, but I would like to state that if your Honor accepts 2960 the offer of these schedules marked Respondent's Exhibits 7 to 15 in evidence, that I would like to have this schedule miscellaneous expenses, handed me by Mr. Biber, to go in as an exhibit 8-A, to follow Respondent's Exhibit No. 8. And for that reason I will now ask that it be marked for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Reporter will mark the document—just a moment. There are several sheets on there.

Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Reporter will mark the documents handed him by counsel for the Commission as Commission's Exhibit 78-A to E, for identification.

(The documents referred to were marked "Commission's Exhibits 78-A to E" for identification.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin:

Q. Now, Mr. Biber, I want to ask you whether the items of expense shown on Commission's Exhibit 78-A to E for identification are representative of the items which go into the totals here for '37, '38, and '39, opposite item 9 "Miscellaneous" on Respondent's Exhibit 8?

A. They are.

2961 Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Do you know of any items under the miscellaneous heading, or included under that heading, for 1937, 1938, or 1939, which are substantial in amount—and you may interpret that as meaning more than a hundred dollars—which are not included in the list which has been marked for identification?

A. I don't believe they are. They are all small amounts.

Q. Are there any items of expense listed in Commission's Exhibit, for identification, 78-A to 78-E, which result from the operation of the bulk plant and the operations in connection with the delivery of the gasoline by truck?

A. Are you restricting that to the actual physical delivery?

Q. Well, any items which result from the bulk plant and delivery operations, or which are allocated or would be allocated to those operations, if you had to make such an allocation?

A: Yes, they are.

Q. Are any substantial amount of them?

A. If I understand your question correctly, I would say all of them.

Q. Is that so?

Mr. Abbott: Do you understand what the question is?

2962 The Witness: I think I do.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well—

A. I would say that these are all included in the costs of operating the bulk plant and delivering gasoline.

Q. I am just trying to think of a way of making my question a little clearer.

For instance, would you say that item No. 5 on Respondent's Exhibit 8, interest on item No. 1, advertising, were allocable to the operation of the bulk plant, and delivery?

A. Yes.

Q. Those were the type of items which I had in mind which I rather assumed were not allocable to the operation of the bulk plant and delivery, because they did not result from direct operation, so, perhaps my question should be directed to what you call physical operation.

A. Yes. I see the distinction you are trying to ma ; now. Do you want me to answer the question on that basis?

Q. Yes.

A. I would say that there were some of these amounts that would be allocated to the physical delivery and operation of the bulk plant.

Q. I won't pursue that. I take it they are all small items.

2963 A. Yes.

Q. And it would be rather hard to identify them, is that correct?

A. Yes, they are. I see items here for 19¢ and 50¢ and so forth.

Q. Item 10 on Schedule 2, Respondent's Exhibit 8, is entitled "Repairs." That is also a fairly large item for each year. What do those repairs consist of?

A. Consist of repairs to trucks, pumps, building and equipment, typewriters, adding machines.

Q. Does that include repairs at the office building?

A. Yes.

Q. Repairs at the bulk plant?

A. Yes.

Q. Does it include repairs upon equipment at any service station?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Does it include repairs upon equipment at service stations operated by Citrin-Kolb?

A. No. That is on a separate account.

Q. What equipment does Citrin-Kolb Oil Company own and repair at its own expense at service stations served by it?

A. Only pumps.

Q. Then, the repairs that relate to retail service stations are pump repairs?

2964 A. That's right.

Q. Would you say that pump repairs at a retail service station are allocable in any part to the operation of the bulk plant and delivery operations; in other words, are they a wholesale expense?

A. I would say they were.

Q. What is your theory on that?

A. The only repair of those pumps that we own, if we own the dispensing equipment at the station, we make the repairs, our equipment order agreement requiring we do, and that would be part of the furnishing of the gasoline. If we did not furnish the pump at the station through which the gasoline is dispensed, we wouldn't be operating through that station.

Q. Do you furnish the pumps of all stations which you serve?

A. No, we furnish only a very small part of the pumps.

Q. Why do you say you wouldn't be servicing the station?

A. At those stations at which there are no pumps or at which a former competitive company owned the pumps, when we go in, part of the deal of going in is to furnish pumps to replace the pumps of the former oil company, or where you are going into a new location, the property owner usually requires the oil company to furnish the pumps.

Q. Is that where you own the property or sublease it?

2965 A. No, that might be a contract dealer. For instance, we might go into a Texaco account and Texas may own three pumps there. When their contract is cancelled, they remove those pumps and our obligation is to replace the equipment.

Q. Don't you rent those pumps to the dealer?

A. No.

Q. Then, why is it that some dealers supply their own pumps? I should think it would be much better for you to supply them.

A. It just happens that in those instances the owner of the property either furnished the pumps at the time, or the dealer bought pumps at a previous time, but dealers are no longer that ignorant. New pumps, very seldom, belong to the operator of a station.

Q. On the stations which you lease; there, you receive rental for the equipment, do you not?

A. Yes, the rental includes the equipment.

Q. And are any of these repairs charged on pumps at leased stations?

A. No, our lease simply is the building and equipment are in good shape and will be returned in the same manner. We do no repairs for these stations. If we did, it could not be included in here, because that gallonage to our leased stations is included. I believe it would be a proper item of expense to be included here.

2966 Q. You say gallonage is included, but you have made no offset here anywhere for rent received, have you?

A. No. That is the point. That is why I say we left the account out entirely.

Q. I am just trying to understand the situation in that regard. If I understand you correctly, if a man owns his own property, or leases it from somebody else, you furnish the pumps and he doesn't pay any rent on them.

A. That's right.

Q. And you repair them?

A. That's right.

Q. But if he leases a station from you, he pays rent on the pumps, and then, also, has to pay his own repairs?

A. You see, Mr. Austin, it is not a matter of mechanics, it is a matter of policy. The station we have a lease on, we tell the fellows: "You are going to repair your own pumps," because we are not going to lose that station, but if I tell that to one of our contract dealers, the next week we come around, there will be new globes on the pumps. On our leased stations we have no fear of losing the stations. We tell the man to repair his own pumps and that's what they do, but on the contract account, we are leery of doing that.

Q. Then it is due to the fact you have more control over the business of your lessee than you do over 2967 your contract operator?

A. That's right.

Q. Would you say that that was true of jobbers generally?

A. I would say it was true of everybody generally.

Q. Item 11 is entitled "Supplies." What does that refer to?

A. That is office supplies and stationery.

Q. Any reason for the drop of that expense in 1939?

A. None; except that we may have been stocked up in 1938.

Q. Item 12; "Telephone." Does that include any telephone expense from telephones installed at retail service stations?

A. No, it does not. It includes the telephone and switchboard at the bulk plant and any advertising or listings of the bulk plant in the telephone directory.

Q. Is that expense to operating stations kept separate?

A. Yes, it is; each address separate.

Q. Item 13, which is the largest item on this list, is entitled "Wages." Does that include your salary?

A. The $15,000 item?

Q. Yes; item 13.

A. It does not.

Q. Where is your salary included here?

A. My salary wasn't included here at all. There was my salary and one man more that wasn't included 2968 here, and one girl that wasn't included here.

Q. Why was that?

A. The man's salary that was not included here, he has supervisory duties, in part, over some retail stations, so rather than question it or cut it up, we left it out entirely. One of the girls, as part of her work, listed the daily report sheets of the operated stations, so we left that out, and inasmuch as sometimes I spent some of my time on the retail stations, calling on them, either speaking to them or making the leases for them, we left that out; so those three items were left out rather than apportioning them.

Q. What wages are included in that item? What wages or salaries?

A. Truck drivers; warehouseman; switchboard operator; bookkeeper; two auditors.

Q. Is that a complete list of the salaries that are included here?

A. Yes. There is only one other I think of, and that is the porter.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Austin, when you have finished that item, we will adjourn.

Mr. Austin: I only have two more items on this Schedule 2, Respondent's Exhibit 8. I would like to finish 2969 those.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Proceed.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Item 14 is taxes. Will you tell us what taxes are included in that item?

A. Yes. Those are the real estate taxes.

Q. And on real estate taxes on what real estate?

A. On the location at 14445 Linwood.

Q. Including the service station property?

A. No. That is a separate address that is assessed at 14441; the station. Personal property taxes on the merchandise, equipment, furniture, and fixtures, at the 14445 Linwood.

Q. Are these taxes only upon property at that address?

A. That's right. In 1937 I think part of it was for personal property at 14481 Livernois, as well.

Q. Aren't there any taxes included there for any of those four years upon the real estate at Livernois? Isn't that owned by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. Yes, it is, but since 1937 we have not considered that as a bulk plant entirely. The taxes have been on the bulk plant facilities and not on the front location. There is a service, also, at that location, and we have separated that. The only taxes included here would be on the personal property and the bulk plant facil-
2970 ities in the back.

Q. Are such taxes included here for 1938, 1939, and 1940?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. I understood you to say for those three years it was only in the Linwood property.

A. There is no personal property tax for those three years, because we didn't have any merchandise there.

Q. But there is a real estate tax item there on the Livernois property.

A. Yes, there is.

Q. The last item on Respondent's Exhibit 8 is bad debts. Will you explain that item, please?

A. Those are uncollectible items from dealers.

Q. All from dealers?

A. All from dealers.

Q. None that involve retail accounts?

A. No, there are no retail accounts included on here. All from dealers, 75% of which are NSF checks upon loads of gasoline.

Q. Are what?

A. Are not sufficient funds checks, upon loads of gasoline.

Q. Is there any reserve for bad debts included there?

A. No.

Q. That seems to be a pretty large item; particularly in 1939, Mr. Biber, and you say those bad debts are 2971 all debts owed by dealers?

A. That's right.

Q. And that means operators of service stations to whom you sell gasoline?

A. To whom we sold gasoline.

Q. Do you sell—still sell gasoline to any of those operators?

A. No. We don't write them off as long as they are still our accounts. I believe this item of $2,000, out of 5,000,000 gallons of gasoline, is very small.

Q. That was the reason for my last question, because it seemed to me that bad debts of dealers would necessarily be small, because they could hardly exist while you were continuing to serve the dealer, so that is why I asked you if you were continuing to serve any of these dealers.

A. No. If the account was written off, we wouldn't serve the dealer.

Q. Then, is it your statement that these bad debts are all bad debts of dealers who have ceased to be your customers and who owed you money at the time they ceased to be your customers?

A. Yes. These figures were taken off of income tax returns.

Mr. Austin: That would be a very good place to make a break, now, if your Honor please.

2972 Trial Examiner Ballinger: It now being 5:40 P. M., the hearing will adjourn to be reconvened at 9:30 A. M., May 5, 1941, in room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(Thereupon at 5:40 o'clock P. M., an adjournment was taken, to reconvene on May 5th, 1941, at 9:30 o'clock A. M.)

Before:

Webster Ballinger, Trial Examiner.

Appearances:

Cyrus B. Austin, Esq., attorney for the Federal Trade Commission.

Harold R. Hanley, Esq., 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and

Arthur J. Abbott, Esq., of the firm of Abbott, MacMahon, and Roberts, 2230 Buhl Building, Detroit, Michigan, on behalf of the Respondent.

2974

PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

This is a reconvening at 9:30 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, May 5, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, in Docket No. 4389, in the case entitled Standard Oil Company.

The last hearing was held in Detroit May 2, 1941.

The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

Gentlemen, you may proceed.

MAX BIBER, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Mr. Biber, on Saturday, or Friday, I guess it was, you were asked to state by Mr. Abbott the facts as to whether or not the conditions as shown by the buys and pictures referred to in Exhibits 18-A to 18-Z and 18-Z to 18-z-51, in so far as they have been admitted in evidence, show conditions which have been typical of the price cutting prevalent in the Detroit area for the years 1938 to 1941, inclusive. You answered: "They certainly are typical of the conditions during those years."

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment, now. State your question, I want to make an objection.

2975 Mr. Austin: All right. I was reading from the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let the counsel complete his question.

Mr. Abbott: Yes; go ahead, Mr. Austin.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. The photographs and sales slips referred to were pictures of stations, and, I believe, sales slips indicated purchases made at stations near a certain group of Citrin-Kolb Stations.

A. That's right.

Q. Six stations which were either operated by or supplied by Citrin-Kolb. By your answer to that question, did you mean to indicate that all of the stations in the neighborhood of those six Citrin-Kolb stations were charging the prices shown in those pictures?

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment, now, if your Honor please, I am at somewhat of a loss to understand whether this is cross-examination or a continuation of the voir dire on the schedules. If it is cross-examination, I don't think it is in order at this time, because I am not through 2976 with this witness. We are now engaged, you see, in putting in the Respondent's case in chief, and Mr. Austin, as I understand it, has been engaged in voir dire examination of the schedules on the subject of operating costs.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is the recollection of the Examiner that he reserved ruling on Respondent's Exhibits 7 to 15, inclusive, until both the voir dire and cross-examination.

Mr. Abbott: Yes; but he was engaged in the voir dire on Friday and had not completed that. Now, it appears from the last question that he is now proceeding to cross-examine the witness, before the witness is turned over to him for cross-examination by the Respondent.

Mr. Austin: That is all right with me. If Mr. Abbott isn't through on direct, and it is his understanding that the cross-examination now is only directed to the schedules, I would be perfectly pleased to go ahead with the schedules, your Honor, and postpone this question and one or two others I had, until later.

I was under the impression I was on cross-examination, but I may be wrong.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The course indicated may prolong the examination of the witness. You may adopt it, confining your examination, now, to the voir dire examination.

2977 Mr. Austin: I can come back to that at any time.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Will you turn to Respondent's Exhibit No. 9, Mr. Biber, and tell me—where is the copy of that that was marked by the reporter?

Mr. Abbott: The Examiner has it.

Q. Has the word "operating," the third word in the heading, has the word "operating" been changed to "overhead"?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It has.

Q. The first three items, there, Mr. Biber, are salary items of $10,000 for each of the three partners for each of the four years; 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940?

A. That is right.

Q. Is that $10,000 something in the nature of a drawing account or how was that figure arrived at for the purpose of this report?

A. Well, it is drawn by the partners in monthly installments for the year in an agreement between themselves that they will draw that much per year. It is a partnership, and, of course, they can put this money back in and take it out any time they like, but they have allocated $10,000 a year for each of them.

Q. I asked you, I believe, on Friday for the amount of net profit shown on your partnership return for the 2978 years 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940?

A. Yes, I have them here.

Q. Would you let me have them, please?

A. Do you want me to read them?

Q. Yes.

A. 1937, $45,839.59; 1938, $40,116.13; 1939, $34,207.42; 1940, $32,190.45.

Q. Does Mr. Citrin give all of his time to the business, Mr. Biber?

Mr. Abbott: Which Mr. Citrin? There are two of them.

Q. Mr. Jacob Citrin.

A. Yes, he does.

Q. Is he engaged in any business other than the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. No, he is not.

Q. How much time does he regularly give to the business?

A. Regular time. He is in the office every day.

Q. Every day. Well, I did not mean to ask you how much time he took off for lunch or anything like that.

A. He goes to Florida every once in a while.

Q. He is referred to here as partner in charge of sales contracts and deals. Could you eleborate that a little bit, please?

A. Yes. I would not call any of these descriptions 2979 exclusive descriptions, because in the partnership as they are, their duties will overlap, but he is in charge of purchases, sales, he determines largely whether or not he will take on a new dealer, whether or not any contract for purchase, sale of property, real estate, or merchandise is a good one or not. And, I would say he acted as the chief executive, and that those were actually his duties.

Q. Does Mr. Kolb give full time to the business of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. He does.

Q. Is he engaged in any other business?

A. No, he is not.

Q. Does either Mr. Jacob Citrin or Mr. Kolb have any interest in any other retail gasoline business?

A. No, they do not.

Q. What portion of Mr. Jacob Citrin's time is regarded as applicable to the operation of the service stations which are operated by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company?

A. I would say none of his time.

Q. And the same question as to Mr. Kolb.

A. I would say none of his time is applicable, either.

Q. How much time does Mr. Barney Citrin give to the business?

A. He gives his full time to the business.

Q. Does he come to the office daily?

2980 A. Every day.

Q. And what are his general duties?

A. Well, he is actually cashier and in charge of the daily and perpetual inventory of merchandise at the premises. We have a report that carries a daily-perpetual inventory. The inventory is kept on a deduction basis after each delivery. That is his job.

Q. I don't think I asked you what Mr. Kolb's position is.

A. Mr. Kolb is really in charge of deliveries; in charge of the warehouse. He acts in the purchasing of equipment; hires drivers.

Q. I understand your statement to be that it is a full time job for each of the three partners?

A. Oh, yes. All three of the partners put in their full time and have no other business.

Q. Schedule 4 is Respondent's Exhibit 10, a depreciation schedule on real estate; is that correct?

A. That's right.

Q. That is, the buildings. Now, the first item is the Livernois and Lyndon address. The second refers to warehouse. Does that mean at 14445 Linwood?

A. That's right.

Q. Is there a retail service station building at either one of those addresses?

A. There is a retail service station at each of those 2981 addresses.

Q. Well, is that building included here?

A. No.

Q. In neither case?

A. In neither case.

Q. Do these figures here, given for the land at either address, include any of the land where the retail service station is located?

A. No, it is not. It was cut up and apportioned by size.

Q. What do you mean by the warehouse, or did you explain that the other day?

A. The warehouse is the enclosed part of the bulk plant, the building of the plant.

Q. Why isn't the balance of the bulk plant included?

A. The balance of the bulk plant are the underground tanks.

Q. Is that so?

A. And they are listed as equipment.

Q. I wasn't clear about that, although I know you told me the other day at the Livernois address the warehouse was used for storage and for other things. You say the tanks are underground: I don't believe I realized that the bulk plant storage tanks were underground. I rather pictured them as above the ground.

2982 A. All our tanks are underground.

Q. Is that personal property?

A. Yes. When you look at the place, there is not—there is no bulk plant. All you see is a pump.

Q. Now, as I recall it, we were also talking Friday about a warehouse at Livernois and Lyndon.

A. That's right.

Q. Under item 1, you say, "Livernois and Lyndon." Under item 2, you say, "Warehouse."

A. That is just descriptive of the place. It could read, just as well, 14445 Linwood.

Q. What does the cost of the land represent in each case? Does it represent the actual amount that was paid for the land, or does it represent something else?

A. It is the actual cost of the price paid for the land less that amount of land which was allocated to the service station.

Q. Was that allocation made upon a square foot basis?

A. Per foot basis.

Q. And how was the value of the building stated here arrived at?

A. Both buildings were arrived at from the price, that is, the cost, of building at the time of erection.

Q. Does that $12,620, the first item, represent what was paid for the construction of that building?

2983 A. That's right.

Q. And is the same true of the item $23,722.68?

A. No, it does not, because we did not construct that second building at 14445 Linwood. That includes the price we paid for the buildings at the time we purchased them, plus the price of the erection of the new portion that we put up.

Q. But the one at Livernois and Lyndon was constructed by you—was any of the land at either of these properties purchased from any one of the partners?

A. No. The land at Livernois and Lyndon was purchased from the Robert Oakman Realty Company, and the land and buildings at 14445 Linwood were purchased from the receiver of the National Bank here in Detroit.

The buildings themselves at the time we purchased them we estimated were worth about $60,000, and I think the price the receiver put on them was about a third of the value we put on the building.

Q. Who was the building at the Linwood address purchased from?

A. The Linwood address?

Q. Yes.

A. The building was there; part of the building. The underground storage was there and the land was purchased from the receiver of the First National Bank.

2984 Q. That was there, of course, when you bought the land?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you stated that there was an addition constructed to the Linwood plant?

A. That's right.

Q. How was the valuation of that addition arrived at?

A. We priced the addition at the actual cost of construction.

Q. And that was added to the cost of—

A. The former buildings.

Q. How was the cost of the land and buildings apportioned, as between land and building, that you bought from the receiver?

A. We apportioned at one-third buildings, and two-thirds land, because the land there is quite extensive.

Q. Was any interest during construction included in the cost of construction of the addition?

A. Will you repeat that?

Q. Any interest, during construction, included in the cost of construction of the addition?

A. I don't believe I understand—

Q. Interest during construction means interest on capital investment during the construction period.

A. Added to the construction price?

Q. Yes.

2985 A. No, it was not.

Q. Or included in the construction price?

A. No, it was not.

Q. Were there any profits to the partners on the construction of the addition?

A. No.

Q. Schedule 5, Respondent's Exhibit No. 11, Mr. Biber, you have an item No. 1, "Machinery and Equipment," and an item No. 3, "Furniture and Fixtures," and those are repeated for each year, 1937, 1938, and 1939 and 1940.

A. That is right.

Q. Referring to those two items as repeated for each year, do the cost figures give a—well, do those figures include any machinery, equipment, furniture, or fixtures at any retail service stations?

A. No, there isn't any here.

Q. Do the figures in the cost column represent the actual carrying cost of the equipment at the end of the year?

A. Yes, that was taken right off of our cost sheets. If they had—if the machinery, equipment, or furniture and fixtures were older than 1937, the cost figure shown in the first column was the figure to which it had been depreciated.

Q. Now, I refer to equipment located—that is, 2986 included here—where was it located?

A. At the bulk plant. That includes pumping equipment, loading equipment, and unloading equipment on loaders, safety features on the side track at both bulk plants.

Q. That is machinery and equipment?

A. Yes.

Q. How about furniture and fixtures?

A. Furniture and fixtures; well, it includes the fixtures at the office; typewriters, adding machines, billing machines, and so forth.

Q. And whose automobile is that? Is that more than one? It says "Auto" as if it were singular.

A. Well, we carry it that way. That is the delivery equipment at the bulk plant. That is called trucks and automobiles.

Q. Does that include any automobiles driven by yourself or the partners?

A. No.

Q. How was that rate of 6% arrived at for depreciation of equipment?

A. We have depreciated our machinery and equipment at 6% on our income tax.

Q. Was that accepted by the Federal Income Tax people?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, was that the same percentage for trucks 2987 and autos and furniture and fixtures?

A. Yes, we depreciated it all at the same figure.

Q. Now, there appears here a figure in each case which is 10%, while you state that you took off 6% on the income tax.

A. That is because it includes an additional 4% of obsolescence. In other words, on our income tax return, we can take 6%. They don't allow you to take obsolescence and depreciation. They allow you to depreciate it at the rate of 6% and when you find that your equipment or machinery is obsolete, you can take the additional as obsolescence. These figures were really interim figures and inasmuch as we felt we are entitled to the obsolescence and these figures, we don't have to wait until the truck is junked to take the obsolescence, and, therefore, we added the obsolescence to the depreciation and took it on that basis because, obviously, a truck is not good for more than ten years.

Q. Well, your figure here only shows 6% on the truck and auto and 10% for machinery and equipment.

A. Well, we had intended to take 10% on all these items. We should have taken 10% on our trucks and autos and furniture and fixtures as well. I believe we took 10% on the furniture and fixtures and equipment and machinery and the 6% on the trucks and autos.

2988 Q. Well, this schedule appear to be incorrect on its face, because of the 10% instead of 6%, and I don't understand, anyway, why you should take an extra 4% of obsolescence on machinery and equipment. I can understand what you have said might refer to your trucks and autos, but it wouldn't refer to gas tanks, would it?

A. I think that is true. I don't think you will find you can keep gas tanks underground more than 10 years. They have to be replaced. They rust through and they wet through.

Q. Is the figure of 6% what was allowed on the income tax for depreciation?

A. Yes, that was the figure.

Q. Do you attempt to take any obsolescence on the income tax return for any of these items?

A. Yes, as a matter of fact, in 1939 we took 10% on the theory that we would take our depreciation and obsolescence during the life of the machinery and equipment and furniture and fixtures, and they called us on that and told us we were entitled to 6%, and that when the equipment was obsolete we could report it as such and take the balance as obsolescence. They would not let us take it all at one time.

Q. When would they permit you to take it?

A. When you reported the equipment as obsolete.

2989 Q. That would be after you had already taken depreciation over a number of years?

A. That is right, and the balance would be obsolescence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Are the figures showing depreciation for the years 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940, appearing on Respondent's Exhibit No. 11, for identification, supposed to represent 10% of the cost as shown in the third column?

The Witness: That is right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Are they not inaccuracies in the computations?

The Witness: I don't believe they are inaccuracies in the computation. I think what we ought to do is to change that rate to 10% instead of rating it at 6%.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If you changed it to 10%, would it not be inaccurate yet?

The Witness: No.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Take, for instance, item No. 4, "Machinery and Equipment." The cost price is $15,149.20 and 10% of that would be $1,514.92; but the amount shown is $1,519.50.

The Witness: That is right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Like discrepancies appear throughout.

2990 The Witness: That is off. That is off about $5.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well, these figures given for depreciation for 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940 are not the figures that were given on your income tax returns for those years, are they, Mr. Biber?

A. The figures for depreciation?

Q. Yes.

A. I think they are.

Q. Well, you just said that they did not allow you to take 10%.

A. No, this is the 6%. We have added the 4% to the 6% on here.

Q. Well, I am asking you whether these figures appear on the income tax return?

A. No, they are 4% less on the income tax return.

Q. Will you turn to Schedule 6, Mr. Biber, Respondent's Exhibit No. 12. Will you state what properties are included in that schedule which appears to be an obsolescence schedule?

A. Yes. Those are properties which the company owns upon which are located service stations, retail service stations.

2991 Q. Were those the only properties owned by the company on which retail service stations are located?

A. I believe they are, with the exception of 14481 Livernoise, at Lyndon.

Q. Why isn't that included here?

A. It isn't included there because at the time these schedules were made up, and right now, we intend to demolish that building and erect a new one.

Q. This is for the years 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940.

A. That's right. And in 1937 we used most of that building as a warehouse and the entire building was used as a warehouse. The only parts allocated to the service station were the pumps in front of it, so again, rather than allocate that piece of property, or the amounts involved, we just left it out.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was that true in 1938 and 1939?

The Witness: No. We used it very little in those years.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. What property is represented by the third column there, which is entitled "Cost"?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What exhibit?

Mr. Austin: We are speaking of Respondent's Exhibit 12, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: For identification.

2992 Mr. Austin: Yes.

A. I don't understand what you mean; what property?

By Mr. Austin:

Q. "Obsolescence Estimate of Items used in the Distribution of Gasoline at Wholesale."

A. That is the service station building on the premises.

Q. The service station building?

A. That's right.

Q. Does it include the underground tanks or pumps?

A. Yes, I would say it included the underground tanks. Not the pumps.

Q. Not the pumps?

A. No. We depreciate the pumps as personal property.

Q. Are any of these stations operated by Citrin-Kolb?

A. At the present time the only one operated by Citrin-Kolb is 14445 Linwood.

Q. How about during the period represented here, 1937 to 1940?

A. I would say that during that period, off and on, some of the others were operated.

Q. Of course, I realize we have that in the record, Mr. Biber.

A. Yes. There have been some of these that were operated by the company during that period, for sporadic periods.

2993 Q. Except for the time they were operated by the company, the company received rent for them, did they not, from the operator?

A. Yes.

Q. I take it that none of the property upon which obsolescence is taken in Schedule 6, was included in either Schedule 5 or Schedule 4. I would like to have your answer to that, however.

A. Not in Schedule 5, but you will notice in Schedule 4, we take a 4% rate of obsolescence. That is because we took that rate on the income tax return on our warehouse. We were—

Q. Now, just a moment. On Schedule 4 you take 4% for depreciation on building.

A. That's right.

Q. In what item on Schedule 6 is any of that property repeated?

A. In the last item, No. 8, at the bottom of the page.

Q. Yes.

A. We have taken an additional 6% for obsolescence. The 4% is depreciation.

Q. Is the 4% what was allowed on your income tax return?

A. That's right; 4% depreciation.

Q. Was this 6% claimed on the income tax return?

A. No, we can't claim that until the property is obsolete.

2994 Q. Under your item 8, "Warehouse," on Schedule 6, there is a statement: "See note in explanation." What note is referred to?

A. This is the explanation I have just given you. We were going to type that down, that 4% had been taken for depreciation, and this is an additional 6%.

Q. Turning back to Schedule 4, which is Respondent's Exhibit 10, for identification. I intended to ask you there, if you will look under the column 1937, and opposite item 2, "Warehouse," there is a figure of $475.25, which is apparently only 2% instead of 4%. Why was only 2% taken there?

A. Because in 1937 we only had that for half the year.

Q. And should not the first figure under the 1937 column be $504.80?

A. I don't know, unless I made the computation wrong.

Mr. Abbott: What schedule is that?

The Witness: Schedule 4.

A. 4%, $504.80.

Q. What do you mean by the column "Income Tax Rate, 2½%"?

A. That is the rate we were permitted on these properties in our income tax returns, on retail stations.

Q. You were permitted to take obsolescence, or did you take it as depreciation?

2995 A. We took it as depreciation.

Q. 2½%?

A. That is right.

Q. And why is it that for the purposes of this cost statement you have only used 7½%, instead of 10%?

A. Because we felt, inasmuch as these were retail stations, and the only reason they are included here was because we had the investment in these retail stations, in order to increase our wholesale gallonage and inasmuch as we had taken the depreciation of 2½% on our partnership return, we actually had credit for the depreciation on our partnership return for the retail stations. Therefore, we took only the difference between the 2½% and the 10% obsolescence figure. We felt we had already received credit for 2½%.

Q. Where?

A. In our income tax return. We had taken that, and inasmuch as this was a retail station, we didn't take that 2½% again, but felt it had come off—

Q. Where else had you received credit here on your cost statement?

A. We hadn't taken credit for it here again at all.

Q. I don't quite understand on what theory you only take 7½% here, whereas you claimed 10% total on your warehouse.

2996 A. On the warehouse we felt we were entitled to the entire amount, because the warehouse is used for the wholesale business and used in the wholesale business while the retail stations are actually used in the retail business, but their purpose, and our investment is in the service stations, in order to increase and make up the gallonage of our wholesale business, and the practical purpose of not including this 2½% again was to try to make these figures as conservative as possible. We felt that actually the wholesale business had gotten credit for 2½% for these retail stations, so we didn't put them in here again. We took the 7½% which we figured was the obsolescence figure, and didn't take any depreciation for service stations.

Q. As a cost item why shouldn't this be set off against rent, rather than included as a wholesale cost?

A. That is exactly the difference. A depreciation item—in other words, if we took this 2½% a year as a depreciation item, I think it should be set off against rental, but the obsolescence figure should not.

At the end of 10 years, a service station is generally obsolete. It is changed about every seven and a half years, in style and equipment, and our two and one-half percent depreciation rate should be covered by the rents.

Q. Don't you consider that the probable period of 2997 the obsolescence of the property, in determining what rent to charge?

A. No.

Q. You know what it is going to be?

A. Yes. You couldn't get that kind of a rental for a service station.

Q. Would you say that this was a cost which was allocable to the entire wholesale business, or isn't it a direct cost which is allocable only to these particular stations?

A. No. I think it is allocable to our wholesale business.

Q. What is your theory for that?

A. Many of these locations that have been built in the last three or four years have been built specifically for the purpose of stimulating the wholesale business. We weren't interested in any money we made, or we might make, on rental, or in the interest per service station. We were interested in the profits from the bulk plant to the service station. In other words, we were acquiring another customer by building that station. A service station, whether we own it, lease it or is a contract dealer, is a customer, as far as we are concerned.

Q. Referring to your wholesale business; to your sale of gasoline from your bulk plant to that station; in your opinion, shouldn't the expense of the station property, in so far as it is not recovered through rentals, be 2998 charged as a direct cost to the proportion of the wholesale business which you do, to that customer, rather than to all of your business? In other words, when you built a service station and leased it out, you have a new customer. Perhaps your rent doesn't cover the entire investment, considering depreciation and obsolescence, but that increases your wholesale business only to the extent of the gasoline you sell to that station; isn't that right?

A. That may be true, but I don't think you allocate expenses to any particular customer. In other words, if we deliver 200 gallons of gasoline to a man and 2,000 gallons to another customer, the cost of the 200-gallon delivery is obviously much more than the 2,000-gallon delivery. Nevertheless, when we make a break-down and acquire a per gallon cost, we don't charge one cost to one customer and the other cost to another customer. We just average them. We may, at times, make a greater investment in a contract dealer than we do in one of our own stations. Still we do not charge that expense to the individual customer.

A man may build a station and we take a lease on it, or he wants to operate it himself, and in order to get that business, we have to install tanks, pumps, and possibly paint the building, put up advertising, billboards, 2999 and we may have an investment of three or four thousand dollars in that property and we only have an independent dealer; nevertheless, we don't attribute that expense to this dealer alone. We attribute it to our entire wholesale operation and we have treated these stations in the same manner. We haven't differentiated merely because we own the property.

Q. Are these obsolescence charges recorded on your books?

A. This 10% charge.

Q. Or the 7½?

A. No, we haven't taken that off on our books.

Q. Do you judge whether or not a station is profitable by the gallonage that the station uses?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Does Exhibit 12, for identification, relate exclusively to stations owned by Citrin-Kolb?

The Witness: That's right. We owned those properties.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Biber, does any of this service station equipment—incidentally, do these items included in Schedule 6, Respondent's Exhibit 12, include any buildings? Do they include buildings as well as tanks? I guess you did say they do.

3000 A. The buildings and tanks, yes.

Q. Now, turning over to Exhibit 13, Schedule 7, under item 5: "Personal Property." Is any of the property upon which obsolescence was taken in Schedule 6, included in that personal property item under Schedule 7?

A. No, it is not. The personal property includes bonds, stocks; it includes merchandise purchased that is not yet in the hands of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company. For instance, merchandise which we purchased from the Standard Oil Company, motor oils, and we make our contract and order ahead of time for the coming season. We do not have it as inventory in our warehouse yet. Still it belongs to us. We have to insure it and it is charged to us, and all those items are included in that personal property.

Q. Well, now, isn't that item under 1937 of $25,280.30—do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Isn't that the same item that appears on Schedule 5, for machinery, equipment, trucks, autos, furniture and fixtures?

A. Yes, that is the same item.

Q. Well, that is not correct that that includes bonds and stocks and so forth?

A. No. That is included in the investing of merchandise. That was included in one of these figures.
3001 That must have been included in Item No. 4 that I described, because personal property is a carry-over from Schedule 5.

Q. Does Item No. 4, "Investing of Merchandise," include the sort of things you described?

A. Yes, I knew one of these things was made up from that, and also merchandise not yet in our warehouse.

Q. Well, then, Item No. 4, "Investing of merchandise," that is not a good heading for that?

A. No. That is why I had this explanation. I knew this would be explained, and it isn't a full description of it, but I thought it was convenient to put it in there, and I knew I would remember the items that were in there.

Q. Well, then, to repeat a question I asked you a while ago: are any of the items included for obsolescence in Schedule 6 repeated in whole or in part under the personal property item of Schedule 7?

A. Well, that is the same item as is No. 5 of Schedule 7. The Schedule 5 is repeated as No. 5 on Schedule 5.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Why is it repeated?

The Witness: Because that is an investment that we have in personal property, and we are charging interest on that investment. The investment may be worth less each year by depreciation, but still the balance of that investment is still charged with the interest of that investment.

Mr. Austin: Could we take a five minute recess,
3002 if your Honor please?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will have a five minute recess.

(A short recess was had.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Com[illegible]o order.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Turning to Respondent's Exhibit No. 12, for identification, again, Mr. Biber, do you have with you the figures of the rental charged to the operators of those seven stations? I believe there are six of them that are operated by others than the Citrin-Kolb Company.

A. I know what the rentals are now to them, but I don't know what the rentals are for this entire period.

Q. Could you state what the rentals are now?

A. Yes. The rental at Dexter and Fenkell is $125 a month; the rental at Wyoming and Eaton is $80 a month; and this Linwood-Pingree station is in transition where we might be operating it tomorrow, and we might not, but the rental is $110 a month; Gratiot and Saratoga, $50 a month; 14445 Linwood, we are operating; Livernois and Sparta is run at the rate of half a cent a gallon, no minimum.

Q. Do you know what that amounts to?

A. About $18 or $19 a month.

Q. $18 or $19 a month?

A. That is right. This is the property where 3003 the front end was cut off for the front end of the street, and it is practically valueless. The entire building is priced at $1,500. Now, John R and Horton, $50 a month.

Q. Why is that such a low rental at John R and Horton?

A. I believe it was about nine months ago that the street became a one-way street, and this station happens to be so situated on the street that it is almost inaccessible now that it is a one-way street, although the building is a large and expensive one, and the drive-in now is so inconvenient that the business is practically nil.

Q. Prior to nine months ago, do you know what the rental was?

A. $125 a month, plus a cent a gollon over every gallon over 12,500 gallons. That may be more or less than nine months ago, whenever the traffic was changed there to a one-way street.

Q. Now, why wasn't the rental offset against the obsolescence of each station?

A. Because we did not figure that the rental paid for the obsolescence of the building.

Q. What did it pay for?

A. It paid for the use and occupancy, and took care of the depreciation of the building, and nothing more.

Q. Well, doesn't—where is depreciation taken care of in this return, if it is not taken care of here? I mean, 3004 in this schedule.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You are speaking of Schedule No. 12?

Mr. Austin: I am speaking of all the schedules.

The Witness: Depreciation on these rental stations?

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Yes.

A. We have not taken depreciation here, because, actually, the rental would cover depreciation, as we take it.

Q. Do you consider the 2½% to be the depreciation allowance?

A. That is all we were allowed.

Q. Where? Allowed where?

A. By the income tax.

Q. If you were computing the wholesale cost per gallon of distributing gasoline to these seven stations, would you not charge all of those obsolescent figures against these particular stations?

A. I would say if those were the only stations we had.

Q. Well, they are not the only ones you had, but I am asking, if you were making a computation of the cost per gallon of delivering to those stations. In other words, assuming as to the rest of your costs where you allocated it on a gallonage basis.

A. I don't know. I imagine that would depend 3005 on the purpose of what I wanted the costs for.

Q. Well, if, taking into consideration these obsolescence figures, you would show a loss on these stations, do you think that that is a fair method of computing costs on your entire wholesale business, to throw your loss onto the rest of the business, whereas, it seems to me that actually they occur because of the fact that you have an investment in these particular stations?

A. I don't know, Mr. Austin, that we would show a loss on that. You mean, now, we would show a loss as far as our rental was concerned?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, that is true, but we still own the property, and the land.

Q. If there is a loss in your rental, that may be made up by your profits in selling gasoline to the stations?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. But that would still be a matter of computing the profits on the particular station?

A. As I say, the way we carry it, we feel it is a charge against our entire wholesale operation. There is no question that it is a loss, that there is a loss incurred at that particular station or that particular group of stations.

Q. There is no question of it?

3006 A. There is no question that any loss occasioned in any of these stations on rental comes strictly out of these stations, but we allocate it as an expense to the entire operation.

Q. Well, now, how does the operation of these stations affect or increase the sale of your wholesale business?

A. How does it?

Q. Yes.

A. That if we didn't have these stations, we wouldn't have that gallonage.

Q. You wouldn't have the gallonage at these stations?

A. That's right.

Q. But does the operation of these stations affect your gallonage or your costs as to any other station? I mean as to the sale of gasoline to any other station?

A. I don't understand. Do you mean does the operation of these stations increase our cost to any other stations?

Q. Increase it or decrease it. In other words, Mr. Biber, if you didn't have these six stations, if you sold all of those properties, do you know, would that affect your gallonage or profit in selling gasoline to any of your other stations?

A. Oh, yes; I think it would.

Q. How?

3007 A. Well, if we have our investment now in a bulk plant and trucks and drivers and so forth, now, if we deliver, oh, possibly a million and a half gallons, that these stations represent less than our per gallonage, our costs would go up. In other words, if our volume is down, our costs will go up.

Q. Then, do you mean that by investing in these properties, and operating these stations, that by getting more volume that it may, to that extent, decrease your per gallonage cost?

A. That's right.

Q. On the total?

A. That's right.

Q. And have you any idea—have you ever made any computation to determine how much effect it would have in that respect?

A. No, never.

Q. Now, turning over to Schedule 7, Respondent's Exhibit 13, for identification. That is entitled: "Interest on Use of Money Invested by Citrin-Kolb Oil Company to Operate the Business of Distributing Gasoline at Wholesale." I assume there is no real estate included there anywhere?

A. No.

Q. What does that total figure of $100,000 for 1940, represent?

A. That represents the total of the items 1 through 6. "Cash on Hand, Cash in Bank, Accounts Receivable—"

Q. Is that supposed to be capital investment?

A. Yes. That's what we have. That's the money used.

3008 Q. How did you arrive at the figure of 6%?

A. Figuring that as an interest charge at 6%.

Q. Why 6% rather than some other amount? If you had that money in the bank you wouldn't get 6% on it, would you?

A. No. The figure of 6% is purely arbitrary. It is a figure that we put on it.

Q. Were you present when Mr. Boatwright gave some testimony regarding the propriety of considering interest on investment as a distribution cost?

A. I believe I was.

Q. Do you recall that he stated that in his opinion, under good accounting practice, that interest on investment was not a distribution cost?

Mr. Abbott: Now, just a moment, if the Court please. As I recall the testimony on that, it was that there was disagreement on that subject on the part of economists and accountants, as to whether that should be charged or not.

Mr. Austin: Well, he stated, did he not, Mr. Abbott, that the Standard Oil Company does not do it, and, in his opinion, it was not a proper charge?

Mr. Abbott: Of course, the record will show, but I recall distinctly he said there was a disagreement on that.

I think ~~Mr.~~ Warmack will bear me out in my statement.

3009 Therefore, just for the record, I object to the question on that ground: that it states a fact not in evidence.

Mr. Austin: I didn't state any fact. I asked the witness what he recalled.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The question was read.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

A. I don't remember what he said on that, Mr. Austin, but I—

By Mr. Austin:

Q. What is ~~your~~ opinion on it?

A. I wouldn't want to express an opinion on it. If Mr. Boatwright said it wasn't, ~~my opinion~~ would be that it wasn't.

Q. Without attempting to go back to find out, now, what he actually said, I believe I am correct in saying—and I don't want to say this, if it is not so, Mr. Abbott—that the Standard Oil Company, in the cost figures submitted by Mr. Boatwright, did not include interest on investment.

A. As I say, I don't know it is good accounting practice, but in my taking these figures out, as a practical matter, I felt that money invested could be used elsewhere, and if you are using it in your business, you are entitled to interest on that investment. As I say, the rate of 3010 interest was purely arbitrary at 6%.

Q. In your testimony Friday, Mr. Biber, you were asked this question: "Q. Now, with reference to interest on investment in real estate, who is the one that determines the matter as to how much shall be charged off or deducted for income tax purposes attributable to interest on investment, both in real estate and personal property?

"A. Well, I wouldn't say I determine it. It is my job to find out how much we can deduct, and then deduct that amount.

"Q. Are these deductions—have they been approved by the Income Tax Department?

"A. They have.

"Q. Is that after consultation or has no question been raised by the Government on these questions?

"A. There was no question raised except the question of obsolescence came up this last year, and we talked to the Department, and asked how they advise we handle it."

I am calling your attention particularly to the statement that these deductions have been approved by the Income Tax Department. I have here a blank "Partnership Return of Income Tax" for 1940. [illegible] would like to have it marked, for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark 3011 the document Commission's Exhibit 79, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Commission's Exhibit 79.")

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Will you take this return, now, Mr. Biber, Commission's Exhibit 79, for identification, being a blank form "Partnership Return of Income, 1940," Federal return, and show me where, if anywhere there, that you deduct on your partnership return for Citrin-Kolb Oil Company any amount for interest on investment of either personal property or real estate?

A. I don't think we did. I thought your question had to do with depreciation on invested capital. I don't believe—I don't know; there may be here, if I look this over, but I don't believe there is a deduction for interest on invested capital.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may examine the document.

The Witness: Will you give me that question again, Mr. Austin?

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Well, this was in connection with the income tax returns, questions by Mr. Abbott, and he asked you with reference to interest on investment:

"Who is the one that determines the matter as to how much shall be charged off or deducted to income tax 3012 attributable to interest on investment both in real estate and personal property?" And you said that it was your job to find out how much you could deduct and then deduct that amount, and then the next question:

"Q. Are those deductions—have they been approved by the Income Tax Department?"

"A. They have."

A. I don't believe there is any deduction for that item.

Because the question was asked, I assumed that was depreciation they were speaking about. I don't think there is such a deduction for interest on investment capital.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I don't think so, either.

A. No. I don't think anybody would believe that. Because the question was asked, I assumed that must be depreciation.

Q. I thought perhaps you would like to correct that, if it was incorrect.

A. Yes. Because the matter that came up with the Income Tax Department was depreciation, not interest on invested capital.

Q. I will ask you now, Mr. Biber, whether any of the charges or items listed here as cost expenses under the headings "Interest on Use of Money Invested," under Schedule 7, Respondent's Exhibit 13, or any of the deductions taken for the purposes of this cost report, under Respondent's Exhibit 14, Schedule 8, were approved 3013 by the Federal Income Tax authorities?

A. No, they were not. I don't believe there was even room for such a deduction on an income tax return.

Q. They weren't submitted to those authorities, were they?

A. No.

Q. And they were not included on your partnership return?

A. No; I am sure they weren't.

Q. Now, will you turn to Schedule 8, Respondent's Exhibit 14, for identification? I would like to ask you whether that schedule isn't a duplication of the charge taken in Schedule 7 upon the items listed opposite item 5, "Personal Property"?

A. Yes, that is the same amount. Schedule 14 is merely an explanation of Item 8 on Schedule 3.

Q. Well, what is the difference between your charge of 6% interest on Exhibit 14, and your charge for 6% interest on Exhibit 13; on the same item?

A. You mean the charge on Schedule 3 and the charge on Schedule 7?

Q. No. I am talking about, now, Schedule 7 and Schedule 8, which are Exhibits 13 and 14, for identification. Now, on Schedule 7, opposite "Personal property" we have certain items.

A. That is true.

3014 Q. Certain amounts for each year.

A. Yes.

Q. A 6% interest is taken on those and charged as a distribution cost on Exhibit 9. Now, on Schedule 8 we find the same items of cost, but there is a deduction for depreciation and then, apparently, 6% is taken of the balance.

A. That's right.

Mr. Abbott: That is a misinterpretation of the exhibit. 6% is taken on the item in column 3.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Do you understand what I am getting at, Mr. Biber?

A. Yes, I do, now.

Q. I just want you to explain why those personal property items are included both on Exhibit 13 and Exhibit 14, and what is the difference between the schedules in that respect?

A. Exhibit 13 is computed for the interest of the use of the money invested by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in these items.

Q. Yes.

A. Now, Exhibit 14 is an item taken off of Schedule 3, which is 6% of the difference between the cost and the depreciation which we figured is cost of the money invested in the personal property.

3015 Q. Well, doesn't Schedule 7 refer to the interest on the money invested in the personal property?

A. Yes.

Now, if you wait a minute, maybe I can get the words to explain it. I see the difference, but I—

Q. Well, tell me this, Mr. Biber, while we are on that: where is this depreciation figure, or, I believe it is a net figure on Schedule 8, where it says: "Less depreciation." That means as to some deduction of depreciation?

A. That's right.

Q. And where did the amount of the deduction come from?

A. The depreciation item?

Q. There is no depreciation item here, as I understand it, but the depreciation item would be the difference between the cost column and the "Less Depreciation" column; is that right, or not?

A. This "Less Depreciation" column is the amount that has been deducted. The difference is the present investment in the property. This "Less Depreciation"—6% of $14,712.79.

Q. As I read this, then, the column rate, these figures are the result of taking 6% of the depreciation column?

A. That's right. In other words, the depreciation column is the difference between that amount taken off, and your cost. I know the difference between these two—

Q. Then, the 6% is 6% of the depreciation figure 3016 on Schedule 8, apparently?

A. No, that 6% is 6% of $14,712.79.

Q. You said that was depreciation—if I understood you correctly.

A. The difference between "Less Depreciation" and "Cost" is your depreciation. In other words, we don't show the amount of depreciation on this schedule.

Q. That's what I understood you to say awhile ago and I understood you to contradict me.

A. No, the difference there—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The depreciation has been computed over a series of years and deducted; is that it?

The Witness: Yes, it is off of here. It isn't on here at all.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Are the annual amounts of depreciation shown on any of these schedules?

A. Yes, on Schedule 5.

Q. Well, doesn't that only show part of it?

A. That shows for the individual years.

Q. Isn't there more than four years depreciation taken off under Schedule 8?

A. In 1937, yes. That probably goes back to the original life of the equipment that has been depreciated up until 1937.

3017 Mr. Abbott: I presume, Mr. Biber, you could get those figures for Mr. Austin, if he wants them, from your books.

The Witness: Yes, Schedule 5 just shows the annual depreciation.

Mr. Abbott: As I understand it, the depreciation figure goes back to 1937.

The Witness: Yes. Of course, they started to depreciate before then.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. You are there, then, charging as a wholesale distribution cost, 6% of the cost of machinery and equipment and trucks and so forth?

A. Yes.

Q. After taking depreciation?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, to that extent, why is that not a duplication of the 6% taken on the total cost under Schedule 7?

A. That goes back to that original question.

Q. Yes.

A. Well, you see, the schedule 13 and 14 are not additional figures. They are explanations of the figures on Schedule 3 and refer back.

3018 Q. The figures at the bottom of Schedule 13 and the bottom of Schedule 14 are carried over to Schedule 3?

A. They are.

Q. So they are the same figures?

A. You say they are carried over?

Q. Yes.

A. Well, then, the figure on Schedule 13 is interest on cash capital invested.

Q. Yes.

A. And the figure on Schedule 14 is interest on personal property invested.

Q. Well, what is the difference?

A. As I say, I think I see the difference thoroughly.

Q. Isn't it true that on Schedule No. 7, you have simply taken the gross property value without deducting the depreciation?

A. That is right.

Q. Whereas on Schedule No. 8 you have taken the net property value after deducting depreciation?

A. That is right, because the items will differ. In Item No. 7 or on Schedule 13, the purpose of that deduction is interest on the actual cash outlay. In other words, we have taken a certain amount of cash and put it into personal property, and we figure our interest on that amount.

Q. Yes?

3019 A. Now, this Item 8 on Schedule 14 is your interest on the personal property investment that you have at the present time.

Q. Well, that is still the money that you put into it, less depreciation?

A. Yes, I imagine it is. It comes from the original money. There is no question about that, but you have paid for the use—

Q. Well, don't you think it is an error to include Schedule 8 or the correspondent item on Schedule 3 and that that is a duplication in part of—

A. I don't believe it is.

Q. —of the previous 6% taken on the cost of personal property under Schedule 7?

A. I don't believe so, Mr. Austin. The way I took this figure out is this, my explanation for it is this: when we bought this personal property, say, $25,000 worth, we used $25,000. We borrowed it and had to pay interest on it, or we had it and could have gotten interest on it, and bought the personal property. Had we borrowed that $25,000, we would have had to pay interest on it. Now, we have in our possession personal property which is worth $25,000, less the depreciation that we have taken over a period of years. Now, if we sold that personal property and, say, the value is $15,000, we would 3020 have the use of that money at 6%. Whether or not an accountant would do it that way or not, I don't know, but practically and actually, we have that expense.

Q. Well, still, the $15,000 you get is left of the $25,000 you put in?

A. It is a result of that.

Q. Yes. Well, I think we have explained sufficiently, perhaps, what that is.

Turning to Schedule 9, Mr. Biber, Respondent's Exhibit No. 15, for identification, is your theory of the charging of interest on Schedule 9 the same as your theory of the charging of interest on personal property on Schedule 7?

A. Yes.

Q. And it is true, I take it, that these figures were not allowed on any income tax return?

A. No, that has no place on the income tax return.

Q. Are they recorded on your books of account; these charges?

A. No. The values, the costs set up are recorded on our books.

Q. And is this 6% rate also an arbitrary figure?

A. Yes, as an interest rate.

Q. Looking at one or two of those figures, under the column headed "Less Depreciation Charged," now, 3021 turning back to Schedule 4, the total depreciation for 1937 on Schedule 4, appears to be $975.20, whereas on Schedule 9, the figure appears of $1,705.10.

A. I would like to look at those values again and tell you what that is. That figure includes both the depreciation and obsolescence.

Q. What is that?

A. That figure of $1,705.10 includes depreciation and obsolescence. In other words, there is a figure on Schedule 4, and to that was added an obsolescence figure.

Q. Was that only done for 1937?

A. Well, I believe that was done for every year.

Q. Well, if you will compare those two schedules, you will see that the figure for 1938 and 1939 is just carried over.

A. Yes, that is carried over. Let me see if I can explain that 1937 figure now.

Q. Mr. Biber, maybe I can help you on that. If you will turn back to Schedule 4, you will remember you told me you took only six months' depreciation in 1937. It appears that that whole year has been taken in.

A. Yes. That is where the error is. They have taken depreciation on the Linwood property for the entire year.

Q. Well, then, the figure on Schedule 9 should be $975.20?

3022 A. Yes.

Q. Of course, that will slightly increase your interest charge, will it not?

A. Yes, it will make the charge a little larger.

Q. And I believe there is a typographical error in the next figure of $1,405.54, which should be $1,450.54?

A. Yes. $1,450.54.

Mr. Austin: I think that is all, your Honor, that I have on cross-examination on the exhibits offered by the Respondent, Nos. 7 to 15, inclusive.

Mr. Abbott: I would like to ask some questions in cross-examination of the voir dire.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: All right.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Biber, on Schedule 2—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. On Schedule 2 the last item is for deduction for oil at 5¢ a gallon, taken at 75,000 gallons for each year. What price for oil is that based on, if it is based on a price per gallon? Or, isn't it based on that?

A. It is not based on the price. It is just based on the cost of delivery, cost of handling.

3023 Q. How is that delivered? How is that item delivered; is it in bulk or how?

A. Well, it is either bulk or in cans. It is delivered on the gasoline truck and the gasoline truck has five racks to accommodate the carrying of oil either in boxes or in cans, and it is delivered in that manner.

Q. Is it delivered, in any event, in one of the compartments of the truck?

A. No.

Q. In your opinion, is that a proper deduction to be made, to be allocated to the cost of sale and delivering motor oil?

A. Is the amount proper?

Q. Yes.

A. I think the amount is excessive.

Q. In other words, it is conservative?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, referring to your examination of this morning, in referring to Schedule 5, which is Exhibit No. 11, for identification, introduced by Respondent, it appears there are some mathematical inaccuracies on that schedule. Have you made a computation to correct those inaccuracies? Or, I will ask you this: Have you made a computation to show the amount of interest representing depreciation at 6% on the whole schedule instead of computing it at 10%?

3024 A. Yes, I have computed it so that the figures will conform with the 6% rate.

Q. All the way through?

A. All the way through.

Q. And what difference—what is the figure for 1937, basing it on the 6% rate?

A. $1,516.81.

Q. What is the figure for 1938, basing it on the 6% rate all the way through?

A. $1,748.85.

Q. What is the figure for 1939, basing the depreciation on the 6% rate all the way through?

A. $2,138.52.

Q. And what are the corresponding figures, what is the corresponding figure for 1940, basing depreciation on the 6% rate all the way through?

A. $2,500.74.

Q. Now, have you made a computation to determine whether substituting those figures for the ones which appear on Exhibit No. 11, it would make any difference in the per gallonage cost of selling and delivering gasoline at wholesale?

A. I don't think it would make any difference within three decimal points.

Q. Well, the question was whether any computa-
3025 tions were made to determine whether there was any difference excepting—

A. No, I haven't computed the difference.

Mr. Abbott: Well, can we have a five minute recess, your Honor? I want to have him make a computation.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Abbott: I now move that we adjoin, to reconvene at 1:15 P. M.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Motion granted, and now, at 11:50 A. M., the hearing stands in recess until 1:15 P. M.

(Thereupon at 11:50 A. M., a recess was taken, to reconvene at 1:15 o'clock P. M.

3026 Afternoon Session.

1:15 P. M.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

Mr. Abbott: I want to make a motion first with reference to Respondent's Exhibit 18.

It appears from the record, your Honor, that in connection with Respondent's Exhibits 18-A to 18-Z and 18-Z to 18-z-51, that there are some separation sheets identified in the exhibit as Exhibits 18-A, 18-R, 18-Z 18-z-11, 18-z-17, 18-z-21, and 18-z-30, with respect to which no motion is made that they be received in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The designated exhibits are now admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 18-A, 18-R, 18-U, 18-z-11, 18-z-17, 18-z-21, and 18-z-30," were received in evidence.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Biber, this morning, I believe made a statement with reference to the net profits of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company for the years 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940, and you stated the amount of net profits for those years. With relation to the salaries of the partners, will you state 3027 whether that net profit is exclusive of those salaries, or includes those salaries?

A. That net profit includes those salaries.

Q. Now, Schedule 5, which is Respondent's Exhibit 11, for identification, appears to have some inaccuracies in the computation of the percentage. Have you recomputed those percentages on the basis of 6% overall?

A. Yes, I have.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Which exhibit are you now referring to?

Mr. Abbott: Respondent's Exhibit 11, for identification.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I think this is already in the record, but, applying the 6% rate to the items for the four years, what result do you get for 1937?

A. For 1937, it is $1,516.81.

Q. For 1938?

A. $1,748.85.

Q. For 1939?

A. $2,138.52.

Q. 1940?

A. $2,500.74.

Q. Now referring to the same schedule, and also to Schedule 6, which is Exhibit 12, in your opinion, are 3028 the items set forth on Exhibit No. 12 for obsolescence proper charges for this item?

A. I believe they are.

Q. Schedule 6, which is Exhibit No. 12, for identification, includes only, as I understand it, obsolescence on the land and building at the various locations mentioned?

A. That is obsolescence on the buildings in the locations mentioned.

Q. On buildings, yes. Now, Schedule 5, which is Exhibit

No. 11, I believe you said was repeated as Item 5 in Schedule 7, which is Exhibit 13.

A. Yes, that figure is repeated in Exhibit 13.

Q. That is to say, the item of cost?

A. That is right.

Q. Of machinery and equipment, truck equipment and furniture and fixtures?

A. That is right.

Mr. Austin: That is right. The witness was just referring to Schedule 6.

The Witness: Schedule 7.

Mr. Abbott: Schedule 7

Mr. Austin: Well, it might be well to make it clear. At least, I am not clear as to what figures he says are now included in Schedule 7.

Mr. Abbott: I will make it clear to this extent.

3029 By Mr. Abbott:

Q. The total cost of the items of Schedule 5, which is identified in this record as Exhibit No. 11, and transposed to Schedule 7, where they appear as item No. 5, is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. You are referring to Exhibit No. 12, again, which is Schedule 6, and, did I understand you to say that the stations which are identified on that schedule have a gallonage output of approximately 1,500,000 gallons a year?

A. Yes, I would say that that would be the approximate gallonage of those locations.

Q. That is approximate, is it?

A. Yes.

Q. Referring to Exhibit No. 13, for identification, which is Schedule No. 7, the last line, you used the percentage of 6% as the interest on use of money invested, and you stated, in your examination, that this was an arbitrary figure. In your opinion, is that a reasonable figure to be taken?

A. I always thought 6% was a reasonable interest figure.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I move to strike that question and answer upon the ground that on the question of accounting procedure and what are the proper figures, I don't think the witness is qualified. He is 3030 certainly qualified to tell us what figures are on the books of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and how they have been handled on those books, but he hasn't stated any basis for the use of such a figure. And he testified that it was an arbitrary figure, and I submit that he has not been shown to qualify to state an opinion upon what constitutes a reasonable figure for interest. There has been no basis of any knowledge upon which to give such an opinion, or there has been no basis for the opinion that any figure is a reasonable figure, or that the item should be charged at all. As I understand, the witness stated that he put it in here because he thought that interest on investment was a proper thing to put in as an item of cost, and there is no—it is conceded, apparently, that even that is, at least, subject to doubt.

Mr. Abbott: I am asking the question based upon his theoretical knowledge of accountancy, and also based upon his practical experience as the general manager of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is sustained. The motion is granted. The question and answer are stricken.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, Mr. Biber, referring to Respondent's Exhibit
9, for identification, which is Schedule 3; if you omit 3031 item 6 on Exhibit 9, for identification, which is headed
"Obsolescence"; if you also omit Item 7, which is
"Interest on Cash Capital Invested"; if you also omit
Item 8, which is "Interest on Personal Property Invested"; if you also omit Item 9, which is "Interest on Real Estate Invested" and if you correct the figures on Item 8, as you have indicated for "Depreciation of Equipment;" and recompute the per gallonage cost of selling and delivering gasoline for 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940, what figure do you get for the per gallonage cost for those years, assuming that all those items are omitted from the schedule of operating costs? Have you computed that during the noon hour?

A. Yes. I have taken the total operating cost from Exhibit 8 as it stands and—

Q. Well, Exhibit 8 is "Overhead costs"?

A. "Operating cost."

Q. You haven't changed that?

A. No, I haven't changed that at all; and adding to that only Items 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 10, and eliminating all obsolescence and interest on cash capital or interest on personal property, interest on real estate invested, the computations on the per gallonage figures is as follows: 1937: 1.30¢ per gallon; for 1938, 1.41¢ per gallon; 1939, 1.69¢ per gallon; 1940, 1.53¢ per gallon.

Q. That is to say, if you eliminate all the items to 3032 which there has been exception raised by counsel for the commission, eliminate them all entirely, that is the result that you would get?

A. That would result in the figures I have just stated.

Mr. Abbott: That's all I have as cross-examination on the voir dire.

May we have a couple of minutes, if your Honor please?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a recess.

(Thereupon a short recess was had.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Reconvene.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. I have just one question, Mr. Biber. I am not sure whether I asked you this or not: but, turning to Schedule 6, which is Exhibit No. 12, for identification, are those figures for obsolescence in the last four columns of that schedule carried as obsolescence figures on your books of account?

A. No, they are not.

Mr. Austin: I think that is all on these schedules.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Any further questions?

3033 Mr. Abbott: Yes, I want to ask the witness a few more questions on direct examination.

Direct Examination (Continued) by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Mr. Biber, of your own knowledge, will you state the fact as to whether the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company is at the present time considering any offers from other suppliers of gasoline to supply their requirements of gasoline?

A. Yes, there is one offer which we are considering at the present time.

Q. And which is that?

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor, upon the ground that—well, the time the offer was received has not been established, but Mr. Citrin testified to all the offers received and if it is something that has happened since Mr. Citrin's testimony, it seems to me that I am in doubt as to whether it could have any materiality or relevancy.

Mr. Abbott: I will say for the record that it doesn't refer to anything that has transpired since Mr. Citrin testified.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understand it is with reference to some negotiations or tentative negotiations now being conducted; is that correct, Mr. Abbott?

Mr. Abbott: That is correct.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

3034 By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I don't know whether you answered this or not, Mr. Biber, but does the Standard Oil Company ever pay any of the expense of equipment or maintaining equipment at any of your retailer outlets or stations that you either supply or operate?

A. They do not.

Q. Who does maintain that expense?

A. The Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

Q. Does that include replacing ~~parts~~ that become worn out?

A. That includes maintaining the equipment, replacing parts of the equipment, or replacing the entire equipment.

Q. Does it include maintaining the appearance by repainting?

A. Yes, it includes repainting of buildings, repainting of pumps, even replacement of concrete on driveways.

Q. Do I understand that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company pays all that expense?

A. That is right, they do.

Q. And as to whether Standard Oil Company at any time has paid any of that expense with reference to those stations, either operated or supplied?

A. They never have since we have been on a tank car basis.

Mr. Abbott: That's all with the direct examination.

3035 Cross-Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. Who owns the equipment that you have been referring to, at the retail stations that you serve?

A. You mean the equipment that I say we maintain?

Q. Yes.

A. We own a lot of it, and some of it the station operator owns, and some of it the owner of the property owns.

Q. I suppose you only refer to what you own, when you say you maintain it in repair?

A. Yes, that is the only equipment we are obliged to maintain, although at some instances, to keep a customer satisfied, we do fix a pump or repair a hose, or something of that sort.

Q. And where does that expense appear in these schedules, or does it appear?

A. I believe that is either in maintenance or repairs. I don't remember the item.

Q. Item 10 on Exhibit 8 is "Repair."

A. I don't believe that figure includes any of that repair. This figure includes repairs at the bulk plant and bulk plant equipment and truck repairs, pump repairs at the bulk plant, repairs of the buildings, and so forth. I don't believe that item of pump repair appears here at all. I don't think it is an item in any of these schedules.

3036 Q. Is that because you consider it an expense incident to retail rather than wholesale operation?

A. Yes, that's part of it; because our account that carries that would also carry the repairs to equipment at our own leased and our own operated stations, so instead of trying to break the amount down, we just left it out.

Mr. Austin: That's all.

Mr. Abbott: That's all the cross examination?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: There is one matter to be disposed of.

The Examiner, at the conclusion, would like to ask the witness a few questions, but they don't pertain to the admissibility of Respondent's Exhibits 7 to 15, inclusive, for identification.

I will hear from counsel for the Commission with reference to the offer or motion for the admission of Respondent's Exhibits 7 to 15, both inclusive, for identification, in evidence.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I renew my objection to them upon the ground that the wholesale cost of distribution is immaterial and irrelevant, and, secondly, upon the basis of the cross examination I object upon the ground that there are certain items here that are or were included in Schedule 5, which is Respondent's Exhibit

3037 11, for identification, and items in Exhibits 12, 13,
14, and 15, as to which no proper ground has been laid for including as wholesale costs upon the basis of any testimony upon the theory of including such items by any witness qualified to testify.

Of course, I realize that a recomputation has been made leaving those items out, so that, as I understand it, the offer includes now the—well, I don't know that the offer includes it. I suppose it is proper to say that the testimony of the witness now includes a computation of costs based upon these schedules, and leaving out certain of these figures, but I think at least it can be said that certain of these schedules which are here included and which are being offered, have not been properly substantiated as wholesale costs, and should not be admissible as evidence of the costs to the extent that the costs proposed to be proved are only supported by those schedules and by the testimony of the witness in regard thereto.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, on the question of the general admissibility, I have already stated on the record that there are two reasons why, in our opinion, this testimony is relevant. First, because, although we realize that the primary inquiry is as to the cost of the Respondent, yet the operation, the mechanical operation which is involved with reference to the sale and delivery of gasoline at retail 3038 from bulk plant to service station is practically identical, no matter who performs the function, and, therefore, the per gallonage cost of selling and delivering gasoline at wholesale from the bulk plant to the service station of this jobber has a tendency, in connection with the testimony as to the per gallonage cost of the Respondent, to tie into that testimony and to show its accuracy.

Secondly, it is our contention that this testimony is relevant because it shows a lack of opportunity, or, a lack of the potentiality—I think was the word which has been often used by the Examiner—to pass on a part of the differential between the tank car and the tank wagon price in the form of a price cutting by the jobber who participates both in wholesale and the operation of retail stations, and it is on account of this latter consideration that we particularly urge the relevancy of this testimony because in the case of this jobber, figures show that in the year 1940, the cost of selling and delivering gasoline was 1.53 per gallon or .03 more than the differential between the tank car and the tank wagon price.

Now, upon the question as to the objections raised to certain of the exhibits which have been offered in evidence. I refer now to Exhibit 9, for identification, which is Schedule 3.

During the noon hour Mr. Biber stated that he re-3039 computed the per gallonage cost of selling and delivering gasoline at wholesale for all four years and eliminated from his computation entirely items 6, 7, 8, and 9 on Exhibit 9 for identification. In other words, he eliminated obsolescence entirely for each of the four years.

He also eliminated the item of interest on cash capital invested for all four years.

He also eliminated item 8, which is headed "Interest on Personal Property Invested," and he also eliminated item 9, which is headed "Interest on Real Estate Invested."

He also corrected the amounts on Item 5 by computing the depreciation at a flat 6% instead of 10%, as was done in some cases, because there was objection raised to that, and based upon those eliminations which I think take care of every objection raised by counsel for the Commission, he finds, upon such recomputation, that the per gallonage cost for 1937 was 1.30¢ per gallon; for 1938, 1.41¢ per gallon; 1939, 1.69¢ per gallon, and for 1940, 1.53¢ per gallon. In other words, eliminating every possible objection that has been raised by the attorney for the Commission, he has amended the per gallonage cost in such a way as to amend by oral testimony Schedule 1, which is Exhibit 7, for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is it now your desire that the Exhibits shall be considered in the light of the 3040 witness' testimony?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And that such amendments and changes as he has testified to would be proper may be considered as made on the exhibits.

Mr. Abbott: Yes, your Honor. Yes, that is what I mean to say, and with those amendments which I do not concede must be physically made on the exhibits, but may be taken in connection with the testimony of Mr. Biber, I submit that the exhibits, as so amended, should be admitted in evidence, because they eliminate every conceivable objection that has been made during the examination today on the part of the attorney for the Commission. And, therefore, there is no further objection that I conceive that can be made to the exhibits as they have been thus amended.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I have to take issue with Mr. Abbott's statement that the elimination of those three schedules or those four schedules and the correction on the fifth one would eliminate all objections which might be made.

Mr. Abbott: I say that have been made.

Mr. Austin: The only—there has been no objection made as such. The witness has been questioned as to all of these schedules, and while they appear from his 3041 testimony given that some items are more doubtful than others, I just want to make it clear that I am not conceding on any item here that it is a proper item of the wholesale cost. I want to state that for the record I don't believe I have made or have not attempted to make any statement of the objection that I might argue or might urge to the Commission in the event that this was submitted in evidence; so that is made to reserve my position in that respect.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is in serious doubt as to the weight to be given the testimony of the witness and the exhibits: Respondent's Exhibits 7 to 15, inclusive, for identification, but believes that that is a matter that should be passed upon by the Commission, accordingly, he overrules the objection and admits Respondent's Exhibits 7 to 15, for identification, in evidence; the exhibits, however, to be considered in the light and in connection with the witness' testimony.

Mr. Abbott: That is all, Mr. Biber.

Mr. Austin: Now, if your Honor please, I will move to strike from the record Respondent's Exhibits 12, 13, 14, and 15, and also to strike Respondent's Exhibit 11, unless it is physically corrected in the manner which the witness testified after we returned from lunch.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner thinks the
3042 conform to the witness' testimony.

Mr. Abbott: Well, I don't think those exhibits 12, 13, 14, and 15, should be physically stricken from the record, because I think the Commission would want to see what they contain. Of course, the testimony of Mr. Biber assumes that the items which are contained therein shall be eliminated for the purpose of a computation which he makes.

Mr. Austin: Well, let me qualify my motion, if you will; please? I am not moving that 12, 13, 14, and 15 be physically stricken, but I am moving that they be stricken from the record, and I move that No. 11 be physically corrected to eliminate the errors in computation.

Mr. Abbott: Well, I think that possibly that last observation is well taken, but as to the striking of No. 12, 13, 14, and 15, I see no reason why they should be stricken from the record, because the Commission may want to examine into the contents of those exhibits. I understand you to say that you don't mean that they shall be physically stricken.

Mr. Austin: Well, I made the motion the same as to testimony in the record, unless there is a different policy as regards exhibits. How would that work out, your Honor?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without reference to the exhibits, would the Commission understand the testi-3043 mony of Mr. Biber without the exhibits?

Mr. Abbott: I don't think they would.

Mr. Austin: If it is intended here, but I understand in answer to your Honor's statement a moment ago, before you admitted these, Mr. Abott stated they were being offered really on the last computation, which was a change in Respondent's Exhibit No 7., and that they were being offered without using or including the figures on Exhibits 12, 13, 14, and 15. Now, if that was the offer and if they were admitted upon that basis, then I think that Exhibits 12, 13, 14, and 15 should be stricken from the record, and Respondent's Exhibit No. 7 should be corrected in the margin of the exhibit, as well as to correct Exhibit No. 11.

Mr. Abbott: Well, I think the record is sufficiently clear without doing that. I don't see why it should be done that way, because the Court now, with Mr. Biber's testimony, shows us what is intended to be done, and they have all been admitted into evidence, and I think that that is the most logical way to do it, to allow the exhibits to remain in the record the way they have already been admitted by your Honor.

Mr. Austin: Well, I would like to have it appear on the record as to whether or not the Examiner has admitted in evidence Schedules 12, 13, 14, and 15, and the compu-3044 tations based thereon or whether the admission in evidence was an admission of computation made without using the figures on those schedules.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner admitted all of the exhibits in evidence to be considered in the light of and in connection with the testimony of the witness. He understood that the witness, in his last computation, omitted all of the items appearing on Respondent's Exhibits 12, 13, 14, and 15. That is clear on the record. While the exhibits are being included in the record, to be considered as having been put into discard by the witness.

Mr. Austin: Well, then, in that case your Honor, I move—I withdraw my previous motion and request that on Respondent's Exhibit No. 7, the figures in the last column—no. I move that Respondent's Exhibit No. 7 be stricken, but that the Respondent be permitted to substitute for that a computation based upon the figures as stated by Mr. Biber after lunch. I don't think they could be corrected, but I think it should be stricken and another exhibit put in its place, and, if that is done, then I don't object to leaving 12, 13, 14, and 15 in evidence, and if the Respondent wants to argue to the Commission later that those should have been included, then he can also do that, but I understand it now, Exhibit 7, as it stands, is not what is admitted into evidence.

3045 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The corrections which the witness has testified, should be made.

Mr. Abbott: Well, they are already made on the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I say they are made on the record.

Mr. Austin: Don't you think that when anything is put in in the form of an exhibit that it should reflect on its face what is in the record? I see no advantage of an exhibit unless you can look at it, and, without turning to the record, get some benefit from it. If the exhibit alone is misleading, I don't think it is any good.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I think it would be helpful to anyone picking up the record and examining only the exhibit, but I think this may be informative to the Commission to let these exhibits stand as they are, and considered in the light of the witness' testimony.

The motion is granted.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 7 to 15, inclusive," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Abbott: That is all, Mr. Biber.

Mr. Austin: Just a moment, Mr. Biber. I have something in mind here.

3046 Cross-Examination (Continued) by Mr. Austin.

Q. Would you mind referring to your figures again on your net profits shown on the partnership returns for 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940? Now, will you tell me again the net profit figure for 1938?

A. $40,116.13.

Q. And for 1939?

A. $34,207.42.

Q. Wasn't there—what is 1937? That was the first one.

A. $45,839.59.

Q. Now, turn to Respondent's Exhibit No. 7, Mr. Biber. Does the next to the last column of that show the total gallons of gasoline sold by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in the representative years given there?

A. Yes.

Q. And that is exclusive of gasoline sold at the retail stations you operated, is it not?

A. That is right, it is.

Q. Have you made a computation for any year—and I would suggest the use of the year 1938, because that seems to be the largest gallonage and it isn't the largest profit year—so that for an average year, fairly average year, I would suggest that the profits for the year 1938 be divided by the number of gallons of gasoline, and if they were done, would that, in your opinion, show the net profit per 3047 gallon of gasoline made by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company during that year?

A. No.

Q. There would have to be some deduction for oil, I suppose.

A. There would have to be deductions for oil. There might have to be deductions if there were any profit in rent.

Q. Were there—

A. I don't know that there were, but the figures that I gave you for the net profits have nothing to do with allocating it to gasoline. The net profit as shown on the income tax return is everything.

Q. Of course, if there were any profits in operating the retail stations, that would have to be eliminated, is that right?

A. That would have to be eliminated.

Q. And profits on the sale of oil?

A. That would have to be eliminated.

Q. And profits on real estate transactions which, I suppose would include rental?

A. That's right. That would have to be eliminated.

Q. On rental profits, that would be simply the excess of rent received over rent paid, or what would it be?

A. Excess of rentals received over rent paid; and 3048 that's possible in 1937 and 1938 that there was.

Q. I would like to have, if it could be obtained without any great difficulty, a break-down of your net profits; that is, have you make an allocation. It doesn't have to be absolutely accurate, but I would like to have an allocation made of your net profit as between gasoline and other sources of revenue and have you able to tell me, if you submitted such an allocation, how you made it.

A. I don't think it is possible to make it.

Q. You don't think it is possible?

A. No. The retail stations are all in that. In other words, on the income tax return we cannot and would not be allowed to make any differences. We can't file more than one return, and I—

Q. You very readily here made a deduction here for costs on oil and other things.

A. If that is the kind of a computation you want, then we could do it. In other words, we could break it up in round figures. ~~There wou~~ldn't be any difficulty about that, but if you wanted us to go back into the books and divide them, I don't know how that could be done.

Q. As long as these cost statements have been submitted upon the assumption—whether it be right or wrong—that the proper charge for oil was 5¢ a gallon on costs—

A. That's right.

3049 Q. —if the sum of $3,750, which is your sum of cost for oil, if that were taken as a percentage of your total costs, then I assume your could apply the same percentage to this income figure?

A. Yes it can be done on that basis.

Q. And it seems to me that would be consistent. If you are going to apply that to costs, it could be just as well applied to profit?

A. If you want to determine from what we know about the business, about how much profits is in oil and what part of the profit is in real estate and what part of the profit is in gasoline, we could do that. But I was thinking of pulling these figures out of the books.

Q. No. I was trying to ~~get~~ merely a rough approximation, and, as I understand your testimony, this figure of 5¢ a gallon, while it is attributed to oil, it is intended to cover all the expenses other than wholesale gasoline costs.

A. That's right.

Q. I believe that is sufficient, because anything beyond that would be computation. Can you think of any reason why it wouldn't be possible, from the figures here to make that sort of computation?

Mr. Abbott: I will object to that on the ground it calls for a mathematical conclusion of the witness.

Mr. Austin: I am not trying to do that.

3050 A. Apportioning the profit would be a tough proposition.

I happen to remember one instance where we bought some tanks we thought we might be able to use. We found out later we had no use for them and we sold them at a profit. Those items would come in. We sold real estate at a profit. There would be a lot of items to consider.

Q. What those would be, outside of anything comparable to an allocation in costs of operation?

A. That's right. In other words, they wouldn't be reflected in the cost, and still it would be in the profit.

Q. Do you know whether in 1938 and 1939 there were any substantial real estate transactions that resulted in a profit?

A. I would say there were some. I wouldn't say they were substantial.

I know of a couple of pieces sold, that were vacant, that we contemplated erecting stations on and sold them for the land itself, at a profit.

Q. Would that be in 1938 and 1939?

A. 1937 or 1938.

Q. We have been told here several times, 1938 was not such a good year, so I was wondering whether you had any of those unusual transactions in 1938.

A. Well it might have occurred in 1938, because it was easy to buy things cheaply in 1938 if you had the cash.

3051 Q. But, of course, that wouldn't have resulted in any profit until you were ready to sell it?

A. Not until we sold it.

Mr. Austin: I think we have pursued that far enough. Thank you, Mr. Biber.

Mr. Abbott: That's all, Mr. Biber.

Mr. Abbott: That's all, Mr. Biber. May I go off the record?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Austin: I am through on the schedules, but I have further cross-examination.

Cross-Examination (Continued) by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Biber, I would like to have the reporter read the record in the voir dire examination, and wish you would answer the last unanswered question.

The Reporter: "Q. The photographs and sales slips referred to were pictures of stations and, I believe, sales slips indicated purchases made at stations near a certain group of Citrin-Kolb stations.

"A. That's right.

"Q. Six stations which were either operated by or supplied by Citrin-Kolb. By your answer to that question did you mean to indicate that all of the stations in the 3052 neighborhood of those six Citrin-Kolb stations were charging the prices shown in those pictures?"

A. I would say by that answer I meant that these pictures and the buys made were not the only one that I could have made at that time in those vicinities.

Q. Do you mean at the same price?

A. At the same price or at a discount price.

Q. Well, will you answer my question, which was whether or not in giving this answer on page 2879 of the record, you meant to say that all of the stations in the neighborhood of the six Citrin-Kolb stations were charging the prices shown in these photographs.

A. All of them? No.

Q. Did you mean that the majority of these stations in that neighborhood were charging the prices as low as those in the photographs?

A. At the time the photographs were taken I would say they were, with the exception that there weren't other stations selling at the same price as shown in the photographs of Charles Austin's stations, Joy or Zip stations, but where the photographs showed a discount sign on a major product, I would say that a great majority of the stations around that station also displayed signs.

Q. But you would not apply that to any of the pictures or sales slips except those on major products?

3053 A. That's right. There never has been a meeting of the posted price on that Joy or Zip gasoline.

Q. Now your answer covered the years 1938 to 1941, inclusive, and you stated, I believe Friday, that conditions have been much better since November, 1939.

A. Yes, they have been.

Q. Then, would you say as to the period from November, 1939, to date, that those pictures and purchase receipts showed conditions typical of the price cutting prevalent in the Detroit area?

A. I would say that there are a great number of stations in the Detroit area that did sell gasoline at the same price as the buys or pictures shown in the exhibits; right up to the present time.

Q. What do you mean by "great number"?

A. It is almost impossible to say, because you would have to make a buy. There is no indication at stations now of discount selling. All discounts now are under canopy discounts.

Q. Going back to the years 1938 and 1939. Do I understand you to say that the majority of the service stations in the neighborhood of those six Citrin-Kolb stations, respectively, were selling gasoline at retail at prices below what has been referred to as the prevailing retail price?

A. Yes, I would say a great majority of them had been.

3054 Q. What is your understanding of the term "prevailing retail price" as it has been used in this case?

A. Well, the prevailing retail price, as used in this case are those figures on the schedules in evidence here, which are prices from which the trade computed their discounts. It was a figure that the trade and the industry at large accepted as the retail selling price, and it is true that in many instances a lower price actually prevailed. The word "prevailing" is rather a name of the price rather than a description of the price.

Q. Is it your understanding that the term "prevailing retail price" means the price being charged at any one time by the majority of retail stations selling major brand oil?

A. No, that is not what was meant by a prevailing retail price, and it is not the sense in which prevailing retail price is used in the industry.

Q. Who determines what the prevailing retail price is?

A. I would say custom and usage in the industry determines that. In other words, when 75% of the stations display signs 2¢ off and the prevailing retail price is 17¢, in the definitive form, the prevailing price is 15¢, but using the prevailing price in its descriptive form, the prevailing price is 17¢. It has got to be 2¢ off of something, and it is what we call 2¢ off the prevailing price.

3055 Q. How does the 17¢ come into being?

A. Well, I would say since 1937 and 1938 the prevailing retail price here in Detroit has been determined largely by the dictates of the Gasoline Retailers Association. They have told their dealers that they ought to have a certain margin, and that is the margin they ought to sell at, and anybody selling under that margin is either approached by members of the Association or otherwise approached through the oil companies, through the suppliers, to meet that price. It is a price they said gasoline should be sold at.

Q. It doesn't appear that the efforts of the Association did much good, if the majority of the members sel below it.

A. I don't say the efforts did much good, but I say that is a way of determining what the retail, prevailing retail price was. Using the prevailing retail price as we have used it here, rather than—

Q. Isn't the prevailing retail price, the price which most of the major dealers have posted on their pumps?

A. Yes, posted on their pumps; that's right.

Q. And isn't it true that the number of stations advertising cuts below that posted price varied, from time to time?

A. The number of service stations varied?

Q. Yes.

A. Oh, yes.

3056 Q. In the areas which those photographs are supposed to cover?

A. Oh, yes; surely.

Q. Then, again referring to your statement that those buys and pictures show conditions typical of price cutting prevailing in the Detroit area for the years 1938 to 1941, inclusive, do I understand you now to say that such price cutting was not prevalent during the years 1940 and 1941? I am talking now about advertised price cutting, now, Mr. Biber, because that's all the photographs show.

A. You mean posted discounts?

Q. Yes.

A. You asked me about photographs and buys. On the photographs, alone, since the latter part of 1939, many of the signs have been eliminated, and I would say in the last, possibly last year, there are very few signs posted, although there are still some today.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge, beyond the purchases which you have made and testified to here, as to the extent of under canopy discount which was present during 1940? I would like to amend that by striking out the word "prevalent". I would like to say which existed during 1940.

A. Do I have personal knowledge?

Q. Yes.

A. I believe I have. I have been told by salesmen.
3057 I have been told by our supervisor to go out and make buys, to get information. I have a lot more information in my files that spreads over the City of Detroit.

Q. Do you have any information of discounts being given, other discounts than to what you have testified?

A. Yes.

Q. You have made purchases at other stations?

A. Oh, yes; I have made other purchases, but when I say "Yes" now, I don't say from purchases I have made. From conversations with the dealer himself, and conversations with customers, conversations with customers we have lost; under canopy discounting is quite prevalent today.

Q. When you say "prevalent" I would like to get at that.

A. I wouldn't like to put a percentage on that. I would say you wouldn't have to go three blocks to get a discount on your discount.

Q. Today?

A. Today.

Q. Does that apply to stations dealing in brands of major oil companies?

A. Yes, I am talking about major brands.

Q. You referred a moment ago to the prices charged by the Charles Austin stations, Zip and Joy gasoline, and didn't you say that their advertised price was always lower than the major price? You said something 3058 about a differential which had always existed there.

A. Yes. No major product has ever met the price of Austin's stations.

Q. Isn't there a certain recognized differential as between those gasolines and major gasolines?

A. Is there a recognized differential?

Q. Yes.

A. I only know that there always has been a differential. Whether there is any recognized figure, or not, I don't know. I don't believe there is.

Q. Is the difference between the price at which they sell and the price at which major brands sell at retail generally referred to as a differential?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. You quoted that on Friday in your testimony. You referred to the differential between Zip and Joy stations and majors, and I think you said something about it being greater at some times than others.

A. That's right. There hasn't been any fixed differential; that is, as between tank car and tank wagon price. There is a difference in price.

Q. How is that generally referred to as?

A. It is generally referred to as a differential, but not the differential.

Q. Well, a differential.

3059 A. Yes. There is no question there is a difference in price.

Q. Aren't the Zip and Joy prices generally referred to as—rather, the difference between those prices and major prices, isn't that generally referred to as the differential, rather than a price cut?

A. I would say—I don't know whether it was referred to that way or not, but I would say it was. In my own mind, it is a differential.

Q. What would you say is a normal differential or can you make any statement on that, as between Zip and Joy gasolines, and gasoline of that type?

Mr. Abbott: I object to the use of the word "normal".

Mr. Austin: I am asking him whether he can state it. I will withdraw that, because it is too indefinite. I will restrict it to Zip and Joy.

Mr. Abbott: On the word "normal". I object to that on the ground the question isn't intelligible because it might be assumed that the word "normal" would mean what was to be expected. I think the question is indefinite.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The last question was read.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you understand by the word "normal"?

The Witness: Well, I understand Mr. Austin to 3060 mean what difference in price would be allowed and still leave the products comparable in price.

Mr. Austin: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Ordinarily?

The Witness: Ordinarily. I would say there should be a 1¢ differential.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. 1¢?

A. That's right. That, I believe, is a figure accepted by most operators and most people in the industry, and a figure once quoted at the Retail Gasoline Dealers Association Directors meeting, in my presence, as being the proper differential.

Q. By "proper differential" do you mean a price at which the—

A. By that I mean that anything, any differential over 1¢ should be considered price cutting, because a differential of 1¢, I would say, is proper, but if Austin's prices are more than 1¢ lower than major prices, the difference between that price and 1¢ is price cutting.

Q. How about gasolines like sold on tank car spot market, or any unbranded gas?

A. I wouldn't venture as to that gas, because that is a product that changes every day. These people buy a different brand every day. There is no brand or quality to their gasoline.

3061 That gasoline is not comparable to Zip or Joy which he advertises and which is subject to chemical analysis and which he advertises as Grade 1.

Q. In other words, you consider the Zip and Joy as having a better public acceptance than the unbranded?

A. Oh, yes; unquestionably.

Mr. Austin: Now, if your Honor please, upon the basis of the witness' testimony, I move to strike from Respondent's Exhibit 18-A to 18-Z-51, all notations that now appear thereon with regard to prevailing prices, upon the ground that the witness has testified that they do not represent the prevailing price within the usual meaning of the word "prevailing" and, therefore, there is no basis for comparison, because the prevailing price stated on there is a fictitious price, or, at least, was not the price charged by the majority of stations during the periods referred to.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let the Examiner see the exhibits and notations to which reference is made.

(Thereupon the documents referred to were handed to the Examiner.)

Mr. Austin: You can just open them at random. Here is one of them (referring to a document).

Mr. Abbott: That is the Standard Oil Company of Ohio. Is that what you referred to?

Mr. Austin: I just opened it at random. I move
3062 to strike out all of them that appear on these sheets.

Mr. Abbott: Is it my understanding you claim Mr. Biber's testimony is different than what was stated the other day as to what constituted the prevailing retail price?

Mr. Austin: I don't know whether there has been a statement before. I asked Mr. Biber whether the majority of these stations, at the time these photographs were referred to, were charging this price, and he said the majority of them were cutting, and I say that if the majority were indulging in it, they were not the prevailing price. The prevailing price means the price charged at the majority of stations at any one date, and if it means something else, I don't think this annotation should be on here.

Mr. Abbott: If your contention is correct, you would have to compute for every year to determine the number of stations who were price cutting and determine whether there were more that were price cutting than weren't price cutting. I don't think you could make any substantial evaluation of the situation, based on the four years involved in that book, because those pictures cover 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness has testified, as the Examiner recalls, that the prevailing retail price is the price prevailing at the majority of the stations. Is that correct?

3063 Mr. Austin: I don't understand it quite that way, your Honor. I understand him to say that the word "prevailing" has two meanings, the technical meaning, and then of the definitive meaning. He has said this is not the price being charged at the majority of stations, but it is the price posted on the pumps at the majority of stations, and I am not sure, farther, whether he went on to say it was simply a basis used for cuts.

Mr. Abbott: I will say this, your Honor. I think the motion is purely premature. I don't think the motion should be asked until I have an opportunity to redirect examine the witness, because as the Court has stated, the witness' testimony is not very clear, and I think it should be definitely brought out on redirect examination.

Mr. Austin: I think it is very clear.

Mr. Abbott: As to what he meant when he answered that question.

Mr. Austin: I think it is very clear that the witness has stated that at least in a considerable part of the time covered by these photographs, that the price here called the prevailing price was not the price in the majority of the stations.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness testified to that with certainty.

Mr. Abbott: I wish to redirect examine the witness before the Examiner passes on that motion. I 3064 think I have a right to do that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may do so at this time.

Mr. Abbott: I would also like to have an opportunity to examine the record and have read back the testimony which was asked him when he made the answer as to what was the prevailing retail price, so it could be identified as to the year as to which it was testified.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Reporter, read the record, in that regard.

(The record was read.)

Redirect Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Well, Mr. Biber, having considered the testimony which you gave a few minutes ago, and which has now been read to you, I will ask you in connection with Exhibits 18-A to 18-Z and 18-Z to 18-Z-51, what you meant to testify with reference to what constitutes the prevailing retail price and what constituted the prevailing retail price for the years which the pictures in that exhibit portray?

A. Well, as I said, the term "prevailing retail price" is a price which the industry understands to be the retail selling price, the consumer's price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is the actual price?

3065 The Witness: No, that is not the actual price. It is a word used from which the actual price is computed, if a man were going to discount, if a man were going to sell at full price, he would sell at what we call the prevailing retail price, prevailing not meaning the price at which gasoline is sold at most stations. It is a term used which I think ought to be defined in the manner of the term used. For instance, we used the term "drum" as meaning a barrel for oil, and an orchestra leader thinks of a drum as an instrument, a musical instrument. Now, by the same token, it is not what Webster would call in his dictionary, but what the industry calls it, and the prices on those pictures and the testimony I gave concerning retail prices is a term used in the industry, but it is not and does not mean sold at most of the stations, but the price at which most of the stations sold it. The pump carried the price 17¢, and most of the stations carried it at 17¢. Now, that is the prevailing price as used in the industry. The fact that they may have sold under that and given 2 or 3 or 1¢ discounts had nothing to do with the term "prevailing retail price".

Mr. Abbott: In view of the testimony the witness has given, I move that the motion be denied.

Mr. Austin: Let me ask one more question, your Honor.

3066 Trial Examiner Ballinger: All right.

Recross Examination by Mr. Austin.

Q. At the time shown in those pictures, were the prices charged by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company and its various stations—

A. I can explain that this way: the reason for taking these pictures in many cases was to show surrounding competition to justify our cutting the price. Later, and I would say that in most of these instances, soon after these photographs were taken or some time after these photographs were taken our stations cut to meet this competitive price, and that originally was the purpose of these photographs. So, our stations never cut prices on the date that those photographs were taken or before, but usually after, except in the instances of 1940 and 1941, our stations cut prices to meet that competition, and in 1940 and 1941 we never cut the price.

Q. Did the majority of the stations cut the price in 1940 and 1941, the major oil company stations?

A. No.

Q. In 1940 and 1941, is it your testimony that the prevailing price shown by the pictures and buys shown for that period represent the price?

A. Yes. You mean in 1940 and 1941?

3067 Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I think that would conform to my definition and your definition of 1940 and 1941.

Q. Now, as to 1938 and 1939, do I understand your testimony to be that the majority of the stations in those neighborhoods did not charge what is referred to as the prevailing retail price?

A. That is right.

I would say in 1938 and 1939 most of the stations were giving discounts off of the prevailing retail price.

Q. And you are using "prevailing price" now in the technical industry sense?

A. That is right.

Q. Just one more question. Why, in that period, were those Citrin-Kolb stations among the last ones to, or at least not among the first group to cut? I understand your testimony to be now that the majority of the other stations in the neighborhood were cutting before the Citrin-Kolb stations?

A. That is right.

Q. Does that apply to the six stations?

A. That applies to any station that we happened to be operating at the time.

Q. Operating?

A. Yes, I am talking about operated stations. When I say Citrin-Kolb stations cut afterwards, it is with 3068 reference to operated stations.

Q. It was to your advantage, as a wholesaler, to have your dealers as well as operating stations maintain the higher price, meaning the technical prevailing price, as long as possible, provided you could do so without losing too much volume; isn't that right?

A. Yes, sure. They could pay their rent and pay their bills.

Mr. Austin: Now, your Honor, I renew my motion, but only as to the references in those exhibits to prevailing prices, and any computation based thereon where it appeared upon the photograph, where the notations appear prior to January 1, 1940; and I withdraw the motion as to the notations on the 1940 and 1941 photographs, because it now appears that the notation as to prevailing price there would not be misleading.

Mr. Abbott: Well, they are not misleading as to any of them, and the testimony of the witness was only with reference to the locations in which these six Citrin-Kolb stations, as shown in Exhibit 18 are located, with reference to whether the majority of the stations in those localities only were selling below the normal price. That doesn't refer, you say, to the entire metropolitan area of the City of Detroit. The answer of the witness was restricted to those six locations, and, therefore, it 3069 cannot be said in any way to qualify his definition of what constitutes the prevailing retail price. This is merely an attempt, if the Court please, to play on words, and, as Mr. Biber has stated, he has stated what the words "prevailing retail price" mean in the market or in the sense of the understanding of the person engaged in the gasoline industry in Detroit. I don't think that the motion is well taken as to any of the years which are represented by that exhibit.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I think it is very well taken, and if there is any play on words, I think it is by the Respondent offering that. It is quite obvious that if you had a price, as Mr. Biber so states, called a prevailing price of 17¢, and if every station in a certain neighborhood had a sign up "2¢ off," and were selling for 15¢, there would be absolutely no point in those pictures and they would not at all prove what they are introduced to prove. They are put in there for the purpose of showing what is called price cutting and if all the stations charged the same price, all the major stations charged the same price, then I submit that no station charging such a price is a price cutter in that particular time.

Mr. Abbott: In that particular location?

Mr. Austin: Yes. The exhibit is limited to competitive areas around there, competitive stations around there.

3070 Mr. Abbott: The exhibit refers to competitive prices in the Detroit area. There are 2,500 of those involved. Mr. Austin's play on words is only with reference to the six locations shown by Exhibit No. 18. Those are isolated locations and they were put in there for the purpose of showing the six stations, as to which complaint was made by the testimony in the Commission's case. But it doesn't cover the entire city of Detroit. Now, what was the prevailing retail price in those particular six locations is not going to determine what is the prevailing retail price in the Detroit area. That is, as far as Mr. Austin's objection goes, and, for that reason, it is not well taken on this record, and the motion should be denied.

Mr. Austin: It is quite obvious, your Honor, if that is not intended to be the prevailing retail price in the localities in which that exhibit refers to, it certainly should not be there at all.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner sustains the motion, and all the notations appearing on the exhibits will be stricken. We will take a five minute recess.

Mr. Abbott: That is only for two years.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is right.

Mr. Abbott: Well, I want to have your Honor restrict your ruling so as not to include the years 1940 and 1941.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is right. The 3071 motion was to strike the notations appearing on it as to the date prior to January 1, 1940, and that motion was granted by the Examiner.

Now we will take a five minute recess, and the notations appearing on the Respective exhibits may be expunged.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Biber, I want to ask you one more question on the record. You don't need to take the stand.

You said something in your testimony about the supplier of gasoline having something to do in relation to the determination of the retail price. Now, when you use the word "supplier" did you refer in any way to the Standard Oil Company, the Respondent?

The Witness: No, I don't know what the Standard Oil Company does, but I believe the testimony was that the gas dealers association either informed their dealers what they thought the prevailing retail price was or else they informed the supplier to inform the dealer to meet that price.

Mr. Abbott: Who is the supplier?

The Witness: I know it has been done in our case. I don't know about other people, though.

Mr. Abbott: Do you mean to imply that the Standard Oil Company, the Respondent has anything to do with 3072 establishing retail prices in the Detroit area or has had anything to do in that connection since it went on the Iowa plan in 1936?

The Witness: No, I did not imply that or I did not mean to imply that.

Mr. Abbott: I see. That is all.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Abbott: I call Mr. Charles H. Gershenson. Mr. Gershenson, take the stand.

CHARLES H. GERSHENSON was thereupon called as a witness by and on behalf of the Respondent, and, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Mr. Gershenson, where do you live?

A. At 17305 Muirland Avenue in the City of Detroit.

Q. That is M-u-i-r-l-a-n-d?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your business, Mr. Gershenson?

A. I am connected with Ned's Auto Supply.

Q. What is your official connection with that company?

A. I am the president.

Q. Is that a corporation?

A. Yes.

3073 Q. Organized under the laws of the State of Michigan?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And how long has that company been in existence, Mr. Gershenson?

A. You mean in its present corporate form or right from its inception?

Q. Yes, you may state that, and I will ask you how long it has been in business under other forms.

A. I don't have the exact date of the incorporation, but I could refer to it from the file.

Q. Well, approximately how many years has the company been incorporated?

A. In 1939—about three years.

Q. And prior to the time of its incorporation, what was the nature of its existence?

A. As a co-partnership.

Q. As a co-partnership, how long had it existed previous to the time of its incorporation?

A. About ten years.

Q. Ten years. By whom was the business established?

A. It was originally established by our father.

Q. And what is his name?

A. His name was Ned.

Q. His name was Ned Gershenson?

A. Yes, sir.

3074 Q. And the word "Ned's" as now incorporated in the corporate name was from his first name; is that correct?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. And how long ago did he start to be engaged in the gasoline business?

A. In the fall of 1918.

Q. And how long, do you know if the Standard Oil Company of Indiana has been the supplier of either your father, when he was engaged in the business and of the company when it was a partnership, and of the company when it was been a corporation? What is the total number of years?

A. Approximately 23 years now. Since the very first day my father started in business, we started to buy Standard Oil gasoline. We never changed.

Q. Where did your father start in this business? Where was the business located?

A. At 18023 John R Street, near Nevada. It is off the corner, between Nevada and Savannah on John R.

U

Q. Did he have more than one station at the time he started in?

A. No, he did not.

Q. And when he first started in, was he a tank car or a tank wagon customer of Standard Oil?

A. Tank wagon customer.

Mr. Abbott: Will you mark these, Mr. Reporter—

3075 I have six exhibits, your Honor, which I wish to have marked for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the exhibits—

Off the record.

(A discussion off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

The reporter will mark the documents Respondent's Exhibits 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44, for identification.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44.")

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I show you, Mr. Gershenson, Respondent's Exhibit 39, for identification, and ask you to identify that and state what it is, please?

A. That is the current photograph of the station that my father first opened up on John R and Nevada.

Q. And is that still being operated as a company station?

A. Yes, it is.

Mr. Abbott: I offer the exhibit in evidence.

Mr. Austin: Is this station still operated by the supplier, by the supply company?

The Witness: Yes, it is.

Mr. Austin: I have no objection.

3076 Mr. Abbott: There is no objection to the admission of Exhibit 39, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 39, for identification, will be admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 39," was received in evidence.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, I show you next, Mr. Gershenson, Respondent's Exhibit No. 40, for identification, and ask you to identify that and state what it is, please.

A. That is also the photograph of one of the service stations we operate, located at Michigan and Maple Avenues.

Q. And is that presently occupied as a company station?

A. Yes, it is.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When was this photograph taken?

Mr. Abbott: These are intended, your Honor—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I would like to know whether it was 20 years ago or 10 years ago, or the present time?

The Witness: That is a current photograph. That is taken within the past three or four years, and there has been no physical change.

3077 Trial Examiner Ballinger: When was Respondent's Exhibit 39, that photograph, taken?

The Witness: That would follow within the same category, within the past five years, based on the physical appearance of the building.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Both these exhibits, 39 and 40, represent the respective appearance of the premises at which the business is at the present time?

A. Yes, they do.

Mr. Abbott: I offer Exhibit No. 40 in evidence at this—

The Witness: Except for some signs.

Mr. Abbott: This offer of Exhibit 40 is not done for any idea of displaying the price at which gasoline was sold. I merely wish to have the portrayal of the places where the Ned's Auto Supply does business.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Austin: Do you know the dates of any of these photographs, Mr. Gershenson?

The Witness: No, I do not. I could tell from the physical appearance of the building how recent they are.

Mr. Austin: Are there any of them more than four years old?

3078 The Witness: They might be five years old. I saw the sign on the John R station, which might go back about—no, I don't believe that one was more than four years old.

Mr. Austin: This one at Gratiot Avenue and Madeline was marked April 18, 1941.

The Witness: I had not seen that yet. He had not shown it to me. They are all comparatively current, within the past four years.

Mr. Austin: Who took those photographs?

The Witness: I don't know.

Mr. Austin: Where did they come from? Where did you get them?

The Witness: Mr. Abbott just gave them to me.

Mr. Austin: Do any of these photographs show any changes in the set-up of the stations which have been made during the past four years?

The Witness: They represent the current physical appearance of the buildings, as I looked at them.

Mr. Austin: But do they represent the way the station looked, say, in 1937 or 1938?

The Witness: Yes, they do, if the station was there. A couple of them weren't built at that time.

Mr. Austin: All right. I won't object to them.

Mr. Abbott: I offer Respondent's Exhibits 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44, which were marked for identification, in evidence at this time, your Honor.

3079 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without objection, Respondent's Exhibits 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44, for identification are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 40, 41, 42, 43, and 44," were received in evidence.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now Mr. Gershenson, taking all those exhibits together, will you state whether they all represent the current appearance of your various gasoline filling stations, together with Exhibit No. 39, according to the street number or intersection number, as indicated on the Exhibits?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. All right. How much of an investment, in dollars, has Ned's Auto Supply in this business at the present time?

A. I don't quite understand the question. You mean in land, buildings, and inventory, the total investment?

Q. Yes, what is the total investment of the Ned's Auto Supply in business at the present time?

A. My best judgment would be that, and this is just in round numbers, about $100,000 in each station. About $600,000 for all of them together.

Q. About $600,000 total?

A. That represents my best present estimate.

3080 Q. And what volume of total sales does your company have at the present time on an annual basis?

A. Well, that would be—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Sales of what?

Mr. Abbott: Merchandise.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: How is that material?

Mr. Abbott: I would like to have the Commission, if the Court please, get a true picture of the nature of this company's business, and the annual volume it does.

The Witness: About $2,000,000 a year.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. And does—do you sell anything besides gasoline and petroleum products?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. What range of merchandise do you sell?

A. We sell all automotive supplies, such as tires, batteries, and what is commonly incorporated in the term automotive accessories; and electrical appliances, home appliances, such as refrigerators, washing machines, ranges, gas and electric ranges, vacuum cleaners, radios, sporting goods of various kinds, such as fishing and base ball, tennis, and golf equipment, as well as other miscellaneous items, such as gardening needs and hardware, paints, and I guess that covers all the broad fields. We,
of course, have also service garages where we render 3081 automobile services, such as lubrication, brake work, and tire and battery service.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Repair work?

The Witness: No general repair work, no, sir; no motor work, no ignition work.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You already stated that from the time your father went into business selling gasoline, he was on a tank wagon price. Now, up to what time were you on a tank wagon price?

A. Up to March of 1938.

Q. Some time previous to that, did you go on a basis just less than the tank wagon price?

A. In September of 1936.

Q. And how much differential off the tank wagon price did you receive at that time?

A. ½¢ a gallon.

Q. ~~And~~ that condition existed for how long?

A. How long?

Q. From when to when?

A. From September of 1936 to March of 1938.

Q. What has been your company's gallonage from 1936 to 1940, inclusive? I mean gallonage of gasoline sold?

A. I have most of that if I can look at the memorandum.

Q. Yes. Just refresh your recollection and tell us from the record.

3082 A. In the year 1936, 2,400,000; 1937, 4,240,000; 1938, 4,800,000; 1939, 4,200,000; 1940, 4,200,000. That is in round numbers. I don't have it right out to the last gallon.

3083 Q. And did you give us the date of going on the tank wagon method and price?

A. You say tank wagon. Do you mean tank wagon or tank car?

Q. Going off the tank wagon and going on the tank car price.

A. It was in March of 1938.

Mr. Abbott: I wish to have this document marked for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Reporter will mark the document Respondent's Exhibit 45 for identification.

(The document referred to was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 45," for identification.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I show you, Mr. Gershenson, Respondent's Exhibit 45 for identification and ask you to identify that and state what it is.

A. It is a letter that we—that is, our company—wrote to the Standard Oil Company, addressed to Mr. Raupagh, written on August 27, 1936, just prior to when we got the half cent a gallon lower price, advising them of a competitive offer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Just a moment,—

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You needn't state what the contents of the letter are.

A. Pardon me. It is a letter we had written to the Standard Oil Company on August 27, 1936, addressed 3084 to the attention of Mr. Raupagh.

Q. The letter seems to be signed by William Gershenson. Will you state the circumstances why it was signed by him and not by yourself; if you know.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Who was William Gershenson?

The Witness: That is my brother.

A. We have connecting desks and if one of us dictates a letter, by the time the stenographer brings it in typed, if the other one isn't there, the other one will sign it.

Q. Do you have a recollection as to this letter?

A. I do. I dictated this letter.

Mr. Abbott: I offer this letter in evidence as Respondent's Exhibit 45 (handing document to counsel for the Commission).

The Witness: I had previously spoken to him and dictated the letter.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I don't think this letter is admissible at the present time. It may become so, later. I therefore object to its admission at the present time unless it is offered to show—no, I believe it is inadmissible on any ground because it doesn't do any more than make a statement regarding an offer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: There has been no evidence that the letter was ever delivered.

Mr. Austin: It certainly would be of no value for 3085 the purpose of which it is offered, unless it was received by the Standard Oil Company and I request your Honor to look at the letter. I object to it upon the ground that there is no foundation of proof of the transaction referred to and even if there were, it doesn't amount to a notice of any transaction.

Mr. Abbott: I will ask the witness further qualifying questions.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let me see the letter.

(The document was handed to the Examiner.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, with respect to Exhibit 45 for identification, do you know whether that letter was mailed to the Standard Oil Company, the addressee?

A. I have no personal knowledge of mailing it. I know they received it because Mr. Raupagh talked to me about that letter; called me about it.

Q. When did you next see the letter—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: One moment. Did you receive a reply in writing to this letter?

The Witness: No, sir. I don't recall a written reply but I remember a telephone conversation and a visit with Mr. Raupagh.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What transpired after the letter was written?

3086 The Witness: To the best of my recollection—it is a long time ago—that I received a telephone call from Mr. Raupagh asking me to come down to his office and discuss the matter with him.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you at that time see the letter in his office?

A. I don't recall.

Q. How did you get this letter, at the time of this trial?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Where did this come from?

A. It came from Mr. Raupagh's file, somebody's file over at the Standard Oil Company.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. From the time it left your office until the time you saw it in the Standard Oil Company file—

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness hasn't testified that he ever saw it in the Standard Oil Company's file.

Mr. Abbott: Are we going to be so technical here, your Honor, that we have got to withhold this until Mr. Raupagh testifies he received the letter on behalf of the Standard Oil Company? Of course we can connect it up.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: There is something more important to establish than that, in connection with 3087 this. The fact that he had received such a letter as that—

Mr. Abbott: We can't put the case in all at once. I am going to ask the witness some other questions with reference to that.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Previous to writing this letter of August 27, 1936, had you received any offers from any supplier of gasoline to supply the requirements of Ned's Auto Supply Company for gasoline, Mr. Gershenson?

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I think I made a previous objection to that form of question. I object to the use of the word "offer," because an offer is something that has some legal significance and I think the witness ought to be asked whether he had any conversations with anybody

Q. And do you have recollection that the letter was sent to the Standard Oil Company?

3113 A. Yes, sir.

Q. After this letter was sent to the Standard Oil Company did you have any talk with Mr. Raupagh?

A. I had a conversation and several meetings; yes. It was the letter that, as I say, brought about our going on the tank car basis.

Q. Now, what conversation did you have between the time of the date of this letter and the time when you went on the tank car basis, with Mr. Raupagh?

A. Well, I don't recall the specific conversation, but I know—I told Mr. Raupagh that that letter represented the ultimatum and, after that—

Q. Now, what other conversation did you have with him concerning negotiations with other companies; with other suppliers of gasoline?

A. During my conversations with him I elaborated—

Q. What companies did you discuss, if any?

A. Shell, Red Indian, and Texas.

Q. All right. Now, what did you tell him about Shell, Red Indian, and Texas, specifically?

A. I don't recall the exact language.

Q. Just the purport?

A. The purport of it was that we would take advantage of one of these other three offers if they didn't start selling us on a tank car basis.

3114 Q. Did you tell them what the specific offer of the Red Indian Oil Company was, as made to you?

A. I am reasonably sure that I did.

Q. And what did you tell him in that regard?

A. I told him that we could buy gasoline from the Red Indian Oil Company on a tank car basis of—well, specifically, we could buy it from them and pick it up at their bulk plant without having to have a bulk plant of our own, at a cent and a half a gallon off, or have it—yes, we pick it up at their bulk plants at a cent and a half, without having to have a bulk plant facilities, which would be about a half a cent better than even Standard Oil's then prevailing tank car price.

Q. What gasoline?

A. That was on Fleet-Wing.

Q. What brand is that?

A. Standard Oil of Ohio. That is the offer that—regarding the purchase of gasoline, or anything of that sort. Now I am not trying to tell Mr. Abbott how to ask these questions but I think unless the word "offer" is used without any legal significance, I object to it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is sustained. The witness may testify as to what was said, if it is a conversation, and if it is in writing, the witness may produce the written document.

Mr. Abbott: That's right. That's all I want him to state.

By Mr. Abbott:

3088 Q. In connection with any conversation or circumstances that you had concerning the supplying of gasoline by anyone other than the Standard Oil Company, you may state whatever conversations you had and with whom and the place where the conversations took place, and the circumstances, Mr. Gershenson.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And who were present.

A. Well, that covers quite a wide range.

Q. All right. I am just giving you, now—I am asking you to state what company it was and who—

A. There were several companies. I might go back. Perhaps I can develop it in this way: I can give it in narrative form, as it happened.

Q. Just state it in your own language.

A. Part of this goes back over ten years but starting with about—oh, subsequent to—right around 1930, was when our company, consistent with the way we did business, generally started to approach different suppliers, as well as entertain, at least, conversation from them, relative to our buying gasoline on better than a tank wagon basis. The method of distributor distribution was becoming more prevalent in Detroit and the first conversation that I definitely recall having had—I can't fix the year. I can fix the fact of having had that conversation in our office out on John R Street—was about the time—by a representative of the Argo Oil Company—I recall

3089 they had been selling fuel oil. They started selling gasoline and I believe it was Mr. Fineberg, the vice president—

Q. His name was F-i-n-e-b-e-r-g, is that correct?

A. Yes; Charles Fineberg.

He drove up to our station on John R Street and wanted

Q. What was the basis of your statement to Mr. Raupagh?

A. That was based on an offer that I had had from the Red Indian Oil Company soliciting our business.

Mr. Austin: I object to that answer and move that the question and answer be stricken, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion is granted.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What specific conversation had you had with the representative of the Red Indian Oil Company at 3115 any time prior to September 9, 1938, with reference to any negotiations to furnishing you with your requirements of gasoline?

A. You said September, 1938. I think you probably mean March or February.

Q. March 7, 1938?

A. I don't recall how soon before that letter was written—I mean whether it was a day or two before that, that—

Q. You don't need to definitely establish the date.

A. Well, within a month prior to that, I had confirmed the fact that we could buy gasoline from Red Indian on a tank car basis.

Q. State who the conversation was with.

A. With Mr. Dworman.

Q. Where was it?

A. As I said, it was either over the telephone or in our office, because—

Q. Where was your office at that time?

A. Our office at that time was on Chicago Boulevard.

Q. Was that at the corner of Chicago and Greenley?

A. Yes.

Q. That is where you had your offices at that time?

A. They are still over there.

Q. And I believe you said that the Red Indian Oil Company was furnishing you with Quaker State Motor Oil?

3116 A. And several other items. That's why—

Q. Were they, at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. And did Mr. Dworman,—did he come to see you quite often?

A. Yes, and I would have lunch with him.

Q. Who is Mr. Dworman?

A. He is president of the Red Indian—now, I say president; I assume so. His title isn't on here. I am looking to know whether we would be interested in buying gasoline at a tank wagon basis—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Tank wagon basis?

The Witness: I am sorry—yes, that's right, sir; tank wagon. We had no bulk plant, no tank car facilities—at a cent a gallon better than our then tank wagon price.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What gasoline did he sell?

A. I was just trying to think. I believe they were selling, to the best of my recollection, Dixie gasoline. They changed. They went from Dixie to Shell, I think. I don't remember specifically which one, but I told him—I knew him quite well, on a friendly basis, and I told him we weren't interested in changing from Standard to another brand, and nothing more. I discouraged him. That we weren't interested in that offer and that died right there.

The next one I have a definite recollection is of an offer—and that one is very vivid in my mind, because that offer and that source of supply has continued right up to today.

3090. Trial Examiner Ballinger: When did that occur?

The Witness: It was about in 1930; the year. I can't associate in my mind the specific month.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What company?

A. The Red Indian Oil Company, because we buy from them and one of their representatives visits us every week in connection with the other merchandise we buy from them and—

Q. What other merchandise do you buy from them?

A. Up to very recently we bought Quaker State Motor Oil, and they were the local distributors and jobbers for Quaker State Motor Oil.

Q. You were stating a conversation with Mr. Fineberg back in 1930.

A. Yes.

Q. Just limit yourself to that.

A. I am all through with that. He had driven up in his car and came into the store and—

Q. What else? I am talking about the Red Indian offer.

A. That is something else. That wasn't Mr. Fineberg. Mr. Fineberg wasn't with Red Indian.

Q. All right.

A. The man from the Red Indian Oil Company was Mr. McLean.

Q. How do you spell that?

A. It is either M-c-, or M-a-c, or Mr. I. B. Dwor-3091 man—they both actively solicited me for our gasoline business, as well as my brother Bill, over the last ten years; very periodically.

The most recent offer was sometime in November.

Q. Just confining yourself in 1930 and then progress chronologically from there.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I move to strike out the statement that they solicited him over a period of ten years as being a conclusion and I am sure the witness will have a chance to tell us what they actually did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion is granted.

A. At that time Red Indian were selling Phillips 66, which was a nationally—well, I am very familiar with it. I would call that a branded, well advertised gasoline, and that had more acceptance than the gasoline that the Argo Oil Company had, and at that time the cent a gallon off tank wagon was quite a prevalent jobber's price. I mean from my knowledge in the industry I knew we could get that from any one of several sources.

Q. State what Mr. McLean told you.

A. I am coming to that.

He stated that they would supply us gasoline delivered at our price at a cent a gallon off tank wagon or, picked up at their bulk plant and hauling ourselves, at approximately a cent and a half off tank wagon price.
3092 Now if I may develop that and carry that on right through up to the present.

The reason I said we were actively solicited: We continued doing business with them since 1930. Still do business with them, and within the last several months when—

Q. Now, Mr. Gershenson, can't you develop that chronologically instead of jumping from 1930 to—

A. I was just finishing that relationship. I can drop that and come back, but I was trying to answer Mr. Austin's objection about continually having been solicited for ten years, because that is the only way I could state that.

Q. When, after 1930, would you state you had any conversation with the representative of the Red Indian Oil Company?

A. I would have to name the years, several times a year, because they were actively soliciting our business every time that the opportunity presented itself.

Mr. Austin: I move the answer be stricken and ask that the witness be instructed to tell us what they said to him and what he said to them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion is granted.

A. I can bring it up to 1933, because I have a very definite recollection. At that time, this was about in May or June of 1933, the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company had contracts with Texaco and—I knew it was Texas and Cities Service and one other supplier—I am not sure 3093 who they were, and they had completed a bulk plant here and were buying gasoline at 4¢ a gallon on house brand gasoline off tank wagon prices and I approached the local representative of Firestone and told them we would like to buy gasoline on the same basis that they were buying it and had some correspondence with Akron where an appointment was made for me to meet a Mr. Dodge, who was then vice-president, I believe, and sales manager of Texas and I met Mr. Dodge in Akron. This was in June of 1933 in the offices of—

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I would like to know whether this still refers to Red Indian Oil Company. Mr. Gershenson is now talking about Firestone and Texas. I don't like to be bound by all this testimony.

The Witness: If I may clarify it:

I had made the statement that I recall another specific offer in 1933 from the Red Indian Oil Company but I recall that because it was after I came back from the trip to Akron, at which time we had received another offer from the Texas Company, and I am trying to state what happened there, to bring it up to date; to tie that up with the offer from the other company.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Proceed.

A. This is all ten years ago and I am just answering your questions to the best of my ability.

3094 Q. You are stating something now that happened in 1933?

A. In 1933.

Q. Proceed with the negotiations that you had in Akron, Ohio.

A. I had lunch with Mr. Dodge at the Firestone club house and told him about service stations here. That we were buying on a tank wagon basis from the Standard Oil Company. That we weren't satisfied. That we knew of the contract that Firestone had with the Texas Company and could we get the same kind of a contract. That was the reason for meeting him there and that was the basis of my visit to Akron.

He wanted to know whether we had facilities for handling gasoline on a tank car basis.

We discussed the terms of the Firestone contract and, as I recall it now, their differential was 4¢ off tank wagon on the house brand gasoline and, if I recall, it was either four and a half, or it might have been 5¢ a gallon off the tank wagon on the premium gas, which was the Ethyl.

We didn't have a bulk plant at that time and I returned to Detroit to see whether we could share Firestone's bulk plant, or whether we would have to build one of our own and I told Mr. Dodge that we would communicate with him further, as soon as we had facilities to avail ourselves of tank car deliveries, and communicated to Mr. Raupagh that offer.

3095 Q. What did you tell Mr. Raupagh?

A. I told Mr. Raupagh—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: How did you communicate with him, now? Did you write him a letter?

The Witness: Well, I think that is the letter you are referring to, here.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. The one that has been marked Exhibit 45?

A. No. That came after that; but that there had been that offer. No at that time, I telephoned Mr. Raupagh.

Q. You telephoned him, you say?

A. Yes.

Q. State what was said. Go right ahead.

A. I can't recall the telephone conversation. I am sorry. I know I made an appointment with him.

That subsequent to that telephone call I saw him personally in his office.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What year is it, this transaction that you have just been talking about.

The Witness: The one I have just been talking about now was late in 1933 or 1934; in the Summer of 1933.

Mr. Abbott: That was in Akron.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You think this letter to Mr. Raupagh had relation to that transaction?

The Witness: I don't think, your Honor; I know it had relation to that transaction because that was a con-3096 tinuing offer that we didn't act on and that was in my mind when I wrote that letter two years later.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This letter is dated August 27, 1936.

The Witness: That's right. That letter followed up the original offer. We had several offers that carried along for two or three years and then we finally act on them, that somebody wants to supply a certain commodity, and we aren't in a position to take advantage of it. We have a contract with another supplier and have to wait until that contract expires, to act on it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did you have at that time a contract with the Standard Oil Company?

The Witness: No, your Honor, but we had a very long relationship and we didn't want to change unless it was impossible to get a similar offer from the Standard Oil Company.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You stated already about the time Exhibit 45 for identification was written to the Standard Oil Company, and in response to that letter you went to the office of the Standard Oil Company.

A. If I would be permitted to chronologically develop this and when I am asked a question like this, that jumps over a two-year period and that—

3097 Q. Go ahead.

A. But I would say that subsequent to that period I had a telephone call to Mr. Raupagh. I called him and we had a meeting. It was very likely a luncheon. I don't specifically recall where we were; whether it was at Mr. Raupagh's office, or lunch. We have these meetings periodically, and I told him of that offer.

Q. Which offer?

A. Of my visit down to Akron and the fact we wanted to buy and we were negotiating to buy gasoline from Texas on the same type of contract that Firestone had and as he had previously done, he sort of appeased me, sort of said—well; it is difficult; on his approach he would take it under advisement and not to be too hasty about it and used all the sale arguments he had previously done to keep us happy with Standard Oil Company.

Q. That was in 1933?

A. That was in 1933.

Q. Now develop it your own way. Chronologically, what happened?

A. At about that same time I was approached by—it was right around—I can't fix the date of that because I don't have the correspondence. I have correspondence on that visit to Firestone in the file, and meeting Mr. Dodge in Akron. I have that in the file where I received a 3098 letter from Firestone telling me that the appointment had been made, and that is how I can fix that time. I have that in the file and I have refreshed my recollection on that since—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Have you any offer in writing, or any letter submitting any definite proposition to you?

The Witness: Yes, your Honor, I have—not from Texas. I have from another company. I have a letter from the Red Indian Oil Company.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Just a moment, Mr. Gershenson. You want to develop it chronologically, I understand.

A. I am trying to answer these questions, too.

From 1933 to 1936, I was going to say in this way, that until we got the additional half cent that it was a constant tug of war between Standard Oil and us. We wanted to make some other connection and Mr. Raupagh kept keeping me satisfied, or keeping us satisfied, until such time until some better deal could be worked out for us, and at about that same time—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: How did he keep you satisfied?

The Witness: Well, the most important way was that he said we would have to start building up a clientile on a competitive brand of gasoline. In other words, that 3099 the loss of volume from Standard to some competitive brand would more than offset the additional margin we would make on the other brand, so that it would be a stand-off, we would have to develop new customers, and I was inclined to think that he was right. That is how, he kept me satisfied; not only inclined to think but that represented our sincere business judgment. What we were trying to do was to get a lower price from Standard Oil Company so that we could retain that good will and customer contact and, at the same time, make another margin of profit and there was another factor in there—I don't know how important it is—was the fact our father had started that contract with Standard Oil Company. We attached some importance to that and we didn't want to change unless we had to do that. It had been a tradition. Our father started the Firestone contract. Our father passed away, in the meantime. We just felt, emotionally, maybe, it was a superstition, that the last thing we wanted to do was change from the Standard Oil Company.

3100 By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You may go on and state what happened between 1933 and 1936, the date that appears on Exhibit 45.

A. In that same time, the Shell Oil Company had a dealer jamboree, and I remember attending the dealer meeting at the Book-Cadillac Hotel, and I met a Mr. Jack Reed.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What year?

The Witness: Either 1933 or 1934, but I say, I recall the fact when I attended the big meeting in the Book-Cadillac Hotel, when all their executives had a dinner and explained their product.

At that time they were actively coming into this market and this man, Jack Reed—I met him that evening of the party, and the next day, or very soon thereafter I made an appointment with him and had lunch with him—I knew him quite well socially, and we used to go out—and he said they were looking for a distributor, and he said if we could set ourselves up to handle tank car deliveries, they would sell us as a tank car jobber. They wanted a jobber in Detroit at 2¢ off, which was then the prevailing differential between tank wagon and tank car.

Q. Was that the prevailing differential at that time?

A. Yes, as I recall. It might have been only a cent and a quarter. I am pretty sure he said 2¢ to the best of my recollection.

3101 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Was that an exclusive agency?

The Witness: He didn't say so, but I think he did say that they only wanted one. They felt that they should have only one jobber, and he felt that they should—that we should take it—he used that as an argument, if we didn't they would get somebody else, and if we didn't, it wouldn't be available, and I said I hated to leave Standard Oil Company.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you communicate that to Mr. Raupagh?
A. I did, but I would like to finish this, if I may.
Q. Very well.
A. We had several meetings, then, but after that he said they got Stark Hickey. I don't know whether I communicated that offer. I know I did. I referred to that offer in a letter we wrote to Mr. Raupagh.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is that letter available?

The Witness: I don't know if Standard Oil Company has it, but I remember writing such a letter. I assume they have it. Do you want me to answer that, your Honor?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You answered it.

Mr. Abbott: We will put that in in chronological order, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: This is the appropri-
3102 ate place, if there is such a letter.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, the Respondent reserves for itself the order of proof with reference to these various matters because this matter was in connection with going on the tank car basis, and I wish first to develop the situation with reference to the ½c differential.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then what the witness testified to, as embodied in that letter, should be stricken from the record.

Mr. Abbott: I think in so far as he purports to say what the letter contended, that is true.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It will be so stricken.

The Witness: I recall communicating that offer to the Standard Oil Company.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What offer are you referring to?
A. From Shell.
Q. Yes.
A. That's what I mean.

Q. And that refers to what year?
A. I don't remember.
Q. You stated 1933 or 1934.
A. Oh, no. I say, I didn't communicate that at that time. We kept that and probably used that in a letter later on, when we were attempting—3103 Q. Now, about—
A. We had a whole statement, if I may make this statement: we had several of these negotiations that we had with these different suppliers—I would call them an offer, because that's all they mean to me—
Q. You are a lawyer, aren't you?
A. Yes, I am.
Q. You graduated from the University of Michigan, didn't you?
A. Yes.
Q. In the law school?
A. Yes.
Q. In what year?
A. 1926.
Q. And you have practiced law, haven't you, in Detroit?
A. Yes, I did.
Q. How long did you practice?
A. About two years; two or three years.
Q. And that was prior to going into the oil business, was it?
A. Well, I had a law office, and I didn't devote all my time to the—
Q. The reason I bring this up in connection with your statement as to your observance of the—
A. Had all the elements of a legal offer. The only 3104 thing that would have kept it, if we didn't accept it, so that it ceased to be an offer because of the passage of time, but at that time it was a legal offer.
Q. This relates to the Shell transaction?
A. Yes.
Q. Do you wish to develop this in your own way, year by year?
A. I am practically through with the Shell negotiations. He told me—Jack Reed kept me posted on what they were doing, and he said they had signed up somebody else, and I told him not to feel badly. We didn't intend to change from Standard Oil Company.
Q. You said you had talked to Mr. Raupagh about that.

You said you included it in a letter to him and that was stricken because of some suggestion that it was in a letter. What verbal communication did you have, if any, with Mr. Raupagh, concerning the Shell offer?

Mr. Austin: When was this?

The Witness: I don't recall whether or not I specifically mentioned the Shell Oil Company in communicating this offer verbally to Mr. Raupagh.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, in 1930—

A. Yes, this was between 1933 and 1936.

Q. Yes. Now, you went on the ½¢ off the tank
3105 wagon price on September 9th, 1936, as you testified.
Now, prior to that event, will you state what happened with reference to any negotiations you had with the Standard Oil Company?

A. Well, on August 27, 1936, I dictated and wrote a letter to the Standard Oil Company—

Q. That is the one that has been referred to as Exhibit 45, for identification?

A. Yes.

Q. After you wrote that letter what negotiation did you have?

A. I didn't disclose the company. I was afraid the Standard Oil Company might go to that company and that—anyway, I don't think I told Mr. Raupagh whom the offer was from, but I told him we could buy a major brand gasoline at a much better price than we could buy from them.

Q. When was that?

A. That was in that letter.

Q. What conversation did you have with Mr. Raupagh verbally, disregarding the letter. You have already stated, that after the letter was sent you had a talk with Mr. Raupagh—now, state what was said.

A. You mean this was subsequent to the letter, now?

Q. Yes.

A. I told him that this letter was an ultimatum, that we had definitely made up our mind to accept a competitive offer unless we got a better deal from the Standard 3106 Oil Company, and I asked for the privilege from
Mr. Raupagh to go down to Chicago, going over the heads of the Detroit office. That if we were going to break our relationship with the Standard Oil Company, we wanted the satisfaction of being turned down by the home office.

Q. Did you go to Chicago?

A. I did. I made arrangements that I could meet his immediate superior, or one of his superiors, and I made the arrangements—

Q. When, with reference to August 27, 1936, did you go to Chicago?

A. Two or three days after that. It was some time between then and—

Q. And whom did you see in Chicago?

A. I saw a Mr. Lewis. I don't remember his initials.

Q. Where was that?

A. In the Standard Oil Building in Chicago.

Q. Do you remember the location?

A. It is on Michigan Avenue. It is about across from the Illinois Central Railroad, as I recall it. I was—

Q. And state what conversations you had with Mr. Lewis?

A. I was admitted to his office, and I told him what I was down there for. He seemed familiar—I didn't have to develop the whole thing—he seemed to be familiar with our account and with the competitive situation here.

3107 Q. At that time what gallonage did you have; about, if you can recall.

A. That was in 1936—about 2,400,000. Whatever I read off before.

Q. Very well.

A. Over 2,000,000, and I told him I was there representing our company.

That if they didn't give us a better price, either a better tank wagon price or tank car price, that we were going to stop doing business with them, and he, at that time—I don't think he told me—I don't recall now whether he told me that day or Mr. Raupagh told me the next day I came home—that we were getting an additional half cent margin off our tank wagon price.

Q. Had you suggested, then, you be given such a differential?

A. I not only suggested, I told him we wanted a cent a gallon, because that was what we would get from other jobbers, locally.

Q. What other offers had you received?

A. The one specifically I had in mind was the one I referred to; from Red Indian, and—well, I had several in mind. I knew that there were several.

At that time Hi-Speed, Hicock Oil had a cent a gallon better tank wagon price, and we had been approached—been approached by them.

3108 Mr. Austin: I move to strike the answer that they had been approached by them, your Honor, unless it goes on to tell what actually was said and what happened.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What did Mr. Raupagh say to you after you got back from Chicago?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Motion is granted.

Mr. Abbott: That is, just as to the Hicock Oil?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

A. I think—I don't know whether Mr. Raupagh or Mr. Lewis—I am inclined to think it was Mr. Raupagh, after I got back. I don't recall—Mr. Lewis was very optimistic. He told us not to be too hasty. We had been a good customer, and he gave me the usual—they didn't want to lose our business—they would do the best they could to meet our competitive situation, and the lost gasoline—he kept telling us, through changing brands we had no way of knowing—that was their strongest argument, and they used that, but, as I say, he was very optimistic about their being able to do something on it, and then it was either the next day or day after, I had lunch with Mr. Raupagh and he told me of this half cent better price as of, I think, September 1st.

Q. What did you say about that, if anything?

A. I know how we felt. We accepted it as better 3109 than nothing at all, but we weren't satisfied.

Q. What do you mean by you weren't satisfied? What did you want?

A. We wanted tank car at that time, or a better tank wagon price. We wanted a cent a gallon off the tank wagon price.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Raupagh or Mr. Lewis you could get a cent off from anybody else?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you tell him from whom?

A. I don't recall anything then. It is contrary to our practice to name a competitive price, as to whom it comes from; the supplier, because a competitive thing—there are too many arguments directly, and too many things to spoil them.

Q. Prior to that time you had proposed that they supply you at a cent off tank wagon price?

A. I started to say.. I am satisfied—

Q. I am not asking you that.

A. Hicock Oil. We could have bought Hi-Speed gasoline at 1¢ a gallon off tank wagon—I don't recall the specific instance of that offer, but we were constantly being solicited by a number of places. By that time—

Mr. Austin: I move to strike the answer, your Honor, but I don't like to keep doing that, because I know Mr. Gershenson is trying to tell us.

3110 The Witness: That's what happened. I am going back 10 years—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Motion is granted.

Mr. Abbott: As to the Hicock Oil.

Mr. Austin: And the motion also went to the statement subsequent to that.

A. The one, specifically, I had in mind, that I knew—because, as I said—I know we still can get a cent a gallon off the tank wagon price from the Red Indian Oil Company, and that is the one I had in mind.

I might even have mentioned that to Mr. Raupagh. I don't recall.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. That is the one you say has been persistent?

A. Yes. The Red Indian Oil Company sells Fleet-Wing gasoline, which is Standard Oil Company of Ohio. The reason that is consistent is we feel we would suffer least in volume if we changed from Standard Oil of Indiana to Standard Oil of Ohio, because in our advertising we can say that it is Standard Oil Company. That is the one offer—

Q. Between September, 1936, and March, 1938, according to your testimony, you were on the tank wagon basis receiving a ½¢ differential.

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Abbott: I would like to have this document 3111 marked, for identification, as Respondent's Exhibit 46.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document as Respondent's Exhibit 46, for identification.

(The document referred to, was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 46.")

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I show you, Mr. Gershenson, Respondent's Exhibit 46, for identification, and ask you to identify that and state what it is.

A. It is a letter we wrote to Standard Oil Company just prior to going on the tank car basis, advising them that if they didn't—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No.

The Witness: I am sorry.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Don't state the contents of it.

A. It is a letter we wrote to the Standard Oil Company.

Q. When you say it is a letter, do you mean that that is the original?

A. This looks like a photostatic copy of an original letter. That is the letter that I dictated.

Q. Do you understand that that, Mr. Gershenson, is the original letter, or is it a copy of the letter?

A. I don't understand your question. I know that—

Q. Have you ever seen the original of that letter?

3112 A. Surely. The original was on our letterhead. That's what I say. This is a photostatic copy of the letter we sent.

Q. Does that show your letterhead in the photostat?

A. No, it doesn't.

Q. Do you have any recollection of that letter having been sent from your company?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Did you dictate it?

A. Yes.

Q. It appears to be signed by William Gershenson. Can you explain why that was?

A. You asked me that before today.

Q. I know, but not with reference to the same letter.

A. I will answer that for both letters. The way we work, I am there mornings. I will do the dictating and then, like today, about 10 or 11 o'clock I will go out and the girl will finish the typing and my brother Bill is there and he signs it. That's all.

Q. Do you recall that you dictated that letter?

A. I am reasonably sure I dictated that letter. I am as sure as I can be—because I know that that's my language and I know the fact of the letter.

at a letter which he signed. I believe he is president. Anyway, he is the top executive of that company.

Q. And you also mentioned Mr. McLean, in connection with that company?

A. I would say he holds the title of sales manager.

Q. And then, a month before that, you said you talked to Mr. Dworman?

A. Yes.

Q. You may state what the conversation was. Just state the purport of it.

A. I asked him whether we could buy gasoline from them on a tank car basis better than tank wagon, and he said, "When you are ready, we will sell you."

Q. And did he state at what price?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. What did he say?

3117 A. I have already answered that.

Q. I want you to answer it again.

A. I will give it to you again.

We had a choice of either picking it up at their bulk plant in our own trucks or having it delivered at our own stations by their truck. If we—

Q. And what was the price as to each?

A. I am coming to that.

Q. Yes.

A. If we picked it up, used our own hauling, the discount was 1.5, as near as I remember that.

Q. All right.

A. No. 1.5 if they delivered it—I misspoke there, 1.5 if they delivered it to our place. There is a differential of 2½, or 1.7, if we picked it up ourselves.

Q. Did either one of those operations require you to have a bulk plant?

A. Neither of the operations required us having our own bulk plant.

Q. At that time did you have a bulk plant?

A. Not yet, but we were negotiating for one.

Q. Did you communicate those prices to Mr. Raupagh in your discussions with him?

A. I told him we had a better price. I don't recall whether I gave him the specific cents and tenths of a cent, or not.

3118 Q. What did he say? Was this in the month before March 7, 1938, as you testified?

A. This was as a result of this letter. I believe he told me on the telephone the first time when he said that they would sell us on a tank car.

Q. Who said that?

A. Mr. Raupagh.

Q. I know, but how soon did that come before March 7, 1938; that he told you that?

A. Just a day or two before.

Q. In the month before March 7, 1938, what negotiations did you have, if any, with Mr. Raupagh?

A. Well, subsequent to this letter, I had one or two talks with him about that, and I satisfied him that we meant business this time. We were really going to change, and I feel and know that as a result of that, that we were put on a tank car basis.

Q. What did you tell him in connection with making a change? When I say "him" I mean Mr. Raupagh.

A. I told him the strongest argument then for it was—in the meantime we had built two more service stations. Our volume had gone up. Our volume at that time was 4,000,000, and we felt, even with the loss of some volume of Standard Oil to some of the others, that was the argument I used with him that that loss of the volume 3119 wouldn't begin to offset the additional advantage of buying all of our gasoline on a tank car basis. I felt we could operate our own bulk plant, do our own hauling and still have enough margin so as to make it profitable for us to buy on tank car.

Q. What did Mr. Raupagh say, if anything, relative to bulk plant facilities?

A. Well, you mean at that time? Well, he had previously, as well as at that time, told me that if they would sell us on tank car, that we would have to have our own bulk plant facilities, as well as hauling equipment.

Q. Did you, previous to March 7, 1938, make any arrangements to acquire bulk plant facilities?

A. Yes, we did.

Q. What arrangements did you make?

A. We entered into an agreement with the Ford Benzol people to haul gasoline from our bulk plant, as well as to re-lease the storage tanks and railroad siding from the— I don't remember the name of the company, but we leased a bulk plant.

Q. Was that the plant at Brandt and Wyoming?

A. Yes, at Brandt and Wyoming.

Q. Is that pretty close to where Mr. Ledbetter has his storage?

A. It is right across the tracks.

3120 Trial Examiner Ballinger: That was in 1938?

The Witness: Just prior to March, 1938, probably three or four days.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You say the negotiations with Mr. Raupagh within a month previous to March 7, 1938, you talked to him about the Red Indian Oil Company's offer, distributors of Standard Oil of Ohio. I believe you said you also discussed an offer of Shell Petroleum?

A. Yes.

Q. State what you told him about that.

A. I told him that we could buy Shell on a tank car basis at 2¢ off a gallon—2¢ off the tank wagon price.

Q. Was that based on any conversation you had with Shell?

A. That was based on a conversation we had had some time before that. I wasn't sure at that time, whether or not the Shell offer—I hadn't confirmed that—whether we could start getting Shell on the tank car; whether they had gotten other distributors where they would be no longer interested in our account.

Q. Did you tell them the differential with Shell?

A. I am reasonably sure I told him it was 2¢ a gallon.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Gershenson, you have been talking for some little time. Would you like to have a little recess?

3121 The Witness: I would like to go on.

Mr. Abbott: I presume we will adjourn in about 15 minutes. I would like to have a recess at this time for five minutes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I hope we can conclude with this witness today.

Mr. Abbott: I know we can't conclude with him today.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will have a five minute recess.

(Thereupon a short recess was had.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, you were talking about the conversation had with Mr. Raupagh shortly before March 7.

1938, and you said something about ultimatum. State now what you mean by ultimatum, and what it is based on.

A. I used the term, "Ultimatum," to indicate that that was—

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor. I think the witness should testify what he said and not what—

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Yes; tell us what you said to Mr. Raupagh.

A. I told him that that was the last time that they would talk us out of accepting a competitive offer; that they would either sell us a tank car or we would buy from 3122 someone else and that we were all prepared to make the change.

Q. Did you mention any particular firm?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You mean company?

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you mention any particular company?

A. I don't specifically recall having done it right there at that time. If he asked me, I told him which offer we had.

Q. Had you told him?

A. Previous to that, yes.

Q. Which particular company offer had you told him about?

A. I told him about three specific ones; the Red Indian, the Shell, and the Texas, at different times.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did you go into detail and tell him exactly what the offers were?

The Witness: I don't recall having done that.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. At this time or at any time within a month previous to March 7, 1938, do you specifically recall if you told him about the Red Indian offer?

A. Yes, I told him about the Red Indian offer, and I had also told him about the Texas and the Shell.

Q. About the price?

A. Yes, but I don't recall giving him the details
3123 of the Shell offer.

Q. But you did of the price?

A. Of the Red Indian and of the Texas.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Red Indian is a product of what company?

The Witness: The Standard Oil Company of Ohio. The brand name is Fleet-Wing, but the name of the jobbers, the distributor, is the Red Indian Oil Company.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. And I believe you said, Mr. Dworman—

A. Yes, that is the one.

Q. I want to ask you this, Mr. Gershenson, you stated that the Red Indian Oil Company at one time handled Phillips Petroleum?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember whether that was the brand they handled in 1933 when you first said you talked to them about supplying you?

A. I don't remember when they first changed. It was some time around there. It was from Phillips to Standard Oil Company of Ohio. The first time we talked to them, my recollection goes back that it was Phillips 66.

Q. Well, what was the result of your last meeting with Mr. Raupagh previous to March 7, 1938? What happened, if anything?

3124 A. The next important thing that happened was that they granted us a tank car price and tank car deliveries.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: State what price they granted you.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What was the differential between tank car and tank wagon that they granted you? You were receiving a half cent off tank wagon, were you not, previous to that?

A. It was a cent better, it was a cent and a half better than the tank wagon price, the tank car price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: At that time had you established bulk storage?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You have stated that you established bulk storage out on Wyoming Avenue?

A. Well, we did not have our own hauling trucks. We had entered into agreement with the Ford Benzol who had that equipment, and they hauled it from our bulk plant to our retail stations.

Q. There was some testimony in the Commission's case to the effect that you had a contract with the Benzol people to haul for you or some arrangement.

A. We had an arrangement. There was no written contract.

Q. And that was on the basis of .45 of a cent?

3125 A. For just hauling it from our bulk plant to our stations. We operated our own storage.

Q. You operated the storage?

A. We unloaded the cars into our own bulk storage, and we also operated the man power to unload from our tanks into their trucks, although their driver was right there.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you mean by the man power?

The Witness: Well, somebody to man the pumps in our bulk plant.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did you have electrically driven pumps at that time?

The Witness: Yes, I use the word man power figuratively, because the pumps actually operated the operation.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. In other words, those pumps don't operate automatically?

A. They have to be turned off and on. They measure automatically, though.

Q. I believe there was a statement made in the Commission's case as to the price you paid the Ford Benzol Company to do that hauling operation for you. What was that price?

A. My recollection is that it was half a cent. You just said four and one-half tenths. That may be right. My recollection is of a half a cent a gallon.

3126 Q. Somewhere around a half a cent?

A. Yes.

Q. Did that include, if you recall, any administrative duties, or just the duties of a truck man?

A. No, as far as I know, that was just their—I don't know what—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, that was the contract price?

The Witness: Yes. I don't know what their cost that run into, but that is what we paid them.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What did they do for half a cent a gallon?

A. As I said, they took the gasoline from our bulk plant and delivered it to the retail stores on our order. We told them where to take it.

Q. How many retail stores did you have at that time?

A. I think only four.

Q. Now, Mr. Gershenson, you handle a large variety of merchandise besides gasoline. You have already stated that. I will ask you whether you purchase refrigerators, radios, washing machines, and other merchandise in carload lots in your business?

A. Yes, we purchase all the items you mentioned and many more.

Q. Well, state what others you purchase.

3127 Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor, as irrelevant and immaterial.

Mr. Abbott: I have a right to show by this witness, if the Court please, this matter, and I make an offer of proof to the effect that they purchase refrigerators from the General Electric Company, electrical ranges, washing machines from the same company; refrigerators from Kelvinator Corporation; washing machines from the Hurley Machine Manufacturing Company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What was the latter?

Mr. Abbott: Washing machines from the Hurley Machine Manufacturing Company. And, a long list of other items from national concerns in carload lots, at a differential from a price which they would be required to pay if they received deliveries in less than carload lots. In other words, the purpose of this is to show a general custom in the United States of selling merchandise other than gasoline on a carload basis, which relates—which is analogous to the tank car price which is used in delivering gasoline. I offer to show the differentials which the Ned's Auto Supply receives from the national concerns, like the General Electric Company, if they purchase these articles in carload lots, as distinguished from deliveries in other lots, in lesser lots. I think it has a bearing upon the issues in this case, upon the basis of showing that it is a gen-
3128 eral custom in merchandising throughout the United States to grant price differentials based upon quantity, and particularly in quantity of carload lots. It is right along the line of testimony of Professor Clark and the testimony of Mr. Dyer, who came here from New York to testify.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I don't think that that proves anything. There is no indication that this group of companies, those companies sell those materials to retailers in the same territory at a higher price, and even if they do, it might still be that a difference in price in those cases and for those goods could be justified by differences in cost as a result of the larger quantities delivered and it would not follow that that was true for gasoline if it were true for the other things, so, I don't think it could possibly have any probative value.

3129 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection to the proffer is sustained.

Mr. Abbott: Can I make a general offer of proof?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Abbott: The Respondent offers to prove by this witness that Ned's Auto Supply Company engages in the merchandising of general merchandise, such as refrigerators; electrical ranges; washing machines; electrical ranges; oil heaters; motor oil; denatured alcohol; bicycles; garden hose; anti-freeze for automobiles, purchased from Dupont at Delaware; automobile heaters; radios and tires. That it purchases refrigerators; electrical ranges and washing machines from General Electric Corporation of Schenectady, New York; that it purchases refrigerators from the Kelvinator Corporation of Detroit; Thor washing machines from the Hurley Machine Manufacturing Company; Tappan ranges from the Tappan Range Company; duo-therm oil heaters from Morley Brothers; washing machines from the Maytag Manufacturing Company; Quaker State motor oil from the Quaker State Motor Oil Company of Emblenton, Pennsylvania; denatured alcohol; bicycles and other merchandise mentioned, in carload lots and differentials, at differentials based on quantity, which differentials, it will be shown, are substantial in comparison with the price which they would be required to pay if they purchased in lesser quantities, less than carload lots.

3130 We also offer to show by this witness that these various companies which supply the articles mentioned also supply these articles to wholesale houses, in the City of Detroit, which, in turn, sell them to retailers, such as hardware stores and other supply stores, in the Detroit area at prices greater than the carload price. And that, by this process, the jobber, Ned's Auto Supply Company, is able to secure these articles at a less price than as if they were purchased from a wholesaler in the City of Detroit, the purchases being made in carload lots and, in this way, direct from the manufacturer.

We also offer by this witness to show specifically the list price, the L.C.L.—What is the L.C.L.?

The Witness: Less than carload lots.

Mr. Abbott: (Continuing) Less than carload lot prices, the carload price and all the differentials which I have mentioned which Ned's Auto Supply Company handles in addition to gasoline and petroleum.

Now, that is the offer. That is the offer which I wish to make at this time on the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The proffer of which is rejected.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, I wish at this time to enter upon another inquiry and I would like to ask if we could have an adjournment at this time. We can't possibly 3131 finish with this witness, but I am very sure that before tomorrow noon we will have time to finish him then. I wish to say that Mr. Gershenson has a very important meeting tomorrow noon, between 12 o'clock and 3 o'clock and I would like to offer that we excuse him now.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner wishes to make inquiry on the record as to how much longer time the Respondent would require to put in its case?

Mr. Abbott: The entire case will consist, your Honor, of testimony of Mr. Raupagh, which will be extensive, and also the testimony of the jobbers for whom we have requested subpoenas and, by the way, I would like to ask you, your Honor, to give me the subpoenas before I leave this evening because we wish to send certain of them out for witnesses to appear here on Wednesday or Thursday.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You will be furnished with subpoenas whenever the request is made.

Mr. Abbott: I make the request at this time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, can testimony be disposed of this week?

Mr. Abbott: Well, I think it should be. It depends on how—I don't wish to be limited.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner doesn't wish to unnecessarily hurry these hearings nor subject counsel to any inconvenience, but if the testimony is going 3132 to extend over this week, that is, the hearings commencing at 9:30 and extending until 5 p.m., the Examiner intends to enlarge the hours and extend the hearings possibly to a later hour in the evening or possibly in the evenings.

Mr. Abbott: Well, that would be satisfactory excepting for the evening part of it. I don't appreciate the idea of—is this on the record?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: I don't appreciate the requirement of holding evening sessions because I think, however, it is, if your Honor will open the session tomorrow at nine-thirty—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Why not at nine o'clock?

Mr. Abbott: I will then communicate with Judge Hanley and ascertain how long, in all possibility, the testimony of Mr. Raupagh will take and, I wish at this time to make a formal request that we be given the subpoenaes for the witnesses, consisting of jobbers referred to in the testimony of Mr. Griswold, the office manager of the State Gasoline Tax Division.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is prepared to meet any request of counsel for the Respondent with reference to subpoenaes.

Mr. Abbott: Well, just what do you mean by that?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: He has the subpoenaes and they are in his possession here and he is ready to 3133 make delivery at any time they are requested.

Mr. Abbott: Do you mean by that that you will give us the subpoenaes just to fill out the form and send to the witnesses?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Either that, or the Examiner will, at least, insist upon a list of names of the witnesses to be subpoenaed that may be arranged without difficulty.

Mr. Abbott: Yes. What I wish to say is this; we wish to send out some subpoenaes today, tonight, by registered mail and I haven't the list of those whom we have wished to subpoena. We are going to subpoena them all for the same day. Their testimony will be very short and I would like to have at least ten subpoenaes this evening.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You can have all the subpoenaes you desire.

Mr. Abbott: Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: All you have to do is after we adjourn, to make request of the Examiner and they will be furnished to you.

Mr. Abbott: All right. I make request at this time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you desire the subpoenaes delivered to you at this time?

Mr. Abbott: No, I just want the record to show
3134 that I am asking for the subpoenaes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The record shows that you have made the request and that the Examiner has stated he is prepared to comply with your request at any time.

Mr. Abbott: Very well, that is all I wish to know.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, it is only ten minutes after five. Can't we finish this direct examination of this witness this evening?

Mr. Abbott: No, I can't do that. I wouldn't get through with him this evening and I understand Mr. Austin to say that he wanted to go at five o'clock.

Mr. Austin: Oh, I will stay.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, the Examiner will entertain a motion now for adjournment, with notice, commencing tomorrow, that the Examiner is going to insist on longer hours.

Mr. Abbott: Well, I move at this time that we adjourn at 5:10 o'clock p. m. and that we reconvene on Tuesday, May 6th at 9:30 o'clock a. m.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without objection, the motion is granted and now, at 5:10 p. m. the hearing is adjourned to reconvene at 9:30 a. m. on Tuesday, May 6, 1941, Room 859, Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(Whereupon, at 5:10 p. m., May 5, 1941, the hear-3135 ing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned, to reconvene on May 6, 1941, at 9:30 a. m.)

3136 Room 859 Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan.
May 6, 1941.

Met, pursuant to adjournment, at 9:30 A. M.

Before:

Webster Ballinger, Trial Examiner.

Appearances:

Cyrus B. Austin, Esq., attorney for the Federal Trade Commission.

Harold R. Hanley, Esq., 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and

Arthur J. Abbott, Esq., of the firm of Abbott, MacMahon, and Roberts, 2230 Buhl Building, Detroit, Michigan, on behalf of the Respondent.

3137 PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

This is a reconvening at 9:30 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, May 6, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, in Docket No. 4389, in the case entitled Standard Oil Company.

The last hearing was held in Detroit May 5th, 1941.

The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

Gentlemen, you may proceed.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, at this time, on behalf of the Respondent, I wish to re-offer Respondent's Exhibits 38-A, 38-B, 38-C, 38-D, and 38-E in evidence in this case. These have already been marked for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any objection?

Mr. Austin: I will withdraw the objection previously made, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: There being no objection, Respondent's Exhibits 38-A to and including 38-E, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 38-A to 38-E, inclusive," were received in evidence.)

CHARLES H. GERSHENSON having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further, 3138 as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Abbott (Continued).

Q. Mr Gershenson, in your testimony yesterday, referring to page 3117 of the transcript, in discussing the offer made to you by the Red Indian Oil Company prior to March of 1938, the question was asked you with reference to the price at which they offered to deliver to you Standard Oil of Ohio gasoline, and you said: "No. 1.5 if they delivered it. I misspoke there. 1.5 if they delivered it at our place. There is a differential of 2½ or 1.7 if we picked it up ourselves." Now, will you state on the record whether that answer by you is correct or whether you wish to correct that now?

A. It isn't the way it was transcribed—that isn't correct. When I said 2½, I meant two and one-half tenths of a cent additional margin that we picked it up.

Q. Making it—

A. Making it 1.75 rather than 1.5 differential. When I said 2½ I meant tenths of a cent rather than 2½¢ margin.

Q. So that will you state again the price which was offered to you prior to March of 1938 by the Red Indian Oil Company for Standard Oil of Ohio gasoline so that the record will be correct?

A. We had a choice of taking delivery in one of 3139 two ways: Either picking it up ourselves at their bulk plant terminal, which would give us a margin of 1.75 or having them deliver the gasoline to our retail stations in their tank trains. I don't know what methods they were going to use to get it to our stations, but our margin would be 1.5 off the tank wagon price.

Q. I see.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: In what quantities were the deliveries to be made?

The Witness: In our needs. We were to enter into a contract with them to buy all of our requirements and they would give deliveries as requested.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And in whatever quantities you desired?

The Witness: We didn't go into the details of the minimum quantity they would deliver at a time. That wasn't discussed.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Nor was the maximum quantity?

The Witness: No, sir, but it was predicated on a tank car buying price. That was the understanding. May I complete that?

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Yes, go ahead.

A. They might have been able to—they could 3140 have, I should say, deliver part of the tank car load to one of our stations and drive over to another one and dump the rest.

Q. State the fact as to whether any other oil companies have, since March, 1938, had any negotiations with you relative to furnishing your requirements of gasoline.

A. They did—or I have had—

Q. Now, this relates to the time since March of 1938?

A. If I may make this statement, perhaps this will clear it up.

Q. Yes.

A. Since this fall, in November or December, in anticipation of being called to testify, I personally called a series of five companies which we had previously had negotiations with, to bring their offers up to date, and I have a memo here that I made up subsequent to these discussions in which three of the companies confirmed their previous offers to sell us on a tank car basis and two stated that they had adequate distribution, and they were not in a position to take care of our business.

Q. What are those three companies?

A. The three who confirmed the offer—and I have a letter here in my file, confirming this oral offer—was the Red Indian Company—

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, if he has a letter, I ask it be introduced.

3141 By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Did you have a conversation?

A. Yes, I previously had a conversation. I asked for the letter to confirm the conversation we had.

Q. If you had a letter from one of them, don't state the conversation, but state the one it is.

A. The Gulf Refining Company, Mr. Crawford, the district manager, as well as Mr. Croson, the sales manager, came over to our office and confirmed the previous offer to deliver us gasoline at our bulk plants in tank cars at .066. That was the same price that we were buying from Standard Oil Company. This was between December 20th and 24th. My memo was the 24th. They were over in my office between December 20th and 24th, 1940.

Red Indian's offer was 7.25 tenths of a cent better than the tank car price from Standard Oil Company. I mean we could buy Standard Oil Company of Ohio at approximately three-quarters of a cent lower price than we were buying Standard of Indiana.

Q. You say that you have a letter confirming that offer from the Red Indian. Will you produce that letter?

(The witness handed document to counsel.)

Mr. Abbott: I would like to have this document marked, for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark
3142 the document Respondent's Exhibit 47, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 47.")

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I show you Exhibit 47, for identification, Mr. Gershenson, and ask you to identify and state what it is: without stating the contents of the letter.

A. That is a letter from the Red Indian Oil Company written to our company relative to a gasoline contract.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And dated when?

The Witness: Dated April 30, 1941.

Mr. Abbott: I offer this Exhibit 47, for identification, in evidence.

I may say, your Honor, that the letter, although dated April 30th, referred back to a proposal made during the fall of 1940, and is merely a confirmation of that offer to which the witness has testified.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let counsel for the Commission examine the exhibit.

(The document was handed to counsel for the Commission.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

3143 Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Have you had any previous correspondence with Mr. Dworman?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Are you familiar with his signature?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. Is this his signature, to the best of your knowledge and belief (indicating)?

A. It is.

Q. Do you recognize it?

A. I do.

Mr. Abbott: There being no objection, your Honor—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any objections?

Mr. Austin: No objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 47, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 47," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Abbott: For the record, I wish to read this letter into the record.

Mr. Austin: Now, I don't believe that is necessary. I object to that.

Mr. Abbott: Well, the letter is very short, your 3144 Honor, and I think it will lead to a better understanding of what the offer is if I read it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You can read it and counsel for the Commission can read it, and the Examiner, if necessary, can read it without incorporating it in the record. It will be a duplication.

Mr. Abbott: Very well.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Now, Mr. Gershenson, the letter from Mr. Dworman and the Red Indian Oil Company—by the way, do you know what office he fills in that company?

A. I said yesterday he was the executive head of that company, and it is my understanding he is president. He has never signed the title to it, but he acts in that capacity, and I know no one else in the company who supersedes him.

Q. In his letter he quotes a tank wagon price on the gasoline as .081 per gallon. Do you recall whether that was the tank wagon price in the fall of 1940?

A. The tank wagon price?

Q. Yes.

A. I couldn't tell. I took it as being so from the letter.

Q. He states that offer as the tank wagon price, and he states in his letter: "We were to allow you jobbers discount of .017." 3145

Now, how does that figure compare with the differential that you received from the Standard Oil Company in the fall of 1940, to which time your letter refers?

A. It is .2 of a cent better. We were getting a differential of 1.5 from Standard Oil.

Q. Yes; and he says further: "In addition thereto we would allow you .001 per gallon to haul gasoline out of our pipe line terminal." Do you know where that terminal is located? Is it in Detroit?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And he goes on and says: "And also an advertising allowance of .25 points per gallon on all regular and Ethyl gasoline purchased from us." As an advertising allowance. Had you discussed that with Mr. Dworman?

A. They gave us that discount and we use it as we see fit. We can either retain it or spend it.

Q. What is meant by an advertising allowance?

A. I don't know just what they mean by it. As far as I am concerned, it was a price reduction. I mean that is the only way I can interpret it. They give us that additional discount there and we spend it as we see fit, either to promote the sale of the product through advertising, or creating good will, or giving good service, or any one of many different ways.

3146 Q. And he further states in his letter: "Our Ethyl gasoline is shipped from Toledo refinery, and if you wish to haul that product from Toledo, the hauling allowance would be .004 per gallon."

A. I did not take that into consideration, and I just ignored that.

Q. Have you figured up, based on Exhibit No. 47, what the total of the differential would be for the base differential and the hauling differential? And also the advertising allowance differential?

A. Yes, I did. As a matter of fact, over the telephone he gave me this net figure which I tried to state before, which I would like to now give.

Q. You mean per gallon?

A. Yes.

Q. What is that.

A. That is .05875.

Q. Per what?

A. That is for the regular gasoline.

Q. Expressed in what?

A. In cents.

Q. in cents?

A. Yes. That is 5875/1000 of a cent.

Q. State how much better that price was at the time it was made than the Standard Oil differential.

3147 A. Subtracting that price from .066, which was the price we were then paying Standard Oil in tank cars and having to have our bulk plant, too, the Red Indian price did not require us to have a bulk plant, so the price differential was actually .00725.

Q. And that is approximately what?

A. Approximately .7 of a cent better than the Standard Oil's tank car price on what we consider comparable quality gasoline, because they are both Standard Oil Company.

Q. Is this the same company that made you the offer which was testified about yesterday before you went on the tank car price with the Standard Oil Company in March of 1938?

A. That is the same company that made us that offer, as well as the one I referred to before. We got the additional half cent, and that is also the company that I stated has constantly solicited our business throughout the past ten years.

Q. Is this the same company that you have stated sold you the Quaker State Motor Oil?

A. Yes, the Quaker State Motor Oil and are still selling us motor oil.

Q. You state the Red Indian Oil Company offer would contemplate the elimination of your bulk plant, Mr. 3148 Gershenson. Do I understand that you have at all times, since 1938, maintained a bulk plant which you testified about yesterday?

A. Yes, we have and still do maintain it.

Q. What do you mean specifically when you say that acceptance of the Red Indian Oil Company offer would eliminate the use of your bulk plant?

A. Well, the price is picked up at their bulk plant. We can drive over to their bulk plant or their pipe line terminal and take our gasoline from their bulk facilities and all we would have to have would be just trucks to haul it, and we would eliminate the cost of operating our own storage facilities.

Q. There was marked yesterday for identification Exhibits 45 and 46, which were letters which you testified were written to the Standard Oil Company under date of August 27, 1936, and February 14, 1938. Were those letters written in contemplation of any prosecution or investigation such as the one now in progress?

A. No, sir.

Q. As a matter of fact, were they both written before the State prosecution which you have now?

A. Yes, they were. I write the Standard Oil Company comparatively often. If we run into a bad competitive price, I write to Mr. Raupagh about that.

3149 Q. Now, Mr. Gershenson, there was testimony in the Commission's case last month to the effect that—or, rather, it was in March instead of last month, to the effect that in 1938 and 1939, in particular, Ned's Auto Supply Company gave preferences to their customers on purchases of gasoline by issuing credit cards, trading stamps, and other price concessions. I believe you testified something about the cost of trading stamps to Ned's Auto Supply Company. Will you state that again on the record as to what the cost was of issuing these trading stamps, based on the actual redemptions made?

Mr. Austin: How is that material? I object to it on the ground that it is irrevelant and immaterial as to what the cost was to him. Whatever proof there is in the record relating to the issuance of those to customers and what it costs Ned's Auto Supply Company to issue them, it seems to me, is the point.

Mr. Abbott: Well, what I want to bring out is this: I will ask the witness this question. Withdraw the other question which is objected to.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What was the nature of these trading stamps that you issued in those years of 1938 and 1939?

A. That was during the prevailing so-called price war when there were all sorts of offers and inducements being made to the public by our competitors.

3150 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question to the witness, Mr. Reporter.

(The last question was read.)

Mr. Abbott: The Examiner wants you to understand that question.

A. I am trying to answer it to the best of my ability. I am trying to give you the inducement for the—Trial Examiner Ballinger: Forget the inducement and tell us what the nature of it was.

The Witness: I don't get what you mean.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What were they?

A. They were trading stamps having a face value of 2¢ gallon, but which the net cost to us was half a cent in redemption value.

Q. Why was that?

A. Why, there were—

Mr. Austin: I object to it, to what the cost was to the company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Mr. Abbott: I think he has a right to show, if the Court please, what the ultimate result was in the issuing of these stamps which had a face value of 2¢ if they were redeemed.

3151 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Suppose they had been redeemed in gas?

The Witness: Your Honor, they weren't redeemed in gas. That's what I am trying to explain. If I am given a chance to submit all the facts, I think I might be helpful. I am the only one that has this information and the Commission is anxious to know the facts, and I am glad to supply them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If it is designed to prove by this witness the trading stamp testified to by another witness, redeemable in gasoline, or not redeemable in gasoline, the witness may so testify.

Mr. Austin: The testimony is the testimony of this witness that is in the record, and I think the testimony will show whether they were redeemable in gas or weren't, right now.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Were these trading stamps, Mr. Gershenson, redeemable in gas or other merchandise?

A. They stated on their face and stated on it that they were redeemable in other merchandise.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Were they redeemable in gas?

The Witness: No, your Honor, they were not.

By Mr. Abbott:

3152 Q. Before you went on a tankcar basis in 1938 had you—and when I say "you" I mean the Ned's Auto Supply Company—been offering commercial discounts to commercial customers?

A. I have previously testified, and we had extended commercial discounts as long as we had been in the gasoline business, because there were commercial discounts available when we first went into the gasoline business, and we just met that competition.

Q. After March of 1938 did you offer any inducements other than or different in character than you had offered previous to March of 1938?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question on the ground that it is indefinite and calls for a conclusion as to what is an inducement. Further, on the ground that the—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Mr. Abbott: Well, I will reframe the question.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. After you went on the tank car basis in March, 1938, did you offer any different price concessions to the public, either in character or amount, than you had offered previous to the time that you went on the tank car basis?

Mr. Austin: I object to that, too, your Honor, and maybe here, if they wish to, desire to ask this witness about what he did give, why, all right, but the whole question is so indefinite as to what it is based upon or whether 3153 it means reduction from the so-called prevailing price, and whether it means price, and whether it means trading stamps, and it is really calling for the conclusion of the witness as to a comparison of what he did before and after that date.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. All right. I will ask it this way, Mr. Gershenson: What did you offer to the public previous to March of 1938 in the way of price concessions, premiums, or trading stamps, etc.?

A. As I have already stated, we met competition on commercial discounts—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Just read that question to the witness: Can't you answer the question direct?.

(The last question was read.)

The Witness: Will you please read my answer?

(The last answer was read.)

The Witness: I submit, your Honor, that is a concession.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What did you offer?

The Witness: A commercial discount, to start with.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Tell about it.

By Mr. Abbott:

3154 Q. What else?

Mr. Austin: How much?

A. I can't testify. That covers a long period. It might be changed. Whatever the prevailing commercial discount was. Maybe 2¢. It was never more than 2¢, to my recollection.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What else besides commercial discounts?

A. No other special inducement except during a price war, whatever the prevailing situation was. I can't answer that question generally, unless you ask me about some specific time.

Q. I am asking you about the time before you went on a tank car basis in March of 1938. This relates to the time before you went on a tank car basis. Was there anything else that you offered to the public by way of price inducements or premiums or trading stamps, etc.?

A. I don't remember whether the trading stamps were in 1939 or 1938, so—I believe we were giving the trading stamps before we went on a tank car basis.

Q. What did you offer in that line after you went on a tank car basis?

A. Nothing more than we had previous. I might make this general statement, if I may. Our buying price has no bearing on our retail selling price. We meet competi-
3155 tion in a general way. Our buying price doesn't enter into it.

Mr. Austin: I move that last statement be stricken from the record, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Motion granted.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, what was the reason specifically, for giving these concessions to the public on retail sales of gasoline?

Mr. Austin: I object to that also, your Honor. The reason why the witness did it has nothing to do with their effect. We are concerned in this case with what was done and what its effect was. I don't believe a statement by the witness as to why he gave any discount is in any way material.

Mr. Abbott: On the question as to whether there was a competitive situation which required Ned's Auto Supply to meet that competition, I think the question is material.

Mr. Austin: That's a question of opinion of Ned's Auto Supply Company. It appears to me that it could not possibly have any probative value.

As to whether, in their opinion, they needed to meet competition or there was competition, or whether the price was reduced for that purpose, or some other purpose; we have had repeated attempts to show that same thing—

3156 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, in 1938, or 1939, you had a station at Jefferson and Manistique, did you not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that station opened?

A. It was opened in June of 1933.

Q. And will you state the fact as to whether there was a Joy station selling Joy gasoline at the corner of Vernor and Elmwood, in the City of Detroit at the time that the Ned's station was opened at Jefferson and Manistique, or at any time between then and April, 1938?

A. On April 3, 1938, that Joy station, which is in competition with our Jefferson station, was selling Joy gasoline at a differential of—Trial Examiner Ballinger: One moment. He merely asked you whether there was a Joy station.

The Witness: Yes, there was.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. All right. Do you know, in a general way, what that station at Vernor and Elmwood sold Joy gasoline for in the year 1938?

A. I have a memo as to its differential. I don't remember how much per gallon.

Q. How much were they selling that gasoline at 3157 the Joy station in question below the price at which you were selling gasoline at your station at Jefferson and Manistique, if you know?

Mr. Austin: I make the same objection to that, your Honor, that I have been making all along; on the ground it is irrelevant and immaterial as to what prices other retail service stations were charging. That is the same general objection that I made to the photographs and the—

Mr. Abbott: The situation involved here is this, your Honor: There has been testimony in the Commission's case with reference to all of the Ned's stations, including the one at Jefferson and Manistique, on the part of gasoline station operators in that locality. That they were injured by the reason of the fact that Ned's Auto Supply Company was making these prices, these price concessions that have been referred to this morning, and it becomes material in the Respondent's case to show—for the purpose of showing that there was no injury to competition, as using the words of the statute under which this case is brought, to show what the competitive situation was in the vicinity of Ned's station at the corner of Jefferson and Manistique in the City of Detroit. That's what this testimony is intended to show.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

Mr. Abbott: Will you read the question?

3158 (The last question was read.)

A. They were selling at 5½¢ a gallon under our price; under our selling price.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. That was in 1938?

A. That was April of 1938.

Q. Do you know whether in the years 1938 and 1939 there was a Hi-Speed station at the corner of Vernor and McDougal?

A. Yes, there was.

Q. Are you familiar with that station?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know at what price they were selling gasoline at that station in the year 1939, compared with the price that they were selling Standard gasoline at your station at Jefferson and Manistique?

A. The price was a cent and a half under our selling price.

Q. Do you know the station—

A. That was in November of 1939.

Q. Do you know a station—

Mr. Austin: I assume my objection as to relevancy and materiality will go to this whole line of examination, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It runs to the entire line.

By Mr. Abbott:

3159 Q. Do you know a station operated by James J. Bright on Jefferson Avenue?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What corner is that; what intersection?

A. It is Jefferson and Emerson.

Q. And how far is that from your station at Jefferson and Manistique?

A. A half dozen blocks or so; six or eight, something like that.

Q. And do you know the price at which Bright was selling gasoline, or which it is now selling gasoline for, for that matter, under the price at which you sell Standard gasoline at Jefferson and Manistique?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What is the differential?

A. The differential there is 2½¢, and, in addition to that, he offers premiums; free premiums.

Q. That is the situation which obtains to the present time; isn't it?

A. Right today; yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What kind of gas is he selling?

The Witness: He was selling Sun at one time. He has recently changed. I don't know who he gets it from now; Sun and Sinclair.

3160 By Mr. Abbott:

Q. What kind of a sign does he have up there?

A. I don't remember the brand name. It is Spitfire, I believe.

Q. It is called Spitfire?

A. I believe.

Q. Do you know whether in 1938 and 1939 there was a Joy station at the corner of Kercheval and Chalmers?

A. Yes, Kercheval and Chalmers.

Q. How far away is that from the Standard Oil station at the corner of Jefferson and Manistique, approximately?

A. About four blocks; three or four blocks.

Q. Is Kercheval the street immediately north of Jefferson?

A. Yes, it is; one block north. It parallels it.

Q. And do you know the price at which the Joy station at that corner is selling Joy gasoline presently?

A. I checked that within the past few days, and that price is 4½¢ under our retail selling price.

Q. At the present time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether in 1938 and 1939 the differential was larger, as between their selling price and your selling price, on Standard gasoline?

A. I don't have a memo on that station, but if their price was the same as for the Joy station at Vernor 3161 and Elmwood, why it was 5½¢; a cent more. That was in 1938 or 1939.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge that there is a Zip station on the corner of Kercheval and Ashland?

A. Yes. That is two blocks away.

Q. Just two blocks away from your station?

A. Yes.

Q. Kercheval—

A. It might be two or three.

Q. Where is Kercheval with reference to Jefferson?

A. I would say Kercheval is the next parallel street, running north.

Q. And how far is Ashland from Manistique?

A. The second block from Manistique; running east.

Q. And do you have personal knowledge as to how much they are selling gasoline for at that station at this time, below the price at which you are selling Standard Oil gasoline?

A. Yes, I do. Their price [illegible]he same as Joy's.

Q. What is that?

A. 4½¢ under our price.

Q. Now, do you know whether the Zip station at Kercheval and Ashland was in operation in 1938 and 1939?

A. I am sure that it was.

Q. And do you know of your own knowledge—

3162 A. I am not sure whether the Joy station at Kercheval and Chalmers—I don't recall. I think that followed. This Zip station was there before the Joy station.

Q. This Zip station was there, you say, in 1938 and 1939?

A. Yes.

Q. Of your own knowledge, state whether they were selling gasoline at a higher or lower differential, compared with the Standard Oil price at your station at Jefferson and Manistique in 1938 and 1939.

A. I don't remember—you said higher price or higher differential?

Q. Higher or lower differential.

A. They were selling at a lower price. There was a higher differential.

Q. I mean, as compared with the present time. You stated now it is 4½¢.

A. At that time the differential was higher.

Q. How much higher?

A. At least a cent. In other words, there was a 5¢ difference, 5 to 5½¢.

Q. Have you ever attempted to meet that competition at your Manistique and Jefferson outlet?

A. We have never been able to meet Joy and Zip prices at any of our outlets.

3163 Q. With reference to Hi-Speed and the other stations that you have mentioned in your testimony just now, have you attempted to meet that competition in 1938 and 1939?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question as calling for a conclusion of the witness and he should state what he did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I will reframe it this way: During those years 1938 and 1939, when you testified that you were selling gasoline under the price of Standard Oil gasoline, have you met that competition?

A. We have never had a price as low as the lowest prevailing prices in the City of Detroit; either during price wars or at other times.

Q. Now, referring to your station at Grand River and Chicago Boulevard. When was that station opened?

A. That was opened in June of 1936.

Q. Do you have knowledge that there is a Joy station at the corner of Grand River and Stopel?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. How far is that located from the Grand River and Chicago outlet of the Ned's Auto Supply Company?

A. It is less than six blocks. It may be only four.

Q. It is also on Grand River?

A. Yes, it is; on the same street.

3164 Q. And do you know whether that station was in operation in 1938 and 1939?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. State for the record how much less or how much more that station was charging for Joy gasoline in 1938 and 1939 than was charged for Standard Oil gasoline at your Grand River and Chicago outlet?

A. They were selling at 6¢ a gallon under our retail price in April of 1938.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether there is a Speedway Petroleum Corporation station at the corner of Davison and Detroit Terminal Railway?

A. There are two of them. There is one at Davison and Detroit Terminal and another at Livernois and Kendall.

Q. Where are these stations with reference to your station at Chicago?

A. They are within a half a mile radius. I don't recall all the cross streets, but they are direct competition.

Q. Directing your attention to the year 1939, do you have any data with reference to the price at which they were selling Speedway gasoline under the price at which you were selling Standard Oil at your Grand River and Chicago Boulevard branch?

A. Both Speedway stations then, even as now, had a retail price of approximately a cent and a half to a 3165 cent and seven tenths under our retail selling price.

Q. You say that condition even prevails now?

A. Right today, yes.

Q. Do you have knowledge that there is a Shell station at the corner of Grand River and Plymouth?

A. I am familiar with the Shell station at Grand River and Plymouth. That is Stark Hickey's, I believe you mean.

Q. Is that a large outlet?

A. Yes, very large.

Q. And Grand River and Plymouth; is that an important intersection in Detroit?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Do you have knowledge of the price at which they were selling gasoline in 1939, lower or higher than the price for which you were selling Standard Oil gasoline at Grand River and Chicago Boulevard outlet?

A. Their price was a cent and four tenths under our price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What gas?

The Witness: Shell gas. That is Stark Hickey's.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you have knowledge of the fact that at the corner of Grand River and Plymouth there is another station?

A. There is a White Star station there. That and Stark Hickey's adjoin each other on a triangle. They 3166-3167 are right together.

Q. And when you say White Star, what gasoline do you refer to?

A. I believe it was White Star then. It is now Socony Vacuum. That is Standard of New York, I believe.

Q. Directing your attention to the year 1939, do you know at what price Stark Hickey, at that station, was selling Socony Vacuum gasoline, either higher or lower than the price at which you were selling Standard products?

A. You were mistaken. This was another station next to Stark Hickey's. Stark Hickey was selling Shell. It is the White Star station next to Stark Hickey. They had the same price as Stark Hickey. Their price was always the same.

Q. What was that?

A. It was 1.4 less than our price.

Q. Less than the price that you were selling Standard gasoline?

A. Yes.

Q. What year was that?

A. That was in September of 1939.

Q. All these matters are stated on your personal knowledge, are they?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you accustomed to keep track of the competitive conditions around all of your stations at any time?

3168 A. That is my immediate responsibility, and I do that by driving around to each of our stations daily, or as often as is possible.

Q. Do you have knowledge that there is a station at the corner of Grand River and North Lawn?

A. There was one there, yes; Grand River and North Lawn, in 1939. It was a Shell station— I don't know whether it is still the same brand or not, today. You mean today or back—

Q. I mean do you know whether it is there today.

A. Well, there has been one change there somewhere. I don't know whether that is it or not.

Q. Well, we will pass that.

Do you know a Cities Service station at the corner of Livernois and Dover?

A. Yes.

Q. Where is that with reference to your station at Grand River and Chicago Boulevard?

A. That is a little longer than the rest of them. It is between a half mile and mile and—well about a half a mile.

Q. Livernois is a main artery of Detroit, is it not?

A. Livernois is a main artery.

Q. Where is it with reference to Grand River?

A. It intersects Grand River about two or three streets beyond our station at Grand River and Chicago Boulevard.

3169 Q. You think this station, though, is about a mile away from Grand River and Chicago?

A. I don't have the mental picture of that.

Q. Well, we will pass that.

Do you know whether there is a station operated by Montgomery Ward Company at Grand River and Greenfield?

A. Yes, I do. There is another one next door, too.

Q. We are just referring to the competition around your Grand River and Chicago Boulevard outlet.

A. Yes, there is. There is a more recent one. That opened in January.

Q. Can you state of your own knowledge the price at which Montgomery Ward Company sell gasoline at their Grand River and Greenfield station, with reference to the price charged by you for Standard Oil gasoline?

A. Yes, I can.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When was that station opened?

The Witness: That's what I tried to say. That was opened in January of this year; January of 1941.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge at what price they are selling gasoline at that station?

A. Yes. It is 2¢ under our price; 2¢ a gallon.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What kind of gasoline
3170 are they selling?

The Witness: Well, I don't know, today. It was my understanding at one time—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Unless you know—

The Witness: No, I don't know.

Mr. Abbott: That will be supplied by other testimony.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You say that they sell gasoline at the present time at 2¢—

A. At 2¢ a gallon under their house brand gasoline. The one that compares to our Standard Red Crown.

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor, about the statement that it compares to the Standard brand, and move that it be stricken, unless knowledge is shown—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Motion is granted.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. With reference to the competitive situation around your Chicago Boulevard and Grand River stations, have you ever met any of the prices concerning which you testified this morning?

A. During the price war we met some, like Stark Hickey, but not the Joy and Zip and Speedway. We have never been able to meet their prices.

Q. During the time of the price war of 1938 and 3171 1939, I believe you stated that the Joy station at Grand River and Stopel sold gasoline at 6¢ under the price at which you were selling gasoline at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. What is their differential at the present time, if you know, over the price at which you sell Standard gasoline?

A. 4¢ a gallon. I haven't figured it out. They have varying prices, at different times.

The Joy and Zip competition, we just are never able to meet it, and I don't follow their prices today.

Q. At the present time, do you know what the postings on that station at Grand River and Stopel are?

A. No, I do not. I would have to go back and check it.

Q. Referring to your store at John R and Nevada. When was that station opened?

A. That was the first one that was opened in 1918.

Q. That is your original store?

A. Yes, it is. It is the one started by our father.

Q. Do you have knowledge of a station operated by Sun Oil Company, or a Sun Oil station at Six Mile Road and John R?

A. It is operated by Sun Oil Company. There is a dealer selling Sun gasoline there now.

Q. And do you know whether that station, during 1938 and 1939, offered premiums?

A. Yes, I do.

3172 Q. What kind of premiums?

A. A variety of premiums. They had dishes; an assortment of dishes on their drive, and I believe they gave cigarettes at that time, too. They are, today, giving free inducements. I passed that yesterday.

Q. What do you mean by inducements?

A. Well, free wash and free lubrication jobs; gasoline—or a wash job for 29¢ with a purchase of gasoline.

Q. Is that what they are advertising at that station?

A. Yes.

Q. You say you saw it yesterday?

A. They have a sign out at Six Mile Road and John R.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge that there is a Sinclair station at the corner of Eight Mile Road and Woodward?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that one of the important intersections of Detroit?

A. Yes, it is. There is a closer one at Six Mile and John R. That is the thorn in our side. That is six or eight blocks away.

Q. We will discuss both of those.

The one at Eight Mile Road and Woodward; do you know whether that was operated in the year 1939?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. And do you know what they were selling Sin-
3173 clair gasoline for at that station in 1939?

A. 1.7¢ off our retail price.

Q. What month was that in 1939?

A. That was in November of 1939.

Q. And the station at Six Mile Road and John R, which is also a Sinclair station; do you know at what price they were selling gasoline at that station a year ago?

A. Yes, sir; 2¢ a gallon off our retail price, and are, right today. That sign was there this morning on Sinclair H-C house brand gasoline.

Q. And how long has that been going on?

A. That has been going on since 1938; three years.

Q. Have they offered the same 2¢ off all that time?

A. Openly, with a sign eight feet square; 2¢ discount as well as—they multiply it out—8 for so much.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge that there is a Cities Service station at Oak and Avenue and State Fair Avenue?

A. Oakland and State Fair, yes.

Q. Has that station been there for some time?

A. That station has been there. I am not sure that it has always been Cities Service.

Q. At the present time do you know whether they are offering gasoline—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Just a moment. Do 3174 you know what it is at the present time?

The Witness: Yes. That is Cities Service today; as of January of this year.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you know at what price they sell Cities Service gasoline?

A. Their price in January of this year was 2½¢ under our price.

Q. How far is that station from your John R and Nevada station?

A. That would be close to a mile; between a half mile and a mile.

Q. Oakland Avenue is an important street, isn't it?

A. Oakland is a street that parallels John R, the next important street running north and south; that is, east of John R; but State Fair is about three-quarters of a mile north of Nevada.

Q. I believe you stated that the principal competition you had was the Sinclair station at Six Mile and John R?

A. As well as the Sun station, also, at John R. and Six Mile.

Q. You said there were two stations—

A. Kitty-cornered.

Q. And how far is that from John R and Six Mile?

A. Only five or six blocks, and they are at an important 3175 intersection. All our customers pass that intersection, and they tell us what is going on down there.

Q. Do you know of a Cities Service station at Woodward and Colton?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Was that in operation in 1939?

A. Yes, November of 1939.

Q. And have you a recollection what they were charging for Cities Service gasoline at that station in November of 1939?

A. They had a sign out, 2¢ gallon off.

Q. 2¢ off.

Have you ever met the competition of 2¢ off offered by the Sinclair station at Eight Mile and Woodward, Sinclair station at Six Mile and John R, and Cities Service Station at Woodward and Colton? In other words, have you ever sold gasoline at your John R and Nevada station at a discount of 2¢ to the public?

A. No, sir; only during that short period of the price war, but since then the Sinclair station has continued to sell at 2¢ off, and we haven't met them since 1938.

Q. Now going back to Maple and Michigan, that is your Dearborn station, is it not?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. When did you open that station?

A. That was opened in March of 1931.

3176 And are you familiar with a Langer station in that vicinity?

A. Yes, I am. That is on Michigan Avenue just a couple of blocks away.

Q. What is the full name of it?

A. It was then Langer's Auto Supply, and it is now Art's.

Q. Has that station been operated for some time?

A. It has been there for about five years.

Q. Do you know what gasoline they sell?

A. I believe they sell Texas now.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: How long have they been selling Texas, do you know?

The Witness: Since they started.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Since when?

The Witness: Since they opened up.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When did they open?

The Witness: About 1936—1935 or 1936. That is my best recollection.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do you know at what price they sell Texas gasoline?

A. I know what price they were selling in March of last year, March of 1940.

Q. What price is that?

A. 2¢ off our price.

3177 Q. 2¢ off of your price?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Based on what gasoline?

A. Based on their house brand gasoline or Standard gasoline.

Q. Have you knowledge of a Joy station operated at Michigan and McGraw?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. How long has that station been operated?

A. I can't answer that. I know it was there on the first of this year, and it has been there for some time.

Q. Do you have knowledge of the price at which they were selling Joy gasoline at that station in January of 1941?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What was it?

A. I believe 4¢ a gallon off our price.

Q. You mean the price at which you were selling Standard gasoline at your Dearborn station?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have knowledge of a Zip station at Michigan and Shaw?

A. Yes. That is the same price as Joy gasoline. They are within a block of each other.

Q. They are within a block of each other?

A. Yes.

3178 Q. And they both sell at the same price?

A. Yes.

Q. And now much is that under the price at which you sell Standard gasoline at your Dearborn station?

A. In January of this year it was 4¢ a gallon under.

Q. 4¢ a gallon under?

A. Yes.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Under your price?

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, you have been testifying about the conditions in the vicinity of your Michigan and Maple Avenue station. Have you ever met the price that you have been telling us at which gasoline has been sold at these stations that you mentioned?

A. Never met Joy and Zip. We have met Langer's.

Q. Well, are you selling gasoline at a discount at the Michigan and Maple station at the present time?

A. No, we are not. You asked me have we ever met the price. During the price war—

Q. I understand you did meet Langer's price?

A. During the price war, yes.

Q. Well, now, at any time that you say you met the prices of these competing stations, did you ever sell for less before they sold for less?

3179 A. No. When I say we met them, that is how I got this question. We will make a survey following receiving certain information as to what our competitors are doing, sometimes through signs, although there haven't been many signs in the last year and a half or so, and when the competitive situation is such that we know we are losing volume to our competitors, why, we will meet their prices wherever possible. We have never been able to do that, as far as Joy, Zip, Speedway, Fleet-Wing, and, oh, a number of outlets all around us that you haven't asked me about.

Q. All right.

Now, do you have a station at 14340 Gratiot Avenue?

A. That is Gratiot and Madeline.

Q. Gratiot and Madeline?

A. Right near the Seven Mile Road.

Q. When was that station opened up?

A. That was opened in June of 1938.

Q. Do you have knowledge of a station operated by Montgomery Ward & Company at Gratiot and Lappan?

A. Yes, that is right across the street from us. One block over.

Q. Was that station being operated in 1939?

A. March of 1939, yes.

Q. Will you state on the record at what price they were selling Montgomery Ward's gasoline at that station

3180 in March of 1939?

A. That was when that station opened up, and it was at 3¢ off our price.

Q. 3¢ off?

A. 3¢ per gallon off our price.

Q. How long did that continue, approximately?

A. There is at least still 2¢ difference now. I haven't checked the price recently in their station, which is off of Gratiot and is sort of back of their store.

Q. What do they call that gasoline, if you know?

A. I don't believe I know.

Q. Now, are there any Shell stations out in that vicinity?

A. There are several Shell stations within a mile. There is one at Gratiot and Seyburn and Gratiot and Orleans and Gratiot and Waterloo, and in November of 1939 they had a price of 1½¢ a gallon under our price.

Q. How long did that continue?

A. I can't answer that.

Q. Was that during the so-called price war?

A. I don't know when they start and stop. I can only tell you the certain day I am there and saw their price. I have no knowledge of when they started and when they stopped.

Q. Do you have knowledge of a Texas station at Gratiot and Cedargrove?

A. Yes. In November of 1939, during the price 3181 war, on November 17th, to be exact, it was 2.6¢ a gallon off our price.

Q. You mean less than the price at which you were selling gasoline?

A. Yes.

Q. That is at your station at Gratiot Avenue and Madeline?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of a station at 12500 Gratiot Avenue?

A. Yes, that is Bertrand's.

Q. What do they sell?

A. Gulf gasoline.

Q. That is called "Good Gulf," that is what they call it, isn't it?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I suggest that you let the witness testify.

The Witness: They use that in their advertising.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Do they have a Gulf sign on that station?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any knowledge of any time during the past year when they have been selling Gulf gasoline at that station for less than the price at which you have been selling Standard gasoline in your station?

A. A year ago, in May of 1940, they were selling at 2¢ off our price. It is my understanding, although I have 3182 no personal knowledge, that they still do.

Mr. Austin: Motion to strike out the last part of the answer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Motion granted.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. The time at which they were selling at a reduction of 2¢ off the price of Standard house brand gasoline was when?

A. In May of 1940.

Q. Now, is there a Montgomery Ward station at Seven Mile Road and Gratiot Avenue?

A. Yes, I have already stated that. That is at Gratiot and Lappan. That is a block off of Seven Mile. The back part goes around to Seven Mile Road, the parking lot.

Q. That is very close to your station?

A. It is right across the street on the other side of Gratiot Avenue. We are on the east side and they are on the west side.

Q. Do you say that ever since they opened they have been selling at 3¢ less than the Standard price of gasoline?

A. I said it was then 3¢. It is now 2¢ off our price.

Q. At any time in 1938 and 1939 and 1940 and 1941, have you met the price of any of these stations?

A. I have never met Montgomery Ward, or as I previously testified, Joy or Zip.

3183 Q. You haven't testified about any Joy or Zip stations. Are there any in the locality of your Gratiot Avenue station, that you can recall?

A. Not very close. They are further down on Gratiot.

Q. Have you ever met the price of the Texas station at Gratiot and Cedargrove?

A. As I have already said, in 1939, during the price war, we came within a half a cent of them.

Q. What were they selling gasoline for?

A. 2½¢ off, and ours, during the price war, was 2¢.

Q. Now, coming to the station at Woodward and Calvert, that was opened when?

A. That was also opened in 1938, October of 1938. It was just a few months after the Gratiot Avenue station.

Q. Was that the last—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —the last one in Detroit that you have opened up?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you have knowledge that there is a Joy station at the corner of Woodward and Taylor Avenue?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that very close to your Calvert station?

A. Yes, sir, very close, and an important competitor.

Q. In 1938, after you opened or about the time that you opened your Woodward and Calvert station, do you 3184 know at what price Joy gasoline was being sold at Woodward and Taylor?

A. The differential at that time was 7½¢ off our gasoline.

Q. 7½¢?

A. Yes, they used to line up on Woodward Avenue for blocks. I might say that that Joy station used to have a lower price than other Joy stations. I don't know for what reason.

Q. Do you know what their price is at the present time, as compared with your price, for Standard gasoline, at Woodward and Calvert?

A. 4 to 5¢ a gallon. That station took their signs down entirely now, for some reason.

Q. You say it is between 4 and 5¢?

A. Yes; off our price.

Q. Do you have knowledge of a Gulf station at Woodward and Tyler?

A. Yes, that is Carnick Oil Company.

Q. And was that station being operated in 1938?

A. Yes, in May.

Q. Have you any information—

A. 2¢ a gallon off our price.

Q. In what month?

A. That was in May of 1938.

3185 Q. And do you have knowledge of a Mobilgas station at the corner of Davison and Woodward?

A. Yes, that is what I called Taylor.

Q. Is he the former mayor of Highland Park?

A. He held some office in Highland Park. I don't know whether he was mayor.

Q. How long has he been operating the station at Davison and Woodward?

A. At least five years. There was a station prior to that, but he took it over in 1937 or 1936.

Q. Do you have any knowledge, from your own personal inspection, as to what he was selling gasoline for in 1938?

A. Yes. 2¢ a gallon off our price.

Q. What month?

A. In May of 1938.

Q. Now, have you any knowledge of any other Joy, Zip, or Speedway stations in the vicinity of the Woodward and Calvert Avenue station, where you last constructed a station?

There is another Zip station at Woodward, around King or Hague, which is on the other side.

Q. That is just south of Clairmount?

A. Yes, on the east side of Woodward Avenue, and their price is approximately 4¢ off our price. They came into being after the Joy Station at Woodward and Taylor.

Q. Now, do you meet the prices of the Joy and Zip 3186 stations, which are adjacent to your Woodward and Calvert outlet?

A. I have answered that three times this morning. We have never been able to meet Joy and Zip prices since we have been in business, nor come close to it. That goes for all of our stations, which all carry the same price. And we have never been able to meet Joy or Zip's lowest prices anywhere, nor even their highest prices. Their prices vary, but our stations all carry the same price.

Q. Are those all the stations, Mr. Gershenson? Have I referred to all the stations that you operate in the City of Detroit?

A. Yes, you have.

Q. You stated yesterday, Mr. Gershenson, on the record, the gallonage that you had from 1936 to 1940, inclusive. I will ask you whether after you went on the tank wagon—

Mr. Abbott: Strike that out, Mr. Reporter.

Q. I will ask you whether, after you went on the tank car basis in March of 1938, the gallonage of Ned's Auto Supply Company increased?

A. On the contrary, it decreased for the same number of outlets. We added ~~two~~ outlets after that, we added two ~~outlets~~ after that, but, for the ten months following March of 1938, for the four stations we had at that time, the gallonage decreased.

3187 Q. And in the year 1939, the figures which you gave yesterday were 4,336,000 gallons. Was that less than your gallonage in 1938? If so, by how many gallons?

A. I will have to get my memorandum on that.

Q. All right, take your time.

A. By approximately 550,000 gallons, 1939 was lower than 1938.

Q. And was 1940 lower than 1939?

A. Yes; it was, by, oh, approximately 20,000 gallons.

Q. How did 1940 compare with 1937?

A. Oh, just a slight bit higher.

Q. In 1937, how many stores did you have? How many outlets?

A. We had four and in 1940 we had six.

Q. How many more gallons did you sell in 1940 than you sold in 1937, approximately?

A. About 80,000 gallons for the year.

Q. Notwithstanding the fact that you had two more stations?

A. That is right, our gallonage has definitely not increased. As a matter of fact, it went down after we went on the tank car basis.

Q. Has there been any difference in your pricing policy since you went on a tank car basis?

A. No, sir.

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor, unless 3188 we know what the witness' pricing policies are and I think that would be immaterial.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Have your prices, since you went on the tank car basis in March of 1938, been any lower? I mean, the prices at which you offer gasoline at retail?

A. No.

Mr. Austin: I object to that and ask that the answer be stricken out.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Of your own personal knowledge, Mr. Gershenson, will you state the fact as to whether Ned's Auto Supply Company has ever started price cutting in any of the locations where you have outlets?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, likewise, your Honor, as being irrelevant and immaterial and also it doesn't appear that, it hasn't been established what is meant by price cutting nor has it been established that this witness has knowledge of any prices at any particular time in question charged in the other stations in the neighborhood. He would have to know the prices of the other stations and it would just have to be established that price cutting existed.

3189 Mr. Abbott: I am asking just a general question which I think your Honor has quite often asked in reference to price cutting, that has been used quite often in this case and the meaning is pretty definitely established. I am asking this witness this question as a matter of general policy since 1938 when he went on a tank car basis.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, in your capacity as president of Ned's Auto Supply Company, have you, during the past four or five years kept a portfolio of photographs and other material to show the competitive situation in Detroit?

A. I have kept a file and portfolio.

Q. Did you at one time have a portfolio of pictures and other material?

A. I had quite a comprehensive collection of receipts and photographs and cards.

Q. What became of that?

A. I turned it over to an investigator for the Federal Trade Commission.

Q. What was his name?

A. Donald McDonald. I say I turned it over to him. I did not mean to give him possession of it, but he took it.

Q. What conversation did you have with him at the time?

A. He came out about a year ago and identified 3190 himself to me and he said he wanted to know whether I would make certain records available for him, that ~~he was making an~~ investigation for the Federal Trade Commission and it was voluntary whether we showed him these records or not and I did and I got into a conversation with him and we found out we had mutual friends going to law school at Michigan and he invited me down to his hotel in the evening for a social visit and he was staying at the Royal Palm Hotel and he told me, he said that he found me to be quite well informed on the situation here and that I could save him a lot of leg work if I would come down and visit him and tell him what I knew. He said he had had a talk with a Mr. Peck and, in fact, he said it was through Peck's solicitation that he was here and he said if I could give him a comprehensive story of what the competitive situation was here, I could save him some work and I told him I had quite a file and I stayed in his room until it got quite late and he asked me if I would leave that file with him until the next day and he would go over it until the next morning and, I did, and that was the last I saw that file until I received some photostatic copies after this trial began.

Q. Did you ever see the file back?

A. Never saw it back.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did you ever request its return?

3191 The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. How did you make the request of?

The Witness: I made it to—I did not know where to reach Mr. McDonald.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You knew he was connected with the Federal Trade Commission, did you not?

The Witness: Yes, I did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You knew that a letter addressed to him at the Federal Trade Commission would reach him, did you not?

The Witness: I had no need for it until they started this suit. He was supposed to return it to me voluntarily the next day, but he went to Washington and I had called the hotel the next day or the day after and they said he had left and carried that file off to Washington with him, but it was my understanding when I gave it to him that he would return it to me the next day.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You haven't got the file back?

A. I made a request of Mr. Austin before this trial began, at least I told him I would like to get it back and he suggested how I might go about getting it back.

Q. What conversation did you say you had about Rankin Peck with Mr. McDonald?

3192 Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor. Any conversation he had with the Federal Trade Commission examiner regarding any one outside of this case, I think, is entirely irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Sustained.

Mr. Abbott: Do you claim that Mr. Peck is outside the case?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Mr. Abbott: You may take the witness.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I would just like to state on the record that Mr. Gershenson did not make any request of me for any papers, photographs, or anything else before this trial started because I never saw Mr. Gershenson until I met him here in the courtroom and I may have spoken to him on the telephone a time or two before we came in and, in any event, I turned over to Judge Hanley all of the papers, photographs of the nature that Mr. Gershenson has described that I had in the file with me here and he made photostats of that, I believe, and, in any event, I told Judge Hanley they were available to him and the originals would be also available at any time if needed and, of course, as far as I am concerned, I knew nothing of the matter until Mr. Gershenson mentioned it to me on the telephone while I was here in Detroit a day or two prior to the hearings.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a five-3193 minute recess.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

Mr. Abbott: I want to ask the witness a couple more questions, your Honor.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, at the present time do Ned's Auto Supply Company allow any price concessions to the public, excepting special discounts?

A. No.

Q. For how long have you been allowing no price concessions, excepting commercial discounts?

A. Since that last price war, around 1938 or 1939, late in 1938, I believe.

Mr. Abbott: I have an exhibit for identification, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Reporter will mark the document as Respondent's Exhibit No. 48, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 48", for identification.)

Mr. Abbott: There is a memorandum on the bottom of it, your Honor, that I want to cross out because it has no connection with the exhibit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It may be stricken off

3194 the exhibit.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, I show you Respondent's Exhibit 48 for identification and ask you what that is.

A. It is a letter I wrote to Mr. Raupagh on December 23, 1940.

Q. And did you sign that letter yourself?

A. My secretary signed it.

Q. Did you dictate the letter?

A. Yes, I did. She signed my name for it. That is not my signature, not my own signature that I signed. I might say, she has power of attorney. She signs my checks also.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Gershenson, with reference to the Red Indian Oil Company offer on which there is a letter introduced in evidence, being Respondent's Exhibit No. 47, is that offer of the Red Indian Oil Company under consideration by your company at the present time?

Mr. Austin: Will you repeat that last question please, Mr. Reporter?

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

Mr. Austin: I object to that question as irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Sustained.

Mr. Abbott: You may take the witness.

3195 Cross-Examination by Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, I think yesterday you referred to a conversation you had with a Mr. Jack Reed.

A. Yes.

Q. Who does he represent?

A. Shell Oil Company at that time, subsequently he went with Argo and I had some conversation with him then.

Q. How do you know he represented the Shell Oil Company at any time?

A. I saw him when he conducted the Shell Oil Company meeting.

Q. Is that the Jamboree you spoke of?

A. Yes, and several times subsequently to that.

Q. You referred to some conversation you had with him. When was that?

A. There were several conversations. There was one that evening at the Shell banquet, or Shell party.

Q. When was it?

A. He had invited me. As I stated yesterday, the date of that party slipped my mind. I could not even give you the year, but I remember the fact that there was a party.

Q. Do you remember how long ago it was?

A. About seven or eight years ago; sometime in 1932 or 1933 or 1934.

Q. Just what was said at that conversation?

3196 A. He told me that they were looking for a tank car outlet in Detroit and he also told me that if that would be a good thing for us to take on.

Q. Did he say they just wanted one tank car outlet?

A. That is my recollection: He said they wanted one jobber or large operator of that type. By jobber, I mean with retail outlets, because they subsequently took on Stark Hickey, which is a set-up something like ours.

3197 Q. Well, in other words, then—

Mr. Abbott: Just a moment. He didn't complete his answer, did he?

A. Yes. I said they took on Stark Hickey, which is a set-up substantially similar to ours.

Q. Does Stark Hickey sell at wholesale to dealers, do you know?

A. I can't answer that. The name is the Grand River Oil Company. He might, or might not.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You don't know.

The Witness: No.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Did Mr. Reed know, then, or did you tell him that you didn't sell at wholesale to dealers?

A. I didn't discuss that. I am sure he knew then that we didn't sell at wholesale to dealers, because we weren't doing it.

Q. Did he indicate when he said he wanted a jobber that he wanted someone who had wholesale outlets?

A. Primarily, yes.

Q. He said he wasn't interested in a jobber to sell to dealers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did I understand you to say that after Shell began to sell to Stark Hickey he told you that the offer was 3198 no longer open?

A. He told me at one time that offer was no longer open, and I assumed that was when they signed up Stark Hickey, although he didn't tell me who they signed up. He said they had someone else.

Q. You do know that they sell to Stark Hickey now?

A. Yes, I do. That's how I tie the two up.

Q. Referring to the Red Indian Oil Company, what is their brand of gasoline, or do they have a brand?

A. Fleet-Wing, Standard Oil of Ohio.

Q. Do they sell their gasoline under the name Fleet-Wing?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. What jobbers does Red Indian Oil Company sell to, in Detroit, now?

A. I have a memoranda on that. I can't tell you offhand.

Mr. Abbott: Do you have it here?

The Witness: Yes, I am pretty sure it is in my file.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may refer to it.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. If you can refer to anything and can tell me what jobbers in Detroit handle Fleet-Wing gasoline.

A. Well, I know of a hundred retail outlets. I don't know whom these outlets are supplied by, whether direct by Red Indian or direct from other jobbers.

3199 Q. Do you know of any jobber that sells Fleet-Wing gasoline?

A. I am sorry to keep the Court waiting, but I had no idea how to file these. I had names on different things, but I didn't know, chronologically, how I would be asked it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Take your time.

(The witness referred to documents.)

A. I know there is the Wings Petroleum products.

Q. What is that name?

A. That is a retail outlet. I don't know whether they would be classified as a jobber or not. Wings Petroleum. I have another name here, I can't answer from my own knowledge—from my personal knowledge, of any jobbers that Red Indian have, other than the one I mentioned.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When you refer to Red Indian, you refer to Fleet-Wing?

The Witness: Red Indian Oil Company. They sell Fleet-Wing gasoline.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Fleet-Wing?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Red Indian is—

The Witness: That is the trade name—that is the company name; Red Indian Oil Company. I would call the Red Indian Oil Company a jobber, myself.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is the Red Indian Oil
3200 Company the distributing agent for Fleet-Wing?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is a separate and distinct company from the company that manufactures Fleet-Wing?

The Witness: That is my understanding of it. Fleet-Wing is the brand name of Standard Oil Company of Ohio, from whom the Red Indian Oil Company buy their gasoline.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Does the Red Indian Oil Company distribute to the retail trade?

The Witness: Yes, it does; and to other dealers.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. Have you any knowledge of what the arrangement is between the Red Indian Oil Company and Standard Oil of Ohio?

A. No, I do not, other than—

Q. Do you know whether they are an agent or whether they buy their gasoline?

A. I can't answer that.

Q. Well, you say that you had some conversations with their representatives about your purchasing at jobber's price; is that right?

A. Yes. Here is the representation that he has made to me directly, on your question. He has, at time, said that he has been authorized by Standard Oil of Ohio to give us these terms. He stated that in this letter. He has 3201 told me that.

Q. Who is "he"? Do you mean Mr. Dworman?

A. Mr. Dworman, yes. I don't know what the relationship is other than that.

Q. On March 7, 1938, was that the time that you got the tank car agreement from Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I believe you stated that you had—a day or two before that you had a conversation with Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes. For several days preceding that. I had several conversations.

Q. In relation to that date, when did you acquire your bulk plant storage? When did you lease that bulk plant?

A. March 1, to the best of my recollection.

Q. At the time you leased the bulk plant, did you have any understanding with the Standard Oil Company that you would be able to buy from them at tank car prices?

A. We had an option on that bulk plant a month or so before that. We negotiated for that bulk plant in either January or February, with the understanding we would start paying rent as soon as we got gasoline. We had no understanding with the Standard Oil at the time we completed our arrangements on the bulk plant because if we wouldn't have gotten it from Standard Oil, we would have gotten it from somebody else. We were ready to buy 3202 in tank car. I told Mr. Raupagh we had a bulk plant.

Q. Now, again, in relation to the Red Indian Oil Company, you said this morning in connection with a letter that was put in evidence, Respondent's Exhibit 47—there is a mention here of an advertising allowance, what discussion, if any, did you have with Mr. Dworman about that advertising allowance?

A. Well, I testified to that this morning. I said he said that that's an additional reduction from our purchase price that we could use as we saw fit. We had no specific discussion as to how that should be spent.

Q. Did he tell you that?

A. Not in so many words. I don't recall the exact words. I told him to embody it in the letter. That that would be the exact evidence, and I don't recall beyond—that is the reason I got the letter, so I don't attempt to remember the conversation.

Q. The letter refers to an advertising allowance?

A. That's what it means. That's all I can tell you about it. That wasn't my choice of words. That is in his letter and it is embodied in that, and I can't tell you what he had in his mind.

Q. I think you also said this morning that you had reached the conclusion, after adding these various discounts together, that you would receive a better price;
3203 I think you said of .77¢. I am not sure of that figure.

A. No; .007; 7/10 of a cent.

Q. 7/10 of a cent.

A. I tell you how I arrived at that. Over the telephone he gave me—

Q. Just a minute, Mr. Gershenson. I want to get the figure correct, whatever figure you put in evidence this morning. How did you arrive at that figure? Did you arrive at that by adding together what is in this letter or—

A. He gave me the net price over the telephone. He said, "I will write you a confirming letter," and I haven't—

Q. What was the net price?

A. I testified to that this morning. I have that on a memo here.

Q. I wasn't sure whether you were referring to a letter or some other conversation.

A. To my memory that is .05875. That is 5 and that fractional part of a cent. Picked up at their bulk plant.

Q. And that is the figure that he gave you over the telephone?

A. Over the telephone, yes.

Q. When was that that he gave it to you?

A. That was on November 5th.

Mr. Abbott: What year?

The Witness: 1940.

3204 A. (Continuing.) My memoranda is made December 20th, I made myself; adding that up with that of Gulf, and so on.

Mr. Abbott: He gave you that in December; not at the time you wrote this letter?

The Witness: No, I asked him since. When I knew I was going to testify I asked him for a letter, because these figures weren't so clear in my mind. He gave me them over the telephone. I see Mr. Dworman about twice a week.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. What price are your service stations charging now for Red Crown?

A. It has changed twice in the past two weeks.

Q. I had forgotten that. What price were you charging prior to these recent changes? Let us take for 1940.

A. I would have to check to be exact. I might be off a tenth of a cent. I am not prepared to answer exactly.

Q. I meant to ask you what the posted price was.

A. The same answer for that. The posted price that we have on our pumps is what we are selling at.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is a matter that comes under your direct supervision; is it not?

The Witness: Under my executive supervision, yes, but when the change comes through, the office manager computes it and tells the man down there that sets the 3205 pumps, and that is the way it works.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. What do you mean, when the price change comes through?

A. When we are advised of the price increase and what Mr. Peck's association tells us at what we have to sell it, that's what we do rather than submit to his tactics.

Q. Is that were you get your information from, as to the price; Mr. Peck's association?

A. That is where we had to, in the last year and a half, if we want to be safe. We don't like his tactics, but rather than disagree with him, we sell at his price. I mean that in all seriousness on my account.

Q. You said this morning that at one time Stark Hickey, at least one of his stations, was selling at 1.4¢ below your nearby station.

A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell me just when Stark Hickey was selling or posting a price which was 1.4¢ below your posted price?

A. I am not sure it was a posted price, but on my information, the data, I went up there myself—during the price war I made a number of buys myself. My brothers did. We went out on a shopping tour.

Q. You say during the price war. When was that?

A. I am coming to that. That was in September: September 6th of 1939, at Grand River and Plymouth, 3206 1.4¢ under our price.

Q. How long did Stark Hickey's station there continue to offer 1.4¢ below your price?

A. I don't know how soon after that we met it. After we made this survey and we lost enough business, why, we changed the meter. I don't remember now when that was.

Q. That was in 1939, you say?

A. Yes. That's what my memo says. This is the memo that I made from this file of information that I turned over to Mr. McDonald; Donald McDonald, the investigator for the Federal Trade Commission.

Q. Now, you made some mention of Langer's Texaco station at Dearborn.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is right across the street from you, isn't it?

A. Not quite right across.

Q. Down the street?

A. It is further west, about a block or so, on Michigan. It has been changed. It is no longer Langer's today. It is Art's.

Q. What has happened to Langer's?

A. As I understand it—I know that Goodrich took the operation over from Langer and then turned it over to Art's.

Q. Do you know when Langer operated it, where he bought his gasoline?

3207 A. I can answer from personal knowledge: through the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company.

Q. I think you said this morning that there was a time when the Langer's Texaco station was advertising a price, or selling at a price 2¢ below your Michigan Avenue station price.

A. To my understanding, they still do it, or were, the first of this year.

Q. Well, is their posted price now below your posted price?

A. I haven't checked that—you mean the price on their pumps?

Q. Yes.

A. I don't know. I can't answer that. I haven't checked it.

Q. When do you know that they advertised or posted a 2¢ lower price than you did?

A. I said sold at a lower price than we did. I had customers tell me within the past couple of months at our store that they can buy gasoline at 2¢ a gallon under our price at Langer's. That's what I base my answer on.

Q. You mean 2¢ a gallon under your posted price?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Isn't it a fact that you have at all times, or practically all times, posted the same price that Langer's 3208 have, on those two stations out there?

A. No, that is not a fact. As a matter of fact, as I testified earlier today, that Sinclair station right under our nose for the past three years—

Q. I am talking about Langer's now.

A. I am trying to give a simile, that Sinclair and Langer's fall in the same category, and for years Langer's were giving eggs, one egg with a gallon of gasoline. We didn't meet that. Langer has a store right near our Gratiot store, too, where the same situation prevails; within a half mile from our store.

Q. Is that Art's, now, too?

A. Yes, it is.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You don't know what kind of eggs they were giving away, do you?

The Witness: No, sir; the signs read "Strictly fresh," though!

By Mr. Austin:

Q. You have testified in response to Mr. Abbott's questions, over a great number of stations here this morning, referring to service stations which you have said were near your various stores?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that they sold at various prices below your prices?
3209 A. Yes, sir.

Q. In referring, in all those instances, to your prices, were you referring to the prices posted at your service station?

A. Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you always sell at the price posted at your station?

The Witness: Always, except during the price war, when we gave the stamps. We always sold at the posted price, but when we gave these trading stamps, or during that short period—I would like to modify that answer—during the short period at the height of the price war, where we had a sign, "2¢ off," why, at that time, we were selling at 2¢ off our posted price. That was for about a month or so.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. And these commercial discounts you referred to are 2¢ off, too, are they not?

A. They are today, yes, sir.

Q. Bertrand's Gulf station. Where is that located? You made some reference to that this morning.

A. The one, specifically, is at Gratiot. I don't remember the cross street.

Q. Do they buy from B. F. Goodrich?

A. I don't know their source of supply. They have about five or six stations in Detroit. I think I have a 3210 memo I can give you that from.

Q. If you can refresh your recollection on that, you may do so.

A. (Referring to document.) Yes, they buy from Goodrich. They have four retail stores. Art's buy from Goodrich, my memos tell me.

Q. That is the successor of Langer's?

A. Of Langer's, yes. I knew that from personal knowledge, but that's merely to confirm it.

Q. Is the Carnick Oil Company a jobber?

A. Yes, and they have been for some time. By that— I use the term jobber; they buy on tank car basis, the same as we do. I don't know whether they sell to any other dealers or not.

Q. Do they operate a station at Woodward and Tyler, a retail station?

A. Yes, they do. I referred to that earlier this morning.

Q. And do you know whether their Gulf gasoline is supplied to them by Goodrich or direct by Gulf?

A. It is not by Goodrich, I am sure, because they sell a competitive tire, so I know that, and they would have to sell Goodrich tires to buy from them. They sell U. S. tires, so my best knowledge is that they buy direct from Gulf.

Mr. Austin: That's all, Mr. Gershenson.

Redirect Examination by Mr. Abbott.

3211 Q. Mr. Gershenson, there was some testimony relative to Langer's Texaco station at 14340 Michigan, at Schlaff. Mr. Austin asked you something about that station, didn't he?

A. Yes, he did.

Mr. Austin: Michigan, yes; yes, I did.

A. That is the one out near our Dearborn store.

Mr. Abbott: I would like to have these documents marked for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the documents Respondent's Exhibits 49-A and 49-B, respectively.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 49-A and B.")

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, I show you Exhibit 49-A, for identification, and ask you to identify that and state what it is. (Handing document to witness.)

A. It is a letter I wrote to Mr. Raupagh March 23, 1940. It has not my signature. I dictated this, although I didn't personally sign this myself.

Q. I show you Exhibit 49-B, for identification, and 3212 ask you what that is.

A. That is a letter I had received at home from Langer that I sent along to Mr. Raupagh with that letter.

Q. Did you enclose Exhibit 49-B in with Exhibit 49-A?

A. Yes, sir, as well as two pennies that were attached thereto. I sent that to Mr. Raupagh, just as I had received it.

Q. Exhibit 49-B, I understand, is something that you received at your home; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it come in the United States mail?

A. It might have come in open mail, I don't recall.

Q. Is that at your home on Muirland Avenue?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. And you enclosed Exhibit 49-B, as I understand it, in your letter to Mr. Raupagh.

A. Yes.

Q. Which is identified as Exhibit 49-A?

A. Yes.

Mr. Abbott: I offer Exhibit 49-B in evidence at this time.

Mr. Austin: I object to 49-B unless 49-A is offered with it, for one thing.

Mr. Abbott: 49-A I intend to offer in connection with Mr. Raupagh's testimony, unless you prefer to have 3213 it offered at this time.

Mr. Austin: I object to 49-B unless it is offered with 49-A, and then I—

Mr. Abbott: Then, I offer 49-A and 49-B in evidence at this time.

Mr. Austin: Then I want to look at both of them together.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Do you know anything about this, other than the fact that you received it in the mail?

A. Yes, indeed, I do.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You are referring now to what exhibit?

Mr. Austin: Exhibit 49-B, for identification.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Do you have any knowledge that this was issued by the Langer station at Michigan and Schlaff?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. How do you know that?

A. Our customers brought them in to our store on Dearborn and—I know Langer personally, and I discussed that with him.

By Mr. Abbott:

3214 Q. What discussion did you have with him in connection with Exhibit 49-B?

A. I made a couple of facetious remarks, when I saw him. When I saw him, I said I had received a couple of cents, and said that was the first thing I ever got from him. I asked him how extensive it was, and he didn't answer. He said, "You must be on a preferred list." He said, "We send that out on mailing lists." I don't know how it was, but it was in the nature of sort of letting him know I knew he was doing that.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I object to Exhibit 49-A because I think it has no relevancy whatsoever, and, as to 49-B, I have the same general objection that I have had to the other testimony regarding prices charged by other retail stations. This is very similar to material introduced by Mr. Biber, and other testimony given by this witness, but, so far as the identification of it, I think that Respondent's Exhibit 49-B is probably sufficiently identified with Mr. Gershenson's testimony, and Exhibit 49-A, as far as I can see, says nothing and will just clutter up the record more.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

The objection to the receipt in evidence of Respondent's Exhibit 49-A and 49-B is overruled, and the two exhibits, for identification, are now admitted in evidence. 3215

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 49-A and 49-B," were received in evidence.)

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. Mr. Gershenson, in connection with Exhibit 49-B, which has been admitted in evidence, did I understand you to say that there was some money attached to that when you got it?

A. There were two pennies; held on with a sticker, in the place that appears blank, that came with it, and they were enclosed when I mailed that to Mr. Raupagh.

Q. Did you send the pennies with the exhibit to Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes, I did.

Mr. Austin: Did Mr. Raupagh keep the pennies?

The Witness: I don't know. I can't answer that. I was tempted to keep them, I might say that.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. You made the statement that Mr. Rankin P. Peck dictates the retail price that you charge for gasoline at your retail stations.

Mr. Austin: I object to that. He didn't say he dictated the price. I asked him where the price came from and he said it came from somewhere, and I understood him to say it came from Mr. Peck's organization.

3216 Mr. Abbott: I will withdraw the former question.

By Mr. Abbott:

Q. I will ask you this, Mr. Gershenson: You made some statement in relation to Mr. Peck, in connection with retail prices. What was it that you stated?

A. These last two retail changes, as to what the price would be within the past month, that were provoked by changes in the wholesale price, were dictated—we were told what to sell at, by Mr. Peck. In one instance Mr. Peck personally, and the other instance he came—that's what Peck said the association members would sell at, and we should sell at that price.

Q. Is that what he told you?

A. I beg your pardon.

Q. Is that what he told you?

A. No, I didn't have the conversation with him. My brother, or one of the other members, but I know from personal knowledge, because I was—this has been going on for a year and a half or two years, now. That is, that the retail gas dealers association sets the selling price, because I was on the board of directors of the Retail Gas Dealers Association.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you adhere strictly to the price set by the Retail Gas Dealers Association?

The Witness: Since December, 1939; the last year or so.

3217 Trial Examiner Ballinger: And either directly or indirectly sold under those prices?

The Witness: I don't understand what you mean by "directly."

Mr. Abbott: Repeat the question:

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

The Witness: We don't feel bound by those prices but, as a matter of conforming, if the competitive situation permits us, and nobody sells under it, why, we adhere to the prices and if the competitive situation is such that it is impossible for us to continue to sell at those prices, why, we would change. We aren't members of the association. We don't have to—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Then you are in no wise bound?

The Witness: No other than as I said, the safeguarding the smooth running of our business, because we have had in the past few years some dire consequences from not following the price that they told us to sell at.

Mr. Abbott: What do you mean?

Mr. Austin: I object to any further continuation of history of what the Gasoline Dealers Association might do. There is no issue on that here in this case, at all. I don't see any reason for continuing it. I didn't object to Mr. Abbott's question as long as he asked the witness 3218 where these prices came from but I believe the witness has answered that.

Mr. Abbott: That's all from this witness.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any further questions?

Mr. Austin: No further questions.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Abbott: I would like to ask Mr. Biber a few more questions before we adjourn this noon, that I didn't ask him yesterday.

MAX BIBER resumed the stand and testified further as follows:

Redirect Examination by Mr. Abbott.

Q. Mr. Biber, it is in evidence here that the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company's sale and delivery costs for the year 1940 was in excess of 1½¢ per gallon for its wholesale operations. That being the case, can you explain how it is that you are able to sell Langer & Cohen a million gallons of gasoline a year at a price of ½¢ off tank wagon price?

A. We sell them at 1¢ off.

Q. 1¢ off, I should say.

A. Well, I feel we can sell them and I think we still make money on the transaction and, originally, they picked their own gasoline up at our bulk plant so our entire 3219 expense is merely storing it for them to pick up.

Since we started delivering the gasoline our only operation, as far as that gasoline is concerned, is hauling. There is no credit involved.

There is no sales expense involved. We don't have to sell them anything on that basis. They are our customer; and we feel that the only expense involved is the hauling and we can make money at hauling gasoline for a half a cent a gallon. It is really, I feel, increment business.

In other words, we have the bulk plant; we have the facilities and the manpower and, adding that million gallons a year has not necessitated the adding of any additional equipment, any additional bulk plant, so it has been increment business and, on top of that, it has enhanced our position with the Standard Oil Company or any competitors of the Standard Oil Company in that it has increased our annual volume. It has made us a greater factor in the business.

Q. Mr. Biber, since the time that you have become affiliated with the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company as its attorney, I will ask you whether Citrin-Kolb Oil Company has considered accepting any offers of any other gasoline supplier, to supply its requirements of gasoline?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor, on the ground it is irrelevant and immaterial. The same question was asked Mr. Gershenson: I don't think 3220 that consideration of a jobber or any other customer is material.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The question referred to was read by the Reporter.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Mr. Abbott: That's all.

Mr. Austin: No questions.

(Witness excused.)

Mr. Abbott: I make a motion at this time that we adjourn, at 12:10, which is the time at present, and reconvene at 1:30 o'clock p.m.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion is granted.

The hearing, now at 12:10 p.m., stands in recess until 1:30 p.m.

(Whereupon, at 12:10 p.m., a recess was taken until 1:30 p. m.)

3221 Afternoon Session.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order at 1:30 P. M. You may proceed, gentlemen.

Mr. Hanley: I call H. R. Hanley as a witness, your Honor. This is a formal matter concerning the custody of papers.

HAROLD R. HANLEY was thereupon called as a witness by and on behalf of the Respondent, and, having been first duly sworn, testified as follows:

Direct Examination by Mr. Hanley.

Q. State your name.

A. H. R. Hanley.

Q. Where do you reside?

A. 1124 North Euclid Avenue, Oak Park, Illinois.

Q. What is your occupation?

A. I am general attorney for the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, the Respondent in this action.

Q. Were you such general attorney in August, 1936? And have you been since that time?

A. Yes.

Q. I show you Respondent's Exhibit No. 45, for 3222 identification, and will ask you if you ever saw that letter before, and, if so, when was the first time you saw it?

A. I saw it within a few days following the date it was written on August 27, 1936.

Q. Where did you see it?

A. In my office in the general office building of the Standard Oil Company in Chicago.

Q. What were the circumstances under which you saw it?

A. It was exhibited to me by Mr. H. A. Lewis of the Standard Oil Company.

Q. Who was Mr. H. A. Lewis?

A. At that time he was assistant general manager of the sales at large of the Standard Oil Company.

Q. Do you recall when you next saw the letter?

A. Yes, sir, it was some time after the institution of this proceeding when I examined the files at the Standard Oil Company with relation to this proceeding.

Q. Did you find the letter in the files?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do with it?

A. I extracted the letter from the files, and brought it from Chicago to Detroit with me, and ~~handed~~ it to Mr. Abbott, associate counsel for Respondent, for his use in this lawsuit.

3223 Q. I refer you to Respondent's Exhibit No. 46, being a letter or a copy of a letter dated February 14, 1938, and will ask you when you saw that copy or any copy of that letter?

A. I saw several copies of Exhibit No. 46, when I examined the file of the Standard Oil Company in the general office of Chicago after the institution of this proceeding.

Q. Did you make a search of the files of the Standard Oil Company in connection with Ned's Auto Supply after the institution of this proceeding and with particular reference to obtaining the original of the letter, Respondent's Exhibit 46, for identification?

A. I did make a personal and thorough search of such files.

Q. Did you cause anyone else to make any such search?

A. I did.

Q. What was it?

A. I met with Mr. Amos Ball, Mr. R. F. McConnell, and Mr. Martin Hassold in Mr. Amos Ball's office in the General Office in Chicago, and requested that all of the files in connection with Ned's Auto Supply Company be produced, and that a search be made for the original of the letter, Exhibit No. 46, for identification.

Q. Who is Mr. Amos Ball?

A. Mr. Amos Ball is the vice president in charge of sales of the Respondent Standard Oil Company.

3224 Q. Who is Mr. R. F. McConnell?

A. He is the general manager in charge of sales of Respondent, Standard Oil Company.

Q. Who is Mr. Hassold?

A. He is secretary to Mr. Amos Ball.

Q. Did you see these gentlemen personally make a search of the files of the Standard Oil Company in an effort to locate the original of Exhibit No. 46?

A. I did.

Q. Was any original found?

A. No, sir.

Q. Were any copies found in the files?

A. Yes, sir; several copies were found in the files.

Q. Are you able to say that you have made a thorough search of the files of the Standard Oil Company in the General Office at Chicago for an original of Exhibit 46?

A. I am.

Q. Has that search been successful?

A. It has not, except to develop the fact that a number of copies of Exhibit 46 are reflected in the files of the Standard Oil Company in the General Office in Chicago.

Q. Did you do anything else in an effort to find the original of Exhibit 46?

A. I did.

Q. What was it?

3225 A. I requested the district office at Detroit to make a search of its files to find, if possible, the original of Exhibit No. 46.

Q. Has the original of Exhibit 46 ever been delivered to you?

A. It has not.

Mr. Hanley: You may cross-examine.

Mr. Austin: No cross-examination.

(Witness excused.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Hanley: Mr. Raupagh.

P. A. RAUPAGH, was thereupon called as a witness by and on behalf of the Respondent, and having been heretofore duly sworn, testified as follows:

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, in respect of this examination, Mr. Raupagh has been on the stand before at considerable length and has testified at considerable length in respect of his qualifications. Indeed, one whole volume of the transcript has to do with his examination, or more, and on page 110 of the transcript his qualifications were gone into at length.

I have sought, in the preparation of this examina-3226 tion, to eliminate as much repetitious matter as possible, in an effort to conserve time, and I expect to ask the witness a number of questions of an expert character, and unless it is the view of the Court that he has been qualified as such, I shall go further into his qualifications, but I think that they are adequately on the record, as they presently stand.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The qualifications to testify as to what?

Mr. Hanley: As an expert in the gasoline marketing business in Detroit, primarily.

Mr. Austin: Well, as far as Detroit is concerned, I shouldn't think there should be any question, Judge. I just wondered whether it is contended he is an expert on marketing conditions over the entire country in the oil industry.

Mr. Hanley: I think he is. He has testified that he has been engaged in marketing since 1900—since 1904, in various places from the Dakotas to Minnesota and Wisconsin and Chicago and Michigan, at various places in the United States, and I do expect to ask him some questions about his knowledge or opinions relative to general marketing conditions throughout the United States of a very general nature. Most of my questions will be confined to the Detroit situation. I just do this in the 3227 interest of saving time. It is in the record.

Mr. Austin: Even as to the area served by this company, I don't remember what it shows, and I just wondered what your contention was on that subject before we started in.

Mr. Hanley: Well, I think he is qualified as a marketer of petroleum products to testify as to general marketing conditions throughout the country, and I am primarily concerned about the area in which Respondent markets and more primarily concerned about the Detroit vicinity, with which he has had an intimate contact for the last number of years, I think, since 1929. I can go ahead and qualify him in detail if that is deemed necessary.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Unless counsel insists upon further qualifications of the witness—

Mr. Austin: No.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: —it will be dispensed with.

Mr. Austin: I haven't that portion of the record, and I wouldn't want to read it if I had it, and I don't believe we will have any difficulty—

Mr. Hanley: Very well, I will go ahead.

Mr. Austin: —unless something very unexpected arises.

Mr. Hanley: May I have the reporter mark these 3228 photographs, if your Honor please, for identification?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the photographs Respondent's Exhibits 50 and 51, for identification.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 50 and 51.")

Direct Examination by Mr. Hanley.

Q. Mr. Raupagh, I hand you what has been now marked Respondent's Exhibits 50 and 51, which appear to be two photographs, and will ask you if you know what those photographs represent.

A. These photographs represent what is referred to in the oil industry as a transport truck or truck-train.

Q. Is that the type of conveyance that you referred to as a truck-train or transport-train in the testimony which you have heretofore given in this proceeding?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that what you understand to be a transport-train, as referred to by other witnesses in this proceeding?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hanley: As a matter of information and aid to the Commission, we offer these exhibits in evidence.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. What is the capacity of these truck-trains 3229 shown in these photographs, Mr. Raupagh?

A. I believe their capacity is about 10,000 gallons.

Q. That is for the total capacity—

A. For the two.

Q. —in the two tanks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the same in each?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: No objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without objection, RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 50 and 51, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 50 and 51.")

Trial Examiner Ballinger: May I see those, Judge Hanley?

Mr. Hanley: Surely.

(The documents were handed to the Examiner.)

Mr. Hanley: May I have two further exhibits marked, your Honor?

These might be marked Respondent's Exhibit 52, with a letter.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the documents Respondent's Exhibits 52-A and B, for identification.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 52-A and B.")

3230 Q. Mr. Raupagh, I show you what has been now marked as Respondent's Exhibit 52-A, for identification, having to do with the prices of Solite with Ethyl gasoline, and will ask you if that was prepared under your supervision and at your direction?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. And I hand you Exhibit 52-B for identification, which appears to have to do with Red Crown gasoline, and refers to the prices thereof, and will ask you if that was prepared under your supervision and direction.

A. Yes, it was.

Mr. Hanley: These exhibits are now offered in evidence, if your Honor please, and the reason I lay no further foundation arises from the fact that they are identical with certain exhibits which were introduced by the Government and which were requested from the Respondent with the exception that the exhibits now offered show the prevailing price on regular grade of gasoline and compute the differential obtained by the service station operator.

I will say for the record, now, that we will prove by Mr. Raupagh the basis on which the prevailing price was computed, which will be in line with the proof which has already been advanced by the Government in that connection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you recall the Commission's exhibit to which you relate?

3231 Mr. Hanley: No, not by number, Judge, I don't just recall them by number.

Mr. Austin: I think Exhibits 3-A and 3-B; something like that.

Mr. Hanley: Yes, I believe those were the numbers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Austin: 3A and B, a statement of dealer tank wagon prices and jobber tank car prices, 3-A referring to Red Crown and 3-B referring to Solite, Ethyl, and the dates are from January 1, 1937, to March 1, 1941.

I note that the dates on Exhibits 52-A and 52-B, for identification, are not to March 1st, but run to March 6th, instead of March 1st, but they also commence with January 1, 1937, and there are two additional columns on the exhibits now being offered, but they amount to no more than arithmetical computations with a statement at the top of the column showing what the computations represent.

Mr. Hanley: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without objection, Respondent's Exhibits 52-A and 52-B, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 52-A 3232 and 52-B," were received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: I would like to say on the record, I haven't examined those, but I assume from counsel's statement that the figures given for tank wagon price and jobber price and prevailing retail price are the same as those which appeared upon the Exhibits 3-A and 3-B. Is that your understanding?

Mr. Hanley: That is my understanding, and I rely on the comptometer girls for that. They checked them. Of course, I intended they be the same.

Mr. Austin: Well, that's all I wanted.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, there has been a great deal of evidence introduced in this case as to the general practice in the oil industry of selling to jobbers who, in turn, sell at wholesale and at retail. I want to ask you, briefly, a few questions about that, to get your knowledge of the matter on the record.

From your experience, what is the fact as to whether or not suppliers of gasoline and refiners sell both to retail resellers at a tank wagon price, and, also, to jobbers at a tank car price, in the same territory, with particular reference to the area of Detroit?

A. That is the general practice of the oil industry in the Detroit area.

3233 Q. In so far as you are familiar with the custom and practice in the oil industry elsewhere in the United States, what is the fact in that connection?

A. I have never seen any exception anywhere, that I have been.

Q. Referring to the jobbers who are sold on the tank car basis: what is the fact, in your observation as to whether or not those jobbers, generally speaking, sell both wholesale to other resellers and also engage in the retail operation themselves?

A. They generally do.

Q. Is that true of gasoline in the Detroit area?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that true elsewhere, so far as your observation has gone?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. We have been talking about gasoline primarily. With reference to any other petroleum products, is that custom generally observed?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. With respect to what petroleum products?

A. Fuel oils, for instance.

Q. Any others that you think of?

A. Kerosene.

Q. Do you recall the testimony of Mr. Paul Harrison given on behalf of the Government in this lawsuit?

3234 A. Yes, I do.

Q. Do you recall that he testified that his company was engaged in a dual operation of selling fuel oil in Detroit directly to resellers and also selling it to jobbers of fuel oil?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have personal knowledge of that operation on the part of the Sun Oil Company?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Is that a common custom in the Detroit area?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. On the basis of unit price, is fuel oil more or less expensive than gasoline?

A. It is generally less expensive than gasoline.

Q. Are you familiar with the differential as between the so-called tank wagon price and the so-called jobber/or tank car price of fuel oil, generally, in the City of Detroit?

A. The differential generally is—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Just a moment. Answer the question.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Yes, you can answer that yes or no.

A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar?

3235 A. Yes.

Q. What is the differential, Mr. Raupagh?

A. The differential is all the way from a cent and a half a gallon to about 2½¢ a gallon.

Q. Mr. Raupagh, do you happen to have any knowledge of your own as to what the difference is in the Sun Oil price set-up?

Mr. Austin: Is that between fuel oil and gasoline?

Mr. Hanley: No. This is between the two prices on fuel oil, Mr. Austin; the tank wagon price and tank car or jobber price on fuel oil.

A. Yes, I have, in some cases.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. What is the difference?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you mean by "some cases"?

The Witness: I mean this: that they have what you might term as brokers or agents; people that take orders for fuel oil, and on those orders that they turn in to the Sun Oil Company, they pay them a half cent per gallon.

I know that they employ burner mechanics and burner agencies and on any business that these agencies are able to turn over to the Sun Oil Company, they receive a half cent per gallon commission. I know, also, that the 3236 Sun Oil Company sells fuel oil in tank cars at tank car prices and I know, also, that they deliver direct to the consumer or home owner at another price.

Q. And do you know what the difference in price is as between those two deliveries?

A. The difference in price runs between a cent and a half and 2¢ per gallon.

Q. And I think you have said that that is on a type of commodity that has a lesser unit price than gasoline.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you have testified, Mr. Raupagh, to the general custom of selling to jobber customers or tank car buyers on a tank car basis. Is there a difference between the price basis to a jobber who buys in tank car or truck-train lots and the price basis upon which the filling station operator buys the tank wagon?

Mr. Austin: Does that refer to gasoline?

Mr. Hanley: I am referring now to gasoline.

The Witness: To gasoline?

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Yes.

A. There is no difference.

Q. I don't think you understand it. I will reframe the question.

First, is there any difference so far as the Standard 3237 Oil Company is concerned as between the tank wagon price granted to reseller service station customers?

A. There is no difference.

Q. So far as jobber customers or tank car buyers are concerned, is there any difference in the price granted by the Standard Oil Company to that class of customer?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. What do you mean by that?

A. Well, I mean that there is a difference between the tank wagon price and the tank car price.

Q. Well, I will get to that. But as between the jobber or tank car customers themselves, as a group, Mr. Raupagh, is there any difference between the tank car price granted to each of them?

A. There is no difference.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Has there been during the period covered?

The Witness: No, sir.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, as between the two groups of buyers: namely, the tank wagon customer, on the one hand, and the tank car customers, on the other hand, is there ordinarily a differential in price?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. Is that true in the City of Detroit?

3238. A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, just generally, what is it?

A. The differential is generally a cent and a half per gallon, as far as the Standard Oil Company is concerned.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to what that differential generally is throughout the country?

A. The differential, generally, I will say yes.

Q. And what is it, from your experience?

A. The differential, generally, is from a cent and a half to two cents a gallon, and in some cases $2\frac{1}{2}$¢ per gallon.

Q. Well, I am not sure whether I have gone through this, Mr. Raupagh, but so far as suppliers, generally, are concerned in the oil business, if a customer is a tank car jobber buyer, does it make any difference to the supplier whether that jobber is engaged exclusively in wholesaling or exclusively in retailing, or in a combination of both functions?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor, on the ground that the witness cannot know the answer except as to the Standard Oil Company. He perhaps may testify to the practice; but I do not think he may testify as to whether it makes any difference to the oil industry, the way the question was worded, of the policy of the company.

Mr. Hanley: Well, I will reframe it.

3239 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The question is withdrawn.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. As a matter of practice in the oil industry, do suppliers sell to jobbers on a tank car basis and, by that I mean tank car price, irrespective of whether or not those jobbers are engaged exclusively in wholesaling or exclusively in retailing, or in a combination of both functions?

A. They do sell to such customers, and seem to be glad to sell to them.

Q. Has that occurred within your experience since 1929, continuously, in the City of Detroit?

A. Yes.

Q. Has it occurred with respect to many suppliers of gasoline and many jobber buyers?

A. It has.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, so far as the Standard Oil Company is concerned, what, generally, are the policies and the requirements established by our company in classifying a jobber buyer? What must he do? What characteristics must he have in order to be entitled to a tank car price, from the Standard Oil Company?

A. He must have equipment; he must have equipped himself with bulk storage, and, by bulk storage, I mean sufficient storage so that he can take care of tank car 3240 quantities of gasoline; he should have a volume of business amounting to about 1,000,000 to 2,000,000 gallons per year; his credit responsibility and so forth must be satisfactory; he should have an established business.

Q. What about his own distribution equipment, sales personnel, and so on?

A. He should be equipped so that he can distribute the products that we sell him. By that, I mean, for tank truck and so forth, equipment to take care of it, personnel to handle it.

Q. What is the fact as to whether or not he must perform all of those functions at his own expense and without any contributions from the Standard Oil Company?

A. He must perform them all at his own expense.

Q. What is the fact relative to whether or not the Standard Oil Company undertakes to exercise any control over, first, the jobber's business, after he has been sold the gasoline at tank car, or secondly, over the disposition of that gasoline? Can you split those answers up to meet the duplicity of that question?

A. The Standard Oil Company exercises no control over the first instance you mention, nor over the second instance that you mentioned, either.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, since you have been engaged in the marketing of gasoline and allied petroleum prod-3241 ucts, state what the fact is as to whether there has been a time when it was not a recognized custom in the oil industry for suppliers of gasoline to sell on the tank wagon basis and on the tank car basis and on the tank car basis to jobbers who had storage and were equipped to receive deliveries in that method?

Mr. Austin: Would you mind having the question read, please?

Mr. Hanley: Surely.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question, please.

(The question was read.)

Mr. Austin: All right.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Did you understand that? Is it clear to you?

A. Yes, it is. That has been the custom as long as I have been in the oil business.

Q. From your experience as a marketer of petroleum products, including gasoline, do you regard that method of distribution and marketing as a necessary and integral part of the marketing economy of gasoline?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question on the ground that it is immaterial what the opinion of the witness is regarding the necessity of this practice to the oil industry.

3242 Trial Exaimner Ballinger: Overruled.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. The Court says you may answer.

A. I do.

Q. As a fact, is it an integral part of the marketing structure of gasoline, Mr. Raupagh?

A. It is, and has been ever since I have been in the oil business.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, it has been brought out, there has been brought in this action a complaint against the Respondent, Standard Oil Company, which could result in an order against the Standard Oil Company prohibiting it from selling to the four jobbers named in the Complaint at a tank car price or at a price less than the tank wagon price that is charged to other customers of the Standard Oil Company. If such an order were entered, and the Standard Oil Company were prohibited from selling at tank car to those four customers, what, in your judgment, would be: first the ability of those individuals to buy gasoline of comparable quality on at least as good or better terms than those customers are now buying from the Standard Oil Company in Detroit?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor, on the ground that it is speculative and calls for a conclusion of the witness as to what the effect of an order

3243 of the Federal Trade Commission might be, and I submit—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

Mr. Hanley: Well, is the objection sustained on the theory that I am asking the witness what the effect of an order of the Commission might be, your Honor?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Correct.

Mr. Hanley: I didn't mean to imply that in the question.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I will reframe it, Mr. Raupagh.

Suppose that for any reason the Standard Oil Company ceased to sell to these four jobbers involved in this case on a tank car basis. What is your judgment as to whether those four jobbers could purchase gasoline of comparable quality on equally good or better terms than they are now purchasing from the Standard Oil Company?

A. They could purchase from many other sources, immediately, a gasoline of comparable quality and at a better price than they are paying at the present time. By a better price, I mean a lower price.

Q. If, for any reason, Mr. Raupagh, the Standard Oil Company were required to withdraw from that market, what, in your judgment, would be the result so far as the Standard Oil Company is concerned, on its business?

A. We would be deprived of—3244 Mr. Austin: I object to that question, for the same reason, your Honor. It supposes that the company be compelled to withdraw, and, of course, if the company withdraws from certain business, naturally, they don't have it any more, but I think it is speculative. I think it is irrelevant as to what the effect upon the company might be in the opinion of the witness, in the event of something that has not happened.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The question was read.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, suppose that the Standard Oil Company refrained from granting tank car prices to the four jobber customers involved in this action. What, in your judgment, would be the result as to whether or not the Standard Oil Company could retain that business?

A. They could not retain the business.

Q. What is your judgment as to the effect on the business of the Standard Oil Company if the Standard Oil Company were to demand of these four jobbers that they pay what has been referred to here as the tank wagon price?

A. I know we would immediately lose the business of those four customers.

Q. Mr. Raupagh, have you been generally familiar

3245 with the various jobbers of gasoline and their business in the City of Detroit during the past ten or twelve years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you from time to time see their physical properties?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you from time to time, in the regular routine and course of your office duties, get commercial and credit reports concerning them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you generally familiar with their operations?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your opinion as to the approximate or, in your mind, estimated value of the investment in money in the jobber business in the City of Detroit?

A. It would run into millions of dollars.

Q. You are now referring, I take it, to the City of Detroit alone?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it true that there are comparable business enterprises in substantially all of the cities in the country?

A. There are.

Q. Adverting now, Mr. Raupagh, to the specific relations with the jobbers involved in this action. We will go, first, to Ned's Auto Supply Company. I don't want to repeat, Mr. Raupagh. I think it has been fully estab-
3246. lished on the record, and if I am wrong on this, check me, please. I think it has been shown here, when these jobbers first began buying tank car and what their several storage capacities are, and so on. With particular reference to Ned's Auto Supply Company, I think it has been shown that they purchased gasoline from the Standard Oil Company something over 20 years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that up until September, 1936, they always purchased on the prevailing Standard Oil Company tank wagon basis; is that true?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there a time in September, 1936, when they went on a different basis, and, if so, what was it?

A. On September 1, 1936, they went on the basis of ½c less than the dealer tank wagon price in Detroit.

Q. Did there come a time, Mr. Raupagh, when that price plan was abandoned, and, if so, when?

A. Yes, that price plan was abandoned on March 7th or 8th, 1938. They were placed on a tank car basis.

Q. Was there a period between the time that that half cent reduction plan was abandoned, and the time when Ned's Auto Supply Company went on the tank car basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have in mind, now, how long a period that was?

3247 A. Yes; about seven days.

Q. Just a short period of time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since some time in March, 1938, and up until the present time, has Ned's Auto Supply Company been continuously on the tank car basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With reference to Citrin-Kolb, Wayne, and Stikeman, were all of those companies on a tank car basis with the Standard Oil Company prior to June, 1936?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have they been continuously on a tank car basis since that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have outlined, Mr. Raupagh, the requirements of the Standard Oil Company for a tank car jobber buyer. Do each of these four jobbers meet those requirements?

A. They do.

Q. Do each of them have their own storage?

A. They do.

Q. Do they have their own distributing systems?

A. They do.

Q. Do they employ their own personnel?

A. They do.

Q. Do they have their own sales force?

3248 A. They do.

Q. Do they pay all of the expenses of operating their bulk storage and distributing system?

A. They do.

Q. Does the Standard Oil Company contribute anything toward the expense of operating the bulk storage or wholesale distributing business of any of these jobbers?

A. They do not.

Q. Do salesmen of the Standard Oil Company call upon the customers of the several jobbers, where they are engaged in wholesaling activities?

A. They do not.

Q. Who does, if anyone?

A. Their own salesmen. I mean the four jobbers mentioned in this action.

Q. And that is done at the expense of those jobbers; is that true?

A. It is.

Q. With respect to advertising, Mr. Raupagh, do any of these jobbers advertise on their own account and at their own expense?

A. They do.

Q. Do you know to what extent they indulge in advertising at their own expense? I don't necessarily mean in terms of money, but just give us an idea of the kind of thing they do.

3249 A. Ned's Auto Supply Company do quite extensive advertising in the newspapers and they have also advertised over the radio.

Wayne Oil Company do quite extensive advertising as in the Dealer Association magazine. They do quite a lot of advertising in sending out literature by mail to drum up trade.

Citrin-Kolb does some advertising in the way of signs and ads in the Dealer Association magazine and other periodicals.

The Stikeman Oil Company does very little advertising. I think I have seen one or two ads of theirs. That is about all.

Q. I don't believe I asked you specifically about the furnishing of equipment. Is it or is it not customary for suppliers of gasoline to furnish resellers who buy on a tank wagon basis certain classes of equipment or facilities for use at their service stations?

A. It is customary to furnish certain equipment.

Q. Is that generally true throughout the industry?

A. It is.

Q. What, generally speaking, are the kinds of equipment that are furnished?

A. The kinds of equipment generally furnished are gasoline pumps, tanks, tanks and pumps for oil re-3250 quirements, identification advertising—I mean the insignia of the company, or the brand of gasoline.
That's generally what it is.

Q. In respect of the dealers who purchase from these jobbers, what is the fact as to whether or not the Standard Oil Company furnishes pumps and other equipment to them?

A. The Standard Oil Company does not furnish any pumps or equipment to dealers of our jobbers.

Q. How do they get the equipment?

A. The dealer either buys it himself or the jobber furnishes him with the equipment.

Q. If the Standard Oil Company supplies any such equipment, what is the fact as to who pays for it?

A. The jobber would have to pay for it.

Q. Do we understand by that that the Standard Oil Company would bill the jobber for a pump, for instance, that might be furnished to one of his dealers?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, there has been considerable testimony in this case about major companies and non-major or non-brand, or off-brand, whatever the particular witness chose to call it. Having particular reference to certain exhibits which are not yet identified, but with which you are familiar and in which there is reference made to major dealers, will you please give us, now, the names of the companies that you have referred to in those exhibits, and which are generally referred to in Detroit 3251 as being the major dealers, or the major brands?

A. The term major brand is rather loosely defined in the industry, and there is a great deal of difference in opinion as to what is a major brand in the industry. For the purpose of making certain records, statements, and so on, we have defined as major companies: First, Standard Oil Company of Indiana; Sun Oil Company; Shell Oil Corporation; Sinclair Oil and Refining; Socony Vacuum; Texas Company; Gulf Corporation; Cities Service Oil Company; Pure Oil,—by the way, Pure Oil handles Hi-Speed oil and gasoline in this district—Mid-Continent Petroleum; Ohio Oil Company, and the Standard Oil Company of Ohio. Then, there are—

Q. Just at this point, Mr. Raupagh, are you able to tell us which of those companies in this territory are engaged in the operation of selling directly to resellers and also selling to jobbers?

A. Sinclair, the Texas Company; Gulf Oil, Mid-Continent. That is all.

Q. Now, in addition to that list which you have named, are there any other companies marketing in the Detroit area that you regard as major marketers?

A. There are a certain number of companies who, in this area, as far as their marketing is concerned and the establishment of their brand and their sales, are just 3252 as much major companies as the others that I have mentioned. They are: Charles E. Austin, Incorporated; Puritan Stations; Sunny Service; Speedway Petroleum Company; Globe Oil and Refining Company; Pure Oil Corporation; Keystone Refining Company; Aurora Gasoline Company: Leonard Refineries; Roosevelt Refining Company, and there perhaps are some others.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, there seems to be some confusion in the record as between the brands known as Joy and Zip. Is there presently any relation at all between those two brands of gasoline?

A. There is not.

Q. First, who handles Joy?

A. Joy is handled by Charles E. Austin. He started his chain of stations on February 28, 1938. That is when he took out his wholesale distributor's license, and I know that he severed his connections with other stations that he was operating previous to that time, namely: Puritan Stations, Incorporated, and Sunny Service Oil Company, who were marketing under the brand of Zip gasoline, Z-i-p.

Q. At the present time, if you know, who operates the so-called Zip stations, Mr. Raupagh?

A. They are owned and operated by the Hicock Oil Corporation of Toledo, Ohio.

Q. And, does the Pure Oil Company, which you 3253 have designated as one of the majors, have any connection with that Hicock Company?

A. It has a connection with the Hicock Company, yes, sir.

Q. And what is that, to the extent of your knowledge?

A. Well, they have a contract or did have a contract which I saw a copy of at one time, to the effect that the Pure Oil Company furnishes the Hicock Oil Corporation with gasoline at a certain price below the established retail price and then there was also a provision that whenever the profits of the Hicock Oil Corporation were large enough, the Pure Oil Company, in some way, shares in those profits to get control of the Hicock Oil Corporation.

Mr. Austin: I object to any further discussion of the contract between the Hicock and Pure Oil Company. I don't see any relevancy. It has not been stated that the Pure Oil Company furnishes any of the gasoline which is sold at the Zip stations.

Mr. Hanley: We submit to that objection from that point on.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I will ask the witness if he knows whether or not Pure Oil Company does furnish any gasoline to the Hicock Oil Corporation.

A. It does.

Q. And that comes from Toledo?

3254 A. It does.

Q. And is that gasoline sold at the Zip stations in some instances?

A. That, I can't say.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, so far as this list of 12 major companies that are usually regarded and called Majors, and the additional list that you have indicated, is there any necessary relation between those two lists as to the amount of gasoline that they sell in the City of Detroit?

A. There is not.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact that some of the last named list sell more gasoline than some of the first named list; with reference to the City of Detroit?

A. They do.

Q. For instance, you have included Mid-Continent in the list of 12 so-called majors. Does that particular company sell more or less gasoline in the City of Detroit than do some of the companies in your second list?

A. It sells less.

Q. If you were determining who was a major marketer of gasoline in the City of Detroit on the basis of gasoline sold, what is the fact as to whether or not you would exclude from that list of majors some of the 12 companies that you have named in your first list and include some of the companies that you have included in your second list?

3255 Mr. Austin: I think he intended to say volume of gasoline sold, did you not?

Mr. Hanley: That is what I had in mind.

The Witness: On volume I would exclude the Mid Continent Petroleum on the first list and add Charles F. Austin, Puritan Stations, Globe, and some of the others.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, is it or is it not a fact, Mr. Raupagh, that certain companies, and, specifically, those which you have included in your first list of 12, have just been commonly referred to in the industry as major companies, and that for that reason they continue to be referred to as major companies?

A. That is right.

Q. And that classification, as we understand it, if we understand it correctly, has no reference to the relative volume of gasoline that they sell in the City of Detroit; is that true?

A. It has not.

Q. Since you have had experience with Detroit, Mr. Raupagh, what is your judgment as to the character of Detroit as a highly competitive area in gasoline commerce?

A. It is the most highly competitive point in which I have ever operated, and it is generally considered one of the, if not the most, highly competitive, a very highly 3256 competitive spot as far as the oil industry is concerned.

Q. Now, does that answer apply to both its competition between the suppliers of gasoline to resellers, and the competition between resellers?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Is it true throughout all channels of distribution of gasoline in Detroit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state, if you can, Mr. Raupagh, what some of the reasons for that condition are.

A. Some of the reasons for that condition are: first, that we have here a very large potential market for gasoline; we have a large city; we have a large industrial activity in this city; it is so located that its distributors are easily accessible, as far as the transportation is concerned, on account of being located on the Lakes. You can get good water transportation. It is, of course, very easily accessible by rail. Furthermore, we have Michigan refiners who are producing a fairly good grade of gasoline and are continually improving their gasoline, and who must find a market here in Detroit. Years back, it used to be considered that Detroit was a sort of dumping ground for gasoline, and that whenever refineries from farther away, the Mid-Continent field, or, I mean, Oklahoma, and so on, had a surplus of gasoline, and so on, 3257 and even if they were not marketing in this area, they felt this was a good place to dump it, because transportation facilities were good, and so on.

Q. Is it not true that Michigan itself is a crude oil producing state?

A. It is.

Q. And is it not true that there are a substantial number of refineries in Michigan refining Michigan-produced gasoline which is sold in the Detroit market?

A. That is true.

Q. Have you any idea, Mr. Raupagh, how many such refineries there are now operating?

A. There are about 30. That might vary one way or the other; a few.

Q. Do you recall the testimony of, I think it was, Mr. Boatwright, that approximately 30% of the consumption of gasoline in Michigan was gasoline produced within the state?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that concur with your own knowledge and experience?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, have you in mind the Marine Terminals that are adjacent to the Detroit area?

A. There are a number of marine terminals located in the Detroit area. Would you like to have me name them?

3258 Q. I would like to have you name them, please.

A. Shell Oil Corporation, Cities Service Oil Company, Ohio Oil Company, Standard Oil Company of Indiana, Texas Company, Mid-Continent Petroleum, Charles E. Austin, Incorporated, Puritan Stations, Incorporated, Keystone Oil and Refining Company, Globe Oil and Refining Company. I believe there is one more operated by the Brownley Lumber Company.

Q. Now, are there any refineries, to your knowledge, in the immediate vicinity of Detroit?

A. There is one in Detroit and one in the immediate vicinity of Trenton. The refinery in Detroit is known as the Keystone Oil and Refinery Company.

The refinery at Trenton is operated by the Socony-Vacuum Oil Company.

Q. What is the fact, in Detroit, as to whether or not gasoline and petroleum products are imported into the City through the medium of pipe lines?

A. They are.

Q. Do you have in mind any pipe lines that are run into Detroit, with particular reference to delivering gasoline, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes, there is a pipe line running from Toledo to Detroit delivering gasoline and used by the Sun, and the Hi-Speed or Hicock or Pure Oil Companies, and by the Gulf Company.

3259 Q. What is the fact, relative to the economy of pipe line transportation of gasoline as compared with rail transportation or truck transport transportation?

A. It is much more economical.

Q. Are you familiar with the situation existing in Northern Indiana and Northern Illinois as to the existence in those areas of numerous refineries, pipe line terminals and oil depots of one sort or another?

A. I know that there are quite a number there.

Q. Now, with reference to all of these things that you have been talking about, Mr. Raupagh: In your judgment, what has been and what is the effect of those factors upon the competitive situation in Detroit in gasoline commerce?

A. It makes it readily more competitive.

Q. In your experience, Mr. Raupagh, has there ever been a time when there has been a dearth or insufficiency of gasoline in Detroit?

A. Never.

Q. What have you to say as to whether or not the contrary is true?

A. I would have a good deal to say. That the contrary is true: There has been a surplus of gasoline at all the times that I have been here.

Q. I take it you mean by that that somebody, some supplier always has gasoline for sale in Detroit?

3260 A. I have never seen the time that there hasn't been a number of suppliers or that they always had gasoline for sale; as long as I have been here.

Q. Have they had it for sale in quantities that the market in Detroit did not readily absorb?

A. They have.

Q. And what has been the result of that, in your judgment, in respect of marketing conditions and competitive conditions in the City of Detroit?

A. It has made it more competitive and marketing more difficult.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record. We will have a recess for five minutes.

(A short recess was had.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order. You may proceed.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, we have been dealing primarily with the competition that exists in the Detroit area as between suppliers of gasoline to resellers of different classes. I would like to advert now to the competition which you have found in your experience in Detroit to exist between resellers to the public and as between jobbers who 3261 were in competition with each other, and who may have been engaged also in the retail function. With reference, first, to the Standard Oil Company stations or to stations handling Standard Oil products in the Detroit area, what has been the fact, just generally speaking as to whether or not they have maintained a fairly consistent prevailing retail price?

A. In my judgment, as far as the stations handling Standard Oil products are concerned, I think that they have done about the best job when compared with stations handling other products of gasoline as to maintaining a fairly steady retail price.

Q. With particular reference to those Standard Oil dealers who are supplied by any or all of these four jobbers involved in this action, what is the fact as to whether or not they have, generally speaking, maintained the prevailing retail price in Detroit?

A. They have maintained the prevailing retail price, generally. I think they have done a good job.

Q. Now, generally in the retail competitive situation, I wish you would please just go ahead in your own words, and tell the Court what conditions you have found to exist over the past years, and, with particular reference to the past four or five years.

A. I believe about the best illustration of price
3262 situations, as they exist, and one that has been referred to in this hearing so many times, is the year 1938. Do you wish me to go ahead on that?

Q. I wish you would. As a foundation for that, was there, in 1938, what has been commonly referred to industry-wise as a price war in the retail price of gasoline?

A. Yes, I would say it was a very much demoralized retail situation, and it can be called a price war or anything else, but there are some fundamental principles which cause demoralized retail situations of that kind.

Q. Just go ahead and explain what those causes are, in your judgment, and in your observation, Mr. Raupagh.

3263 A. Well, referring particularly to the year 1938, we had to start with a decrease in the consumption of gasoline.

According to the State figures issued by the Gasoline Tax Department of the State of Michigan, there was a decrease in the consumption of gasoline of 5.4% for the year 1938, as compared with the year 1937.

In the Detroit area, from computations that have been made, we find the decrease in consumption was about 10%.

It is only natural that when there is a general decrease in the consumption of gasoline, that if all stations were operating on the same service basis—they all give about the same service—that they would all lose relatively that same amount of volume of gallonage, which is represented by the percentages that I have mentioned.

When that occurs, there is generally a scramble for gallonage, as far as retailers are concerned.

Another fundamental cause for disturbed retail situation is when there is a decrease in industrial activity—and there was such a decrease in 1938—and I am referring to the automobile industry, as industrial activity in general in Detroit. There was considerable decrease in that activity which meant that many people who own and drive automobiles, their earning capacity was less than in 1937. They didn't have as much money to spend.

Then there is another factor which continually 3264 creeps into the proposition as to demoralized retail markets and it did, particularly, in 1938, and that is dealer margins. Whenever dealer margins get too high, then there is too much of a spread between the dealer price charged by major brand dealer and the retail price charged by other brand dealers. The differential is too large and many customers of major brand dealers leave them and buy the non-brand or no brand gasolines.

In the forepart of 1938, particularly for the first five months, there was the dealer margin of 4½¢ per gallon which entirely causes too much of a spread between those stations selling non-brand and those selling branded gasolines and, consequently, they lose business.

As an illustration: Our surveys for 1938—and we made them frequently, in connection with our business—showed that in January, 1938 we had 721 stations selling as much as 5½% below the price of Stanolind, or third brand gasoline.

In February, the number of stations selling below got up to 903, that were selling below the price of regular.

Q. You used the term "we had" a moment ago. What do you mean by that?

A. I mean by that the Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

In March the number of stations, according to the surveys we had made, had dropped down to 119 that were 3265 selling below the prevailing wholesale prices of major brand dealers; and that was because of the activity of taking down signs. There was considerable union activity in 1938. By union I mean the A. F. of L., who got busy and made a concerted drive to have all dealers remove their signs.

Mr. Austin: Was that 119 stations? Out of what group of stations were you referring?

The Witness: That's out of the group of stations in the Detroit area.

Mr. Austin: You mean all brands, all retail stations?

The Witness: All retail stations. It was up as high as 903. And that's of the stations who had a posted price. In making this survey we took only the stations who had a posted price.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I am not sure the record is clear on an answer you made a moment ago, Mr. Raupagh. The 900-odd stations you now refer to do not refer to Standard Oil stations, do they?

A. No.

Q That's all stations?

A. They refer to all stations in the area.

Q. How about the 119?

A. That also refers to all stations in the area.

Q. Irrespective of whether it includes Standard
3266 Oil Company dealers, or other dealers?

A. That had price signs up that were visible.

Mr. Hanley: Yes, sir.

A. Coming along to May, 1938, that had crept up again to 457 stations who were posting prices below the price of the regular major brand gasoline.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I believe that is the result and these are results of a survey made. They necessarily involve information collected by others and I don't want to be bound by them as fact and I want to object if it is clear on the record if the witness is stating the result of a survey and if it is conceded by counsel for the Respondent that the value of the evidence stops there and is not being offered for the purpose of proving the fact as to the number of stations that were cutting prices on any date.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I should perhaps advise the court and counsel that we will later introduce the results of current surveys that were kept duing the years 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, and, I think, part of 1940, which were kept as a matter of record, as a matter of routine office practice and procedure and without any reference at all to this litigation. We do that just as a matter of business routine and practice and this witness, and I will undertake to show that, that at the time he has 3267 a great deal of personal knowledge, by virtue of actually going out there himself and looking at these stations and he is also advised by others who are on his staff and who also go out, just as in the case of the Government's evidence by Mr. Harrison where he, on behalf of his company, the Sun Oil Company, conducted a survey and we do it just as a matter of record and do it without reference to and have it here without reference to any preparation for this litigation and I propose to put that in and we will fully lay the foundation for it, Mr. Austin.

Mr. Austin: Well, I know that I offered some of the figures of Mr. Harrison and those were objected to.

Mr. Hanley: Well, they were objected to, if you Honor please and if your Honor will recall on the theory that they did not offer the whole survey. On the other morning when I asked you, your Honor, what we should do about a subpoena, the fact of the matter is we were subpoenaing Mr. Harrison for the specific purpose of putting in the entire survey which Mr. Harrison had made and now we discover on analysis of his entire survey that it was far less comprehensive than our own survey and I just thought it was a cumulative thing. It is good evidence so far as we are concerned and we would be glad to put it in, but it just did not seem to be helpful. We have more of our own evidence than he was able to supply and we made no 3268 objection to the competitive situation as it was disclosed by Mr. Harrison's survey. We objected on the ground that the Government sought to put in just a segment of what they referred solely to the Standard Oil Company stations and Mr. Austin withdrew the offer and your Honor did not rule on it at all.

The Witness: Can I proceed?

Mr. Hanley: No.

Mr. Austin: Well, I still say there has been no basis laid as to the number of stations selling below the retail price at any particular time.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, without giving any figures as to the number of stations, just go ahead with your answer as to the reasons for this price war, as you understand them, and the general retail competitive situation.

A. As another indication as to the trend in 1938 affecting the retail market, the prices posted by retail stations ranged all the way from 3¢ a gallon to 6¢ a gallon below the price of third brand or standard gasoline, the cheapest gasoline that we market. Whenever a condition of that kind exists, that is, when you have a high margin or a high retail price that the dealer is charging for his product, you have a decrease in consumption and you have a decrease in industrial activity, which means a decrease in employment, and it is natural that every dealer will 3269 try to get as much business as he possibly can or make up for the business that he naturally would have to lose on account of those factors. You see, there is consequently a scramble for business and with that high margin, he figures out that "Well, I can handle just that much more business even if I have to cut the price a couple of cents per gallon." Because our records show and I know of my own knowledge that during 1938 we had more signs up and by "we" I mean the dealers, service station dealers of all companies, posted more prices than at any other time previous or since; prices reading as follows, so much off per gallon, 2¢ off or 1¢ off per gallon. My estimate is for 1938, for the first six months that about fifty per cent of all dealers of all brands were dealing in ~~some form or~~ other, were discounting in some form, or other, whether it was under canopy or open posted signs, but they were discounting. Another factor that was very effective to demoralize the retail market in 1938, there was a surplus of Michigan gasoline. The Michigan refiners were offering to dealers Michigan gasoline at 3¢ below the prevailing tank wagon dealer price. That condition improved somewhat later in the year of 1938, and the dealers were cutting down their margins to about 3.3 and finally settled down to that. A portion of the time, however, the margin got as low as 2.4¢ per gallon and during a period of this kind when there is a demoralized retail situation, it seems that that is the time when the non-brand or no brand or off brand 3270 marketer profits most because from knowledge I have, I know that that type of marketer made considerable gains in gallonage. It was very outstanding as to the amount of gallons they gained as compared with those dealers who were handling major brand products. Have I gone far enough?

Q. Well now, let me ask you this, Mr. Raupagh. Does the crude oil production situation and the price of crude oil have any effect upon the gasoline volume available and the price available?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Do you know what that relation was in 1938?

A. Crude oil was down in price in 1938 and I can't recall just how much.

Q. What does that mean, in terms of availability of low price gasoline?

A. ~~It means that~~ there is, first, a surplus of crude oil and it means, second, that refiners are able to secure all the crude oil that they want at a low price and, consequently, they can have their manufactured product as gasoline at a lower price and, consequently, they sell it to their trade at a lower price.

3271 Q. In your judgment, Mr. Raupagh, is there any one, or any six retail service stations in Detroit that ever was responsible for a price war of the generally prevalant character of the 1938 price war?

A. No. Couldn't be.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact, in your judgment, that such an economic condition must arise out of generally prevalent economic conditions existing in the industry?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You referred to discounts of various types; like under-canopy cutting; selling under the posted price, and so much per gallon off. Was the device of offering premiums used?

A. Very much so.

Q. What kind of premiums were offered?.

A. They range all the way from free cigarettes to free automobiles, to dolls and chinaware and glassware and silverware, clocks, and watches, and it is just difficult to mention the various devices, the extent of them that have been used in giving away premiums.

Q. Groceries?

A. Sugar; yes, sir. Sugar is being used today, even.

Q. Eggs?

A. Eggs were extensively used by one marketer who,
at that time, marketed as Langer's Auto Supply 3272 Company; now known as Art's Service Station. He gave away an egg with every gallon of gasoline.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you mean by free automobiles?

The Witness: I mean that there was a ticket or number given out when a purchase was made of gasoline and then a sort of raffle conducted, and the lucky winner got the automobile, and they generally had the automobile displayed, too, so that the people could see it. I think it would take a long time for me to mention all of the devices and the practices that have been used in the way of trying to get more business at retail service stations, in the way of giving premiums and discounts and offers, and that practice has continued for as long as I have been here. Sometimes it is a little more prevalent than at other times, but it is here with us all the time. There is never a time when it isn't with us.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. There has been a good deal of evidence, Mr. Raupagh, about three classes of what might be termed inducements to the retail customers; namely, trading stamps and courtesy cards and commercial discounts. Are you familiar with those three types of discounting, if that's what they are?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have those three devices been prevalently used
3273 in the Detroit vicinity over a considerable period of time by a number of different marketers?

A. Yes, they have.

Q. Were they used prior to 1936?

A. Yes, sir; they had been used prior to 1936, and subsequent to 1936.

Q. What is the fact as to whether they have been used continuously by a number—and by a number, I mean several thousand—retail marketers in the City of Detroit, continuously over the period of time that you have had experience in Detroit?

A. You mean as to any one of those devices?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, sir. That has been continuously going on for the 11 years that I have been there.

Q. Now, adverting to this so-called price war in 1938, Mr. Raupagh, when an economic situation like that exists, in your judgment, can anyone tell exactly what one specific factor may have caused it?

A. No, sir.

Q. In your judgment, does it arise out of a combination of economic factors that are generally prevalent?

A. Yes, sir, it does.

Q. Now, did there come a time, Mr. Raupagh, when the market became more stable, after the so-called 1938 price war?

3274 A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in your judgment, when did that occur?

A. It occurred when the dealer margins had decreased so that the posted retail price of major brand service stations were selling at a lesser price.

I might add to that: and other economic factors had corrected themselves.

Q. Now, since 1939 what has been the general marketing situation with reference to a normal, comparative stability, in reference to other years that you have observed in Detroit?

A. I would say that we have had a normal Detroit market, than relates to Detroit in other years.

Q. Is there always some disturbance in the retail market in Detroit?

A. Yes.

Q. Adverting to the 1938 price war; are you familiar with the prices generally that were being charged at retail by that class of distributors which you put in your second list of majors?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what I am referring to?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to whether or not their retail prices were less than the prices at which the Standard Oil Company 3275 was selling its jobbers?

A. Yes, sir. At one time their retail prices were less than the price at which the Standard Oil Company was selling its jobbers.

Q. With regard to those operators, Mr. Raupagh, are they continuously with you, here in Detroit?

A. They are not only continuously with us, but they are growing and expanding very rapidly.

Q. Do you regard them in your business, as manager for the Respondent, Standard Oil Company, as a serious and effective element in your competition?

Mr. Austin: Just a moment, please. Does that refer to jobbers or to the non-major refiners?

Mr. Hanley: I am referring to the list which Mr. Raupagh itemized.

Mr. Austin: Those which he said were not major brands, but they did a major amount of business?

Mr. Hanley: That's right.

Mr. Austin: All right.

Mr. Hanley: The second list. Is that clear to everyone? I want it very definite, because it is very important. Beginning with the Charles Austin Company, the Zip and Duro, and so on.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Read the question.

(The last question was read.)

3276 Mr. Austin: I object to the question unless it is explained what is meant by "serious and effective." I wouldn't object to—well—

Mr. Hanley: It seems that the question is clear, but I will try and clarify it further, if I can, Judge.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I mean by serious and effective, Mr. Raupagh, do they affect your ability to market gasoline? In your judgment, do they impress themselves on the market, and do they get the business that you think you could, otherwise, get?

A. They do. They very seriously affect our business. As an illustration: In 1938 Charles E. Austin took out a wholesale distributor's license and started a chain of cut-rate service stations.

His gallonage, according to the State's figures, for 10 months in 1938 was over 14,000,000 gallons, and every gallon sold at retail, so that it shows that he has very good consumer or automobile owner acceptance, in order to sell that gallonage, and any time that a marketer can do that in any market or any city the size of Detroit, and immediately take on that much gallonage, that is a serious—it has a serious effect on the business of any major brand marketer. It has a serious effect on all business.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, was there a time in the last several years when the Standard Oil Company sold 3277 on a tank car basis to jobbers other than the four jobbers involved in this action?

A. There was such a time.

Q. And will you tell us, please, who those jobbers were?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: First, will you tell us the time?

The Witness: The time was prior to 1936, your Honor; with one exception. We sold the Carnick Oil Company prior to 1936. We lost their business to the Gulf Oil Corporation. Carnick purchased in tank car quantities. He was a jobber. We lost him on account of better offers made by Gulf Oil Corporation in—

Mr. Austin: I object to that last sentence, your Honor, and move that it be stricken.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained; motion granted.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Were you advised by the Carnick Oil Company that the reason that they were leaving the Standard Oil Company was because they could get better prices elsewhere?

A. Definitely so.

Q. At the time you were dealing with the Carnick Oil Company, were you selling them on a jobber tank car basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And about when did you lose them?

3278 A. This was prior to 1936. I should judge about 1933 or 1934.

Q. Have you ever had that customer back?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have they continuously been supplied by some other supplier on tank car basis?

A. I know they have been continuously so supplied by the Gulf Oil Corporation, but not on a tank car basis; only as to price. They haul out of the bulk plant of the Gulf Oil Corporation, and do away with the necessity of owning and operating a bulk plant.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What was the tank car differential at that time?

The Witness: What was the tank car differential at that time? You mean when we lost them?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

The Witness: I think the tank car differential at that time was much smaller than it is today.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you recall what it was?

The Witness: Not exactly, no, sir.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Can you guess approximately, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes, it was a cent or below.

Q. Now, were there any other customers which 3279 you were supplying on a tank car basis that you have ceased to supply?

A. Holzbaugh, but he went out of business.

Q. When was that?

A. I think we shipped him the last car in April of 1936 or 1937.

Q. Were there any others?

A. Middleton Oil Company. We lost that, I believe, in 1933, to the Shell Oil Company.

Q. Now, in respect to the Middleton Oil Company, do you have any knowledge as to whether an offer of like character as that made by Shell to Middleton was also made to Citrin-Kolb?

A. Yes, there was.

Mr. Austin: The witness hasn't stated that he knows of any offer made to Shell.

Mr. Hanley: I was just taking a short-cut. If counsel wants to insist upon it—I will withdraw the question.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Did you learn of an offer made to the Middleton Oil Company by the Shell Company at a time while you still were supplying Middleton?

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I request the witness be restricted to stating what was told to him by the customer and not what he heard some place.

3280 Mr. Hanley: It seems to me it is just a little bit picayunish to quarrel about what an offer is. These men are in the business, and they know what an offer is.

Mr. Austin: If a customer of the Standard Oil Company says he got a customer from some place else, and he is a Standard Oil Company man, maybe he is just sounding out the other company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Was there a time, Mr. Raupagh, when anything was said to you by the Middleton Oil Company with regard to anything about their buying gasoline from the Shell Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And about when was that?

A. It was some time in 1933.

Q. And at that time was there anything said to you by the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company in respect to the question of their buying gasoline from the Shell Oil Company?

A. Yes, there was.

Q. Now, without stating what was said, were you told by the Middleton Oil Company that they had an offer of any kind from the Shell Company to sell them gasoline?

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor, unless it is proved that Shell did make such an offer, and the price of the offer is proved. As to Citrin-Kolb, such 3281 proof has been given, but I don't believe it has been given to Middleton.

Mr. Hanley: That is an impossible rule, Judge. If they come and tell us they have got an offer, we are entitled to tell at least that much. We lost this customer. We did not meet the offer. We are not trying to justify anything about Middleton. We are just trying to prove that they did have a better offer and they took it and we lost it, and that was all there was to it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection overruled.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. The Court says you may answer. Do you want the question read back?

A. Yes, please.

(The last question was read.)

A. Yes, they did tell me that.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Did they tell you what it was?

A. They told me it was on a tank car basis, with Shell gasoline, known as Silver Flash; Middleton at that time had a bulk plant and he stated that, in his opinion, it was a better proposition than he had from us, from the Standard Oil Company.

Q. Did he ask you to do anything about it?

A. Yes, he asked me if we would give him a bet-
3282 ter tank car price than we did at that time.

Q. And what is the fact as to whether or not you declined to do that?

A. I declined to do it.

Q. And what happened in respect to whether or not you retained or lost the business of the Middleton Oil Company?

A. Lost the business of the Middleton Oil Company.

Q. Have you ever had it since?

A. No.

Q. Is the Middleton Oil Company still in business?

A. They are now in business, although I think they changed hands a year or two after that, and it went back in business.

Q. Now, were there any other companies to whom you were selling on a tank car basis, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes, we were selling to Dick Lock on a tank car basis.

Q. And did there come a time when he ceased to do business with the Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And about when was that?

A. That was about 1933 or the early part of 1934.

Q. And what were the circumstances of your losing him, so far as you know?

A. The circumstances were that he had received and did accept an offer from the Gulf Oil Company and took on their brand of gasoline, and before leaving us he 3283 explained the proposition to me.

Q. Just for the record, is the name of the Gulf Company the Gulf Oil Refining Company or the Gulf Oil Corporation?

A. I believe it is Gulf Oil Corporation.

Q. You mean what is commonly referred to as the Gulf Company every so often?

A. That is right.

Mr. Austin: Just for the record, your Honor, I make the same objection to these last questions and answers, and move that they be stricken out on the same ground, that there is no foundation of proof that any offer was made on any price or that any price was made by a competitor and no offer has been made to prove it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection overruled.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Well, the fact is you did lose Mr. Dick Lock, didn't you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you lost him, didn't you after he told you that he had a better offer from the Gulf people?

A. Yes.

Q. And you never had him back as a customer?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Had you?

A. We never had him back as a customer, but 3284 we have one of his stations which we supply.

Q. Well, did you offer him any inducements?

A. No, sir.

Q. On what basis is that customer?

A. He is on a tank wagon basis at the present time.

Q. And did you say what time you lost this customer, Mr. Lock?

A. 1933 or the early part of 1934.

Mr. Hanley: At this time, your Honor, we ask to have marked, for identification, the paper outlining the sales volume of the four jobbers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Two papers?

Mr. Hanley: Yes, two, but they are unrelated. They may have separate numbers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the two documents as Respondent's Exhibits 53 and 54, for identification.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 53 and 54.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, I hand you what has now been marked Respondent's Exhibit No. 53 entitled "Total Gasoline Sales Volume in Gallons and Ratio of Retail and Wholesale Sales to Total Sales of Standard Oil Company Jobbers for the Years 1936 and 1940," and I will ask 3285 you if that exhibit was prepared under your supervision and at your direction.

A. It was, sir.

Q. Does that reflect the gallonage of each of the four jobbers mentioned in this lawsuit?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it reflect the break-down of their sales as between wholesale and retail sales, in terms of gallonage?

A. Yes, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: From what records was it prepared?

Mr. Hanley: I beg your pardon?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: From what records was it prepared?

Mr. Hanley: I will develop that, your Honor.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Was that prepared from the records of the Standard Oil Company in so far as the gallonage figures are concerned.

A. It was prepared from the records of the Standard Oil Company as far as the gallonage figures are concerned.

Q. In so far as the break-down between the wholesale and the retail sales are concerned, did you have success to any other source of information than the records of the Standard Oil Company, and, if so, what?

A. Yes, we had access to the records of the four companies mentioned on this exhibit, namely, Stikeman 3286 Oil Company, Wayne Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company, and from these records, we determined that break-down.

Mr. Hanley: I think I will offer, first, Respondent's Exhibit No. 53, and I will state to your Honor that all of the material on the exhibit has already been verified by the Wayne Oil Company, Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and Ned's Auto Supply Company, and I don't understand there is any dispute as to the fact that the Stikeman Oil Company is not operating any service stations at this time. It is a summary and here is a copy, Mr. Austin.

It is a summary exhibit which has been used here frequently, and much of it is in the record, by way of word of mouth testimony. I think it would be a very convenient and quick analysis.

Mr. Austin: Well, you believe these figures are correct, don't you, Mr. Raupagh?

The Witness: Yes, I do.

Mr. Austin: I would like to ask you one question: whether the totals here under the column headed "Total Sales", does that mean sales between jobbers or sales between the Standard Oil Company and the jobbers?

The Witness: That means sales by the Standard Oil Company to jobber.

Mr. Austin: And then it wouldn't follow that the sum of the last two columns would equal the second 3287 column?

The Witness: Oh, yes.

Mr. Austin: I mean they don't resell exactly the same number of gallons each year that they buy from you?

The Witness: Not any more than they don't have the same inventory each year, but it is too small and it wouldnt' make any difference.

Mr. Austin: I was just basing it on what I think Mr. Biber or Mr. Ledbetter might have said to me at one time, that their figures shown on the Secretary of State gasoline tax returns wouldn't be the same as the figures that—I forget now whether those tax returns are based on their returns or what they sell. I should know.

The Witness: I can tell you this: our sales, I mean Standard Oil Company sales to them and what appears on the State tax records, would be so small a difference, if any, that you would have to have a spy glass to find it many times.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: There would be some loss, would there not?

The Witness: Yes, there would be some loss, and there might be some difference in inventory, too. You see, we take the figures as to the amount of gasoline the Standard Oil Company sells, and, they, of course, have to report that to the State.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

3288 (A discussio nensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Austin: I have no objections, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No objections. Respondent's Exhibit 53, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 53," was received in evidence.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I now hand you, Mr. Raupagh, what has been marked Respondent's Exhibit 54, and I will ask you if that was an exhibit which was prepared in your office and under your direction and supervision?

A. Yes, it is.

Mr. Hanley: I offer Exhibit 54, which is also in the nature of a summary exhibit to disclose the gross gallonage and the number of outlets served, whether retail or otherwise, of the various jobbers. Again, I think this has been testified to by the witnesses themselves who were operating the stations, with the possible exception of the Stikeman list.

Mr. Austin: No objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without objection, Respondent's Exhibit 54, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

3289

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 54," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Hanley: At this time the Respondent requests that it may have marked, for identification, a document entitled "Gasoline Sales in the Detroit Area Including Highland Park, Hamtramck, and Dearborn, of Wholesale licensed Jobbers and Distributors of Branded Gasolines."

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Reporter will mark the document Respondent's Exhibit 55-A and 55-B, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 55-A and B.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I hand you what the reporter has now marked Respondent's Exhibits 55-A and 55-B, and will ask you to explain what that exhibit is.

A. This Exhibit 55-A and 55-B, is a statement of gasoline sales in gallons in the Detroit area, including Highland Park, Hamtramck, and Dearborn, of wholesale licensed jobbers and distributors of branded gasoline.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: By whom was it prepared?

The Witness: It was prepared under my direc-
3290 tion; my supervision.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, without stating any figures, I wish you would please explain what each of the columns in this exhibit purport to represent, taking first the column under the title "Jobber or Distributor." There appears to be a name. What is that name of?

A. The first column, under the title "Jobber or Distributor," is the name of the company or corporation listed on this report.

Q. Now, the second column, under the title "Date Received; Wholesale Distributors License." And there are figures which apparently mean dates; is that true?

A. Yes.

Q. What do those dates represent?

A. That column represents the dates opposite the name of each company when each company received its wholesale distributor's license from the State of Michigan.

Q. And from what source did you obtain that date?

A. That date was obtained from the Gasoline Tax Department of the State of Michigan.

It also means that where the date is 1932, it may mean that the license was obtained prior to 1932.

Q. Why is that?

A. Because they had no records available going 3291 back further than that, at that time.

Q. But, in any event, is it true that this date is the date reflected by the tax records of the State of Michigan?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Going to the next column, entitled "Supplier." What appears under that title?

A. Under that title of "Supplier" appears the name of the company which supplies gasoline to the jobbers or distributors mentioned in the first column.

Q. I will ask you what is your source of information as it appears under the title "Supplier"?

A. My source of information as to the supplier is my own personal knowledge, and, also, as to the Gasoline Tax records of the State of Michigan.

Q. Following that column entitled "Supplier" are five columns entitled "1936" through 1940, inclusive, and under each year appear certain figures. What do those figures represent opposite the name of each jobber or distributor?

A. It represents the yearly gallonage as reported by these jobbers or distributors to the Gasoline-Tax Department of the State of Michigan, and as taken from the records of the monthly published records of the Gasoline Tax Department's records, which records are in evidence in this case.

Q. Directing your attention to the second page, 55-B, there is a note: "Sales figures of the major com-3292 panies such as Socony Vacuum Oil Company," and then goes on to list certain other companies in the Detroit area, "are not available". What does that mean?

A. It means that the figures are not available as to the amount of gasoline that these companies sold in the Detroit area, according to the tax reports of the State of Michigan, the Gasoline Department.

Q. There follows another note, the effect as follows: Neither are such sales as are made by any supplier through commission agency arrangements, and so forth, as such operators are not licensed as wholesale distributors. That is—and then there appears a list of companies supplied by certain other companies. What does that mean?

A. It means that the list of companies that are shown under that heading, or on this page, as being supplied by the major companies represented, that there is no way of securing their gallonage, although I personally know that they are being supplied by these companies. They make no reports to the State of Michigan as to their gasoline taxes, but some of them perform all the functions of a jobber.

Q. What is a commission agency arrangement?

A. A commission agency, or a commission agency arrangement, such as we refer to on this exhibit—for instance, the Carnick Oil Company, which is supplied by the Gulf Refining Company,—Carnick Oil Company hauls 3293 the gasoline out of the bulk plant of the Gulf Company and distributes that gasoline to other dealers and consumers or to stations which they may operate themselves. They buy on a tank car basis. The supplying company—I mean the Gulf Company furnishes the equipment to the dealers or consumers that Carnick Oil Company may supply.

Mr. Austin: I object to further continuation of testimony concerning commission agencies. I don't believe there is any showing of relevancy at all to such an agreement. It is the first time it has been mentioned in this case.

Mr. Hanley: It has been mentioned many times by many of these witnesses. These yard haulers; that's what they are.

Mr. Austin: Commission agencies? I think the witness was asked to describe what he meant by a commission agency agreement. I didn't object to that. I think he is now going beyond, in answer to the question, going into specific cases, and I object to that.

Mr. Hanley: All right. You may discontinue answering, Mr. Raupagh.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. There is another note following the one which you have just been discussing in which there are listed four named companies followed by the following note: "—are the source of supply for a large number of cut-price 3294 non-brand distributors and dealers, the portion of their gallonage going to such cut-price non-brand operators cannot be determined." What does that mean, and why can't it be determined?

A. It means that the names mentioned on this sheet as suppliers of that kind of gasoline, which means that they have what we term a major brand gasoline, and they sell to people that come to their yards and haul it out and which it isn't necessary for them to report on their gasoline tax reports because they sell it tax paid. We have no way of determining the amount of such major brand gasoline which is sold to cut-price or non-brand distributors, although we know that it actually exists, and we know that it is quite prevalent.

Q. Now, with respect to the figures which I think you have stated represent gallonage under the several years, in the last five columns on Exhibit 55-A. What is the source of those gallonage figures?

A. The gasoline tax reports of the State of Michigan.

Q. Are those the same reports that were introduced by the Government in the first week of this hearing when, I think, you were on the witness stand, or some witness for the Government was on the witness stand?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hanley: We offer the Exhibit, if your Honor please.

3295 Mr. Austin: I would like to ask some questions.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Raupagh, referring to these notes on the second page, there is a note there opposite Red Indian and Victor. Do you see that?

A: Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is the gallonage referred to in that note included in the gallonage shown opposite those companies on the first page of the exhibit? That note refers to a portion of the gallonage. Does that mean a portion of the gallonage given on 55-A?

A. That's right. I mean that if the gallonage by Victor Oil Company—and most of this gasoline is sold tax paid—it would not appear in the figures.

Q. It would not appear in the figures?

A. No.

Q. What do you mean by selling it tax paid?

A. I mean selling it with all taxes paid. I mean the supplier, in this instance, Victor Oil, pays it to the State of Michigan.

Q. If he pays it to the State of Michigan, why doesn't it appear in the Secretary of State's reports?

A. It wouldn't appear in this report for the simple reason that it would be listed in Column B as gasoline handled by Victor Oil Company, and, consequently, 3296 we haven't included that in the report, because it is gasoline handled, and which means that they might have bought or sold that gasoline tax paid.

Q. Don't the Secretary of State's reports show all gasoline gallonage upon which a tax is paid?

A. Yes, but there may be some duplications in it if you take all three columns. Consequently, we only took Column A and Column C, to be doubly sure that we were conservative, if anything.

Q. Now, why do you refer there to cut-price non-brand distributors and dealers? There is nothing else relating to price on this exhibit anywhere.

A. Because we know that the gasoline that they sell that way generally goes to the cut-price non-brand distributor.

Q. Do you use those two words as synonymous? Is a non-brand distributor always a cut-price distributor?

A. Well, just about always, Mr. Austin.

Q. Isn't there a rather recognized difference between non-branded and branded gasoline in the industry here in Detroit.

A. No.

Q. You just said it is true that the non-branded gas generally sells at a lower price than the branded.

A. That's right, but as to any recognized differential, no.

3297 Q. You mean that there isn't any steady difference in price; is that what you mean?

A. That's what I mean.

Q. What is the usual difference?

A. Well, I can't even answer that, Mr. Austin, because it is all over the map. It runs to 6¢ a gallon, and it runs to 1¢ a gallon, and all the way in between there; depending upon conditions, and so forth.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I have no objection to this exhibit with the exception of the second and third notes appearing on 55-B, and I object to those as I don't think the information there is properly authenticated or that it appears that this witness has any knowledge of the arrangements between these various companies in the second note and their supplier, and the third note is a statement, really, of something that is not included here, and I don't see how this could be evidence of something that isn't here. It is just an attempt to say that there is something that is not in the exhibit, and the exhibit, it seems to me, would be perfectly clear without that note.

Mr. Hanley: That is the next to the last, beginning: "No record of the date"?

Mr. Austin: No, I am talking about these two notes here, that include lists of oil companies. The list of 3298 agency agreement and non-brand distributors.

Mr. Hanley: If there is an objection to that portion of the exhibit, I would like to examine somewhat further.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may do so.

Mr. Austin: And I would like to ask counsel for the Respondent what his purpose is in offering it. I rather assumed it had to do with gallonage of licensed distributors and jobbers.

Mr. Hanley: It does. That's exactly what it is.

Mr. Austin: And if so, there is an attempt in these two notes to bring in quite a list of people who are not licensed distributors and jobbers, without showing they perform the same function, and, also, there is an attempt to bring in some activities of licensed jobbers which, apparently, there is no definite information about.

Mr. Hanley: I will examine further on that. I play the cards the way they are dealt, Mr. Austin. I am just trying to prove the oil business the way it is, not the way it ought to be.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Referring, Mr. Raupagh, to the note beginning with the listing of the Carnick Oil Company. It is indicated on that exhibit, for instance, that the company is supplied by the Gulf Refining Company. Do you have any 3299 knowledge about that?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Personal knowledge?

A. Yes.

Q. I think you testified a little while ago that the Standard Oil Company lost the Carnick Oil Company to the Gulf Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you have personal knowledge of the suppliers of the entire list of the companies that appeared in that note and, if so, how did you get that knowledge?

A. Yes, I have knowledge that they are the suppliers to the list mentioned here. For instance, J. J. Bright, I actually saw the truck of J. J. Bright loading at the plant of the Sinclair Refining Company.

National Petroleum Products Company; they display a Sinclair sign at one of their service stations, and I have known for some time that they handled Sinclair products and haul it out of the Sinclair bulk plant.

The same way with Bernard Albert, William Bauer, Arthur Adams, and D. J. Horte. I personally know they are haulers for the Texas Oil Company. They call upon our trade. They call upon our accounts. We come in daily contact with them in a competitive way.

3300 The Dearborn Oil Company and Miller Auto Supply Company, being supplied from Cities Service Oil Company, I positively know that is true and I know about how they are supplied.

Q. Now this Exhibit, as I understand it, Mr. Raupagh, purports to show the sales by the named jobbers or distributors of branded gasolines as disclosed by the State report which the Government put in evidence.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now explain for the Court again, if you please, why it wouldn't show any sales that might be made through this last list you have just discussed; beginning with the Carnick Oil Company.

A. The reason that there wouldn't be any sales shown by the Carnick Oil Company is that the Carnick Oil Company has no wholesale or distributor's license from the State of Michigan; consequently is not required to make a report to the State of Michigan and does not do so.

Mr. Austin: I am not disputing any of that, as to who these people are supplied by, Judge Hanley. I am objecting to just two things, here, if you would like to have me state it again for your benefit.

Mr. Hanley: I would, if I am going about it wrong.

Mr. Austin: I am objecting with reference to cash 3301 agency agreement and I am objecting to the reference of cut-price, just the words cut-price, in relation to non-brand distributors.

Mr. Hanley: I am trying to explain both but I can't do them both at once.

I submit, your Honor, that this commission agency arrangement has been testified to frequently in the case. Sometimes it has been called the yard hauler. That is someone that picks up in his own truck, gasoline at the bulk plant of a supplier at a reduced price, and then acts actually in the nature of a peddler. He goes out to try to sell it to consumers or resellers or wherever he can and that has been frequently testified to in the case. Maybe not under this term but the fact has been testified to. If that's the objection, it seems to me it is not well taken.

Mr. Austin: No. It seems to me, though, the only question is whether this witness has any knowledge of the arrangement, if any, existing between these people and their companies.

Mr. Hanley: He has just testified with positive knowledge.

Mr. Austin: He doesn't know what the arrangement is between them.

Mr. Hanley: He says he knows.

Q. Is it a fact, Mr. Raupagh, that it is or isn't a 3302 matter of common industry knowledge in Detroit that the list, beginning with the name of the Carnick Oil Company, which you have been discussing, are supplied by the suppliers which follow their names as commission agency drivers and under a commission agency arrangement?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know that of your own knowledge?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen their trucks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have they solicited your customers?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had reports on their activities in the routine operation of your office over the past several years?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now in respect of the second note which deals with the Red Indian Oil Company and three others, I will ask you if that note means anything at all except that those four named dealers sell certain branded gasolines to what are commonly called non-brand dealers?

A. That's right.

Q. Is that all it means?

A. That's all it means.

Mr. Hanley: We reoffer the exhibit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And you know that 3303 latter of your own knowledge, do you?

The Witness: Yes, sir; I do.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yet the Examiner now see the document.

(Thereupon the documents referred to were handed to the Examiner.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The portion objected to is what?

Mr. Austin: Well, I think I will withdraw the objection in view of the testimony of the witness. I think it is a little more clear now. I felt that a lot of those were very largely unexplained. While they still might be technical objections, I will withdraw them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is withdrawn and Respondent's Exhibits 55-A and 55-B for identification are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 55-A and 55-B", were received in evidence.)

Mr. Hanley: Your Honor, I have two other exhibits of a nature very similar to this one, but perhaps it is so late that I ought not to start on them. Your Honor requested a map the other day and we have had it prepared and at this time we would like to have it marked for identification.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Reporter will mark
3304 the document as Respondent's Exhibit No. 56 for identification.

(The document referred to, was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 56" for identification.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, I show you a map of the State of Michigan which I have now had marked for identification as Respondent's Exhibit 56 and it includes the Detroit metropolitan area which, on this map, has been marked with a hevy green line. I will ask you, first, if the lines were put on that, the green lines, at your direction and under your supervision?

A. They were.

Q. And what does the area bound by the green lines represent?

A. The area bounded by the green lines represents the Detroit division or total ~~sales~~ division of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, which is under my jurisdiction.

Mr. Hanley: We offer Respondent's Exhibit 56 in evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any objection?

Mr. Austin: I haven't seen it yet. I assume it is all right. I will ask the witness, where is the Detroit division? Is this it down here (indicating)?

Mr. Hanley: Yes.

Mr. Austin: No objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit
3305 56 for identification is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 56," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Hanley: Now, Judge, it is just up to your Honor's judgment and desire as to whether I can go into one of these further long exhibits of figures now, which will be similar to the one I just concluded and I am perfectly willing to go forward if you desire.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Could you advise the Examiner how long you think the direct examination of the witness will take?

Mr. Hanley: Judge, the way we are getting along, I don't think it is going to take much longer. We are getting along with great rapidity. I do want to say this, just in fairness to the Court and counsel, we are going to have a lot more pictures, but we are not going to take any such length of time as was taken here the other day. We will arrange some way to handle them en bloc somehow and we won't consume any great amount of time. Counsel for the Commission may want to riffle through them and make some specfic objections, but I think they are all of a character that can be readily grouped and indeed we have tried to group them so that anything that has been applicable to one book would apply equally to all.

3306 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Does counsel desire to make a motion at this time?

Mr. Hanley: Well, I would like to move that we adjourn. I would be glad to start at nine o'clock or nine thirty, whatever the Court desires.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

The motion of counsel for Respondent is granted and now, at 4:50 p. m. the hearing is adjourned to reconvene at 9:00 o'clock a. m. May 7, 1941, in Room 859, Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(Whereupon, at 4:50 p. m., May 6, 1941, the hearing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned, to reconvene on May 7, 1941, at 9:00 a. m.)

3307 Room 859 Federal Building,
Detroit, Michigan,
May 7, 1941.

Met, pursuant to adjournment at 9 A. M.

Before:

Webster Ballinger, Trial Examiner.

Appearances:

Cyrus B. Austin, Esq., Attorney for the Federal Trade Commission.

Harold R. Hanley, Esq., 910 South Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Illinois, and

Arthur J. Abbott, Esq., of the firm of Abbott, MacMahon, and Roberts, 2230 Buhl Building, Detroit, Michigan, on behalf of the Respondent.

3308

PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

This is a reconvening at 9 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, May 7, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, in Docket No. 4389, in the case entitled Standard Oil Company.

The last hearing was held in Detroit May 6, 1941.

The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

You may proceed.

Mr. Hanley: If we may, your Honor, the Respondent would like to have marked for identification as an exhibit a document entitled: "Gasoline Sales of the Detroit Area of Licensed Wholesale Cut-Price Non-Brand Jobbers and Distributors." That consists of two pages.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the paper, as Respondent's Exhibits 57-A and B, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 57-A and B.")

P. A. RAUPAGH, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Continued) by Mr. Hanley.

3309 Q. Mr. Raupagh, I hand you what has now been marked. Respondent's Exhibits 57-A and B, for identification, and I will ask you if that exhibit was prepared under your direction and supervision?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you Exhibits 55-A and B, which are now in evidence, Mr. Raupagh, and I will ask you if Exhibits 57-A and B were made up in exactly the same manner as 55-A and B, with the exception that this last Exhibit 57-A and B deals with jobbers handling non-brand and cut-price gasoline?.

A. That is right.

Mr. Hanley: We offer Exhibits 57-A and B in evidence, your Honor.

Mr. Austin: What are Exhibits 55-A and B? May I see them, Mr. Reporter?

(The documents were handed to Mr. Austin.)

Mr. Austin: Are all the gallonage figures taken from the Michigan Gasoline Tax Division reports?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: The same ones which are in evidence in this case?

The Witness: Yes.

Mr. Austin: Well, your Honor, I object to those because it is simply a duplication of the figures which 3310 the witness has stated are already in the record, and if it is desired by the Respondent to segregate certain distributors and present their gallonage in groups, the Respondent has ample evidence in doing that, and I submit there is nothing new here.

Mr. Hanley: It forms the foundation of an exhibit which I propose to enter. It is necessary for us for a foundation for a certain number of exhibits which I propose to introduce.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled. Respondent's Exhibits 57-A and B are admitted in evidence.

Mr. Hanley: The Respondent requests to have marked, for identification, a chart entitled "Statement of Gasoline Sales Volume—"

Mr. Austin: May I interrupt? I have something else on this 57-A and B that I neglected—if I may. I would like to object to this further to the title which refers to cut-price non-brand jobbers and distributors. I submit that there has been absolutely no proof of any such title. I objected to the same words yesterday, used in 55-A, and I think it is unwarranted, and I submit to your Honor that any such—those two words "cut-price" and "non-brand", if they are to be used here, they should be proved exactly what that means of every one of these people listed, by competent testimony.

3311 Mr. Hanley: We will agree that "Cut-price" be stricken from the document. It has been fully proved what non-brand means, I am sure, and, also, what cut-price means, but I just don't want to argue about it. We will concede that the word "cut-price" may go out of the exhibit. It is the non-brand, as distinguished from the branded dealers we are trying to segregate here.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness has testified that cut-price and non-brand were used interchangeably.

Mr. Hanley: That's right. The testimony is in the record, and I don't think the objection is well taken. We propose to prove with this exhibit—

Mr. Austin: I am not taking your word for anything you propose to prove. We have been having that through the whole case.

Mr. Hanley: I am willing that the word "cut-price" go out on this exhibit, if the Court thinks it should. I am sure it has been proved.

Mr. Austin: If the "cut-price" goes out, I will withdraw my objection to the "non-brand." I don't know whether they are non-brand, but—

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Counsel for the Respondent may then strike physically from the exhibit the word "cut-price".

3312 Mr. Hanley: May I now have this exhibit marked—for identification?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may. The exhibit again is admitted in evidence as Respondent's Exhibits 57-A and 57-B.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 57-A and 57-B," was received in evidence.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will now mark the document handed him by counsel for the Respondent as Respondent's Exhibit 58, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 58.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I hand you Respondent's Exhibit 58, for identification, Mr. Raupagh, and will ask you if that exhibit was prepared under your direction and supervision and in your office.

A. It was.

Q. It consists, apparently, of nine columns, vertical columns. Tell us, please, what the first column is.

A. The first column designates the year.

Q. And without stating the figures, what does the second column refer to?

A. Total sales, Detroit area.

Q. And the third column?

3313 A. Total Standard Oil Company sales; percent of total sales.

Q. The fourth column.

A. Standard Oil Company sales, excluding jobbers; percent of total sales.

Q. And the fifth?

A. Standard Oil Company jobber sales; percent of total sales.

Q. What does the sixth column represent?

A. Sales of licensed wholesale jobbers and distributors of branded gasoline exclusive of Standard Oil Company jobbers; percent of total sales.

Q. What does the seventh column represent?

A. Sales of licensed wholesale cut-price jobbers and distributors of non-brand gasoline; percent of total sales.

Q. And the eight column?

A. Total sales of all licensed jobbers and distributors including Standard Oil Company jobbers; totals of columns 5, 6, and 7; percent of total sales.

Q. And the ninth?

A. Sales all other companies, including majors; column 2 less columns 4 and 8; percent of total sales.

Q. Now, where were these figures obtained, Mr. Raupagh, with reference to the sales of the Standard Oil Company? In the area described in the title of the 3314 exhibit, both in total and as described through the channels of jobbers and other jobbers? The columns 3, 4, and 5?

A. They are the Standard Oil Company's actual sales.

Q. Now, with reference to Column 6, having to do with distributors of branded gasoline, where did you get those figures?

A. Those figures were secured from the State Gasoline Tax Sale records.

Q. And does column 6 refer to the gallonage and other individual companies which appear on Respondent's Exhibit in evidence 55-A and B?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. With reference to column 7, having to do with distributors of non-brand gasoline, where did you obtain those figures?

A. From the State of Michigan Gasoline Tax records.

Q. And does that column refer to the gallonage figures and the companies named on Respondent's Exhibits in evidence 57-A and B?

A. It does.

Q. Now, column 8 is merely an addition, is it not, of the three columns preceding, which gives a total of sales through jobbers?

A. It is.

Q. Now, what companies are included in the 3315 column under the number 9?

A. All of the major companies whose figures could not be segregated on the Gasoline Tax reports as to their gallonage in this area.

Q. The total sales in the Detroit area as appear in column 2 refer to that area, do they not, which is described in the title to the exhibit?

A. It does.

Mr. Hanley: We offer Respondent's Exhibit No. 58 in evidence.

Mr. Austin: I would like to have about five minutes to look over this, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will recess for five minutes.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Reconvene.

Mr. Austin: As to Respondent's Exhibit 58, for identification, I have no objection to it going in evidence except the objection which I made to Respondent's Exhibit 57. In other words, the word "cut-price" appears here in two places.

Mr. Hanley: It may come out.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Counsel will delete it.

Mr. Austin: With that change, I have no objection.

3316 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 58, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 58," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I would like to interrupt the examination of this witness for just a moment to hand him certain things which he has requested from the Respondent, that is, Mr. Austin requested them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you desire to go off the record?

Mr. Hanley: No, I want it on the record, because there are certain understandings that we have had.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may proceed.

Mr. Hanley: I hand you, Mr. Austin, first the list of reseller accounts in the Detroit field for 1937 with annual gasoline gallonage for that year, as requested by the Commission.

Mr. Austin: Do I understand that this shows where one operator operates more than one service station?

Mr. Hanley: It would show it if it were true, but it isn't true.

Mr. Austin: Isn't it true?

Mr. Hanley: In that year they did not have any tank wagon dealers who were operating more than one station, and the notation to that effect appears on the memo.

3317 Mr. Austin: Oh, I see it down at the bottom, Judge.

Mr. Hanley: Secondly, in response to your request concerning which I asked you to write a letter, but it seems that our accountants were able to understand what you wanted, at least, as well as I could explain it to them after talking to you, and that information consists of a statement showing the 1940 sales: A. Gasoline Tank Wagon Reseller. B. Gasoline Tank Wagon Consumer. C. Gasoline Tank Car Jobbers (Four jobbers named in action).

D. Gasoline All Other—Other Method and Tank Car. E. Motor Oil Reseller Sales. F. Sales of Motor Oil and Greases to Four Named Jobbers.

Mr. Austin: Thank you.

Mr. Hanley: Thirdly, certain requests were made in respect of permitting the Commission to examine parts of Respondent's code of accounts and copies of Respondent's code of accounts are now handed to the Commission in response to such request.

There was an understanding with counsel that these copies would be used to any extent the Commission might find it essential to use them for its own purposes in this case, but that no copies would be taken, and that these copies would be returned to the Respondent and no publications of any of that matter permitted. As to that, it 3318 would be easier to just copy that into the record.

There is now handed to counsel for the Respondent these items:

A. Pages 1-2-3-4-5—Subs of Marketing Expense—Petroleum Products.

B. —Pages 1-2-3—Basis of Closing Tank Wagon Pro Rata.

C. —Pages 1-2-3-4-5-6—Basis of Closing General Pro Rata.

Fourthly, there was also a request made for a memorandum covering distribution of time procedure. That memorandum, together with a copy of a form in use by the Respondent entitled: "Distribution of Time by Method of Delivery" is handed to counsel for the Commission.

May I have marked, for identification, an exhibit entitled: "Yearly Increases or Decreases in Gasoline, Sales, and so forth"?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document ~~Respondent~~'s Exhibit 59, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 59.")

Mr. Austin: Thank you again, Judge, for all of this, if I haven't already said so.

Mr. Hanley: All right.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Referring you to Exhibit 59, for identification, 3319 Mr. Raupagh, was that prepared under your direction and supervision in your office?

A. It was.

Q. Just explain what that exhibit represents, without using the figures.

A. This Exhibit 59, of Respondent's, represents the yearly increases or decreases in gasoline sales, gallons and percent, for the years 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940, for State of Michigan, Detroit area; total Standard Oil Company, Standard Oil Company jobbers, branded jobbers, cut-price non-brand jobbers, all jobbers, and all others.

Q. And what is the derivation or source of the figures which appear on that exhibit?

A. Official Michigan State Gasoline Department reports.

Mr. Hanley: I note that the word "cut-price" appears in two places. I am deleting that in both instances, and, as deleted, will offer the exhibit in evidence.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Did you state how the consumption figures for the Detroit area were estimated?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Will you do so, please?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, likewise, I would like to know how the 3320 last figures "All Other Companies" in the Detroit area—that appears also to be an estimate.

A. The figures of consumption for the Detroit area, which includes Detroit, Hamtramck, Highland Park, and Dearborn, were obtained on this basis:

First we took the consumption of gasoline for the entire State of Michigan as per the Gasoline Tax reports; the tax reports that are in evidence in this case.

We obtained the Motor Vehicle Registrations of the State of Michigan from the proper authorities of the State. We then divided to secure the unit motor vehicle consumption per year.

We then took the Motor Vehicle Registrations of Wayne County. We multiplied that by the unit consumption per motor vehicle, to secure the consumption of gasoline in Wayne County.

We then took our actual sales—I mean Standard Oil Company sales in Wayne County—and secured the percentage that those sales, Standard Oil sales, represent to the total.

We then took the actual sales in the Detroit area—that is, Detroit, Hamtramck, Dearborn, and Highland Park—and applied the same percentage that we had arrived at for Wayne County.

We then divided to determine what 1% is in gallons. We multiplied same by 100, which gave us the total esti-3321 mated consumption in the area.

We further checked these computations, and figures, with other statisticians, including one of the major companies here in Detroit who have a statistician employed; including Mr. Boatwright, and, on the testimony of Mr. Harrison, the figures are very closely related.

Q. I am afraid you got a little ahead of me on your method there, but did you mean that Mr. Harrison put in some figures when he testified here as to consumption in Detroit?

A. He gave some estimated figures which check closely to these figures.

Q. You mean his testimony here in the record?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because I would have to look back at that. I didn't remember that any such figure was in.

How was your figure for sales of all other companies in the last column arrived at?

A. The figures for sales of all other companies was arrived at after we had taken the figures of the various headings; that is, branded jobbers, non-brand jobbers, our own sales, and the reason that we had to use the figure arrived at in that manner on column No. 9, is because the Gasoline Tax Report of some of the major companies, of all the major companies like Socony Vacuum and 3322 Sinclair and all of the other large companies, the tax reports do not segregate the area, nor can we obtain the figures directly from them or, at least, we did not. But, according to all the statisticians, after we have taken the gallonage into consideration and other headings, column No. 9 can only represent the gallonage of those other companies who operate directly in the Detroit area.

Mr. Austin: Well, your Honor, inasmuch as this is merely offered as an estimate on the consumption in the Detroit area and the figures for—grouping of other companies in the Detroit area, if it is so offered, I will accept it upon that basis. I would like—I don't know. I don't feel that there is necessarily anything here that indicates any very accurate estimate. Probably the best has been done that can be done, but I believe I will object to those two columns upon the ground that they are estimates and do not reliably show the figures for the consumption in the Detroit area on the sales of companies other than Standard Oil in the Detroit area.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Which is that?

Mr. Austin: The second horizontal line and the last horizontal line. Both of them are marked as estimates.

Mr. Hanley: They are offered as an estimate, based on the calculation which has been explained by the witness.

It is the best figure that is obtainable, your Honor, 3323 as will be disclosed by a study of the exhibit, fits in with the actual figures, concerning which there is no estimate, which is, in itself, a proof of reasonable accuracy. It is just impossible to get that figure from any public records, and it is the method which is used continuously by oil companies, our own included, for their own purpose. I can ask the witness some further questions about that, if there is any doubt in your Honor's mind.

Mr. Austin: I just want to point out, your Honor, that while for 1938, where the red figures are there on the exhibit, that there is a decrease in consumption of gasoline for the State of Michigan as indicated as 5.4%, whereas it is 10% for Detroit.

Mr. Hanley: Which, again, is verified, if your Honor please, by certain charts that were prepared by Mr. Boatwright, and which we put in on his testimony. There was a lower consumption, relatively, in Detroit in 1938 than the balance of the State.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may examine.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, is the method which you have explained to obtain the total consumption of gasoline in any segregated area like the City of Detroit, a method which you currently use in operating your business?

A. It is.

3324 Q. Have you been using it for many years past?

A. We have.

Q. Do other oil companies employ the same method?

A. They do.

Q. Do you exchange information from time to time as to the results that you reach?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. As to totals?

A. We do.

Q. Do you, in your business, act upon the results which you reach?

A. We do.

Q. Do you keep your own records, based upon the results that you reach by this method?

A. We do.

Q. Is it not true that you actually arrange and budget inventory and make investment of money and store gasoline on the basis of your findings as a result of these calculations?

A. It is true.

Q. Is it the best figure obtainable for the purpose?

A. It is the best figure obtainable.

Q. After you operate over the years in using it, have you found it to be an inaccurate figure in any given year?

A. We have found it a very accurate figure.

3325 Q. I might ask you this: the method was not at all prepared in order to prepare figures for this lawsuit, was it, Mr. Raupagh?

A. It was not.

Q. It is just as much a part of your books as any other figure you have, is it not?

A. It is.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If counsel for the Commission has anything to be heard from on, he may proceed.

Mr. Austin: No. Except I would like to know how the witness has found the figure to be accurate. You said you found it to be a very accurate figure. Had you any means of checking the accuracy?

The Witness: Well, we know about how our business runs along according to these figures, and also with other companies that have statisticians who check as to the amount of business that may be secured in the area, or that others may be figuring and securing in the area. From a combination of those things, we found that these figures are accurate.

Mr. Austin: Well, I don't want to waste a lot of time on this, but if you have another means of ascertaining what is accurate, it seems to me, if this is an estimate and then you find it is accurate, you must have had some way 3326 of checking other than the method used here. Otherwise, you don't know whether it is accurate. If you say you rely upon it, that is something else.

The Witness: Well, only from our actual experience as to these figures, we have found that they are accurate and they are accurate enough for us to rely upon them so that we may make investments and so on.

Mr. Austin: Well, you do rely upon them, anyway, Mr. Raupagh?

The Witness: Yes.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. On this question of checking, Mr. Raupagh, let me ask you a few questions and try to sew it up. In your experience over the year, have you ever been let down by these figures in your reliance upon them?.

A. No, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection overruled, and Respondent's Exhibit 59, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 59," was received in evidence.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, in relation to these several exhibits, 55-A and B, 57-A and B, 58, and 59, the terms "ma-3327 jor oil companies" has been used. You, yesterday, defined or made a list of 12 companies which you referred to as major companies. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are those the companies that are referred to in these exhibits as major companies.

A. They are.

Mr. Austin: What references are you making there? I don't offhand see any reference to major companies.

Mr. Hanley: The major brands.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. The same is true wherever the term major brand is used, isn't it, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have testified in this proceeding, Mr. Raupagh, that you arrived at certain prevailing retail prices of gasoline in Detroit. Now, what major companies, if you used major companies, or brands, were used in your determination of the prevailing retail price?

A. In determining the prevailing retail price of service stations, we used the 12 major brands that I mentioned in my testimony yesterday, taking the posted price of the dealers and using it according to the majority of postings of those dealers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I don't understand 3328 that. Will you explain it further?

The Witness: Yes, your Honor.

To arrive at the prevailing retail price we make periodical checks of the postings of the dealers handling major brand products, and whatever is predominantly posted by those dealers, we consider the prevailing retail price. The postings are general price signs, and practically every service station displays them.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, in the course of your business what is your custom and practice relative to keeping continuous track of price postings on all gasolines sold in Detroit?

A. On all gasolines—since 1936, and previous thereto, we kept a continuous record of the prevailing retail price postings.

Q. How was that done?

A. It was done by our own men, who work under my supervision and who made weekly checks for some of the time during those years of the prevailing retail prices by going to the stations themselves and checking the prices as they are posted and reporting to our office, where the compilation is made.

Q. And did you personally participate in some of those surveys?

A. I personally participated in some of those 3329 surveys.

Q. That is to say, do you actually drive about town and look at these stations yourself?

A. I do.

Q. Did you keep records of the results of that type of survey, for your own information, and as a record of your office?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hanley: May we please have this marked as an exhibit? There are four sheets.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the documents Respondent's Exhibits 60-A, 60-B, 60-C, and 60-D, for identification.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 60-A, 60-B, 60-C, 60-D.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I hand you, Mr. Raupagh, what has now been marked, for identification, Nos. 60-A, B, C, and D, and will ask you if it is a record of your office.

A. It is, sir.

Q. Was it made in the normal routine course of the business of your office and under your direction, and, at times, with your participation personally?

A. It was.

Q. Is it a continuous running record of what it 3330 purports to show to be, the fact relative to retail prices of gasoline in Detroit as a result of your surveys?

A. It is.

Q. And is it kept in your office continuously for the purposes of your business, upon which you rely?

A. It is.

Q. Was this a record existing in your office and as a part of the records of your office prior to the time that the Federal Trade Commission filed the Complaint in this proceeding?

A. It was.

Q. I wish you would please take the record, Mr. Raupagh, and explain column by column what the exhibit shows, without stating the figures that are reflected.

A. Respondent's Exhibit 60-A, 60-B, 60-C, and 60-D, is a record or compilation of the retail gasoline price situation in Detroit. All prices indicated on the record are exclusive of all taxes.

Under the first set of columns we have the record on third grade gasoline.

The first column gives the date, year, month and day of the month.

The second column gives the prevailing retail service station price.

Q. Now, just at that point: Is that arrived at in 3331 the manner which you have just explained to the Court, as you measure, of the prevailing retail price at any particular time?

A. It was.

Q. And, again, does that have reference to the so-called 12 major brands of gasolines?

A. It does.

Q. I intended a moment ago, Mr. Raupagh, to ask you to name those 12 again, to be sure that everybody knows what we are talking about in connection with these exhibits.

Mr. Austin: They are in exhibits in the record.

Mr. Hanley: I know they are in the record, but I don't want anybody bobbing up and saying they are not properly identified in connection with these exhibits. You suggested a moment ago we hadn't proved anything in this case, and I am going to prove this again.

Mr. Austin: I am sure I didn't suggest you hadn't proved anything, Judge.

Mr. Hanley: Maybe the reporter got it wrong. It doesn't matter. It is just an argument, anyhow.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I would like to have you name the 12 companies to which you refer, the 12 brand names.

A. Standard Oil of Indiana; Sun Oil Company; Shell
Oil Corporation; Sinclair Oil and Refining Company;
3332 Socony Vocuum Oil Company; Texas Company; Gulf
Oil Corporation; Cities Service Oil Company; Pure
Oil Company, Hi-Speed distributors; Mid-Continent Petroleum; Ohio Oil Corporation; Standard Oil of Ohio.

Q. You have also named certain other companies or brands which you, at the time when you testified yesterday, stated you thought were properly regarded as major brand dealers in Detroit. Now, in connection with Exhibit 60-A, B, C, and D, did you survey the stations dealing in the products of those other companies which you called majors?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, for the record, will you again state what those brands or companies are?

The Witness: May I confer with counsel, your Honor?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may.

Mr. Hanley: It is that same list.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Hanley: I was wrong, and I apologize. I will straighten it out.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, I think I have confused you by references to the 12 major brands or companies which you named yesterday and which I have just asked you 3333 to name again, in relation to certain other companies which you stated you thought were majors in Detroit. Now, in order to clarify this thing, having reference only to the Exhibits 55-A, 55-B, 57-A, 57-B, 58, and 59, but excluding this exhibit 60-A, B, C, and D, which you have in your hand, do the 12 major brands refer to your use of the words "major brands" in those exhibits which I have named?

A. They do.

Q. And do not refer to those additional, to this additional list?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, referring to Exhibit 60-A, B, C, and D, I wish you would please state whether your analysis of the prevailing price in Detroit, as at any given time reflected on the exhibit, gives consideration to other brands than those 12 major brands?

A. It does. It gives consideration to all brands.

Q. Now, will you please name the additional brands? That is, additional to the 12 that would receive consideration in your determination of the prevailing retail price at any given time.

A. We would give consideration to and include them in our surveys and compilations, the following: Charles E. Austin, Puritan, Speedway, Globe Oil and Refining Company, Duro Oil Company; Keystone, Aurora, Leonard, Roosevelt Refining, and any others that post a price.
3334 I mean by that, any other retail station that posts a price.

Q. And you would look at them all throughout the city as I define them now?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, then, you would determine, as you have explained to the Court, from all of those postings what was the prevailing price?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, will you please go ahead and explain, Mr. Raupagh, further, in connection with Exhibit A, Exhibit 60-A. I think you had just started on the title entitled, "Prevailing Retail Service Station Price."

A. The second column gives the prevailing retail service station price. The third column is the dealer tank wagon price, and that is our dealer tank wagon price. That means Standard Oil Company's dealer tank wagon price.

The third column shows the margin that the dealer has according to the Standard Oil Company's posted dealer tank wagon price, and the retail price.

The next column indicates the number of service stations selling below the prevailing retail market or price.

The next column gives the average amount below the prevailing retail market, taking them altogether and grouping them.

3335 Q. Now, do the columns mean the same thing, and are the same computations arrived at the same way for each of the off brands, like third grade, house brand, and premium brand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I note that ~~on~~ No. 60-A, there are no figures under the broad heading "Premium Grade." What is the reason for that?

A. The reason for that is that for those years we did not make the survey to cover the premium grade of gasoline.

Q. And did there come a time when you began to keep the survey in connection with premium grade, and, if so, when?

A. On October 29, 1937, we made the first survey in regard to the premium grade of gasoline.

Q. Now, referring you to the year 1938, on page 60-B, please look under the column "'Service Stations Selling Below Prevailing Retail Market," under "House brand", on the date January 18, the figure 649 appears. What does that mean?

A. That means that there were 649 stations that were selling below the prevailing retail market or house brand gasoline as posted by the service stations.

Q. On the same line, but under the general column "Third Grade," there is a figure 149. Do you find that? It is to the left.

A. Yes.

3336 Q. What does that mean?

A. That means that there were 149 stations selling below the prevailing price on third grade gasoline.

Q. Now, will you drop down to February 15, 1938, and under "House Brand" in the sub-column "Number of Stations Selling Below 'Prevailing Price", there is the figure 913. To shorten this, does that mean that on that date there were that many stations observed in your survey selling House Brand below the generally prevailing retail price.

A. That is right.

Mr. Hanley: We offer the exhibit in evidence your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Any objection?

Mr. Austin: Yes, your Honor.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. How did you determine the number of service stations selling below what you call the prevailing retail price, Mr. Raupagh, at any date?

A. By the price postings at each individual service station.

Q. Well, did you make any check as to whether they were selling at the price posted?

A. No, sir.

Q. And who made those checks on the postings?

3337 A. Our representatives. By that, I mean, our agents of bulk plants and salesmen.

Q. And did they report it to your office?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I don't think this is worth anything at all. In the first place, it has got all sorts of service stations mixed up together with Joy and Zip and other grades, and there is some sort of a prevailing retail price here which isn't the major prevailing price.

Mr. Hanley: What was that last?

Mr. Austin: Which is not the major prevailing price. And it is perfectly obvious when you get a prevailing retail price in that way and then go through all the stations selling at various prices throughout the city, you are going to find a large number that sell below this particular price, and it doesn't prove or indicate anything one way or the other as far as I can see. And, furthermore, the average retail price, as Mr. Raupagh has described it on all sorts of companies and branded and unbranded and major and non-major companies is compared with the Standard Oil Company tank wagon price, and their price to the dealers, and their other prices, and that is given as between prevailing retail prices, which is an average. I think this is just such a mix up of information that it can have no probative value, and, furthermore, if you want a 3338 technical objection, and I think I should, in view of the character of it, I don't think Mr. Raupagh has any full knowledge of the accuracy of the number of service stations selling below retail market or whether any one of them, unless he visited them himself, was selling below the retail price, and I think that the exhibit should be excluded as incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial.

Mr. Hanley: If there is any doubt in your Honor's mind, I want to be heard on this matter.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: For the purpose of the record, you may ask him further questions.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, there is one other question I should like to ask you about this. If you will turn again to page 60-B, under the line January 18, 1938, you have explained two of those figures, namely, 149, under "Third Brand" and the figure 649 under "House Brand" as being the number of stations selling those brands below the prevailing price on that date. The same would be true of premium grade, which, on that day, shows 183 stations; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what I want to inquire about is if a station were selling all three brands of gasoline and selling all three of them below the prevailing price on that grade of gasoline, that one should be, one station would be re-3339 flected in each one of these columns, would it not?

A. It would.

Q. So it doesn't follow from this exhibit that you could add up the number of stations under third grade and house brand and premium brand and be numerically correct as to the individual units about the city that were cutting the price?

A. That is right.

Mr. Hanley: Now, is there any doubt in your Honor's mind about the propriety of this exhibit? I don't want to make an argument.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No. The objection is overruled. Respondent's Exhibits 60-A, B, C, and D, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 60-A, B, C, and D," were received in evidence.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Referring to the list of 12 major brands that you have re-named this morning, are the companies, refiners, and suppliers, and operators selling those brands of gasoline in competition with Standard Oil Company in Detroit now, and have they been so since 1936?

A. They have.

Q. And referring now to the gasoline business primarily?

3340 A. Yes; sir.

Q. It is true that they have been in competition in connection with all other petroleum products, also, is it not, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes.

Mr. Austin: Which companies are you referring to now?

Mr. Hanley: The list of 12.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, in addition to those 12 companies, what other companies in Detroit have been, since 1936, in competition in gasoline commerce with the Standard Oil Company?

A. Puritan Stations, Incorporated; Globe Oil and Refining Company; Duro; Keystone; Aurora Gasoline Company; Leonard Refining Company; Roosevelt Refining Company, and, since 1938, that is, February 28, 1938, Charles E. Austin, Incorporated, and, I don't know the exact date, but, between 1936 and the present time, Speedway Petroleum entered the field as a gasoline marketer, and there are many others also.

Q. Did you name the Argo Oil Company?

A. No, I did not, but I should have.

Q. What is the fact with respect to that company?

A. They are definitely in competition with Standard Oil Company of Indiana and other companies handling a 3341 major brand gasoline, secured from the Ohio Oil Company.

Q. Did you name the Aurora Gasoline Company?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And how about the National Refining Company? I never can keep that company straight.

A. The National Refining Company has no distribution here in Detroit, but it has four or five jobbers in the southern part of the State of Michigan, and it has distribution in other states.

Q. Has it, to your knowledge, undertaken to get into your field?

A. It has.

Q. And invaded this market, your market?

A. It has.

Q. And obtained certain of your customers?

A. It has.

Mr. Austin: I object to that, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: How is it material?

Mr. Hanley: To show the competition. As a matter of fact, two of these jobbers have testified to offers from the National Refining Company, competitive offers with our company.

Mr. Austin: I don't recall any such testimony.

Mr. Hanley: I am told that it is in just one. I beg your pardon.

3342 Mr. Austin: But in any event, anything the witness knows on that would be hearsay unless he was present at the time the conversation was held when the offer was made by these people from the National Refining Company to the jobbers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained. The answer may be stricken out.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. There has been some discussion here about a gasoline with a trade name Silver Flash, which, I think, was said by some witness was made by Shell. Were you familiar with that gasoline, Mr. Raupagh?

A. I am.

Q. What is the fact as to whether it is comparable with what are commonly termed house brand gasolines?

A. It was comparable to our then house brand gasolines, and, in addition to the house brand gasoline, they had a third brand gasoline which they called "Target" gasoline. T-a-r-g-e-t. I do not recall in regard to their premium brand, whether they had a premium brand.

Q. Well, we will get that.

Now, some mention was made of a trade name Golden Shell, I think inadvertently, by Mr. Austin, leaving the inference that it was a gasoline. Now, what is it, Mr. Raupagh?

3343 A. Golden Shell is the trade mark of the Shell Petroleum Company's motor oil.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, it would be helpful if you could have in the record a statement of the brands sold by each of the respective companies.

Mr. Hanley: I will put it in. There will be a place where that will come in very well, and I will put it in.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, I wish you would please refer to Exhibits 38-A to 38-E, 55-A and 55-B, 57-A and 57-B, and tell us if 55-A and 55-B and 57-A and 57-B, on the one hand, and Exhibits 38-A to 38-E, on the other hand, which was provided by the State Taxing Authorities, do not generally reflect the names of the same distributors?

A. They do.

Q. Now, please take all three of these exhibits and any memoranda you have and go through the list giving the following information: That is, the name of the company, the supplier of that company, and the brand name of the gasoline, wherever they have one and you know it, such as you have as to whether that company operate retail stations or bulk plants or both, and in that connection state your knowledge as to whether the company is supplied 3344 by tank car or by truck.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, why shouldn't—if we are going to have that, why shouldn't he go through the whole list for Wayne County instead of a list that was hand-picked by the Standard Oil Company?

Mr. Hanley: This list wasn't hand-picked by the Standard Oil Company, Judge. I don't know why counsel insists on making statements like that.

Mr. Austin: Because your witness so testified.

Mr. Hanley: I heard Mr. Griswold say he picked out this list of companies because he was requested to by the Standard Oil Company. Now, what he was requested to do was pick out a list of distributors in Detroit where we are being tried, and it is the area that is being tried, that is comparable to that of Ned's and Citrin-Kolb. We have been trying to prove in this record that there are comparable situations all over the United States. Why should counsel say: Why didn't we take all of Wayne County? We can take the whole State of Michigan, and are perfectly willing to do it, and have proved it by opinion evidence.

Mr. Austin: All I know is what the witness said, that those were the names you said to put on there.

Mr. Hanley: They were, because they were the kind of operation we knew, and we told him we wanted their information as to their kind of operation.

3345 If you want it for all of Wayne County, we can get it; get it the same way we got this. We would be glad to have it in the record. We are trying to prove there are many, many comparable operations like this. We stuck to Detroit, because that is the area we are charged with in the Complaint.

Mr. Austin: I wasn't thinking of any part of Wayne County outside of Detroit. I wasn't thinking of it from a geographical standpoint.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there an objection pending?

Mr. Austin: No, I don't believe so. I will wait until the witness—

The Witness: Is it O. K.?

Mr. Austin: I don't know what foundation there is for the witness testifying as to whether any particular jobbers buy by tank wagon or operate bulk plants.

Mr. Hanley: I am asking him to state his knowledge.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is the question.

Mr. Hanley: I anticipate there may be places where he would say he doesn't know. If he doesn't, I want him to say just that.

The Witness: Ready?

Trial Examiner Ballinger. You may proceed.

A. Starting with Exhibits 55-A and 55-B, Exhibit 3346 of the Respondent, which is a list of distributors who are handling branded gasoline, we start with the Highland Oil Corporation, which is a jobber for Hickok Oil Corporation, and handles Pure Oil gasoline.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, what is the brand name?

A. Hi-Speed is the brand name used by that distributor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is the Hicock Oil Company a refiner? Do they refine?

The Witness: No, I don't believe they refine, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Where do they get their gasoline?

The Witness: From the Pure Oil Company, who is a refiner and a marketer also, and markets directly also; the Pure Oil Company does.

A. (Continuing.) They had a very substantial gallonage in the Detroit area in 1940, amounting to 27,872,000 gallons, according to the Gasoline Tax records.

They operate quite a number of service stations directly. They supply other dealers. They operate their own tank trucks. They have several bulk storage plants.

Wilson Oil Corporation: this is another jobber of the Pure Oil-Hicock set-up. Handle Pure Oil Company's gasoline through the Hicock Oil Corporation. Have a 3347 very substantial gallonage in the Detroit area, amounting to 14,774,377 gallons.

Q. In 1940?

A. In 1940.

They operate a number of service stations directly. They lease out some company-owned stations; quite a number of them. They supply other dealers with gasoline. They operate their own tank trucks. They have a bulk storage plant.

Bulk Stations, Incorporated: location 1900 Gratiot Avenue:

Gallonage in 1940, 483,229. The gallonage has been over the million mark in 1937 and 1938.

Q. Who supplies them?

A. They are supplied by the Pure Oil-Hicock combination.

They are supplied by tank wagon from the Wilson Oil Corporation.

They operate no tank trucks of their own. The only bulk storage they have is at their service station at 1900 Gratiot Avenue. The Wilson Oil Company makes the delivery direct to them.

They buy on a basis than less than the prevailing tank wagon price.

Mr. Austin: How do you know that?

The Witness: I know that, because I have solicited their business personally, and I have known this 3348 party for quite a number of years, Mr. Austin.

A. (Continuing.) This operation is, in my judgment, similar to the operation of Ned's Auto Supply, although he stated that he does not operate this service station himself at the present time. I know that during the period of 1936 to 1940, inclusive, for a year or two he did operate the service station himself. The proposition there—

Mr. Austin: Now, your Honor, I object and move everything be stricken that the witness has said since I questioned him, as giving an opinion, and not responsive to anything asked, and I further move to strike his previous testimony regarding the price which this station pays which, as I understand it, is admittedly hearsay.

Mr. Hanley: It would be if the witness' statement were stricken, but the witness has stated how he knows, in response to counsel's question.

Mr. Austin: He has explained it was hearsay. That's why I asked him. I suggest your Honor question him if you have any doubt about it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I don't understand it was hearsay. What is the source of your information?

The Witness: The source of my information is that I personally solicited Mr. Koidan's business, and during that course of solicitation and experience for the past ten years, I know that he buys at a price less than the 3349 prevailing tank wagon price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled and the motion to strike is denied.

Mr. Austin: Well, if your Honor please, I just don't understand these rulings; I really don't. But the motion to strike is entirely on a different ground than hearsay. I think that should be ruled upon separately, if your Honor please.

I am not contesting the ruling, if it is the same ruling, but I think it is two different grounds.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I understood you based it upon the one ground.

Mr. Austin: No, I first moved to strike out the latter part, about what the witness said about this being a comparable situation to Ned's, as opinion.

Then I made a motion to strike out the previous testimony about the price, upon the ground it was hearsay. Your Honor has ruled on that.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What the witness said with reference to it being a comparable situation to Ned's is stricken.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I will now ask you if in your judgment and opinion and knowledge of both the operation you have just described and your knowledge of Ned's operation, they are comparable?

3350 A. They are comparable, because they buy gasoline at less than the prevailing tank wagon price.

They sell gasoline to the public.

They operate a service station and it is quite a large service station. From that angle, they are comparable.

Q. Now, will you proceed with the list, Mr. Raupagh, please?

A. Dixie Fuel and Supply Company is a jobber having a wholesale distributor's license, supplied by Mid-Continent Petroleum through the Thiesen-Clemens Company, who are the distributors of Mid-Continent in Michigan. Their gallonage in 1940 amounted to 1,346,533 gallons.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, just as a suggestion, when you give that gallonage, just give it in round numbers, please. Just say in excess of—

A. All right.

In addition to the Mid-Continent Petroleum being their supplier, they are also supplied some gasoline by the Aurora Gasoline Company.

They operate, directly, two service stations. They supply other dealer service stations. They operate tank trucks of their own. They have their own bulk storage. They are what I term a normal gasoline or petroleum jobber. They are comparable to Citrin-Kolb and the other jobbers mentioned in this hearing.

3351 Q. What brand of gasoline do they sell, or under what brand?

A. I just don't recall all of the—that's D. X. gasoline.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What is D. S. gasoline?

The Witness: D. X. They just use the D. X., and that is the brand of the Mid-Continent Petroleum Corporation.

A. (Continuing.) The Lincoln Oil Company is a jobber supplied by Mid-Continent Petroleum through the Thiesen-Clemens Company.

Their gallonage during 1940 was about 900,000.

They operate, directly, service stations of their own. They supply other dealers. They operate their own tank trucks. They have their own bulk storage.

They are on a comparable basis with Citrin-Kolb and Wayne Oil Company.

National Garages, Incorporated: they are being supplied and have been supplied since 1936 and previous to that time by Mid-Continent Petroleum, Thiesen-Clemens.

Company, handling the brand of gasoline known as D. X. and selling under that brand.

Their gallonage in 1940 amounted to a little over a million gallons.

They operate and sell gasoline at their 13 garages
3352 located in the City of Detroit. Some of these garages have drive-in service station facilities. Their gasoline is being delivered to them by a contract carrier, directly from the marine storage of Thiesen-Clemens. They don't operate any bulk storage themselves. Theirs is an operation which is identical to the Ned's Auto Supply Company's operation.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I don't understand this witness was asked in each case to express his opinion about whether this was identical with Ned's Auto Supply Company or not. I am sure it wasn't in the question by counsel.

Mr. Hanley: I said I was going to add that later to my question, when you moved to strike something from the testimony.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. If it isn't clear, I will ask you to add, Mr. Raupagh, in each instance, in your judgment and observation and knowledge of these observations, whether they are comparable to the operations of any of the jobbers involved in this action.

A. Yes, I will.

Red Indian Oil Company: supplier, Standard Oil of Ohio Brand, Fleet-Wing.

Their gallonage in 1940 was about 8,900,000.

They received their general distributor's license on 3353 January 4, 1932, or previous to that time.
They operate service stations directly in the City of Detroit.

They supply to other dealers. They operate their own tank trucks. They have bulk storage. They also supply other wholesalers. They also load trucks at their bulk plant—I mean trucks of other companies.

Victor Oil Company: received a wholesale distributor's license—

Q. You don't need to bother about the date when they became licensed, Mr. Raupagh.

A. All right.

Victor Oil Company: supplied by Standard Oil of Ohio. Market the Fleet-Wing brand.

Their sales of gasoline in 1940 amounted to 689,000. It has run up as high as a little over a million gallons per year.

In addition to the gasoline that is being supplied to them by Standard Oil Company of Ohio, they also secure supplies from Thiesen-Clemens Company.

They do not operate stations of their own at the present time, but during the period from 1936 to 1940 they have operated service stations of their own, directly.

They supply other dealers. They operate tank trucks of their own. They have bulk storage. They sell 3354 gasoline to other suppliers. By that I mean other people who may have wholesale distributor's licenses. They sell gasoline to non-brand marketers who come to their bulk plant with their own trucks.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, this apparently is all being read into the record. I would like to have it appear that the witness is not stating this except by reading from some document which has not been identified. I suggest that the document be marked, for identification, and so request.

Mr. Hanley: In the first place, I know the witness isn't reading. I want to say to the record, your Honor, that this witness has been carefully prepared. There isn't any question about that. He has been sitting here for weeks and we have asked him to check his knowledge of these various things and to hunt up any material he could find to refresh his recollection, and he has made certain memoranda, a number of them, and he has been asked to refer to anything he has got. He has been asked, also, to state his knowledge. A man can't remember all this detail without referring to something.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is apparent to the Examiner that the witness has not been reading from any manuscript. He has been using notes, evidently prepared by him, the notes being plainly visible to the examiner.

3355 The Witness: Shall I proceed?

Mr. Hanley: Yes, please continue.

A. Terminal Oil Company: supplied by Standard Oil Company of Ohio, market Fleet-Wing gasoline. During 1940 handled, sold 334,000 gallons of gasoline.

They are also being supplied by the Thiesen-Clemens Company, who also handles D. X. gasoline.

They operate a service station directly and they supply other dealers. They operate their own tank trucks. They have bulk storage right at their service station. It is an operation that in a small measure only would be comparable to some of the jobbers that we have.

Argo Oil Corporation: This is a company that is being operated by the Ohio Oil Company; the brand of gasoline they handle is Marathon, which is the brand of the Ohio Oil Company.

The amount of gasoline handled in 1940 amounted to 1,930,000 gallons. Their gallonage has been much higher than during some of the years between 1936 and 1940, reaching a total of a little over 4,000,000 in 1939.

They also purchased from other companies, and supply non-brand gasoline to other dealers. They operate some service stations of their own directly. They supply other dealers. They operate their own tank trucks, and they have a bulk plant.

3356 Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a recess for five minutes.

(A short recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

You may continue.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I think, Mr. Raupagh, you had concluded your answer about the Argo Oil Corporation, had you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please continue.

A. Plymouth Oil Company: their 1940 gallonage was 4,900,000. They are supplied by the Ohio Oil Company and they sell under the Dixie Brand, instead of the Marathon Brand. They also are being supplied by Aurora Gasoline Company, Bay Refining Company, and Reliable. They operate service stations directly and they supply other dealers, and they operate their own tank trucks, and they have their own bulk plant. Their operation is somewhat similar to jobber Stikeman and Citrin-Kolb.

Firestone Tire & Rubber Company: their gallonage amounted to about 1,700,000 in 1940.

They are supplied by the Gulf Oil Corporation and the Texas Oil Company.

They operate service stations directly of their own.

They do not supply other dealers; they operate their 3357 own tank trucks. They have bulk storage.

It is an operation that is similar to the operation of Ned's Auto Supply Company in almost every respect.

B. F. Goodrich: They are being supplied by the Gulf Company and the Texas Company on a tank car basis.

Their gallonage for 1940 was 3,700,000.

They operate stations of their own directly. They supply other dealers. They employ a contract carrier. They have bulk storage. There is another operation that can be favorably compared with Ned's Auto Supply Company inasmuch as they are strictly a retailer.

Petroleum Service, Incorporated: Their supplier is the Cities Service Oil Company, and their gallonage for 1940 was 8,800,000.

They engage in the general jobbing business of petroleum. They also secure supplies from the Aurora Gasoline Company.

They do not operate service stations of their own. They supply other dealers, and they operate their own tank trucks, and have their own bulk plant.

An operation similar to that of Stikeman Oil Company.

Benzol Stations, Incorporated: Their supplier is Sinclair, and the Ford Motor Company. The Ford Motor Company supplies them with their Benzol blend and the Sinclair Oil and Refining Company supplies them 3358 with their trade mark brand of Sinclair Gasoline.

Their gallonage for 1940 was 12,500,000.

They operate service stations directly, and they supply other dealers, and they operate their own tank trucks. They do not have any bulk storage; this, for the reason that they haul their Benzol blend directly from the Ford Motor Company and they haul their gasoline directly from the Sinclair Oil and Refining Company bulk plant. They buy on a basis, as far as Sinclair is concerned, of less than the tank wagon dealer price. I would say it was strictly a jobber operation.

Do you wish me to go on other exhibits now, Mr. Hanley?

Q. Yes, please. Are you now referring to a list of companies itemized on Exhibit 57-A and B, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, before you start on that list, you will recall that the descriptive word in the title "Cut-rate" was eliminated from that exhibit, and I will ask you what the fact is, based on your experience in Detroit, as to whether or not all of these companies of this exhibit, on this exhibit, do sell at cut-rate, in fact, in the sense that they continuously sell below the usual prevailing retail price in Detroit?

Mr. Austin: Does that refer to retailers?

3359 Mr. Hanley: In any of their retail operations.

Mr. Austin: Because the word at the top is "Jobbers and Distributors."

Mr. Hanley: But they are all in the retail business. I am asking about their retail operations.

The Witness: Shall I continue?

Mr. Hanley: Yes, please.

A. The firms or distributors mentioned on Respondent's Exhibits 57-A and B do sell at retail and less than the prevailing price practically at all times during the period from 1936 to 1940. I don't recall of a single instance when they did not sell less than the prevailing retail price. They are what is generally known as cut-price marketers.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, I notice on that first one "All American Aviation." They apparently were in business only in 1939.

A. That is right.

Q. What was the nature of their operation at that time?

A. Well, the method of their operation was that they were trying to go into the petroleum jobbing business, and they worked up a little business supplying other dealers, and consumer accounts, sold wherever they could on a cut-price basis.

Q. All right. Now, go right ahead beginning with Apex.

3360 A. The Apex Oil Company gallonage for 1940 amounted to a little over 2,000,000 gallons.

Their supplier was the Plymouth Oil Company and the Mid-West Refining Company, which is a Michigan refinery. The Plymouth Oil Company is a jobber or distributor for the Ohio Oil Company.

They operate a service station of their own and they do not supply other dealers. They operate no tank trucks.

They have no bulk plant. They simply operate a cut-price service station.

Q. With the exception that they do not supply their own storage and their own distribution facilities, are they comparable to Ned's operation?

A. Yes, they are comparable to Ned's operation.

Charles E. Austin, Incorporated: the gallonage for 1940 was 17,900,000 gallons.

The suppliers of gasoline to this company are the Mid West Refinery, Roosevelt Oil Company, Producers Gas Corporation, and many others during the period of time of 1936 to 1940.

He operates a chain of strictly cut-price stations in Detroit and this is the second chain of cut-price service stations that he has founded in Detroit, the first chain being founded prior to 1936, and is now known as Puritan Stations, Incorporated, or Sunny Service Oil Company.

3361 His present chain of stations markets the brand of gasoline known as Joy gasoline, his entire business.

3362 Q. As what?

A. Premium gasoline.

Q. Were you referring to the brand of Austin or the Sunny Service and Puritan?

A. I am referring to the brand of Charles E. Austin. The stations he operates at the present time handle the brand of gasoline known as the Joy gasoline.

Q. Now what brand does his first chain, which later became Sunny Service and Puritan stations, sell?

A. He sold at that time as under the Puritan stations, incorporated, or Sunny Service Oil Company, the brand known as Zip, Z-i-p.

Q. To keep that straight: Is that brand of gasoline still marketed under that name?

A. Yes, it is marketed under that name. In other words, as far as competition is concerned, instead of having one string of cut-price service stations, we now have two from that combination. He operates about 24 service stations and operates them directly and his operations have always been on a direct operation. He has a marine terminal and his entire business is founded upon a cut-price basis.

I think I testified yesterday as to his gallonage in 1938, when he first started his business, and in ten months it came up over fourteen million gallons. It is perhaps the most severe competition that we and other oil com-3363 panies have in the City of Detroit, as far as the retail market is concerned.

Now his operations are somewhat similar to Ned's, in this respect: That as far as the purchase of gasoline, that Charles E. Austin does, and marketing his gasoline entirely at retail, the only difference is he markets under his own brand and he is continually below the price of major brand gasolines.

I believe I testified yesterday that during the period of 1938 he was, for two or three months, as much as six cents below, as far as his retail price was concerned, compared to the retail price of third grade gasoline, the cheapest gasoline of other major oil companies.

Benz Oil Company: They secure their supplies from Aurora Gasoline Company.

Their gallonage in 1940 was 1,500,000.

They operate a number of service stations, directly, of their own. They supply other dealers. They operate their own tank trucks. They have no bulk storage, their supplies being all to them either by the supplying company or by transport truck.

They have always sold their gasoline at a cut-price basis. Their business is founded on that kind of a basis.

As far as their marketing is concerned, as far as their buying of gasoline is concerned, they are comparable 3364 to many other cut-price marketers in this area.

Buffalo Grey Auto Stations, Incorporated, sometimes known as Detroit Grey Auto Stations, Incorporated—they are both the same: Their gallonage for 1940 was 538,000.

They are being supplied at present from the Aurora Gasoline Company.

They operate retail stations, directly.

They do not supply other dealers.

They do not operate any tank trucks. They have no bulk plant.

Here is an operation that is again similar, as far as the buying of gasoline is concerned and retail marketing, similar to Ned's and other cut-price marketers that I have referred to in this testimony.

Bulldog Oil Company: Suppliers, Petroleum Service Company, Argo Oil Company, Victor Oil Company, Red Indian Oil Company, and Texas Oil Company. These are all major suppliers or they are companies handling major brand gasolines.

The gallonage of the Bulldog Oil Company for 1940 was about 740,000 gallons.

They operate stations of their own. They don't supply other dealers. They don't operate tank trucks.

They have bulk storage.

A. W. Collins: Their gallonage for 1940 was 661,000. They operate service stations, directly, of their own.

3365 They supply no other dealers.

They operate no tank trucks of their own.

They have bulk storage. Their suppliers are Globe Oil and Refining Company, Peerless Distributing Company, and Victor Oil Company. Victor Oil Company is a jobber for the Ohio Oil Company.

They have always operated a cut-price retail service station business. Their business is founded upon the cut-price basis, entirely.

Duro Oil Corporation: Their gallonage for 1940 was a little over eight million gallons.

Their suppliers are the Aurora Gasoline Company, Globe Oil and Refining Company and Trans-American Petroleum Corporation, Trans-American Petroleum Corporation being a broker out of Chicago.

They are principally a chain of cut-price service stations. They have always operated as a cut-price chain of service stations.

They operate, directly, their stations.

They supply no other dealers.

They do operate their own tank trucks to their stations.

They have no bulk storage.

They buy on a tank car basis as to price, or below that.

Filco Oil Company, sometimes known as Falcon Oil
3366 Company: Their gallonage for 1940 is 495,000 gallons.

Their suppliers are the Aurora Gasoline Company and the Trans-American Company.

They operate their own service station. They supply other dealers.

They operate their own tank trucks and they have bulk storage.

This is also a cut-price service station operation. It is built upon that basis.

Great American Oil and Refining Company: Their gallonage for 1940 was 209,000 gallons; a small operation.

Their supplier is the Aurora Gasoline Company and the Trans-American Company.

They operate a service station of their own.

They buy on a wholesale basis, tank car basis. They supply other dealers.

They operate their own tank trucks. They have bulk storage.

Great Lakes Oil Company: Their supplier is the Plymouth Oil Company, a jobber of the Ohio Oil Company, and Reliable Oil Company.

Their gallonage for 1940 was 144,000 gallons.

They operate no service stations of their own. They supply other dealers. They operate their own tank trucks. They have no bulk storage. It is strictly a jobber operation.

3367 Jefferson Company: Supplier, Petroleum Service, Plymouth Oil Company and Cities Service Oil Company.

The Petroleum Service and Plymouth Oil Company are jobbers for major oil companies.

Their gallonage for 1940 was 632,000 gallons.

They operate two service stations. They supply no other dealer. They operate no tank trucks. They have no bulk storage.

This is strictly a retail operation, buying gasoline on a tank car, a wholesale basis, and selling it cut-price; at cut-prices.

Meurer Brothers: Supplier, Argo Oil Corporation.

Their gallonage for 1940 was 369,900 gallons.

The reason there is no gallonage from 1936 up to 1940 is that at that time they were a dealer for Sinclair Oil and Refining Company.

They operate one service station of their own. They supply no other dealers.

They have no tank trucks, no bulk storage.

This is strictly a retail operation, purchasing at below the dealer tank wagon price from Argo Oil Corporation.

Miller Tank Car, Incorporated: Supplier is Argo Oil Corporation, which is a jobber for Ohio Oil Company, and Globe Oil and Refining Company.

Their gallonage for 1940 was 239,000.

3368 They operate a service station of their own; supply no other dealers. They have no bulk storage.

Strictly a retail price operation. Purchasing gasoline at tank car quantities at tank car prices.

Montgomery Ward: Their gallonage for 1940 was 1,088,000.

Their supplier is Argo Oil Corporation, handling Ohio Oil Company gasoline. They market their own brand; Ward's Ethyl and two other brands of their own.

They operate their own service stations at their stores. They supply no other dealers.

They do not operate any tank trucks. They have no bulk storage.

It is an operation that is very similar, as far as the purchase of gasoline is concerned, to the Ned's Auto Supply Company's operation.

O'Connor and O'Connor: Supplier, Leanord Refining Company, which is a Michigan refiner.

These people have two trucks and do their own hauling.

Their gallonage for 1940 was 47,000 gallons.

They operate a service station. They supply a few other dealers. They operate tank trucks of their own. They have no bulk plant.

Peerless Distributing Company: Suppliers, Producers Lakeside Natural Gas, Barrett Benzol Company.

Their gallonage for 1940 was 739,000 gallons.

3369 They have, during the period of time from 1936 to 1940, had a gallonage up as high as 2,600,000 gallons.

They are strictly a cut-price jobber, selling to anybody whom they can, at any price they can.

They own no service stations nor operate any service stations of their own. They supply other dealers.

They operate their own tank trucks and they have a bulk plant.

Premier Tank Car Stations: Their gallonage for 1940 was 441,000.

They operate service stations of their own. They supply no other dealers.

They operate no tank trucks. They have bulk storage.

This is strictly a chain service station operation. Always sell at cut-price.

Sunny Service Oil Company; Puritan Oil Stations, Incorporated. Their gallonage for 1940 was 12,495,000.

This is the company I previously testified was founded by Charles E. Austin; is now owned by Hickock Oil Corporation who handle or sell the Hi-Speed brands in this city and elsewhere.

This is a chain of cut-price service stations and they have always sold at a cut-price. Business is founded upon a cut-price basis. They have a marine terminal.

Previous to 1936 this is the company that imported 3370 gasoline from Roumania.

Their posted selling price has been all the way from 1¢ to 6¢ below the price posted by Standard Oil Company and other dealers on third brand gasoline.

~~It is real competition, in any man's language.~~

Red Seal Oil Company. This is a very small operation. They are principally engaged in the selling of kerosene and lube oils.

Reliable Oil Company: Their gallonage for 1940 was 1,285,000.

Their suppliers are the Plymouth Oil Company, the Argo Oil Corporation, the Aurora Gasoline Company, and various Michigan refineries.

They operate four stations of their own, directly. They supply other dealers.

They operate tank trucks and they have a bulk plant.

Their operations are on a strictly cut-price basis.

Royal Petroleum: Their gallonage for 1940 was 669,000.

Their suppliers are Argo Oil Corporation and Plymouth Oil Company, both jobbers of major brand gasolines. They operate two service stations.

They sell at cut-prices.

They supply other dealers. They operate their own tank trucks. They have no bulk storage.

Speedway Petroleum: Their gallonage for 1940 was a little over seven million gallons.

3371 Their suppliers are the Aurora and the Trans-American Company. They operate a chain of cut-price service stations, started in 1938. They always sell below the prevailing retail price of major brand dealers. Their business is founded upon a strictly cut-price basis. They have been very successful in that field.

Star Coal and Oil Products: Their gallonage for 1940 was a little over three million.

Their suppliers are the Plymouth Oil Company, Aurora Gasoline Company, and Trans-American Company.

I again call your attention to the fact that the Plymouth Oil Company is a jobber for Ohio Oil Corporation.

They operate service stations of their own, directly. They do not supply their dealers.

They do not operate tank trucks. They have no bulk plant.

They have always been known as a cut-price marketer and have always bought on a tank car basis, as far as price is concerned.

3372 Tank Car Stations, Incorporated: The gallonage for 1940 was 2,120,000.

The supplier is the Globe Oil and Refining Company.

They operate service stations of their own directly. They do not supply other dealers. They operate no tank trucks and have no bulk plant.

It is strictly a retail cut-price operation and has always been so.

Paul I. Taylor: In 1940 the gallonage was 642,000.

Their suppliers are Argo and Victor, who are jobbers for major brand gasolines.

They operate one service station of their own, and do supply some other dealers and operate—he operates his own tank truck and has no bulk storage.

It is strictly a cut-price operation.

Texas Gas and Oil: In 1940 their gallonage was 677,000.

They operate service stations of their own directly and their suppliers are the Victor Oil Company, who is a jobber for the Standard Oil Company, and also another jobber, another supplier of theirs is the Plymouth Oil Company, who is a jobber for the Ohio Oil Company.

They operate no tank truck and supply no other dealer. They have no storage tank and it is strictly a cut-price business.

3373 Wings Petroleum is a similar operation.

In 1940 their gallonage was 104,000 and their supplier is the Red Indian Oil Company and Aurora Gasoline Company. The Red Indian is a jobber for Standard Oil Company of Ohio, handling the Fleet-Wing brand. They operate service stations of their own directly, and they supply other dealers and operate their own tank trucks. They have no bulk plant.

It is strictly a retail price and a cut-price operation.

Zieve Oil Company: Their 1940 gallonage was 235,000 gallons.

Their supplier is the Petroleum Service and Gasoline, Oil, and Refining Company. The Petroleum Service is a jobber for Cities Service Oil Company.

They operate a station of their own directly, and supply other dealers and operate their own tank trucks. They have no bulk storage.

They are strictly a cut-price operation.

Q. Now, in some instances, Mr. Raupagh, you have indicated, in referring to the companies listed on both exhibits 55-A and B and 57-A and B that the operations of those companies were comparable to operations of one or more of the jobbers involved in this action. By way of summary, I will ask you if the operation of all of these companies listed on the exhibits just named are comparable to the operation of one or more of the jobbers listed 3374 in this action?

A. They are.

Q. Do all of the companies listed on these two exhibits, within your knowledge, and by that I mean from your experience, as well as any individual personal knowledge that you have, purchase gasoline substantially below the prevailing tank wagon prices?

A. Every one of them.

Q. As a matter of fact, do not many of them purchase below the prevailing tank car price?

A. They do.

Q. Now, again, by way of summary, some of them do own and maintain their own bulk storage and their own trucks?

A. Yes.

Q. Some of them do not?

A That is right.

Q. They all, however, get the benefit of these lower prices?

A. They do.

Q. Is the Standard Oil Company in competition with all of the companies listed on both of these exhibits?

A. Every one of them.

Q. Is the Standard Oil Company in competition with them now?

A. They are.

3375 Q. Has it been so since 1936 during the period when any of them were in business here in Detroit?

A. It has been so.

Q. Now, referring to Exhibit 55-B, there are five gallonage totals under the years appearing on that exhibit. Can you see them there?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you now refer to Exhibit 58, and tell us where the same totals appear on that exhibit.

A. They appear under column 6, the heading of the column is "Sales of Licensed Wholesale Jobbers and Distributors of Branded Gasoline Exclusively."

Q. Referring you to 57-B, there is a similar group of totals. Where do they appear on Exhibit 58?

Mr. Austin: May I have Exhibit 58, please?

(The exhibit was handed to Mr. Austin.)

The Witness: They appear under column 7.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What was the last question?

(The last question was read.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Before we leave Exhibits 55 and 57, Mr. Raupagh, there has been some evidence given by you concerning them to the effect that certain of these companies did not have bulk storage and did not have distribution systems of their own or may have had trucks, but did not have the storage. There has been some testimony concerning Commission agency arrangements also somewhere in the evidence, the term yard hauler has been used. Will you briefly explain for the Court what the nature of the operation is when a jobber buyer obtains gasoline without having a bulk storage plant of his own? 3376

A. The nature of the operation is—when the receiver of the gasoline has no storage of his own is two-fold, may be two-fold. One is that he employs a transport hauler and has the gasoline hauled to him directly from the supplier's storage to his own storage, or, he may use tank trucks of his own to haul the gasoline directly from the supplier's storage.

Q. Are the terms "yard haulers" and "commission agency arrangement" applied in the industry to those operations?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. Now, that arrangement would give such a supplier an advantage, other things being equal, over a supplier who maintained his own bulk storage, would it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And that advantage would be to the extent of the cost of maintaining bulk storage; is that right?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. Now, the Respondent, the Standard Oil Com-
3377 pany has never gone into that kind of an operation, has it, of these jobber dealers, has it?

A. They never have.

Q. Now, referring you, Mr. Raupagh, to Exhibit No. 58, I call your attention to column 6, which you have just said was transposed from Exhibit 55-A and B, and will ask you if the figures following the year 1936 mean that that class of distributors handling branded gasoline in the year 1936 sold 89,850,578 gallons?

A. It does.

Mr. Austin: Which exhibit are you referring to?

Mr. Hanley: Exhibit 58.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. And that for the year 1940, that same class of distributors sold 90,122,875 gallons?

A. That is right, sir.

Q. Now, referring you to column 7, which you have stated was transposed as to gallonage figures from Exhibits 57-A and B, I will ask you if, for the year 1936, the wholesale distributors handling non-brand gasoline or as now classified by you as cut-price jobbers, did not sell in that year 24,679,904 gallons?

A. They did sell that much.

Q. And referring in the same column for 1940, does the exhibit reflect and mean that in that year, that same class of distributors sold 64,716,210 gallons?

3378 A. That is right, sir.

Q. Now, there are certain figures below the gallonage figures on each of these columns, and I think you have said that that represents a percentage of the gallonage figure to the total consumption in the Detroit area?

A. It does.

Q. Referring you to the year 1936, for the so-called non-brand jobbers, I note the figure 6.8. Does that mean that in 1936 that class of jobbers enjoyed 6.8% of the total volume of business in Detroit?

A. It does.

Q. Referring you to the same figures in 1940, I note that the figure there is 13.9. Does that mean that that same class of jobbers in 1940 enjoyed 13.9% of the total gasoline business in Detroit?

A. Yes, sir; that is what it means.

Q. And does the difference between those percentages represent an increase in the business or represent a trend and increase in business for this class of non-brand jobbers from the year 1936 to 1940?

A. It represents a trend and a material increase in their business.

Q. Now, taking the columns 3, 4, and 5, which all refer to Standard Oil Company's sales, through either the tank wagon or jobber channel, does it appear from this 3379 exhibit that the business, generally speaking, as reflected in those three columns, has remained about the same from 1936 to 1940?

A. Yes.

Q. The specified percentage for any given year in any given channel appears on the exhibit, doesn't it, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes, it does.

Q. Now, referring you to Column No. 8—

Mr. Austin: I object to the statement that counsel is making that they are about the same when they are not; and the exhibit speaks for itself.

Mr. Hanley: It does, and I just asked the witness if the specific figures weren't there, and to explain the exhibit so if you are interested you can look at it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The answer will be considered in the light of the exhibit.

Mr. Hanley: Certainly. I just wanted to get this picture fairly before the Court. This is a picture of the gasoline business in this area, Judge.

Mr. Austin: Well, I would like to state, as long as the other statement has been made on the record, that the exhibit also shows a material increase of Standard Oil Company's jobber sales from 1936 to 1940, and that it is not correct to state that the volume percentage or the percentage of volume for that classification, as shown 3380 in column No. 5 of the exhibit was practically the same for both years.

Mr. Hanley: Well, I will develop that right away.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, referring first to column No. 5, Mr. Raupagh

A. Yes, sir.

Q. —is it true that the exhibit reflects for 1936 that the Standard Oil Company jobbers had 2.2% of the total business?

A. That is what it reflects.

Q. And for 1940, they had 3%; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Or an increase in four years, so far as percentages are concerned, or, rather five years, from 1936 to 1940, of 8/10 of 1%?

A. That is right.

Mr. Austin: I object to that, and move that the answer of the witness be stricken out unless it is clarified and made to appear that that doesn't refer to the percentage of increase.

Mr. Hanley: It refers to the percentage of total consumption which has certainly been explained. We have got another exhibit in here which I am going to develop in a minute.

3381 Mr. Austin: Why doesn't the exhibit speak for itself? This is done just for the purpose of misleading. He says that this column shows that the increase was 8/10 of 1% where, as a matter of fact, it was an increase in the jobber business of about 35%.

Mr. Hanley: Yes, Judge, in just a minute, if I am permitted to, I am going to show that there was an increase of one year of 71% of these very jobbers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is all shown by the exhibit.

Mr. Hanley: It is, but they made some explanation, I take it, so that anyone reading the record and looking at the exhibit will have some guide. I would like to explain why this witness—what he put on this paper. It is right here in a picture.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If the witness will confine his answer now strictly to the figures as portrayed by the exhibit, he may proceed.

Mr. Hanley: Did you get that on the record that these percentages refer to the total consumption, Mr. Reporter?

The Reporter: Yes.

Mr. Austin: I don't believe there was any ruling on the objection that I made. There is an objection pending.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner ruled
3382 that this line of examination might continue, conditioned only upon the answers being confined to the figures portrayed on the exhibit.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, the percentages, I think you have already stated, that appear on Exhibit 58, refer to percentages of the total consumption in the respective years?

A. That is right.

Q. I have been trying to get over column No. 8. Now, that includes all the jobbers, does it not, Mr. Raupagh?

A. It does.

Q. And the first percentage in 1936 was 33.7 and that means that all the jobbers, taken together, of all classes, including Standard Oil Company jobbers had 33.7% of the total consumption that year?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the figure 36.5 in the column for 1940 mean that the jobbers had, in that year, 36.5% of the total consumption in that year; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. And the same thing is true in column No. 9 with reference to other companies; is that right?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, I wish you would take 3383 this exhibit and tell the Court, by reference to column number and the figure, where on there, where or in what class of dealers it shows that there has been the greatest percentage of increase, percentage being calculated on the yearly consumption.

A. The greatest increase—

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I object to that. The exhibit speaks for itself, and it goes beyond what the ruling permitted him to explain. I understood this was to be limited to an explanation of the figures on the exhibit.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The witness may answer the question.

The Witness: The greatest increase is on column 7, sales of licensed wholesale jobbers and distributors of non-brand gasoline. They had in 1936 a percentage of 6.8% of the total consumption in the area, and in 1940 a percentage of 13.9% of the total gasoline consumption in the area.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Can you determine from this exhibit the total amount in gallons of gasoline sold, as well as the percentage of the total consumption that is done through the medium of jobbers in any of the years involved?

A. Yes.

3384 Q. Explain how that can be done.

A. It can be done by taking the figures of column 5, sales of Standard Oil Company jobbers, by taking the figures of column 6, sales of licensed wholesale jobber distributors of branded gasolines, and taking the figures of column 7, sales of licensed wholesale jobbers, and distributors of non-brand gasoline.

Q. And that total is reflected in column No. 8; is that right?

A. That is right, sir.

Q. Now, will you please look at Exhibit 59, Mr. Raupagh? Is it not a fact that this exhibit—

A. Pardon me. What is Exhibit 59?

Q. That is the one of yearly increases or decreases in gasoline sales.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, is it not a fact that this exhibit discloses just what Mr. Austin seemed to have in mind a moment ago; namely, the increase or decrease by gallons and by percentage in relation to the business, or item that appears in the first column on the left?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, for instance, the item of Standard Oil Company jobbers, being the fourth item, and under the year 1937, I note a percentage figure of 71.4. Do you find that figure?

3385 A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does that represent?

A. It represents the increase in sales by S. O. Company jobbers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: When you say "S. O." you mean Standard Oil Company?

The Witness: Yes, Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, is the same principle applied throughout this exhibit in respect of all of these different classifications?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I call you attention to the non-brand jobber item under the year 1938 and the figure 61. Do you find it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The column in which most of the figures are red.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that indicate that that class of jobbers in that year increased their own business 61%?

A. Yes, that's what it indicates.

Q. And that was the year of the price war, was it not, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, during that same year, is it not true that the exhibit discloses that the Standard Oil jobbers 3386 increased their business 7.7%?

A. That's what it discloses.

Q. Now, in that year were there added to the outlets of any of the Standard Oil jobbers?

A. Yes, there were considerable outlets added.

Q. Particularly what jobbers expanded a number of their outlets?

A. Citrin-Kolb, Wayne Oil Company, and I don't remember as to Ned's, but they might have added one or two.

Q. Have you made some investigation to determine whether or not in that year the business per outlet of the Standard Oil jobbers did or did not increase?

A. The business per outlet did not increase.

Q. So that increase would be attributable to the addition of outlets, is that true?

A. That is true.

Q. The year following, 1939, shows a red figure "9.5." Does that mean that the business of the Standard Oil jobbers decreased to that extent in that year?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Referring you to the non-brand jobbers, does the exhibit disclose that there has been a steady increase every year in their business since 1936?

A. That's what it discloses.

3387 Q. I neglected to ask you one question in respect of the gasoline sold by the distributors disclosed on Exhibits 55-A, 55-B, 57-A, and 57-B, Mr. Raupagh. Does that gasoline, so far as Detroit is concerned, does it have a wide and popular public acceptance?

Mr. Austin: Which gasolines are you referring to?

Mr. Hanley: All of them. All the gasolines that these distributors on the two exhibits named distribute.

Mr. Austin: I object to this, your Honor. If it is to be asked, I ask it be asked as to each brand separately.

Mr. Hanley: He has outlined each brand separately.

Mr. Austin: It is obvious you cannot make any answer as to public acceptance. The Government's proof of brands and public acceptance must necessarily differ as to a different brand.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The figures are already in evidence; the volume of sale and the percentage of increase or decrease annually.

Mr. Austin: Then this question is objectionable as to whether they have a wide and high public acceptance. Public acceptance would necessarily depend upon price, in any event. At least price would influence gallonage, and it is only the gallonage that has been shown. I was just referring to what your Honor said.

3388 Mr. Hanley: I think the real basis of this objection is that we are over-proving our case, and counsel just doesn't like it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection sustained.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Raupagh, if the gasolines sold by the distributors referred to on Exhibits 55-A and 55-B, and 57-A and 57-B, are represented by the distributors of those gasolines, as comparable in quality and performance with the gasolines sold by the so-called major companies, and particularly the Standard Oil Company?

A. Yes, they are.

Mr. Hanley: There is one of these maps you asked for, Judge. It is your private map, I think.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

3389 Mr. Hanley: May we have this map marked for identification?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Reporter will mark the document handed him by counsel for the Respondent as Respondent's Exhibit 61 for identification.

(The document referred to was marked "Respondent's Exhibit 61" for identification.)

Mr. Hanley: I had better lay some foundation.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, did you cause that map to be prepared, so far as the colored dots and legend are concerned?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Does it accurately reflect the location of the stations as indicated by the legend?

A. Yes, it does.

Mr. Hanley: We offer it (handing document referred to counsel for the Commission).

I am informed that this is the type of map your Honor wanted.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is; apparently. Is there any objection?

Mr. Austin: No objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: There being no objection, Respondent's Exhibit 61 for identification is admitted in evidence.

3390 (The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 61", was received in evidence.)

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Mr. Raupagh, is this a recent map?

A. Yes.

Q. The title of the map has been covered up. I think I can read through here. It says "Map of Detroit and Environs." I just wondered where you obtained it, or how recent a map it is.

A. I can't tell you just the date of printing of that map, Mr. Austin, but it is a map we continually use in our offices for all of our purposes.

Q. I think it is all right, for this purpose, but I wanted to ask you. As long as it is fairly recent, all right.

A. It is fairly recent.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And the map referred to is Respondent's Exhibit 61.

Mr. Hanley: May we have this map marked for identification?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Reporter will mark the document handed him by counsel for the Respondent as Respondent's Exhibit 62 for identification.

(The document referred to was marked "Respond-
3391 ent's Exhibit 62" for identification.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Were the colored dots and legend placed upon this map in your office and at your direction, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do the dots and stars correctly represent on the map the location of the addresses of service stations that are explained in the legend?

A. Yes.

Mr. Hanley: We offer Respondent's Exhibit 62 for identification (handing document referred to to counsel for the Commission).

Mr. Austin: Well, what is the difference between 61 and 62?

Mr. Hanley: 62 apparently has to do with the testimony that was offered with particular reference to certain of Ned's service stations and certain directly operated service stations of Citrin-Kolb.

Mr. Austin: What is the difference between them? It looks to me like they are just the same.

Mr. Hanley: I don't think there is any difference unless there might be some stations on one that aren't on another. I don't know whether there are, or not.

Mr. Austin: Who does know?

Mr. Hanley: There are many stations—

3392 The Witness: May I explain it?

Mr. Hanley: Surely. Go ahead.

The Witness: Exhibit No. 62 is a map covering the stations of Ned's, all of them, and of the six Citrin-Kolb which have been involved or have been mentioned in this hearing, and the stations—all of the stations of Joy, Zip and Speedway gasoline—I am mentioning the brands of the gasoline.

Exhibit 61 takes all of the stations of Ned's and all of the stations supplied by Citrin-Kolb and all of the stations of Joy, Zip, and Speedway. In one case we just used the six stations of Citrin-Kolb and the six stations of Ned's involved in this hearing and in the other case we took them all.

Mr. Austin: Is the only difference, Mr. Raupagh, in the number of Citrin-Kolb stations shown? Is that the only difference between the two maps?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: Well, I see no particular basis for the second map because—I don't know what particular six stations are being referred to of the Citrin-Kolb. I would say that more than that have been referred to and I would object to the map unless—

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, I will withdraw—

Mr. Austin: Just a minute, please. I was speak-3393 ing to the Reporter. I would like to finish my statement.

Mr. Hanley: I would like to withdraw my offer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Counsel for the Commission may complete his statement.

Mr. Hanley: I am going to withdraw the offers of both of them.

Mr. Austin: Continuing what I was about to say: I think that if this second map is to be offered, there should be some explanation as to why these particular six stations of Citrin-Kolb were included and I do not understand that there were only six stations of Citrin-Kolb Oil Company referred to in this case, nor do I understand which six are referred to here.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That may be easily explained.

Mr. Hanley: Certainly. I withdraw the offers of both of them.

I now reoffer Exhibit 61, because the Court requested us to prepare it and we did so, at the Court's request and it has been established by the witness that it correctly reflects what it purports to reflect.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That has already been admitted in evidence.

Mr. Hanley: I withdraw it, in view of the statements of counsel and I am reoffering it and have stated the reason.

3394 Trial Examiner Ballinger: It is re-admitted in evidence as Respondent's Exhibit 61.

Mr. Hanley: I now offer Exhibit 62 for the reason that it alludes particularly to certain locations of Ned's service stations and Citrin-Kolb stations which were testified to by witnesses called on behalf of the Government as being stations at which certain reduced prices were, from time to time, in effect.

For the further reason that that testimony has been answered by witnesses called on behalf of the Respondent, being a showing that they were surrounded by certain service stations which were at the time indulging in reducing prices below the then prevailing retail price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any objection, in view of the explanation offered by counsel?

Mr. Austin: Yes, your Honor. As I tried to state a moment ago, I think there were more than six stations referred to and I don't see why that should be admitted with simply those particular six stations picked out. There have been references to, I should say, at least a dozen Citrin-Kolb stations in the Commission's case, and evidence regarding certain price-cutting. I don't say there is anything wrong with the map, of course, but I see no purpose in it. The only difference in that map and the other map is in the number of Citrin-Kolb stations shown and I don't want to admit it with the statement it 3395 shows the only Citrin-Kolb stations as to which there has been reference in connection with the issues in this case.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The map would be considered in the light of the testimony appearing in the record.

The objection is overruled and Respondent's Exhibit 62 for identification is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked for identification "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 62," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Hanley: It has been suggested, your Honor, that if it is agreeable to the Court, that we might adjourn at this time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Abbott: I move we adjourn, now, to reconvene at 1:45.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion is granted.

Now, at 12:35 p. m., the hearing stands in recess until 1:45 p. m.

(Whereupon, at 12:35 p. m., a recess was taken until 1:45 p. m.)

3396 Afternoon Session.

1:45 p. m.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

Mr. Hanley: If your Honor please, during the morning session, when your Honor requested that a list of companies be referred to in this proceeding be made that would also show the brand name of the gasoline that they dispensed in Detroit, our people have prepared such an exhibit which I would like to have marked.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the exhibit as Respondent's Exhibit 63, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 63.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I show you, Mr. Raupagh, what has been marked Respondent's Exhibit 63, and ask you if that was prepared in your office under your supervision?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. What is it?

A. It is a statement showing the various oil companies and the brands that they market, premium, house brand, and the third grade. It shows the name of the brand.

Q. That is in the Detroit area under discussion?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hanley: We offer it in evidence.

3397 Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. Are these just refiners on here?

A. Just let me look at it again, please.

(The document was handed to the witness.)

A. No, there are others than refiners on there. For instance, starting with Charles E. Austin, Puritan Stations, Speedway, they are not refiners. Globe is a refiner.

Mr. Austin: I just happened to notice one thing here. For instance, on Fleet-Wing, you refer to Standard Oil Company of Ohio, but there is no reference to the distributors of Fleet-Wing in Michigan. As I understand it, the Standard Oil Company of Ohio doesn't do business in Michigan. I was wondering from the testimony we have had, Judge, there is such a thing as the Red Indian Oil Company that sells Fleet-Wing.

The Witness: Yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: And perhaps what the Examiner had in mind may have been to tie up the companies mentioned here with the brands which they sell, and that just occurs to me as one that where this list wouldn't apply. That is just a suggestion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That is what the Examiner had in mind.

3398 Mr. Austin: There may be other instances of that. I just happened to think of that one.

Mr. Hanley: We might do this, if it is what is desired: take the list of companies that appear on these exhibits 55-A, 55-B, 57-A, and 57-B, and just list them with the brand name that they sell.

Mr. Austin: Let us put this one in, anyway. I have no objection, if you want to add it.

Mr. Hanley: Many of those jobbers, of course, market under the brand name of the refinery. For instance, the Ohio Oil Company, as such, doesn't do business in Michigan. That company was pointed out by Mr. Austin, but the word Fleet-Wing belongs to them—or Standard Oil of Ohio, I should say—and their jobbers here use the word which is a trade name for the gasoline. That's all.

Mr. Austin: Hasn't Mr. Raupagh been stating in his testimony, or didn't he, rather, this morning state in his testimony the brand name used by each of those companies referred to?

Mr. Raupagh: I didn't mention every company, Mr. Austin. I mentioned that, in a few of them, but I didn't give it for every company.

Mr. Austin: I have no objection to this; except just to bring out the fact it doesn't show the brand name sold by all the alleged competitors that have been mentioned.

3399 Mr. Hanley: We can check it, and make additions to it.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner would suggest you withhold the introduction of this in evidence until it is completed.

Mr. Hanley: That is entirely agreeable, and we will check it against the other list and add to it, if there be a need for it.

Now, it has come to my attention, your Honor, that Mr. Warmack, on behalf of the Commission, has asked for some additional information which has been prepared for him, and I now tender to Mr. Austin a list of schedules which have to do with an analysis of cost distribution for the month of March, 1941; the distribution of certain salary and other costs, as between different products and sales' channels (handing document to counsel for the Commission).

Mr. Austin: Thank you again. I assume that this is what Mr. Warmack asked for.

May I say we appreciate the speed with which this apparently has been supplied, because Mr. Warmack is hoping to get started back to Washington, and I know he appreciates having it this noon.

Mr. Hanley: I understood he wanted to get back.

By Mr. Hanley:

3400 Q. Mr. Raupagh, just before the noon recess I was inquiring from you about the methods or claims made by the purveyors of gasoline who are named on Exhibits 55 and 57, and you stated that their gasolines were represented in this market as being comparable to what are commonly called major gasolines, and, particularly, the Standard Oil Company gasoline. How do they do that? What mediums are used by these various companies presenting claims?

A. The mediums that are used are signs at service stations telling of the quality, superior quality of their gasolines. They use large billboards. They use newspaper advertising. They use radio advertising. They use pamphlets, newspapers, booklets, and so on, that they issue.

Q. Are you acquainted with an institution or organization in Detroit known as the Detroit Testing Laboratory?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with the reputation of that institution as to whether it is regarded as a reliable laboratory?

A. It is so regarded.

Q. Was there a time, Mr. Raupagh, in the year 1940 when you received copies of a newspaper published by the Charles E. Austin Gasoline Company?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with Charles E. Austin yourself?

3401 A. Yes, I know him personally.

Q. Where did you get these newspapers, these papers?

A. One of the magazines was delivered at my home and the others were delivered at my office by various employees of Standard Oil Company of Indiana.

Q. What do you know as to the fact of whether or not these papers were given a general circulation throughout the City of Detroit?

A. I know that they were given a wide circulation throughout Detroit.

Q. Do you know how many different issues there were made during that year?

A. I don't know just how many issues were made, but I know there were at least four issues.

Q. Four issues that came to your particular attention?

A. These four different issues.

Q. Yes, sir. Now, what is the fact as to whether or not you saw many copies of the same issue?

A. The facts are that the industry, generally,—that it is known in the industry, generally, that each one of these issues represented between 100,000 and 200,000 copies.

Mr. Hanley: We ask to have marked, for identification, —there are four different papers, your Honor, and I don't know that they all comprise the same number of sheets.

3402 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Hanley: If you will mark the whole paper, please, Mr. Reporter.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Hanley: No, I don't know, Judge. There may be various places throughout the whole paper that I would like to call attention to. I thought we could mark the whole paper with one exhibit number and break it down.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

The reporter will mark the documents as Respondent's Exhibits 64-A to and including 64-H, 65-A to and including 65-H, 66-A to and including 66-H, and 67-A to and including 67-H, for identification.

(The documents referred to were marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibits 64-A to H, inclusive, 65-A to H, inclusive, 66-A to H, inclusive, and 67-A to H, inclusive.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I hand you now, Mr. Raupagh, what have been 3403 marked, for identification, Respondent's Exhibits 64-A through H, inclusive; 65-A through H, inclusive; 66-A through H, inclusive, and 67-A through H, inclusive, and will ask you if those are copies of the newspaper published by the Austin Oil Company to which you referred a few moments ago.

A. They are.

Q. I hand you now Exhibit 64 and show you pages 64-D and 64-E, and call your attention to a number of places appearing on the page and quoting the Detroit Testing Laboratory, and then a reproduction of a signature and will ask you if you understand that to be the Detroit Testing Laboratory to which you have just referred in your testimony?

A. I so understand it.

Q. You have made reference to certain claims of comparability or superiority on the part of the Joy people relative to other brands of gasoline, and I show you what is marked Exhibit 64-H, being the last page in this issue, which appears to carry an advertisement, and will ask you if that is the class of claim to which you have made reference.

A. It is.

Q. Is that a picture of Mr. Austin on the front page?

A. Yes, sir. I should say Charles E. Austin.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: By the "front page," do you mean 64-A?

3404 The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. The exhibit which you hold, 64-A, appears to have been published in March, 1940. Does that accord with your recollection when one of these issues came out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Exhibit 65 bears the date line of May, 1940. Is that also a date that accords with your recollection when one of these issues came out?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Exhibit 66 bears the date line August, 1940. Does that accord with your recollection as another date when an issue was made of this paper?

A. It does.

Q. This same exhibit also bears the legend "Circulation: 383,000 copies." Does that accord with your recollection as to what it was understood commonly in the industry was about the amount of circulation given to this paper?

A. Well, I had understood it was between a hundred and two hundred thousand. Now, it may have changed at various times.

Q. As far as you know, it had, at least up to that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Exhibit 67-A bears the date line of November, 1940, and again is that one of the dates that concurs with 3405 your recollection as to when an issue was made?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. This exhibit also bears the legend "Circulation: 400,000 copies." Have you any particular knowledge about this particular exhibit, other than what you have testified to?

A. Nothing except what I have testified to.

Mr. Hanley: Now, I would like to offer at this time all of these exhibits. It is possible, your Honor, that there may be some material in them that will not be regarded as material in this case. There is a great deal of material in them that, aside from the matters to which I have alluded, the claim of comparability on the part of the Joy Company which are material on the general competitive issues, each of the papers—I think I am right about that—yes, each of the papers carries a double-page spread reproducing reports or claiming reports of the Detroit Testing Laboratory in which Joy gasoline is compared with a number of named branded gasolines. I will hand you, Mr. Austin, a couple of those, and your Honor might examine also a couple of them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner suggests that the portion upon which Respondent places reliance should be designated to avoid any possible claim of surprise.

3406 Mr. Hanley: What I would like to—I will be glad to do that, your Honor, but I would like to offer the whole exhibit, although I wouldn't insist on that, that is, as to certain textual matter that may appear in the paper. We do want the date lines, the volume number, and the claimed circulation that had been made.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: That, you plainly indicated.

Mr. Hanley: And these advertisements, I would like to have considered. There is a lot of it, and all of these papers are given over to vituperation of the Oil Trust and violent and excoriating language on the part of Mr. Austin in connection with what villians everybody but himself is, and it goes to the general issue that he is competition and he thinks companies like the Respondent are his competition, and I would like to have that just generally in the record, but I can't designate any particular part of this tirade that he goes into that I would care to incumber the record with.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Well, all portions pertaining to the matters to which you have made reference may be considered.

Mr. Hanley: Very well. I will call particular attention to the double-page spread which would be Respondent's Exhibit 64-D and E, and 64-H, which latter is an 3407 advertisement testified to or about by the witness.

In respect to Exhibit 65, we shall call particular attention to 65-D and E, double-page spread disclosing the comparison and the advertisements that appear on 65-G and H. And, with respect to 66, I again call attention to the double-page spread setting forth comparisons of Joy gasoline with other gasolines and the advertisements of the Joy company and the same, with regard to Exhibit No. 67, we shall expect to call attention to the volume and the issues numbers, some of them have an issue number on them, the dates, and the claimed circulation, and, possibly, other matter which may appear in the papers and which might be regarded as material by the Commission.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

Mr. Hanley: The Respondent now offers in evidence the Exhibits 64-A to H, inclusive; 65-A to H, inclusive; 66-A to H, inclusive, and 67-A to H, inclusive.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any objection?

Mr. Austin: May I ask whether these are being offered as any evidence of the quality or content of Joy gasoline or as any evidence of the results of any tests which may have been made by the Detroit Testing Laboratory?

Mr. Hanley: No, they are not being offered for 3408 that purpose, your Honor. They are being offered simply on that score to establish the claims and representations of the purveyor of Joy gasoline. As a matter of fact, I don't think we have got anybody right here to tell what the difference of gasolines may be. That is a chemical question.

Mr. Austin: With that qualification, I have no objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibits 64-A to H, inclusive, for identification; 65-A to H, inclusive, for identification; 66-A to H, inclusive, for identification, and 67-A to H, inclusive, for identification, are admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBITS 64-A to H, inclusive, 65-A to H, inclusive; 66-A to H, inclusive; 67-A to H, inclusive," were received in evidence.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, I hand you Respondent's Exhibit No. 45, which is a letter from Mr. Gershenson under date of August 27, 1936, and will ask you if you received that letter, and, if so, when, as nearly as you can state?

A. I received that letter in my office either on August 27, 1936, or shortly thereafter.

Q. And upon its receipt, what did you do with the letter?

3409 A. Shortly after its receipt, I forwarded this letter to our Chicago office, addressing my letter to Mr. Amos Ball.

Q. And he was then what?

A. General manager of sales.

Q. I wish you would please tell the Court in detail, Mr. Raupagh, what the circumstances were leading up to your receipt of that letter; what negotiations did you have with Ned's Auto Supply Company?

A. Previous to the receipt of this letter I had negotiations with Charles Gershenson; also with William Gershenson; their advising me that they had received an offer from a competitive company, and they at that time mentioned the Red Indian Oil Company, whereby the Red Indian Oil Company would deliver gasoline to their service stations at a cent and a half below the prevailing dealer tank wagon price.

We had considerable discussion about it back and forth, and they put considerable pressure to bear, that their gallonage had now attained such a volume that they no longer should be obligated to purchase on a tank wagon basis.

They also called my attention to the fact that some years previous to this that they were able to buy through the Firestone Company, Texas gasoline.

3410 At that time Firestone had a contract with the Texas Company and, I believe, also in 1936 they had a contract. I know they did. It got so delicate, as to our holding their business or not, that they suggested going to Chicago—or they asked me if I would be offended if they would talk to our officials in Chicago, and I told them to go ahead. That I would make the arrangements for them, even, and they did talk to our officials in Chicago.

Q. Did they make a trip on this subject to the Chicago office?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. Did you accompany them at the time?

A. No, I didn't accompany them at the time.

Q. Were they there a matter of several days, to your knowledge?

A. Yes.

Q. Was there any part of that time when you were in Chicago?

A. Yes, there was.

Q. And did you personally participate in discussions after your arrival in Chicago?

A. I did.

Q. I mean by that discussions of this subject that you are talking about?

A. Yes, sir.

3411 Q. What were you and the other officials—first, name the officials in Chicago who also participated in the discussions, while you were there.

A. Mr. H. A. Lewis, particularly.

Q. Who was he at that time?

A. Mr. H. A. Lewis was the assistant general manager at large, on sales.

Q. Were there others that you know of?

A. I personally talked about it with Mr. Ball and I don't believe he was in on the discussion with Mr. Gershenson.

Q. That is to say that you advised Mr. Ball what you knew about the situation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, tell us just what they said. I mean what Mr.

Gershenson said to you and what Mr. Lewis said to you in those Chicago conferences.

A. Well, they advised us that unless we gave them a better price than the regular dealer tank wagon price, that they would discontinue doing business with us, that they could not longer afford to pay the prices that they were paying to us, on account of the competitive offers that they had and have had. As a matter of fact, they pressed us very strongly to place them on a tank car basis, but we compromised on the proposition later on.

3412 Q. Now, did you understand from those conferences—let me ask you this first, did these conferences cover a period of hours on different days, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. Now, as a result of those conferences, what conclusion did you come to in your own mind as to whether or not you would lose that customer unless you made some price reduction?.

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor, and any answer to it would be a self-serving statement, and it is further immaterial what conclusion the witness reached in his own mind at that time.

Mr. Hanley: I would like to say this, your Honor, on that objection. I perceived, I think, through the course of the trial, that Mr. Austin, on behalf of the Commission, is going to take a very different attitude as to what the law is about meeting competition than that which is going to be taken by the Respondent. I rather gather from the tenor of this objection and certain expressions that he conceives it to be obligatory on the Respondent in order to justify, under that phase of the statute, that the Respondent has the burden of proving absolutely that some competitor actually made an offer and what it was, and that unless the Respondent can discharge that, as we think, impossible burden, the right of justification is with-3413 drawn from the Respondent. As we understand the statute, it simply means that if there be a bona fide law, if it appears bona fide, that there is an opportunity on the part of one of our customers to purchase elsewhere, we know about that, we are warned about it, and we know that the competitive situation is such that that offer not only is possible but probable, and all the way through we act in the utmost good faith, that beyond that, we don't have to go, that we are entitled to live in the market place and to protect our business.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Judge, wouldn't the actions of the parties be the best indication as to what—

Mr. Hanley: I think that is true, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: —the parties really thought?

Mr. Hanley: But the actions of the parties might lead your Honor to one conclusion and me to another conclusion, and, after all, it seems to me, on the question of good faith as to what the Respondent thought, that becomes highly material-what these marketers thought who were then representing the Respondent. That is to say, if somebody came to them and said, "We have got a better offer than you are giving us," and they just did not believe that, I don't think that would be fair justification. But if they believe firmly and honestly that they have got to 3414 meet that competition, it seems to me that becomes material. In other words, there is a question of good faith there as to whether or not we are using this phase of the statute on justification as a sword or as a shield, as we used to refer to the old defense rule, and our good faith, it seems to me, is important. In this particular instance, I think the surrounding facts clearly demonstrate that nobody could come to any conclusion other than that we were going to lose the business. We were told that in plain words, but I do think we ought to show that our people believed it. I believe that is material on all of these.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled and the witness may answer.

The Witness: What was that question, please?

Mr. Hanley: Read the question back, please, Mr. Reporter.

(The last question was read.)

A. I came to the conclusion that we would lose that customer unless we made some price reduction.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Were you specifically told that by the Gershensons, or by either one of them?

A. Yes, specifically.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

3415 (A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Did there come a time when you discussed with the Gershensons the willingness of the Standard Oil Company to give them a ½¢ reduction off the tank wagon price?

A. Yes.

Q. And were there extensive discussions in respect of that particular matter?

A. Yes, there were.

Q. What was said by the Gershensons as to their willingness to accept that, or their satisfaction or dissatisfaction with that kind of a price?

A. They said they were not satisfied with that kind of a price, but that they would accept it for the time being; and did so.

Q. After you got into that phase of it, talking about the half cent, did your discussions continue for long periods of time?

A. Yes, they did.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What do you mean by "long periods of time".

The Witness: Well, I mean that for a period of over a year or more, after that; whenever they came to my office or whenever we had lunch, which we very frequently 3416 did, they always brought up that subject.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, confining your testimony to just this particular negotiation, the end of August or the first part of September, 1936, when you and the Gershensons and some of the Chicago people were together talking about this. As I understand, you finally reached a point where you suggested you would give them a half cent off the tank wagon price?

A. That's right, sir.

Q. You had further discussion of that subject after that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long, in terms of minutes or hours or days did you have discussion on that subject before an agreement was reached?

A. Oh, I should say that was about four or five days.

Q. And then I think you have already said they said they would take it, for the time being.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, did there come a time shortly thereafter when you began to give them a price of ½c off the dealer tank wagon price?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has that continued—or did that continue up until some time in the end of February or early March, 1938?

A. It did.

3417 Q. I think you testified that they then went back on the regular tank wagon basis for a few days and then went on a tank car basis.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, since that tank wagon reduction of ½¢ basis was abandoned, in early 1938, was it ever resumed with Ned's Auto Supply Company?

A. I don't exactly understand the question.

Q. I mean has Ned's ever been on that basis of ½¢ off the tank wagon price since 1938, when you just said it was abandoned?

A. No; never have.

Trial Examiner Battinger: When was the ½¢ reduction allowed?

The Witness: From September 1, 1936, to March 1, 1938.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. You have told the Court in answer to one of his questions that from time to time after you reached the agreement of September 1, 1936, on the half cent reduction, that you were requested to go to a lower price, or a different basis. I wish you would amplify that a little more, and tell us as much as you can about what took place between you and Ned's Auto Supply Company in relation to the price basis that they desire?

3418 A. Whenever we would meet, the proposition would come up—that is, they would bring it up—that they were dissatisfied with the ½¢ per gallon off the tank wagon price that they were securing. That due to competitive offers which they had and that they knew they could go out in the market and buy comparable gasoline or gasoline satisfactory to them at a much lower price than the ½¢ per gallon off the tank wagon price. There were quite a number of discussions in between that time of September 1, 1936, and up to March 1, 1938.

Q. Can you give any estimate at all about it that you feel might be anywhere near the fact as to how many times you talked that over with one or more of the Gershenson family?

A. Well, it would be at least 12 times.

Mr. Hanley: I think I haven't offered that letter. I will do that now. I believe it has just been marked for identification, your Honor.

I offer in evidence Respondent's Exhibit 45. You are familiar with it, aren't you, Mr. Austin (handing document to counsel for the Commission)?

Mr. Austin: I don't know.

(Counsel for the Commission examined document.)

Mr. Austin: No objection.

3419 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Respondent's Exhibit 45, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 45," was received in evidence.)

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Did there come a time, Mr. Raupagh, some time in early 1938 when you received a letter from Ned's Auto Supply Company dealing with this same subject of their demand that they be put on a tank car price basis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I show you Respondent's Exhibit 46 and will ask you if you received that letter, and if that is the letter or a copy thereof to which you have just referred?

A. That is a copy of the letter which I received.

Q. Have you made a search in the records of your office here in Detroit to find the original of that letter; the signed original, I mean.

A. Yes, I have made such a search.

Q. Have you been able to find it?

A. No, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, what happened, so far as negotiations between Ned's and the Standard Oil Company were concerned, in the early part of 1938 and surrounding this letter, in connection with their going on a tank car basis?

3420 A. Ned's Auto Supply Company, meaning William Gershenson and Charles Gershenson, both negotiated with me, talked to me a number of times, came to my office; to the effect that they did issue a challenge to me that they would either be placed on a tank car basis or they would have to accept some of the competitive offers which had been made to them.

They again referred to a competitive offer of the Red Indian Oil Company whereby they were able to purchase gasoline at 1½¢ below the dealer tank wagon price, said gasoline to be delivered by the supplier into their storage tanks at their service station or if they would haul the gasoline themselves from the supplier, they were to receive 1.7¢ per gallon.

They also told me at that time of the offer they had had in 1936, prior to our placing them on the ½¢ per gallon less the tank wagon price basis, that offer being from the Shell Company, whereby they could purchase gasoline on a tank car basis at about 2¢ per gallon less than the regular dealer tank wagon price.

They definitely threatened to quit purchasing from the Standard Oil Company unless we placed them on a tank car basis at a tank car price.

Q. Now I am going to ask you, in a few minutes, Mr. Raupagh, to tell us as many of the offers that were referred to you, as you can remember, but just now
3421 I would like to know what specific things happened between you and the Gershensons, or any of them, which resulted in your putting them on the tank car basis on or about March 1, 1938.

A. Well, definitely, in view of the conversations that I had with the Gershensons, I definitely made up my mind that if we wanted to retain the business of the Ned's Auto Supply Company, it would be necessary for us to sell them in tank car quantities at tank car prices. They, of course, would have to equip themselves with a bulk plant, and so on and so forth.

Q. Did you tell them that?

A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Do you now have in mind what volume they had at that particular time?

A. I haven't the exact volume in mind. I have the record here somewhere.

Q. It is in evidence. I just thought you might remember, several million gallons.

A. It is between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 in 1938, as I recall it.

Q. Had you concluded before putting Ned's Auto Supply Company on the tank car basis that if you did not do so, that you would lose that customer?

A. Definitely so. They, themselves, told me that they could get not only a better price from the Red Indian 3422 Oil Company, but also from other companies at tank car prices, and, knowing the market as I know it, I was convinced that they could, also.

Mr. Hanley: At this time we offer in evidence Respondent's Exhibit 46, for identification.

Mr. Austin: Does that—this is the letter regarding which you testified?

Mr. Hanley: One of them.

Mr. Austin: No objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without objection. Respondent's Exhibit 46, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 46," was received in evidence.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may proceed.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh, I wish you would go ahead and tell the Court of as many instances as you can where some specific offer was referred to you by the Gershensons, or reported to you, as having been made to them to supply them with gasoline by some concern that was competitive to the Standard Oil Company.

A. The first specific offer of such nature that I remember was in 1933 when, through the Firestone Tire &
3423 Rubber Company, Mr. Gershenson—

Mr. Austin: Pardon me, Mr. Raupagh.

If your Honor please, perhaps I ought to say something on the record, just to make it clear that I assume that this testimony is not offered as proof of any offers received by Mr. Gershenson, but only as to the fact of what Mr. Gershenson told Mr. Raupagh. I believe that is correct, isn't it?

Mr. Hanley: Well, yes, I think the probability of the whole record as to whether it is the truth or not is as to whether the offer was actually made. All I have asked of Mr. Raupagh is what offers were reported to him by the Gershensons.

Mr. Austin: That, of course, is not hearsay, and I concede that it is relevant, but I just want to make it clear that I would object to it if it was offered that that was proof of any offers made to Mr. Gershenson.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: It could not be so considered.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Which of the Gershensons, if you remember, told you about this?

A. Charles Gershenson.

Q. All right. Go ahead, Mr. Raupagh.

A. As previously stated, I had a conference with 3424 Charles Gershenson, and I remember about it distinctly, because it was about the time that they opened their Jefferson and Manistique service station. In 1933 their gallonage wasn't as large as it is now. He told me that the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company had put some pressure on him, that he ought to get into the gasoline business on the scale that he could or would be expected to in order to be a marketer in Detroit. He advised me that he had had a conversation with a Mr. Jackson of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, and that he was willing to make an appointment with Mr. Dodge of the Texas Company. Later on, in 1933, he told me that he had had a conference with Mr. Dodge of the Texas Company and also with the Firestone people, that the offer was definitely much more advantageous than the dealer tank wagon price at which we were selling him at that time and I knew it would take, and it did take quite a lot of salesmanship as far as I was concerned, to retain his business and to keep him satisfied in handling our products.

Q. Did there come another occasion—you have said that Mr. Gershenson told you that there was a more advantageous price offered him. Did you get into any discussion of the figures at that time, as you recall, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes, there was some discussion of figures. And he told me that the contract on which he could pur-
3425 chase, namely, the contract of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company, was 4¢ off the dealer tank wagon price. He also told me that while these same discussions were going on in regard to the Firestone and Texas offer that he had also had an offer from the Red Indian Oil Company where they, at that time, offered to deliver gasoline to Ned's service stations at less than the prevailing dealer tank wagon price, or our tank wagon price.

Q. Did you discuss that price?

A. Yes, we discussed that price. They were about a cent and a half below our dealer tank wagon price, and delivered in their tanks at their service stations, which would make it unnecessary for them to have a bulk plant.

Q. Would it also have been unnecessary for them to have had their own delivery trucks under that arrangement?

A. That would have been unnecessary.

Q. Does that mean, Mr. Raupagh, as you understand it, that they would receive deliveries just the same as they were receiving deliveries from the Standard Oil Company, except they would get them at a cent and a half less per gallon?

A. That is right.

Q. Now, can you recall any other specific offers that were reported to you by Mr. Gershenson, or either one of them?

A. Yes; in 1940, the Gulf Corporation, through 3426 their manager, Mr. Crawford.

Q. If you can, will you follow these through chronologically, if you can do it.

A. Yes. I had a conversation with Mr. Gershenson in 1940, the latter part of 1940, and I received a letter from him later on to the effect that he had received an offer from the Gulf Corporation that they were soliciting him to sell him a tank car quantity of the regular Gulf gasoline, and I believe the price was 6.6, delivered at the bulk plant of Ned's Auto Supply, which was the same price that our tank car price was on that date.

Q. I hand you what has been marked as Respondent's Exhibit No. 48, for identification, and I will ask you if that is the letter that you have just now referred to?

A. Yes, that is the letter.

Q. And did you receive that from Mr. Gershenson?

A. Yes, I did.

Mr. Hanley: We offer in evidence Exhibit 48. I understand the notation on there is really no part of the exhibit.

Mr. Austin: No objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Without objection, Respondent's Exhibit No. 48, for identification, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for
3427 identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 48," was received in evidence.)

Mr. Austin: I would like to ask the witness one question.

Mr. Hanley: Sure.

Mr. Austin: I believe Mr. Gershenson said that he tried to get some of these offers brought up to date at your request after he knew he was going to have to testify in this lawsuit, and I wondered if this was an instance of a case where you had requested him to notify you regarding any such offer after you received the Complaint in this case?

The Witness: It wasn't, Mr. Austin.

Mr. Austin: What does that 6.6c mean?

The Witness: It means 6.6¢ per gallon for house brand gasoline, delivered in their bulk plant, located at Dearborn.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: How much differential would there have been?

The Witness: A cent and a half differential at that time.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Do you have any recollection, Mr. Raupagh, of an offer reported to you by Ned's Auto Supply Company in 1934?

A. Yes, there was such an offer. They reported
3428 to me in 1934 or late in 1939, I am not absolutely sure which of the Shell Company that made them an offer to sell them in tank car quantities at tank car price, at about 2¢ per gallon off the posted dealer tank wagon price.

Q. Did you say 1934 or 1939?

A. I said either in 1934 or the latter part of 1933, that is what I meant to say, rather.

Q. I see. And, was the price discussed at that time?

A. Yes, they stated at that time that the price was about 2¢ below the dealer tank wagon price for deliveries in tank cars, and they would have to supply themselves with a bulk plant.

Q. Now, Mr. Raupagh I had you tell us pretty much in detail as to the conversations that you had with Ned's Auto Supply Company in August and September, 1936, when they went on the half cent basis, and, again, in the spring of 1938, when they went on the 1½¢ tank car basis. I don't know whether or not you stated whether at those times they discussed quite frankly with you the names of companies that were offering gasoline to them, and prices.

A. Yes, they did.

Q. Did they advert to these former offers that they had told you about?

A. Yes.

Q. Did they talk about any opportunities or nego-
3429 tiations, that they hadn't formerly reported to you?

A. I don't quite get that question.

Q. I mean, did they say anything to you at that time as to whether or not they had received offers, that they hadn't, at the time of receiving them, discussed with you?

A. Yes. There is one other offer—well—

Q. All right. What is that, Mr. Raupagh?

A. There is one other offer that they discussed with me—

Mr. Austin: I think he should state when, if he tells about it.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Very well. Do that, please, Mr. Raupagh.

A. It was between 1934 and the forepart of 1936, as I recall it, where the Sun Oil Company had continually solicited them through their Mr. Cunningham, who is the local agent, or manager of the local district of the Sun Oil Company.

They stated that the Sun Oil Company had continually approached them over a period of weeks or months, and that the wife, Mrs. Cunningham, had called at the Ned's Auto on Jefferson and Manistique and purchased gasoline for her car and kidded with them, along the line that they ought to be buying from the Sun Oil Company, and the definite offer that Mr. Gershenson told me was made to them was connected up with the idea of leasing, the 3430 Sun Oil Company leasing stations to the Ned's Auto Supply Company.

The prsssure was put on me immediately by Charles Gershenson that we ought to lease some of our stations to him or to the Ned's Auto Supply Company, which I declined to do.

Q. Now, have you told us all of the offers that were represented to you that you can remember the specific detail about, Mr. Raupagh, in connection with Ned's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I take it that you do not wish to be understood that these were all of the offers that they said from time to time in these many discussions—

A. I know that according to conversations that I have had with them over a period of ten years that they have had many more offers and that many more offers they have told me about, which I wouldn't try to place any specific date on or—it is too vague in my mind at the present time to make anything definite out of it, but there has never been a time since—well, there has never been a time since I have been here that they haven't been able to purchase gasoline at less than the dealer tank wagon price, any time they wanted to take advantage of offers that they had.

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I think I will move to strike that. That answer goes a little too far, it seems to me, because it is based upon the witness' knowledge of 3431 offers made to Ned's about which he can only know by hearsay.

The first part of his answer was that Ned's could have bought at any time, and I assume he is able to state that of his own knowledge, but whether they could buy pursuant to specific offers, he could only know that through what Ned's told him, and, in order to preserve my position, I think I ought to object to that and ask it be stricken.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The motion is granted.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, what is your opinion, as to whether during any of the time that you have been in Detroit, Ned's could have purchased gasoline at a lesser price than they were buying it from the Standard Oil Company?

A. My opinion, and based upon my knowledge of the market in Detroit ever since I have been here, since January 1, 1930:, there has never been a time but what, according to the Detroit market, Ned's Auto Supply Company could purchase at less than dealer tank wagon price of the Standard Oil Company, on a gasoline comparable to a house brand gasoline.

Q. Mr. Raupagh, I wish you would give the Court your candid opinion, whatever it is, as to how and why you have been able to hold Ned's as a customer at all, under the competitive circumstances as you know them to exist.

3432 A. I am surprised at it myself, as to why we have held Ned's.

When you take into consideration that they have told me a number of times that salesmen for the leading major competitive oil companies in this city have continually called on them prior to their going on anything except the regular tank wagon basis—the way this is told me is that they would inquire: "Well, how much gasoline gallonage are you doing? Now, you are just foolish to be buying at the regular tank wagon price for that amount of gallonage," and they would immediately start soliciting their business.

Now, specifically as to why I have been able to hold them: I believe that in the first place they have handled Standard Oil products since they started in business. It seems to be a sort of tradition with them; that their father started the business. As I understand it, it was a little pump in front of a bicycle shop.

The boys carried on the business after that, and launched into the tire line quite heavily.

Red Crown is just part of the Ned's family, you might say.

There is another reason why I think I have been able to hold them. It is characteristic of the Gershenson family that they place a great deal of stock in their mother. The mother has always been very set in her ways, as far as Standard Oil is concerned, and as far as Red Crown 3433 gasoline is concerned. They listen to what she says. I don't believe that I would have held them if it hadn't been for that, because—maybe I shouldn't say this—but sometimes the relations haven't been as nice as they should be, when these competitive offers would come up.

Q. You mean by that they would get pretty tough with you sometimes?

A. Yes, I can tell you most assuredly that sometimes the air was kind of hot.

Q. No, Mr. Raupagh, have you had from time to time conversations with Mr. Citrin of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company during which he has advised you of the receipt of competitive offers?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. I wish you would start in and tell the Court in as much detail as you can about any offers that he reported to you.

A. The first offer that I remember was about 1930, just shortly after I came to Detroit.

Mr. Hanley: Your Honor, there is a suggestion I ought to have thought of myself, that Mr. Raupagh, perhaps, ought to have a few minutes recess.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will take a few minutes recess.

(A short recess was had.)

3434 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I show you Respondent's Exhibit 49-A and B, Mr. Raupagh, and I will ask you if that is a letter and an enclosure, a copy thereof which you received from Mr. Gershenson on or about March 3, 1940?

A. Yes, it is.

Mr. Hanley: Off the record.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I was about to ask you, Mr. Raupagh, to state to the Court in as great detail as you can, as chronologically as you can, any occasions when Mr. Citrin or anyone else connected with the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, reported to you that they had received offers from competitors of the Standard Oil Company to sell to Citrin-Kolb its requirements of gasoline.

A. Shortly after I came to Detroit in 1930, Mr. Citrin told me of an offer that he had and negotiations he had with the Wilson Oil Company, and Mr. Hicock, that they were willing to supply him with gasoline and this proposition had been first told to a Mr. Love, who was then sales manager for our company, but later on Citrin talked 3435 to me about that. The offer involved the Hicock Oil Corporation acquiring an interest in the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company. However, from the analysis that I made at that time, I think it was a very advantageous offer, as far as Citrin-Kolb was concerned. I was able to talk him out of it, because I used the argument that they had been in business for quite some time and they had always handled our products, and they had been prosperous in handling our products. I think it was a definite threat of the business of the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company as to a competitor acquiring it.

Q. Did you hear the testimony of Mr. Citrin in respect to certain offers that he had received, or have you read his testimony?

A. I heard his testimony.

Q. Are you now referring to an offer that you heard him testify to about when he was on the stand?

A. No, I am referring to an offer that he told me about himself.

Q. I understand that, but did you hear him testify in this proceeding to having received that same offer?

A. Yes, I heard him say that.

Q. And did you hear his discussion of the figures that were involved?

A. Yes, I believe I did.

3436 Q. Did he report, when he talked to you about it first what those figures were?

A. Yes. They were 6½¢ off the retail price established by the Standard Oil Company, which was a very advantageous figure, because that means about 3¢ below the dealer tank wagon price in 1930.

Q. Now, if I rightly recall, that offer involved a change of some kind in the capital or corporate structure of the Citrin-Kolb Company?

A. Yes, it did.

Q. Was that explained to you at the time?

A. The way it was explained to me at the time was that the Hicock Corporation, or Mr. Hicock himself, would acquire an interest in the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company, and he also testified—this was taken up with Mr. Love. I should have said Mr. Bennett, who was our sales manager at that time.

Q. Did you, in thinking over that offer as it was reported to you, give consideration to all of the factors that you had been told about, in arriving at your conclusion that it was a definite threat to the Standard Oil Company?

A. Definitely so. Definitely so.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I would like to have you explain your statement. As I understand, the offer required a complete change of the corporate structure, did it not?

3437 The Witness: As the offer was told to me by Mr. Citrin at that time, he simply stated that Hicock or the Hicock Corporation would acquire an interest in his concern and that he would have a margin of 6½¢ and the reason why I say that was a very advantageous offer is because it would be 3¢ below the prevailing tank wagon price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: So far as the offer was concerned, as to price, that might have been advantageous, but that was conditioned upon a complete change in the corporate structure.

The Witness: That may be according to the testimony of Mr. Citrin, your Honor, but at that time that was the way it was put up to me: that he was to acquire an interest in the company. That is as far as I could testify, as to the conversation with him at that time.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did he tell you that they were seriously considering a change in the corporate structure; that it was going to be made?

The Witness: No, he didn't say that, but he said that they were seriously considering the offer. That's what he said at the time.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Do you know whether the Highland Oil Company did, in fact, go into a similar proposition?

A. Yes, sir.

3438 Q. And the Highland Oil Company is one of the companies on either Exhibit 55 or 57?

A. That's right.

Q. The condition of which you testified about this morning?

A. That's right.

Q. From your standpoint as a marketer, Mr. Raupagh, what have you to say as to whether you regard a competitive offer as a threat to your business only on these occasions when that offer deals with price alone, or whether you consider it a threat whenever it is of a character that may induce your customer to leave?

A. It—I consider it a threat any time that it is of a character which the customer feels that it is advantageous for him to change and discontinue buying our products.

Q. So from your standpoint, is it or is it not a fact, Mr. Raupagh, that if this change in corporate structure was a satisfactory one to Mr. Citrin and one which he thought would be sufficiently advantageous to him to induce him to leave the Standard Oil Company, you would regard that, as a marketer, as being competition?

A. Yes, I would.

Q. And, in fact, isn't that competition?

A. It is, in my opinion.

Q. Isn't it the competition, the kind of competition you are up against all of the time?

3439 Mr. Austin: Objection to it as being a leading question, your Honor.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Sustained.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Will you please continue, Mr. Raupagh, and tell ~~us~~ what the next incident was that you recall, wherein Mr. Citrin or someone else of that company reported a competitive offer to you?

A. In the early part of 1933, Mr. Citrin reported to me an offer from the Shell Company to sell them gasoline on a tank car basis.

Q. When again did you receive such a report?

A. I ~~had a~~ conversation with Mr. Citrin in the early part of 1936, when ~~he~~ told me that he had received an offer from The Gulf Corporation to sell him gasoline, and that he was to haul it out of their bulk plant or could haul it out of their bulk plant, which made it unnecessary for him to maintain a bulk plant of his own. He gave that quite a ~~lot~~ of consideration because we had several conversations about it. He brought out the fact at that ~~time~~ that in our relations with Citrin-Kolb he had to furnish the equipment for the dealers which he supplies and on this offer, the Gulf Corporation would furnish the equipment for the dealers that he might supply, if he took on their proposition. 3440 Their offer, as I recall it, was a cent and a half or a cent and three-quarters below the prevailing tank wagon dealer price at that time.

Q. And from whom was that offer?

A. From the Gulf Corporation.

Q. When again were you advised, if you were?

A. In the latter part of 1936, I was advised by Mr. Citrin of an offer he got from the Texas Oil Company. The negotiations at that time were over a period of time. He told me about a contract that the Texas Company had offered him. Previous to that time he had been soliciting me to have a contract with the Standard Oil Company, and, from his general conversation, he always made a statement that he felt insecure as to being able to secure his supplies from the Standard Oil Company on account of not having a contract. We had quite a number of conversations about that, even previous to this offer, but he did definitely tell me about the offer from the Texas Company, and he came into the office and he brought a copy of the contract that he had made, I understand. I did not examine the contract too carefully because I did not want to maintain too much interest from a sales viewpoint, because I knew, by his general attitude, that he considered this contract very seriously, that is, considered severing connections with the Standard Oil Company, and it took quite a lot of persuasion to try to get him to 3441 continue our relations that we had had, as a jobber for the Standard Oil Company.

Q. Did you mention the price?

A. The price, as I remember, was about 2¢ a gallon less than the prevailing—less than the dealer tank wagon price.

Q. Now, at that time, there was being posted a service station price, wasn't there, Mr. Raupagh?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, just to clear up any difficulty that may arise as between the testimony of witnesses, when you say that a price of 2¢ below the dealer tank wagon price then being posted, that would be 5½¢, would it not, below the Standard Oil Company service station price?

A. That is right.

Q. That is to say, that at that time there was a differential of 3½¢ between the service station price posted by the Standard Oil Company and the dealer tank wagon price posted?

A. That is right.

Q. And those were all public postings at the time, were they not?

A. That's right, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Citrin tell you at the time who the individuals were in the Texas Company that had talked with him about this offer?

3442 A. Yes. He said it was a Mr. Murdy, Mr. Germain, and I have forgotten about anybody else, but those two I remember.

Q. Now, on that occasion, or on the occasion of that incident, did you ever have an opportunity to verify in any manner the fact of whether the offer had been made to Citrin?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Just explain to the Court what that was.

A. Some time later, it must have been maybe three or four months later, in going on the train from Detroit to Chicago it happened that Mr. Murdy was on the train and we had some pleasant conversation and—

Q. You knew him and he knew you?

A. That's right. And the subject was brought up. I brought it up, and he admitted that they had made an offer to the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Did he tell you what the offer was?

The Witness: No, he didn't definitely go into the details as to what the offer was.

Mr. Hanley: This is just as good a place as any to ask this question:

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, about this business of confirming a competitive offer with a competitor: state what the 3443 fact is as to whether that just is or isn't done?

A. Well, it isn't done, your Honor, because no competitor likes to admit, especially to his competitor, that he made an offer to some one and what the offer was and didn't secure the business. That just isn't good salesmanship, to overdo that. And it isn't being done.

Q. Now, right in line with that: you have been testifying to a number of reports that were given to you by your customers of competitive offers that they received. I will ask you what the fact is as to whether or not your own customers are reluctant or otherwise, frequently, to tell you that they have competitive offers.

A. Yes, they are reluctant sometimes to tell me that they have had competitive offers, and they are still more reluctant to tell me just exactly what the competitive offer was. That generally develops when they do tell me about a competitive offer, and then the fishing starts. I, on the one hand, to try to sell him to stay with our company, and he, on the other hand, trying to sell me that we ought to give him a bigger margin, or place him on a different basis.

Q. Is it not a fact that there is reluctance on the part of a customer to tell you the individual supplier that may be making the offer, as well as the terms of the offer?

A. Yes, there is—3444 Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I object to that. I don't know whether Mr. Raupagh can testify as to any more than apparent reluctance. If he wants to testify to that, I don't mind, but whether the reluctance is genuine, perhaps it is something Mr. Raupagh has a very good opinion on, but still it is an opinion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled.

A. Yes, there is a reluctance to tell me who the offer is from.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any reluctance to tell you that they received a competitive offer? Isn't the reluctance with reference to the disclosure of the party from whom the offer came?

The Witness: That is just right; that is just right.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. You never ask a customer, I assume, in the first instance, if they got competitive offers, do you, Mr. Raupagh?

A. No, I don't.

Q. If he comes and tells you, you had better get on the track on the price?

A. It would be poor salesmanship to lay the foundation to him for going after me for a different proposition.

3445 Q. The high point here, Mr. Raupagh—and I just want to ask you a summarizing question—is it not very difficult, indeed, when you are told by a customer that he has a competitive offer, to find anything about who made it or what it was?

A. Yes. There is a reluctance.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, is there reluctance both ways?

The Witness: The reluctance is, your Honor—let me explain it this way: the customer is glad to come in and tell me that he has got a better offer, but from there on there is a reluctance for him to tell me who it is and just exactly what it is. There is a reluctance until it gets right down to the point until he is serious about it, and then he generally gives you the works.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. When you say that, is it what you mean you got in respect of these various reports that you are testifying about to Citrin-Kolb's and to Ned's?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, was there a further offer which you learned from Mr. Citrin?

A. I learned of an offer from Mr. Citrin late in 1939, or, I will say about the middle of 1939. Originally, he didn't tell me about the offer first. He told it to Mr.

3446 Love, who was then our sales manager in Detroit, and Mr. Love told me about it, and later on Mr. Citrin told me about it, too; an offer from the Argo Oil Corporation.

Q. And did you learn from Mr. Citrin what the terms of that offer were?

A. Not definitely. I didn't definitely learn the term of that offer, Mr. Hanley. It was after he had declined the offer, evidently, and was still buying from us and I didn't want to go into it any further in detail with it, because I didn't want to stir him up.

Q. Mr. Love handled that in your absence?

A. That is right.

Q. With Mr. Citrin?

A. That is right.

Q. But Mr. Citrin did personally tell you about it at a later date?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. Were there any other offers of which you were advised?

A. Yes, he told me of an offer in December of 1940 from the Aurora Gasoline Company. The conversation took place in my office. The Aurora Gasoline Company had offered to sell him, I believe it was, 80 octane gasoline at about half a cent a gallon less than he was paying us for house brand gasoline at the time. I had quite a conversation with him about it.

3447 Trial Examiner Ballinger: What is the difference between 80 octane gasoline and house brand?

The Witness: Well, if the octane is produced by the same method, it would mean that it is about four points higher octane than a house brand. It is like an Ethyl gasoline, a regular premium gasoline.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, are there any other specific offers, the detail of which you can remember, as having been reported to you by Mr. Citrin?

A. There are no other specific offers that I remember. There are some other offers, but I haven't enough knowledge of them now to testify.

Q. Do you frequently have conversations with Mr. Citrin about the amount of differential he is getting and about being solicited by others in the gasoline supplying business?

A. Yes, that comes up quite frequently. As a matter of fact, I generally have lunch with these people, that is, Citrin and Neff's and Wayne Oil Company, Mr. Ledbetter, and Stikeman, at least once or twice a month. Sometimes there are two or three of them together when we are having lunch, and you can rest assured that I generally get the works as to margins and so on.

3448 Q. Referring you for a moment to the offer which you described which Gulf made to Mr. Citrin, do you recall that in connection with that offer he told you anything about an offer on the part of Gulf to paint service stations and furnish equipment, things of that kind? Was that discussed?

A. That was discussed, and I might say it is still being discussed, Mr. Hanley.

Q. Were you asked by Mr. Citrin then or have you ever been asked to do the same thing?

A. I have been asked by—I was asked by him then and I have been asked by him on an average of once a month since.

Q. And you haven't done that?

A. No, sir.

Q. Have you done that for any of these jobbers?

A. No, sir.

Q. Indeed, the doing of that at their own expense is one of the requirements that you have to classify them as a jobber and to qualify to buy on the jobber basis, isn't it, Mr. Raupagh?

A. It is.

Q. To furnish that sort of service and equipment to a business set-up like the Citrin-Kolb Oil Company would run into a very substantial amount of money, would it not?

A. Yes, it would.

3449 Q. Now, did Mr. Ledbetter of the Wayne Oil Company ever tell you of any offers made to him to sell to his company competitors' gasoline?

A. The first conversations that I have had with Mr. Ledbetter along that line—the first conversation was in 1935 previous to him going on a tank car basis with the Standard Oil Company. He told me at that time that he was getting, at one of the stations, at one of his stations, which was being supplied by the Highland Oil Corporation, Hi-Speed jobber, who was giving him 1c per gallon discount off the prevailing [illegible]er tank wagon price, while the stations which we suppl[illegible]ned or operated by Mr. Ledbetter, he was paying the prevailing tank wagon price of the Standard Oil Company at that time. That was the first proposition that I had from him. Then there has not been any definite propositions since that time until the summer of 1940, although it was either in 1938 or 1939, I know, that somebody was pressing him to give them an option on his business, his entire business, and he asked me at that time to find out whether it was one of the major companies that was fishing to purchase his business. I never could find out and did not do anything further about it. The next proposition that Mr. Ledbetter told me about was the one in December, 1940, when he had an offer from the Aurora Gasoline Company and from the National Refining Company. The Aurora Gasoline offer was along the same 3450 line, previously testified to, offering 80 octane gasoline at ½¢ per gallon less than he was paying for house brand gasoline from our company.

Q. That would be 2¢ under the tank wagon price?

A. Yes, sir, the National Refining proposition was in connection with the offer of the Stikeman Oil Company or made at the same time that the offer of the Stikeman Oil Company was, according to the way Mr. Ledbetter told me, and that was on a contract basis because here again these jobbers figured that they would rather have a contract, and it was based on a 6¢ basis, 6¢ price, the 6¢ meaning that any time the market was not below 6¢ per gallon, they would have a cent and a half margin. If it went below 6¢ per gallon, they were both to share the amount below that. If it went above 6¢ per gallon, they were to receive more than the cent and a half margin. They were also to have some territory rights because the National Refining Company is not represented here in Detroit at the present time, and it was to be a contract proposition.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You mean that it wasn't represented here at that time?

The Witness: Not at that time, that is, in 1940, your Honor.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, the Aurora Gasoline Company, to which 3451 you have referred, is one of the companies who appears on these exhibits, Respondent's Exhibits 55 and 57, does it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And is it a large supplier of gasoline?

A. Well, in 1940, their gallonage was 40,000,000 or 50,000,000 gallons.

Q. Now, is the National Refining Company a large refinery?

A. Yes, they are a refiner and marketer.

Q. Where do they operate now? Where are they located?

A. Their headquarters is at Cleveland, Ohio, and they have extensive operations in Ohio and have about four or five jobbers in southern Michigan and many other states in which they operate. They even operate in Canada, I believe.

Q. In your judgment, could you easily have supplied all the requirement of the Stikeman Oil Company and the Wayne Oil Company?

A. Yes, sir, and also a few others. They at one time, did market here. They sold some gasoline to somebody that set themselves up as an agency or broker that sold some of the dairy companies here White Rose gasoline.

Q. Have you had any conversations with Mr. Stikeman of the Stikeman Oil Company in respect of any offers that that company has received?

A. Yes, I have.

3452 Q. Will you state what they are?

A. Prior to 1936, I don't recall exactly what the exact date was, we lost them to the White Star Refining Company, I think that must have been about 1932 or 1933, and for a short period of time White Star Refining Company, which is now Socony Vacuum Oil Company, supplied them with their requirements of gasoline. Previous to that, Mr. Stikeman told me that they were solicited by the White Star Refining Company, and he was getting a better proposition than we were giving him at that time. Just how much it was, I don't even recall, but it was at least from a half to one cent per gallon better. Then, it was at a later date he had an offer from Phillips 66. That offer was along the line of a contract offer. That is, they wanted to give him a contract and wanted to tie him up for a certain number of years. Mr. Stikeman and I discussed that at quite some length. It was quite an advantageous offer, advantageous from the standpoint that his margin would have been more than we were allowing him at that time.

The next offer that he told me about was in December of 1940 when he received the offer from the National Refining Company, along the same lines, about which I have testified in regard to the Wayne Oil Company.

Q. Now, was there one of these offers that was made to, I think, the Citrin-Kolb Company and to which 3453 you have referred that was also made to the Middleton Oil Company which you at that time were supplying?

A. I don't know, Judge Hanley, whether that is at the same time or not, or whether that occurred at about the same time.

We lost the Middleton Oil Company to the Shell Corporation on their Silver Flash Gasoline, and I presume we have the record as to just when we lost them, but I wouldn't say definitely.

Q. Do you have any recollection now as to whether or not it was about that time that Mr. Citrin told you of one of these offers from Shell?

A. It was about that time.

Q. Now, in respect to Mr. Ledbetter and Mr. Stikeman, I will ask you the same question as heretofore asked about Citrin and Ned's. In addition to these offers which you have been able to recall the specific detail about, have they frequently talked to you and told you that they were constantly being solicited to purchase gasoline from some other supplier, or being offered inducements and services that you were not furnishing to them?

A. They have from time to time told me about such offers.

I remember some other offers that they told me about from the Aurora Gasoline Company who had solicited them—.

3454 Q. Do you have conversations with them those two last named men, Ledbetter, and Stikeman, at intervals, about the same as you do with Citrin and the Gershensons?

A. Yes, sir. I make it a point to keep in very close contact with our jobbers on account of the real competitive activity. That is, they are accounts that you will have to watch very closely at all times.

Q. You have mentioned in your testimony that they have referred to the fact that they did not have a contract with the Standard Oil Company. That is true, isn't it?

A. That is true, sir.

Q. They all buy on the same day ~~to day basis, do they~~ not?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. And they all buy on identically the same terms?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. Now, they could quit the Standard Oil Company any minute they wanted to, couldn't they?

A. They could quit them tomorrow, if they like.

Q. It is just a matter of whether or not they desire to continue their purchases from the Standard Oil Company?

A. That's it, yes, sir.

Q. They are under no obligation, are they, either by any written documents or any oral understanding 3455 in any manner, to continue to buy?

A. No oral understanding or no written documents or no contract. They can quit tomorrow or quit the next minute.

Mr. Hanley: May I have just a minute to see if there is something that will consume just a short time, rather than get into a long subject?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Certainly. We will take a two minute recess.

(A two minute recess was taken.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, are you familiar with what is known in this lawsuit as the Taggart survey, cost survey?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recall the cents per gallon that Mr. Taggart arrived at to be the cost of selling gasoline at retail?

A. 4.8¢.

Q. From your experience as a marketer in Detroit what is your judgment as to whether the actual cost of selling gasoline is more or less than 4.8¢ a gallon?

Mr. Austin: I object to that question, your Honor, as calling for the conclusion of the witness. It hasn't been established that he is competent to answer that question which would necessarily have to be based upon a cost study and would have to be a cost study involving 3456 knowledge of accounting. I think it is obvious the witness isn't qualified to answer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is of the opinion that the witness isn't sufficiently qualified.

Mr. Hanley: Is not sufficiently qualified?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is not sufficiently qualified.

Mr. Hanley: I am not asking him for a figure and I am not going to, Judge, but I will qualify him a little further to ask him the type of question I want.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You have never engaged in the retail business, have you?

The Witness: No, sir; only so far as it pertains to the Standard Oil Company.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: But you never conducted a retail station, did you?

The Witness: No, sir.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: All your knowledge is what you have observed?

The Witness: What I have observed and what I have seen.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Up until September, 1936, the Standard Oil Company was engaged in the retail business of selling gasoline at service stations, were they not?

3457 A. They were.

Q. And that was true all over the territory of the Standard Oil Company and in all of the localities that you testified that you had been connected with the market?

A. It was.

Q. Up until that date, and since 1904, were a part of your duties in the various localities that you worked, to supervise and aid in the supervision of the operation of retail service stations?

A. It was.

Q. I think you have testified that at least on or about that time the margin between the posted service station price and the dealer tank wagon price was 3½c?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since September, 1936, you have had supervision of the sales to service station operators in the Detroit area involving many hundreds of service station operators, have you not?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Do you know of many of those operators that have been in business for many years last past in the Detroit area?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you know as a matter of just practical fact whether or not service station operators, generally 3458 speaking, actually get as much as 4.8¢ margin above their cost of gasoline?

A. That question isn't quite clear, Judge.

Q. Without any reference to taxes now, just the cost of gasoline, is it true, generally speaking, that service station operators get, when they sell at retail, as much as 4.8¢ a gallon above the price they pay for the gasoline?

3459 A. On gasoline alone?

Q. Yes.

A. They generally do not.

Q. And has that been true for the years last past that you have had experience back to 1904?

A. That is true, it is true.

Q. Now, without attempting to state any figure, unless you know one, Mr. Raupagh, as to what the cents per gallon cost of retailing gasoline is, are you able to say whether it is less than 4.8¢ a gallon in the Detroit vicinity?

Mr. Austin: I object, your Honor, and I would like to point out that the figure being asked and the figure which Dr. Taggart's surveys relate to, was an average cost of small operators, each one being operated by an operator, wherein, if it is intended to use the criterion of the Standard Oil Company, that was an operation by one company of a large group of stations and it was at a previous period and, furthermore, the record shows that what has been just testified to, that the service station retail margin has been for a year and a half or more around 3.3¢ a gallon. I guess now it is a little more than that in the last few weeks. Further, that the determination of the average cost of retail gasoline per gallon involves allocations of various overhead costs and allocations of cost as between gasoline and other products and I submit 3460 that on all of those grounds, the witness has not shown to be qualified to answer that question.

Mr. Hanley: Well, I will answer, perhaps, one inquiry of counsel. There is no effort to compare the 3½¢ margin referred to in the price postings by the Standard Oil Company in this matter of cost of selling gasoline at all, Judge. I alluded to that to demonstrate the experience and the qualifications of the evidence. As a matter of fact, it probably cost the Standard Oil Company more to sell gasoline than it costs these small operators and, I think Dr. Taggart's testimony and Dr. Taggart himself is some authority for the proposition that a large company frequently has higher costs in that type of operation.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Since the Standard Oil Company was engaged in the retail business, the price, the cost structure has undergone change, has it not?

The Witness: You mean the price that we were charging?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: No, I mean the actual cost to the market, wages, everything.

The Witness: Yes, I think there are changes taking place, yes, sir.

Mr. Austin: I would like to further point out, if your Honor please, that even if the Standard Oil Company were to operate service stations now and wanted to prove their cost of operation, it would be necessary to do 3461 so by an expert accountant who would get the cost study so that he could be cross-examined on the method by which he had reached his conclusions and I don't believe Mr. Raupagh is so qualified, even if it were a question of Standard Oil Company costs, and it is certainly not that in this case.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is prepared to rule. Objection sustained.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I will just ask you one further question on this subject, Mr. Raupagh. You have said that you have known of many service station operators who have been in business a long time in the Detroit vicinity and you have said that the margin above their cost of gasoline at which they sell gasoline does not generally equal 4.8¢ a gallon. Now, I will ask you as to operators, many of them whom you have known to be in business for a long time in Detroit are still in business, are they not?

A. They are.

Q. Did you ever hear of a service station at which gasoline was sold at a cost of 22.7¢ a gallon?

A. No, I never have.

Q. Did you ever hear of one at which gasoline was sold at a cost of 15.4¢ a gallon?

A. No, I never have.

Q. Referring you to Exhibit No. 58, Mr. Raupagh, 3462 which is the chart, it appears therefrom that in 1940 there were something in excess of 460 million gallons of gasoline sold in Detroit and that of that total, the four jobbers involved in this action sold 3 per cent through all channels, wholesale and retail and any other way they did sell it and that jobbers, generally, and that they sold 13,600,000 odd gallons, and that jobbers of all classes in Detroit sold a total of about 168,500,000 gallons of gasoline and that other companies, including what you have defined as majors, sold about 231,198,000 gallons or, about 50.3 per cent. Now, giving consideration to the facts disclosed by those figures and by all of the figures on chart 58 and bearing in mind that the 3 per cent total gasoline in 1940 that was sold by the jobbers include all that was sold by all of the four jobbers, both at wholesale and through their own retail outlets; from your experience and in your judgment and opinion as an oil marketer and with particular reference to your experience in the Detroit market, what is your opinion as to whether or not the 3 per cent of gasoline or thirteen-odd million gallons of gasoline sold through the four jobbers in Detroit in 1940 was a sufficient amount to have had any appreciable effect upon competition in gasoline commerce in the City of Detroit?

Mr. Austin: Just a minute.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do you fully understand that question?

3463 The Witness: Yes, I do, your Honor.

Mr. Austin: The question was whether the volume of these four jobbers is large enough to have any appreciable effect upon the competition. I think that question—

Mr. Hanley: If you don't mind, I think I will add a little to that question.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I would like to add to that, Mr. Raupagh, this; that, giving consideration to all of the facts that I have stated and, giving consideration to the manner as you have testified about in which these four jobbers sold gasoline—

A. Pardon me, did you say the method?

Q. The method and the manner; set-up of their business in which they handle this gasoline. What, in your opinion and judgment, is the fact as to whether their volume handled in the manner and method to which you have testified has any appreciable effect on gasoline competition in Detroit or tends to substantially lessen competition or restrain trade or tends to create a monopoly in gasoline competition? Does it have the effect of doing any of those things, in your judgment?

Mr. Austin: Well, as the question is now worded I think it calls for a legal conclusion and it is bad on that ground and, aside from that, the question isn't, in this case, of volume, whether volume affects competition 3464 or whether volume does any of those things. It is a question of price and I think if retail competition were referred to as locally between the jobber station and other stations, the witness' answer might be one thing and if it refers to whether this volume is large enough to affect wholesale competition between these various jobbers listed, or as between refiners, perhaps the answer would be different. I think the answer to the question of competition relating to volume is capable of a definite answer. I think as worded it would be irrelevant and also since it now refers to the effect upon competition in a legal sense, and tendency toward monopoly, I think it calls for a legal conclusion and I object to it on all those grounds.

Mr. Hanley: I may say, your Honor, that the question is not perhaps well framed but it is framed under the ruling of the Federal Trade Commission case in the group of cheese cases which were decided by the Federal Trade Commission, and if I understand those decisions at all, the Federal Trade Commission took exactly the reverse position from that now announced by Mr. Austin when he said that this question isn't in the case and that this is merely a question of price.

In those cases the Commission found a price differential but they found that it did not substantially affect competition and as an expert in the oil business, with particular reference to experience with the competitive situation 3465 in Detroit, I am propounding this question to this witness.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, it might very well be in some industries and some commodities that a charge might be made as to price discrimination where such a small portion of that commodity in the stream of commerce was involved that perhaps it might at least be claimed that it couldn't have any appreciable effect, but I think here, I think the Trial Examiner can take judicial knowledge and I think he should do so of the fact that when these four jobbers, selling fifteen million gallons a year which, I believe, is 3 per cent of the business in Detroit and that they operate a considerable number of retail stations; I think the Trial Examiner can take judicial knowledge of the fact that everyone of those retail stations affects competition in the neighborhood of that station and that being true I believe that the answer to the question must necessarily be in the affirmative and if it is a matter which the court can take judicial knowledge of, I see no reason why the witness should be asked to answer.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is of the opinion that the conclusion of the witness is of no greater value than the conclusion of the Commission, or anyone else.

The facts are present and you can arrive at your own conclusion as to whether or not competition is a factor.

3466 Mr. Hanley: Now we will try and get this Exhibit 63 added to, o comply with the requirements of the Court, and I will advise Court and counsel now that Mr. Austin has requested me that I ask Mr. Raupagh to be prepared to testify tomorrow relative to the figures, gallonage, business done by what Mr. Raupagh has described as major companies in Detroit and has requested a certain form E.L.A., I think it is called, and he wants to go into that with Mr. Raupagh. That is material that is not proper cross-examination but I have indicated that we will not only supply the material, but Mr. Austin may examine to the fullest extent he desires, on cross-examination.

Now, your Honor, we have left a long subject and it involves these picture books, again, and I think I have cleaned up practically everything else with this witness. I believe that we ought to recess at this time, if it is agreeable to counsel.

Mr. Abbott: Your Honor, may I suggest I don't think you made a definite ruling on the last objection?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner sustains the objection on the ground that it wasn't a question calling for expert opinion.

Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: On the record.

3467 The motion of counsel for the Respondent is granted and now, at 5:10 p. m., the hearing stands adjourned to be reconvened at 9:30 a. m., May 8, 1941, in Room 859, Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan.

(Whereupon, at 5:10 p. m., May 7, 1941, the hearing in the above-entitled matter was adjourned, to reconvene on May 8, 1941, at 9:30 a. m.)

PROCEEDINGS.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: We will come to order.

This is a reconvening at 9:30 A. M., Eastern Standard Time, May 8, 1941, in Room 859 Federal Building, Detroit, Michigan, in Docket No. 4389, in the case entitled Standard Oil Company.

The last hearing was held in Detroit May 7, 1941.

The reporter will note counsel for the Commission and Respondent present.

You may proceed.

P. A. RAUPAGH, having been heretofore duly sworn, resumed the stand, and testified further as follows:

Direct Examination (Continued) by Mr. Hanley.

Q. Mr. Raupagh, there has been a lot of discussion in this case about the prevailing retail service station price of gasoline in Detroit from time to time. I don't know why there should be any mystery or confusion, but there seems to be in the minds of some of us. Tell us, please, just what you mean by the prevailing retail service station price; how you obtain it, and what it is, insofar as it is reflected in records that are kept by your office.

A. I mean by the prevailing retail service station 3470 price the postings of all the service stations in the area and the prevailing retail price is the postings of the majority of those dealers in the area.

Q. Now, it is not an average at all, is it, Mr. Raupagh?

A. No, sir.

Q. That is to say, when you make a survey such as you have testified to, you do not take the various service station prices that you find posted at all the 2300 or 2400 service stations in Detroit and then average them up, do you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Is it or is it not a fact that you go about the city and look at price postings on all service stations, and if you find a majority of those service stations—

Mr. Austin: Your Honor, I object to that. I submit that the witness should be allowed to tell how he does it. If it is material I think the witness might just as well—certainly he is as familiar with it as counsel is.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Just explain the mechanics of what you do when you undertake to find a prevailing service station price.

A. When we determine the prevailing service station price we take the price posted at all of the stations in the area for each brand of gasoline, and the majority of those postings is considered the prevailing retail price.

By the majority of postings I mean the majority of 3471 postings that are similar or alike. That is the prevailing retail price.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Now, let me see if I understand you. If a majority of them post it at 17¢, for instance, would that be the prevailing price?

The Witness: Yes, sir.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Now, that doesn't involve any computation or figuration at all, does it, Mr. Raupagh, except counting the stations that have a given posting?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, you have said a majority of stations give you your lead as to what you would call the prevailing price. In your experience in Detroit what has the lowest percentage ever been, approximately, constituting the majority which you regarded as establishing the prevailing price?

A. The lowest percentage that we have found would be from 65 to 70%.

Q. Now, is it or is it not a fact that it is upon that basis of determination of prevailing retail price that you have referred to the retail prevailing price when you have used that term in your testimony?

A. It is.

Q. Is it upon that basis and method of determining prevailing price that you have caused these various 3472 exhibits which reflect a prevailing retail price, to be prepared in your office?

A. It is.

Q. Now, specifically, is that the basis upon which you caused the prevailing retail price computations to be placed upon the various photographs of filling stations that have been and will be offered in this lawsuit?

A. It is.

Q. Yesterday, in your consideration of the list of companies that were reflected on Exhibits 55 and 57, you referred to a number of them on Exhibit 57 as being cut-price marketers. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You also referred to the operations of a number of those operators as being comparable to the operation of Ned's Auto Supply Company. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, I wish you would state what you mean as to whether or not you regard Ned's Auto Supply Company as a cut-price marketer in Detroit?

A. I do not regard them so.

Q. When you said that the operations of these marketers were comparable to Ned's operations, explain just what you did mean.

A. In my testimony of yesterday, when I made 3473 the statement that operations were comparable to
Ned's, I meant that they were comparable as far as their purchase of gasoline is concerned on a tank car price basis and that they operated, directly operated, retail stations, which is comparable to Ned's.

Mr. Hanley: Now, I will say, your Honor, that we have here three books of photographs that are broken down for each year by the name of the company or brand of gasoline involved. These are photographs of service stations that were taken in each of the years 1939, 1940, and 1941. They contain—maybe your Honor can follow me if I hand you one of these books—they contain divider sheets which indicate the brand of gasoline that is involved in the photographs that immediately follow. There are in the books certain cards, discount cards, and, in some instances, I think, invoice tickets or some indication of price other than a photograph. All of these photographs, or the mounting sheet of the photograph has on it a computation of the prevailing price per gallon, and showing the difference between the price posting reflected in the photograph and the prevailing price in effect at that time. The photographs themselves, ordinarily reflect the date on which they were taken and the location. As to the photographs themselves, and their mounting sheets, I would prefer to make the offer as a bound volume and as 3474 they presently appear. I indicated yesterday that it was not my purpose at all to urge any further argument upon the Court as to any reason why the Court should receive the photographs with the prevailing price computation upon it as it appears. In that regard, I say only this: that I do not think it was said, your Honor, in connection with the former argument on that phase of the offer when certain photographs were formerly offered, that the prevailing price was established on the Government's case, and the Government's case depends upon their establishment of the prevailing price. It was a reduction below the prevailing price that they charge Ned's and made in some instances Citrin-Kolb stations had made. So there became no confusion or mystery or anything unusual about this prevailing price situation until the Respondent began to offer some testimony as to prevailing prices.

In addition, also, and since the matter was before the Court formerly, the evidence of Mr. Raupagh has been adduced which, if there ever was any confusion in this prevailing price matter, it certainly is entirely clarified now. Hence, I propose to make these offers with the photographs as they appear on their mounting sheets, carrying the prevailing price or differential computation. If your Honor is still of the same view that that is of no aid at all and desires to apply the same rule as here- 3475 tofore applied, we will, of course, make a re-offer with the exhibit altered in conformity with the requirement of the Court. We will make no further point of that, but I do think that your Honor, in consideration of these present offers, should give serious consideration, first, to the fact that the Government rested its case on the necessity of establishing a prevailing retail price. When it put on its own testimony it went in without any objection on our part. We agreed, of course, that there was such a thing as a prevailing retail price, and everybody in the oil business in Detroit knows it from time to time and knows what it is, and, secondly, that there has been added, since your Honor last ruled, the testimony of Mr. Raupagh.

Now, that's all I have to say about these notations, your Honor. Anything else in the way of notations that are not explanatory of the exhibit and regarded as being proper, we will take them off, if there are any. I don't know whether there are any.

Now, as to the other material, if there is objection to that, we will either have to lay a further foundation, or abandon the offer. That's all there is to that. I don't know what the attitude of counsel is going to be on this. He has had an opportunity now for many hours to consider not only the question involved here, but to look 3476 at the actual exhibit which we propose to offer, and it would greatly facilitate the thing, I believe, your Honor, if these books which are bound and which will go with the Reporter could be marked as Exhibits in their entirety, with the extraction, perhaps, of any material to which counsel may want to make other than one objection to the exhibit as a whole, which we will offer separately.

I may say, your Honor, that as to the years 1939 and 1940, we have only one volume of these photographs. As to the year 1941 we have a couple, at least, or three. The reason for that is that the years 1939 and 1940 were built up in the ordinary course of the routine business of the office without any contemplation of ever having to use them in this case. They were just a record of the office, the same practice was pursued in 1941, but then we had in contemplation the probable use of this material in this case, and we were able, then, to make additional copies, but we will have no copy of 1939 and 1940, once it goes into this case.

Now, I am prepared to adopt any mechanics that your Honor may suggest to mark these exhibits and facilitate getting to the point where we can make our offers.

Counsel has had the opportunity just alluded to, so he may have a suggestion.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner is in 3477 some doubt as to how these exhibits should be marked. They are not securely bound, as is required by the rules of the Commission.

The Examiner would be glad to hear from counsel for the Commission.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, I think there was a survey introduced yesterday morning that had a statement of prevailing retail price, and I think you stated that the information in that survey was compiled, including the prevailing retail price information, by a survey of all the service stations, including what you referred to as non-brands and off-brands.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, in so far as there are prevailing price notations on these pictures, were those obtained in the same way?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And what you stated that your prevailing price is the price charged by the majority of the stations, I believe at the time you made the various computations—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you say a majority, you mean a majority of all stations, including what you have referred to as cut-price marketers?

A. Yes.

3478 Q. Now, let me ask you whether the prevailing price that you have arrived at in that manner is the same and has been the same at all times during the period involved in this case as the prevailing retail price on a major brand gasoline?

A. It is the same.

Q. Now, do I understand you to say that in your opinion that not less than 65 to 70% of the stations in Detroit have been charging a price as high or higher than the prevailing price at the time the survey was made?

A. That's right.

Q. Would you say that 65 to 70% had been charging the prevailing price?

A. Yes.

Q. I wasn't sure whether you meant that price or a higher price.

Did you hear Mr. Biber's testimony here the other day when some other pictures and photographs were offered?

A. I don't believe I did.

Q. Well, Mr. Biber testified that—I might say that on those pictures were the notations of the prevailing price, and I think also it is clear that by prevailing price he meant the same thing that you meant by it, that is, in so far as your use of the term in connection with these prices is concerned, but Mr. Biber testified that in his opin-3479 ion, during 1938 and 1939, the majority of the stations in the neighborhoods where these pictures were taken were not charging the prevailing price, that they were charging less than that.

Mr. Abbott: You mean just around six locations.

Mr. Austin: I said in the neighborhoods where those pictures were taken. However, those neighborhoods were fairly well scattered.

By Mr. Austin:

Q. I want to ask you, Mr. Raupagh, whether you would agree that there were periods during 1938 and 1939 when the majority of service stations in Detroit were not charging a price as high as the prevailing price. I am talking about what they were charging, now, and not what they were posting.

A. I would say I have no way of definitely determining that, Mr. Austin. I believe there are times when service stations charge—I know there are times when service stations charge less than their posted price, but by our surveys, and the prevailing price is based upon what the service stations post in the way of prices, either price signs or the price that is posted right on the pump, when the computing pump is used, and there is the price posted on it.

Q. Suppose there is a price on the pump of 17¢ a gallon and then out in front they have a sign which says: "6 for 96," a big sign, do you use the price on the pump 3480 or the price on the sign?

A. We would use the price on the sign.

Q. So, as to any openly advertised price cutting, such as determined by these pictures, I understand in determining prevailing price, you would take the sign rather than the price on the pump?

A. We would take the price posted on the sign, yes, sir. That refers principally to stations which have no price sign posted, and, in that case, we look at the pumps, if we can.

Q. There has been considerable reference in this case from time to time as to what has been referred to as under-canopy prices. Do you understand what is meant by that?

A. Very much so.

Q. Is it your opinion that leaving that sort of a discount out of consideration, that from 65 to 70% or more of the service stations in Detroit have charged what you have referred to as the prevailing price at all times when you have made a computation of that price?

A. Yes, leaving that out.

Mr. Austin: Well, now, your Honor, I submit there never has been any doubt of the meaning of the term prevailing price, but I think there might be considerable doubt about the meaning of it used on a photograph 3481 if the photograph is offered for the purpose of showing that a particular station was charging the price lower than the majority of stations or lower than the prevailing price, as referred to on the photograph, and, of course, we get back to that same argument we had the other day that unless the price on the photograph is the price charged by the majority of the stations at that time that the photograph means nothing. If all the stations in that neighborhood were charging that price, as shown on the photograph, that wouldn't be considered as price-cutting, and that might not be the prevailing price. Of course, where Mr. Raupagh said that where there are open signs, that has been followed in determining what the prevailing price is. I think it is a very uncertain way of showing price-cutting by particular stations, and I haven't attempted to go through all those figures or all of those books. I looked at the 1938 book and there are a group of sheets in the front of that that I would object to in toto, and also I would make the same objections I made the other day to any reference to any notations on prevailing price or any computation based on prevailing price on any photographs of stations handling non-brand gasoline. Your Honor sustained that objection, and I make the same objection here.

As to the major oil company gasoline, I will also 3482 make the same objection that I made before, and that is that to prevailing price notations on photographs taken in 1938 or 1939 or at any time—well, that runs back to 1936. I don't know how far these (indicating) go.

Mr. Hanley: I don't think we are proposing to offer anything prior to 1939 at all this morning.

Mr. Austin: Well, there is one book there for 1938.

Mr. Hanley: Is there?

Mr. Austin: Yes, there were four books submitted to me.

Mr. Hanley: There is a separate book here that refers to stations surrounding the Ned's service stations, which, I think, is not broken down into years. It is broken down into a locality and is not duplicated in the other books, and I think that book may contain pictures of dates prior to 1939, and even prior to 1938. I am not sure.

Mr. Austin: Well, as to the major brands, the objection only goes up to this, up to January 1, 1940, and that is on the basis of Mr. Biber's testimony, as well as upon the testimony of the Commission's witnesses who showed that there was very prevalent price-cutting during parts of 1938 and 1939 and Mr. Raupagh has not said anything to contradict that, excepting so far as he said that where the signs were shown, that is taken into consideration, 3483 but otherwise, I don't understand Mr. Raupagh to say that at all times during 1938 and 1939 the so-called prevailing price was actually being charged by the majority of stations, although he does say that the majority of stations at all times were posting the prevailing price, as I understand it.

Mr. Hanley: Just to be sure we understand each other when we are referring to the Government's evidence, Mr. Austin, it is my recollection of the gist of that evidence that there was a time in 1938, perhaps a little before or a little after 1938, when the witnesses testified that there was a very prevalent price-cutting situation in Detroit; namely, that they were reducing their price one to 2¢ below what they called the prevailing price. Is that your recollection of the testimony?

Mr. Austin: Yes.

Mr. Hanley: It is my further recollection of the testimony that the witnesses who were called, said that they charged their posted price up until the time they put what they called the sign up; namely, a sign something in substance to the effect: "1¢ off," or "2¢ off." Is that your understanding of the testimony?

Mr. Austin: Yes, it is my understanding. Well, yes, to answer your question.

By Mr. Hanley:

3484 Q. Now; I would like to ask Mr. Raupagh if at that time, or at any time in your surveys, in an effort to find the prevailing price, you came to a service station which had a sign up, "1¢ off," or "2¢ off posted price," would you regard that as a price posting which you would take into consideration in determining whether that station was selling or posting at the regular or prevailing price?

A. No. We would regard that in the light that instead of giving an under-canopy discount, the man had openly posted that he was giving under-canopy discounts.

Q. That's what I am getting at. Would you then regard that individual as selling on the posted price?

A. We would regard that individual as selling at less than the posted price.

Q. Now, in determining the prevailing price which you say you have always found to be a minimum of a 65¢ majority, would that kind of a station fall into the 35% price-cutting group, or into the 65% prevailing price group?

Mr. Austin: I don't think it is clear whether the price on the pump was what has been generally called the prevailing price. At least I am not clear on it.

Mr. Hanley: May Mr. Raupagh answer that question, if he can?

Mr. Austin: I mean, you have got to take a figure. You have got to assume whether it is or isn't.

3485 Trial Examiner Ballinger: Let the witness answer.

Mr. Austin: O. K.

A. It would come within the 35% that were cutting price.

Mr. Hanley: Now, your Honor, it seems to me that answers the quandry that Mr. Austin is in, or confusion, if he is in any, about this prevalent method of reducing price in 1938 about which Mr. Biber was talking. There, of course, has to be a figure a base figure of some kind, if you are going to take 1¢ or 2¢ away from it, to make the actual price. That now appears to be a price-cutting method which would be taken care of in these surveys.

Mr. Austin: Well, I still don't agree with the conclusion reached. I don't think there is any doubt on the facts. I don't want to get into any long argument on this, either. All these points were ruled on the other day, and I simply request that the same rulings be made on these photographs and exhibits as to those notations which were made in connection with the ones offered by Mr. Biber. I see no reason why the ruling should be changed.

Mr. Hanley: With the statements I have made of what we would like to ~~have the Court~~ consider, in view of yesterday's testimony and what was put in on the Government's case, I haven't anything further to say, your Honor, unless your Honor requests it. I promised I wouldn't 3486 argue these issues again. If your Honor understands what Mr. Austin's objections are—which I confess I do not—and believes they are well taken and wants to make the same rulings, we will just make the same offers.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner understands one of Mr. Austin's objections to be that the explanation offered by the witness of the prevailing price does not appear on the exhibit and that the exhibit, standing alone and disconnected entirely, without the witness' testimony, convey an erroneous impression. Is that correct?

Mr. Austin: Yes your Honor.

Mr. Hanley: Well, is there any dispute now about the prevailing price? I can perceive, your Honor, that if there were a dispute about the prevailing price, that that might be a well-grounded objection. That is, if there were two prevailing prices or if the method were put in question, but if there is only one prevailing price, one method, and it is undisputed in the lawsuit, and certainly I understand it to be undisputed both on the Government's case and on the Respondent's case. Am I right about that, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: What? About what we were talking about on these other exhibits?

Mr. Hanley: About prevailing price; yes.

3487 Mr. Austin: I think that is clear.

Mr. Hanley: If that be true, and there is no dispute on the prevailing price, then I don't see how anybody can be misled. The explanation is a computation which I conceive the Commission could make, but I also know they never would make it. We have to make it somehow for them, if we want to present it, but it is just a convenience.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The notations on the photographs are placed there merely for convenience, as the Examiner understands it.

Mr. Hanley: That is true. It just avoids the necessity on our part of recomputing the whole thing, maybe in a long series of sheets and indices and relating each one to certain photographs. That is hard to do, in the first place, and it is awfully hard to get any Court to look at it after you have done it, Judge. You know that, from your own experience.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I realize that the notations on the exhibits would be a convenience and aid probably to both counsel and the Commission, but I am uncertain as to whether they might not, considered separate and apart from the witness' testimony, create some erroneous impression with reference to the prevailing price. Now, that's all that bothers the Examiner.

3488 Mr. Hanley: I would agree, Judge, agree that Mr. Austin's objection would be well-founded and that fear that your Honor has just expressed would have a basis if there were any dispute at all about what the prevailing price were, but if there is no dispute on that subject, and there isn't, then the thing can't be misleading. They just can't be.

Mr. Austin: I feel they might very well be misleading. In the first place, if the only purpose of putting the computation on those pictures is that is the prevailing price, in the way it has been used here, I think the computation is meaningless and it is entirely irrelevant and immaterial to show some Joy or Zip station, for instance, is charging a certain amount below the price charged by the majority of major brand gasoline stations. Therefore, when you put it on there, the natural assumption is it is put on for some purpose, and some purpose which I would respectfully call rather an absurd computation, and there is bound to be some inference that the prevailing price shown on there is the prevailing price for the brand of gasoline shown in the picture, and we know that isn't true at all, because it isn't contended here that the prevailing prices used here are the prevailing prices of any brand of gasoline, much less the cut-price 3489 brands and, secondly, when the cut-price period was prevalent, it now appears that a certain price was posted on the station's pumps that was what was used in obtaining the prevailing price, and I am not saying it shouldn't have been, but if at a considerable time a considerable number of stations in the neighborhood were selling below that price, why, then, perhaps the cut-price was the prevailing price.

Now, there seems to be a dispute between Mr. Biber and Mr. Raupagh about that. I don't know whether there is any actual dispute, but Mr. Biber's testimony is one way as to certain locations, and Mr. Raupagh's testimony seems to be the other way, as a general situation based on his computations.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Mr. Raupagh took in the entire district.

Mr. Austin: That's right.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: And Mr. Biber's testimony was confined to a particular locality.

Mr. Austin: That's right. I don't object so much to the annotations, even, as to 1938 and 1939 remaining on the major brands, but you remember you made certain rulings on those pictures, and they went in evidence, and then later on your Honor granted a motion to strike out certain notations as to prevailing price that had previously been admitted on photographs during 1938 and 3490 and 1939, just up to January 1, 1940, and it may be, on the basis of Mr. Raupagh's testimony, that there is more reason now—I will put it this way—some reason for reconsidering the question of the 1938 and 1939 pictures on major brands, but I think all the rulings that were made at the time the other photographs were offered should be adhered to here. I see no reason for changing those.

Mr. Hanley: Irrespective of the ruling, and just to clarify Mr. Raupagh's position:

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Raupagh, if you agree that probably the worst price-cutting period in Detroit within recent years was in 1938 and early 1939?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Exhibit 60-B, concerning which you testified here yesterday, shows a survey as of February 15, 1938, under house brand gasoline, and indicates there a figure "913"?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. I think you have explained that that means that you found, out of all of the stations in Detroit that you looked at, which would be substantially all of them, would it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And that would be how many, approximately; 3491 all the stations in Detroit?

A. Well, it would be between 2500 and 3,000.

Q. Now, this figure 913 means that out of all those stations you found 913 of them below the prevailing market on house brand?

A. That's right.

Q. And, as you have explained prevailing market?

A. That's right.

Q. And so far as your survey disclosed, all other of those stations were observing the prevailing price?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hanley: I think that covers what your Honor has in mind, too. This is a comprehensive survey.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any question about the computations appearing on the exhibits, Mr. Austin?

Mr. Austin: The computations?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Yes.

Mr. Austin: Well, I haven't gone through them and attempted to check each one.

Mr. Hanley: We will vouch for them, your Honor, as far as the mathematics are concerned. They have been gone over and checked and rechecked by the comptometer girls after somebody figured them, in the first instance. I think it would be most unusual if there is any 3492 mathematical error existing.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any difference of opinion or view on the part of counsel for the Commission or Respondent as to the meaning of the term "prevailing price"?

Mr. Hanley: I hadn't understood so from what our discussion developed this morning.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: I want it to appear definitely on the record.

Mr. Austin: There is no doubt in my mind in the way it was used in the exhibits introduced by the Commission and in the survey introduced yesterday by the Respondent. I think on these photographs, the photograph with descriptive matter, I think that prevailing there might well be understood to mean something else than it means on the survey, for instance.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Is there any difference between counsel for the Commission and Respondent on the record as to the meaning of the term "prevailing price"?

Mr. Hanley: I don't think so, but I will state my position. That's perhaps the easiest way to get at it, and Mr. Austin can say whether he then has any disagreement.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: You may do so.

Mr. Hanley: The Respondent's understanding of prevailing retail service station price is that which has 3493 been explained by Mr. Raupagh in his testimony substantially as follows: That the prevailing retail service station price of gasoline in Detroit is ascertained by an actual physical survey of the city by someone who looks at the service stations and reads price signs or price postings that exist at those service stations.

That that survey is made of all or substantially all of the service stations that exist at the time of the survey in the city, and is made without reference to the brand or type of gasoline being sold at the station, or without reference to the company or person who operates the station.

That after that survey is made, those stations are counted which are posting the same or a similar price, and by a similar price I mean within 1/10 of a cent, or something like that, and if the majority of the stations surveyed are found, upon the count, to be posting the same service station price, all irrespective of brands or companies operating the stations, that price is accepted as the prevailing service station price in Detroit as of that time, and, further, it is my understanding of the testimony and of prevailing price that such majority of stations has not been less than 65% of the total stations surveyed, but that in the industry practice a majority of the stations surveyed, that is, over 50%, if that time 3494 ever came, just as a matter of industry practice such a majority would be regarded as indicating what the prevailing service station price was at that time. I add that because I want to make my statement complete, your Honor. The evidence does not disclose that that condition ever did exist in Detroit, even in 1938.

Mr. Austin: That what condition? I did not quite understand that last.

Mr. Hanley: That the majority of stations that were depended upon to give the basis for the prevailing price was ever as low as just over 50%, or, indeed, ever lower than 65% of the total surveyed.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: During the period covered by the survey?

Mr. Hanley: Yes, as of the time of the survey.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Do expressions or statements of the meaning as to the term "prevailing price" made by counsel for Respondent conform to the understanding of counsel for the Commission?

Mr. Austin: Well, I don't know that I want to answer that question, your Honor. I would much prefer to state that later on. I think the testimony speaks for itself. I will say that I have no doubt in my own mind what I think is meant by prevailing price, and I don't think the testimony is uncertain, but whether I will accept the statement just made by counsel for Respondent, I 3495 don't feel called upon to state on the record at this time.

Mr. Hanley: Well, I have just one comment to make on that, your Honor, and I am going to make it. That is, that in view of the request and invitation of the Court and the fact that Counsel for the Respondent made the statement which was made, that Counsel for the Commission is definitely unfair to the Court and certainly unfair to the Respondent.

Mr. Austin: I don't think so at all. I am not bound in any way by the statement that was made by counsel for the Respondent, and, furthermore, your Honor, I think that this is such a fundamental question that really I feel apologetic for spending any argument upon it, because I think it is just simply obvious that none of these notations on any of these exhibits is evidence. So there may be no difference whether I concede that everything on it is 100% correct. It still is not admissible, because it is not evidence. It is only argument, and it is something which the Respondent has ample opportunity to prepare tables on and submit to the Commission later, but it is not—those computations are based upon what is in the record, and I don't think they are evidentiary in themselves, and I only consented to the retention of part of those notations on the previous pictures because I felt it was harmless and it would simply save time, but, in view of the attitude now taken by counsel for the Respondent, I hereby object to all notations on all 3496 these pictures, regardless of the prevailing price on them or whether they are correct or incorrect, and regardless of my understanding whether they conform to my understanding of the testimony of prevailing prices, and I wish to state that I shall certainly insist upon that objection.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: At the time the Examiner ruled upon the previous exhibits, the meaning of the term "prevailing price" as used by the Respondent had not been made definite and certain. It now has.

Mr. Austin: In my opinion, it was just as certain as it is now. At least, I have no doubt about the meaning.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The statements appearing upon the exhibits, standing alone, could not possibly be considered as evidence, but, if they conform, as apparently they do, with the sworn testimony, then the exhibit will be considered in connection with the testimony, and in so far as the notations appear on the exhibits conform to the testimony given, they may remain.

Mr. Hanley: I think I understand that, your Honor, and I will undertake to lay the foundations in conformity with that ruling.

Mr. Austin: I would like your Honor to state on the record, if you care to do so, as to whether or not you consider any of these notations to be evidence.

3497 Trial Examiner Ballinger: The Examiner has already stated that the notations standing alone are not evidence.

Mr. Hanley: Now, if your Honor please, we are ready to proceed with this.

Mr. Austin: Then, I take it your Honor's ruling is that while they are not evidence, that nevertheless it is proper to use the material which is in evidence in an argumentative manner upon an exhibit which is evidence.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: If they have been established by evidence, then the evidence speaks, and this is but a reproduction of the evidence offered from the witness chair.

Mr. Hanley: There is no misunderstanding on the Respondent's part on that ruling, your Honor, and we will conform in the presentation of evidence. Now, we are ready to go ahead with these, your Honor, if we may have some understanding as to how we shall mark them.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Off the record.

(A discussion ensued off the record.)

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Come to order.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, you have testified that in the course of the regular routine of your office, you frequently take pictures of service stations, get reports as to general 3198 retail competitive conditions by personal inquiry, yourself; by reports from members of your staff whom you send out for that specific purpose; that you build up permanent records in your own office. Do you recall that testimony?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is correctly stated?

A. That is correct.

Q. Did you examine your records with respect to certain photographs which you took in the year 1939 of service stations in and about the vicinity of Detroit?

A. We did.

Mr. Hanley: May I have this identified?

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the documents Respondent's Exhibit 68, pages 1 to 55, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 68.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. I hand you what has now been marked Respondent's Exhibit 68, for identification, consisting of 55 numbered pages, and will ask you if you have previously examined that group of pages and photographs? For your information, I indicate that that is the 1939 group, or book.

A. Yes, I have.

Q. You have previously done so?

3199 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were those photographs taken at your instance, under your direct control and supervision?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they taken at or on the dates which they bear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do they correctly represent the location of service stations which they purport to reflect, in and about the City of Detroit?

A. They do.

Q. There appear on these mounting sheets on the photographs or the photographs, certain computations involving the use of the price of gasoline appearing on the photograph, a calculation from that as to the price per gallon as represented by the photograph and the prevailing price per gallon, and the per gallon difference. I will first ask you to explain what is meant by the column "Price" on the picture.

A. The column "price," on the picture, is the prices actually shown at the location of the service station represented by the picture.

Q. Now, that frequently occurs in the nature of what I think you people call a bushel price; something of that kind, so many gallons for a dollar, or so many gallons for so many cents.

3500 A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now I will ask you to explain the next column entitled "Price per Gallon," on the picture.

A. That is the price per single gallon as to the posting on the picture which may be for 7 gallons or 9 gallons at a unit price.

Q. Then, are we correct understanding, Mr. Raupagh, that that second column simply represents a computation to reduce the pictured price to a unit or gallon price?

A. It does.

Q. Now, the next column is entitled "Prevailing Price per Gallon." Does that mean, in every instance, on all of these photographs, the prevailing price as of the time the photograph was taken in Detroit for retail service station prices of gasoline as you have described prevailing price in your testimony?

A. It does.

Q. Now I refer you to the fourth column headed "Per Gallon Difference." Explain that, please.

A. The per gallon difference is the difference between the prevailing retail price and the price shown on the picture or on the second column of the computation.

Q. Now, is that a computation?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it, in fact, just the arithmetical difference 3501 between the prevailing price shown and the price per gallon on the picture?

A. It is.

Q. Did you cause those computations to be made and those notations to be put upon these photographs?

A. I did.

Q. And were they done in your office and under your supervision and direction?

A. They were.

Q. Have they been checked and verified by the bookkeeping department of your office?

A. They have been checked and rechecked.

Q. Are you able to say that they are accurate?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is this particular group of photographs the only group that you have in your office; the only copy?

A. Yes; for the year 1939.

Q. Is it a record of the Standard Oil Company in your office?

A. It is.

Q. It was built up and became a part of your records without any contemplation of this lawsuit at all, was it not?

A. That's right.

Q. It was built up in the routine of your office work?

A. It was.

3502 Q. And had that been done for previous years?

A. It has.

Q. And has it been done for 1939 and 1940?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And 1941?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. So far as you know, it will continue to be done?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is done irrespective of this litigation; is that right?

A. Yes, sir.

Mr. Hanley: Now, if your Honor please, I have endeavored to be meticulous in including nothing in this group except the type of sheet that your Honor has ruled upon and the statement made by your Honor, where there was ever any questionable notation at all in any of these years, which were three or four, I struck it off with a pencil notation or line.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: What have you testified to with reference to page 1, is it, or page 2?

Mr. Hanley: Will you answer that, Mr. Raupagh? I will put a question.

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. You had in your hands page 2 of this exhibit, Mr. Raupagh. Is what you have said in respect of page 3502 is equally true of each of the pages which reflect a photograph with price computations on it?

A. It is.

Mr. Hanley: We now offer Respondent's Exhibit 68 in evidence with the understanding that the reporter, at his convenience, will bind it in a permanent volume (handing documents to counsel for the Commission).

Mr. Austin: What year is this for?

Mr. Hanley: That is all 1939.

Examination on Voir Dire by Mr. Austin.

Q. There seem to be a lot of tabs here, Mr. Raupagh, with the names of different companies on them. Does that mean that the photographs following each tab are stations selling the brand of gas used by the company whose name appears on the tab?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any Standard Oil stations included here?

A. I would have to look at the exhibit. I am not sure.

(The witness examined the exhibit.)

A. No.

Q. Why were not any photographs included here of stations selling Standard Oil gasoline?

A. Because in our regular routine of business we try to make a survey of what the market is doing, and 3504 we know pretty well what the stations are doing that are handling Standard Oil products and it may be possible that during those times that we took those pictures that there were no Standard Oil stations that were cutting the price. I can't say as to that.

Q. Don't you know that there were some Standard Oil stations in 1939 and 1938 that were selling gasoline below the prevaling retail price?

A. Oh, yes; there were some, yes, sir.

Q. Then, there is no intention here, is there, to intimate that this includes all of the stations that were selling below the price in any locality, or that there were no Standard Oil stations selling at the prices similar to those indicated in these photographs?

A. There is no such intention, Mr. Austin.

Mr. Austin: If your Honor please, I have already made some objections to these photographs which have been overruled, and I also make the additional objection that they are irrelevant and immaterial.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The objection is overruled. Respondent's Exhibit 68, containing pages 1 to 55, is admitted in evidence.

(The documents referred to heretofore marked, for identification, "RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 68," was received in evidence.)

3505 Mr. Hanley: I request to have a group of similar documents marked for identification, your Honor. These deal with the year 1940.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document Respondent's Exhibit 69, containing 50 pages, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 69.")

By Mr. Hanley:

Q. Mr. Raupagh, I now hand you Exhibit No. 69, which is a group of photographs of the same appearance, general appearance, as those in 68, but apparently applying to the year 1940, and I will ask you if this exhibit has heretofore been examined by you.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And are the same things true with respect to how it was made up, both as to the photographs and as to the notations thereon, as you have stated were true with respect to Exhibit No. 68?

A. It is true.

Q. Is this a part of the records of the Standard Oil Company in your office?

A. It is.

Q. Is this the only copy that you have?

A. That is the only copy that we have.

3506 Q. And as in the case of Exhibit 68, was this exhibit prepared without any reference to this lawsuit?

A. It was.

Q. In response to a question of Mr. Austin's, you said Exhibit No. 68 had no Standard Oil photographs in it. That is, photographs of Standard Oil stations.

A. That is right.

Q. What is your practice when you take photographs of this kind with respect to photographing Standard Oil Company stations? Do you ordinarily do so or do you not?

A. We do not.

Q. Do you ordinarily know pretty well what the prices are that are being charged at dealer stations?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. Further, does Exhibit 68 for the year 1939 or Exhibit 69 for the year 1940 purport to represent all of the stations which may have been selling at reduced prices throughout Detroit, irrespective of price?

A. It does not.

Q. Does it fairly represent a cross section of the city?

A. Yes, it is more of a cross section.

Q. Is what you have said about being true of each of the pages on Exhibit 68, equally true in respect to all of the photographs in Exhibit 69, in respect to how they were made and how the computations were made and 3507 gotten upon the mounting sheets?

A. It is.

Mr. Hanley: We offer Exhibit No. 69 in evidence, your Honor.

Mr. Austin: What do you mean when you say that this represents a cross section of the city, Mr. Raupagh?

The Witness: Well, I mean by that it represents the particular stations of whom we take pictures at that time. It does not represent all the stations that may have been cutting prices, but what we take in our usual course of business.

Mr. Austin: The same objection as to Respondent's Exhibit 68, your Honor. I said that I thought these were immaterial and irrelevant, and that is, of course, upon the ground that I contend that prices charged by other retail stations constitute no justification nor defense to what prices, what price discrimination to jobbers and retailers was being made.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: Objection overruled and Respondent's Exhibit, for identification, No. 69, pages 1 to 50, is admitted in evidence.

(The document referred to, heretofore marked, for identification, RESPONDENT'S EXHIBIT 69, was received in evidence.)

Mr. Hanley: Now I ask to have marked, for identification, another book relating to the year 1941, consist-3508 ing of 115 pages.

Trial Examiner Ballinger: The reporter will mark the document as Respondent's Exhibit No. 70, pages 1 to 115, for identification.

(The document referred to was marked, for identification, "Respondent's Exhibit 70.")
